A PRAYER

BEFORE

Reading of the Holy Scriptures.

ALMIGHTY GOD and MERCIFUL FATHER, who hast appointed thy word to be a light to our feet, and a lamp unto our paths, and caused all the Holy Scriptures to be written for our learning; grant us the assistance of thy Holy Spirit, that we may in such wise read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest them, that by patience and comfort of thy Holy Word, we may embrace, and ever hold fast the blessed hope of everlasting life, which thou hast given us in our Saviour Jesus Christ.

And seeing of thy tender love to mankind thou hast given thy dear and only Son to be unto us both a sacrifice for sin, and also an example of godly life, give us grace that we may always most thankfully receive this his inestimable benefit, and also daily endeavour ourselves to follow the blessed steps of his most holy life; who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the Holy Ghost, ever one God, world without end. Amen.

TO FAMILY GOVERNORS.

AS religion did always consist in an imitation of GOD, and in a resemblance of those excellencies which shine forth in the BEST and most PERFECT Being, so we may imitate him now with much more ease and greater advantage, since his Son was MANIFEST IN THE FLESH, AND DWELT AMONG US: for he was pleased to become MAN, on purpose to show us how we might become like to GOD, by an imitation of his holiness. And it is most certain, that God our father will never own any of us for his children, unless he sees upon us the air and features, the impression and resemblance, of Christ our elder brother.

This consideration had induced me to set the example of the Holy Jesus before myself and you, in these PLAIN, PRACTICAL NOTES upon the HOLY EVANGELISTS, which contain remarks upon the history of our SAVIOUR'S LIFE, DOCTRINE, and MIRACLES, and of his RESURRECTION and ascension: to the intent that the temper of our minds, and the actions of our lives, may be a lively transcript of the mind and life of our blessed Redeemer; that we may admire and imitate his unspotted purity, his condescending humility, his fervent charity, his patience under sufferings and reproaches, his readiness to forgive injuries, and his entire resignation to the divine will in all conditions of life whatsoever; so that following our LORD and MASTER in all the steps of an imitable virtue, and setting his example continually before us, we may be daily correcting and reforming our lives by that glorious pattern; for without present likeness to him, we have no grounds to hope that we shall hereafter live with him.

A true compassion to your souls, and a fervent desire to further their salvation from the PRESS as well as from the PULPIT, has put me upon redeeming time for this work.

I must acknowledge my constant preaching thrice a week unto you (besides occasionals) and visiting as often a populous and scattering parish from house to house amongst you (which I have always accounted a most important part of my duty) would allow me but little time for such a work as this, which I heartily wish had fallen upon the shoulders of some that had more leisure, and greater abilities for writing on this noble and lofty subject, which even to eternity can never be exhausted. But thus much I can truly say, that earnestly imploring divine assistance, I have done what I could; my work has been my recreation, and the LORD accept it, and succeed it.

And I have this observation to ground my hope of acceptance and success upon, that the ALMIGHTY GOD has, in all ages, rendered those labors of his servants (how mean soever in themselves) most acceptable and useful, which have been employed in the profitable explication of any part of the Holy Scriptures; as if HE, who imprinted such a majesty upon the text, delighted also to reflect honor upon the interpreters thereof.

My design in preparing, and giving these NOTES into your hands, is to oblige you to read a part of the Holy Scriptures in your families every day; and to invite you thereunto, the sacred text is here at large recited, and controversies declined.
(No. 1.) B

And I do most affectionately request you not to suffer the HOLY WORD of GOD, which is in all your hands, to lie by you as a neglected book; but daily to read it in and to your families, with simplicity of mind, to be directed and instructed by it.

All the return I desire from you for this MY LABOR OF LOVE, is your living in a daily imitation of that grand pattern of holiness and obedience, which is here set before you; and in every page recommended to you; and that we may continue to strive together in our prayers one with, and one for another, for that grace which may enable us to the faithful discharge of our respective duties towards God, towards each other, and all mankind. And that the happy union and unanimity which has hereto been amongst us, may continue and increase still with us, to the glory of God, the honor of our holy religion, the present benefit and comfort, and the eternal joy and rejoicing both of minister and people in the day of our Lord Jesus, which, as it is the fervent prayer, so it shall be the constant endeavour, of your unworthy minister, whose highest ambition it is to serve you in the faith and fellowship of the gospel, whilst I am

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS, ON THE HOLY GOSPEL

ACCORDING TO

ST. MATTHEW.

The HOLY BIBLE contains the whole Revelation of the will of GOD to the children of men. This sacred book is usually divided into the Old and New Testament. The Old Testament contains the law and the prophets: the writings of the New Testament are either histories or epistles: the histories are the four Gospels and the Acts of the Apostles: the four Gospels are written by the four Evangelists whose names they bear; of whom St. Matthew and St. John were eye-witnesses of what they wrote, but St. Mark and St. Luke had what they wrote from the relations of others.

This Gospel before us of St. Matthew, contains an history of the birth, life, miracles, death, and resurrection of the holy Jesus: all of which are the most stupendous and amazing matters and mysteries, as well as the most necessary truths to be known and believed in the world: And,

This chapter before us contains the genealogy or pedigree of our Saviour JESUS CHRIST, as he was man, unto verse 17, and then relates the fact of his wonderful incarnation, to the end of the chapter.

CHAPTER I.

THE book of the generation of Jesus Christ the Son of David, the Son of Abraham.

That is, the descent of Jesus Christ, who was, according to the flesh, the Son of David and the Son of Abraham, is on this wise. And his genealogy from Abraham down to his reputed father, was thus: here note, that our Evangelist designing to write a narrative of our Saviour's life, begins with his pedigree and genealogy, and shows whom he descended from, namely, from David and Abraham. Where observe, 1. That David is named before Abraham, because he being a king, an illustrious type of the Messiah, the Jews expected, and do to this day expect, that the son of David shall reign over them; and that they should enjoy a temporal kingdom by him. Observe, 2. The names given to our blessed Saviour, Jesus and Christ; Jesus is his Hebrew name, and signifies a Saviour; Christ is his Greek name, and signifies anointed: from whence some do infer an imitation and encouragement, that both Hebrews and Greeks, both Jews and Gentiles, may alike come unto Christ for life and salvation, he being the common Saviour of both; according to that of St. John, Epist. 1. chap. ii. verse 2. He is the propitiation for our sins, and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world.

2 Abraham begat Isaac: and Isaac begat Jacob; and Jacob begat Judas and his brethren;

3 And Judas begat Phares and Zara of Thamar; and Phares begat Esrom; and Esrom begat Aram;

4 And Aram begat Aminadab; and Aminadab begat Naason; and Naason begat Salmon;

Both the Evangelists, St. Matthew and St. Luke, make mention of our Saviour's pedigree; the former by his reputed father's side, the latter by his mother's side: the design of both was to present us with a general draught of our Lord's pedigree and descent, and not to be strict and accurate in enumerating every individual person. This should teach us, not to be over curious in scanning the parts of this genealogy, much less captiously to object against it. For if the Evangelists were not critical and exact in composing of this genealogy, why should we show ourselves so in examining of it? Rather let us attend to the design of the Holy Ghost in writing of it, which was twofold; first, for the honor of our Saviour, as a man, showing who were his noble and royal progenitors according to the flesh. Secondly, for the confirmation of our faith, touching the reality of our Redeemer's incarnation. The scripture making mention of all his progenitors, from the first man Adam, to his reputed father Joseph, will not suffer us to doubt either of the truth of his human nature, or of the certainty of his being the promised Messiah. Learn hence, that the wisdom of God hath taken all necessary care, and used all needful means for satisfying the minds of all unprejudiced persons, touching the reality of Christ's human nature, and the certainty of his being the promised Messiah; for both these ends is our Saviour's genealogy and descent recorded in the holy scriptures.

5 And Salmon begat Booz of Rachab; and Booz begat Obed of Ruth: and Obed begat Jesse;

6 And Jesse begat David the king; and David the king begat Solomon of her that had been the wife of Urias;

7 And Solomon begat Roboam; and Roboam begat Abia; and Abia begat Asa;

8 And Asa begat Josaphat; and Josaphat begat Joram; and Joram begat Ozias.

9 And Ozias begat Joatham; and Joatham begat Ahas; and Ahas begat Ezekias;

10 And Ezekias begat Manasses; and Manasses begat Amon; and Amon begat Josias;

11 And Josias begat Jeconias and his brethren, about the time they were carried away to Babylon;

12 And after they were brought to Babylon, Jeconias begat Salathiel; and Salathiel begat Zorobabel;

13 And Zorobabel begat Abiud: and Abiud begat Eliakim; and Eliakim begat Azor;

14 And Azor begat Sadoc: and Sadoc begat Achim; and Achim begat Eliud;

15 And Eliud begat Eleazar; and Eleazar begat Matthan; and Matthan begat Jacob;

16 And Jacob begat Joseph the husband of Mary, of whom was born Jesus, who is called Christ.

17 So all the generations from Abraham to David, are fourteen generations; and from David until the carrying away into Babylon, are fourteen generations; and from the carrying away into Babylon unto Christ are fourteen generations.

Observe, here are several women mentioned in our Saviour's genealogy, and all or most of them, have a brand of infamy upon them. Tamar was one, with whom her father-in-law, Judah, committed incest; Rachab is called an harlot; Ruth came of Moab whom Lot begat of his own daughter; and Bathsheba, the wife of Uriah, was one with whom David had committed adultery. Now the wisdom of God has thought fit to leave all this upon record for several ends and purposes. 1. To denote the freeness of God's grace, which extends itself in the saving effects and benefits of it to them that are most unworthy and ill deserving. 2. To encourage the greatest sinners to go unto Christ by faith, and seek to be ingrafted into him: for as Christ by the power of his godhead, did purify our nature from all the pollution of our ancestors, so he can, by the power of his grace and spirit, sanctify our persons and natures, how foul and impure soever they either are or have been. 3. Hereby our Lord gives us to understand, that he came to save the most notorious sinners, as well as those whose lives have been less scandalous. 4. This is recorded for the support of such as are illegitimate and base-born, how vile soever their parents' sin has rendered them in the eyes of men, it is their own sin only which exposes them to contempt in the sight of God. It is not illegitimacy, but unregeneracy, that makes us objects of God's wrath.

18 ¶ Now the birth of Jesus Christ was on this wise; when his mother Mary was espoused to Joseph, before they came together, she was found with child of the Holy Ghost.

That is the birth of Christ was not in the ordinary and natural way, but his mother Mary was found to be with child by the extraordinary and miraculous operation of the Holy Ghost. Here note. That the espousal of Mary to Joseph was for the safety of Christ, and for the credit and reputation of the virgin. It was for our Saviour's safety, because being to fly into Egypt, he hath Joseph his reputed father to take care of him; and it was for the virgin's reputation, lest she should have been accounted unclean. Learn hence, what a special regard Almighty God has to the fame and reputation of his children, he would have them free from the least suspicion of evil and dishonesty. Mary being espoused to an husband, frees herself from the suspicion of naughtiness, and her son from the imputation of an illegitimate birth. Observe farther, the miraculous conception of the holy Jesus; the Holy Ghost overshadowed the virgin, and did miraculously cause her conception without the help of an human father. Thus Christ was the Son of God as well in his human as in his divine nature; he must needs be a perfect, holy person, who was conceived purely by the Holy Spirit's operation.

19 Then Joseph her husband being a just man, and not willing to make her a public example, was minded to put her away privily.

That is, being an holy person, and a strict observer of the rites of his nation, he was unwilling to accompany with a defiled woman, and therefore minded to put her away, by giving a bill of divorce into her hand before two witnesses; being kind and gentle, he intended to put her away privily, lest she should have been exposed and stoned to death. Observe here, how early our dear Lord's sufferings began; he and his mother designed to be put away, even when he was but an embryo in the womb. Observe farther, From the great clemency of Joseph towards the suspected virgin, that kind and merciful men always presume the best, and prosecute with gentleness, especially where life is concerned. Meek Joseph doth resolve upon the milder course, and chooses rather to put her away privily, than publicly to expose her.

20 But while he thought on these things, behold, the angel of the Lord appeared unto him in a dream, saying, Joseph, thou son of David, fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife; for that which is conceived in her is of the Holy Ghost.

Two things are here observable, namely, the care that Almighty God takes: 1. For Joseph's satisfaction. 2. For vindicating of the virgin's reputation. For Joseph's satisfaction, an angel is dispatched to give him assurance that the virgin was not defiled by man, but overshadowed by the Holy Ghost. Whence note, that Almighty God will certainly find out ways and means for his people's satisfaction, when they are willing and desirous above all things to come to the knowledge and right understanding of their duty. Observe, 2. How the angel clears the virgin's innocency, as well as satisfies Joseph's doubtings, by assuring, that what was conceived in her, was by the Holy Ghost. Learn hence, that God will, in his own time, clear the innocency of such as suffer in their name and reputation for the sake of Christ, though for the present they may lie under the burden of disgrace and shame.

21 ¶ And she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name JESUS; for he shall save his people from their sins.

Observe here, 1. A prediction of our Saviour's birth; the virgin shall bring forth a son. 2. A precept for the imposition of his name; Thou shalt call his name JESUS, that is, a Saviour. 3. The reason why that name was given him; because he should save his people, not temporally, as Joshua did the Israelites from their enemies, but spiritually, and externally from their sins; not in their sins, but from them; that is from the guilt and punishment, from the power and dominion, of them. Observe, 4. The peculiar subjects of this privilege; his people: he shall save his people from their sins. Learn, 1. That sin is the evil of evils; or that sin considered in itself, is comparatively the greatest and worst of evils. 2. That the great end of Christ's coming into the world, was to be a Saviour from this evil. 3. That Christ's own people do want and stand in need of a Saviour as well as others: if he does not save them from their sins, they must die in and for their sins, as well as others. Therefore he saves them from sin three ways: 1. By obtaining pardon for sin, and in reconciling us to God. 2. By weakening the reigning power of sin, and implanting a new principle of holiness in the heart. 3. By perfecting and accomplishing all these happy beginnings at the end of this life in heaven — Dr. Hammond's Pract. Catech.

22 Now all this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet, saying,

(No. 1)

23 ¶ Behold, a virgin shall be with child, and shall bring forth a son, and they shall call his name Emmanuel, which being interpreted, is, God with us.

Of all the prophets of the Old Testament, the prophet Esaias has the honor to be first recited in the New. Here the Evangelist quotes his prophecy of Christ's incarnation, Behold a virgin shall be with child. Learn thence, that the great mystery of our Saviour's wonderful incarnation was (though darkly) revealed to the church of God under the Old Testament. Observe farther, the name given to our Saviour under the Old Testament, Emmanuel, that is, God with us; God manifest in our flesh, God appearing in our nature; God reconciling man to himself. O happy and blessed union of two natures in one person! Christ is God and man united, that God and man may be reconciled.

24 Then Joseph, being raised from sleep, did as the angel of the Lord had bidden him, and took unto him his wife;

Joseph is no sooner assured that Mary is with child by the overshadowing power of the Holy Ghost, but he instantly obeys the Lord's command, and takes Mary to him, without farther disputing or delaying. Learn thence, that a gracious person, when once satisfied in God's word of command, disputes no farther, but instantly complies with the will of God, even in the most hazardous and difficult duties.

25 And knew her not till she had brought forth her first-born son: and he called his name JESUS.

It is piously believed, though not positively in scripture asserted, that the virgin had no other child but our Saviour: it is a very probable opinion, though not an infallible article of faith, as the church of Rome would make it: for the word until signifies in scripture as much as never. So Gen. xxviii. 15. I will not leave thee, until I have done that which I have promised; that is, I will never leave thee. So the words following, her first-born son, do not imply that she had any child after, but that she had none before. That child which first opened the womb, is usually in scripture called the first-born, though there was no other born after. Thus Josh. xvii. 1. Machir is called the first-born of Manasseh, though he had no more children. So that Christ, not only as God, but as also he was man, was the first-born and only son. St. Austin expounds and applies Ezek. xlii. 2. to the Virgin Mary; this gate shall be shut, it shall not be opened, and no man shall enter in by it; because the Lord God of Israel hath entered in by it; therefore it shall be shut. And others of the ancients say, that as Christ lay in a tomb, in which none lay before himself, so he lodged in a womb, in which none ever lay either before or after himself. But he said, Quid post partum secutum erat curiose non est quaerendum. What the virgin was afterwards is of small concern to the mystery, therefore not to be inquired after. And yet it is now passed by some into a matter of faith, that the Virgin Mary was ever a virgin, and it has been styled a heresy to hold the contrary : but how it is consistent with good divinity, to make that an article of divine faith, which is founded on no divine revelation, or to make that necessary to be believed, which confessedly is not contained in the holy scripture, let the church of Rome answer,

CHAPTER II.

Our Saviour's miraculous conception, by the power of the Holy Ghost, being recorded in the first chapter, several remarkable circumstances relating to his birth are set down in this : as, namely, the place of his birth, Bethlehem ; and the time, in the days of Herod the King.

NOW, when Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judea, in the days of Herod the king, behold, there came wise men from the east to Jerusalem.

Observe here, 1. The place of our Lord's birth, Bethlehem ; he was born, not at Athens, not at Rome, not at Jerusalem, not in any opulent or magnificent city, but in the meanest of the cities of Judah ; thereby showing us, that his kingdom was not of this world, and that he little regarded pomp and outward greatness. O how can we be abased enough for Christ, that thus neglected himself for us ! Observe, 2. The time of our Lord's birth, in the days of Herod the king. This Herod being a foreigner, and made king by the Romans, which now reigned over the Jews, in him was fulfilled Jacob's prophecy, Gen. xlix. 10. That the sceptre should not depart from Judah ; that is, the Jews should have governors of their own nation, until Shiloh come ; that is, until Christ the promised Messiah come in the flesh. So that considering the circumstance of time and place, where and when Christ was born, it was and is wilful obstinacy in the Jews to deny that the Messiah is come in the flesh. Observe, 3. That tribute of honor which was paid unto our Saviour at his birth : the wise men of the east came and worshipped him, that is the Chaldean, Arabian, or Persian astronomers, who, as the first fruits of the Gentiles, seek after Christ, whilst the Jews, his own people rejected him. O how will their coming so far as the east to seek Christ, rise up another day in judgment against us, if we refuse to be found by Christ, who came from heaven to seek us !

2 Saying, where is he that is born King of the Jews ? for we have seen his star in the east, and are come to worship him.

Observe here, the inquiry that they make after Christ : they do not ask whether he was born, but where he was born ; not doubting of the fact, but ignorant of the place. Observe, 2. The ground of their inquiry : for we have seen his star. They had seen a star ; but how did they know it was his star ? Probably by divine revelation ; they had a light within, as well as a star without, for they had never seen Christ. It is likely the Holy Spirit's illumination accompanied the star's apparition. As God made known the birth of Christ to the Jews by an angel, so he manifested the same to the Gentiles by a new created star. Observe, 3. The end of their journey : we are come to worship him ; that is to pay all that honor and homage which is due to a great and mighty prince ; all that adoration and worship which belongs to the promised Messiah, the Redeemer of the world. All honor and homage, all glory and worship, is due to Christ from the sons of men, and will be given him by those that know him.

3 When Herod the king had heard these things he was troubled, and all Jerusalem with him.

Observe here, that when Christ came into the world to save men, it cast the world into a consternation, and caused wonderful disturbances. Herod is first concerned, and next all Jerusalem with him ; Herod for fear of losing his kingdom, Jerusalem for fear of new commotions. Thus Christ, who was the angel's song, the wise men's joy, Israel's consolation, becomes Herod's fear and Jerusalem's terror. But why was Herod thus disturbed ? It is true a King is born, but one whose kingdom is not of this world : it was Herod's false apprehension that was the cause of this perturbation. Hence we see, that the greatest enmities and bitterest animosities have arisen from causeless fears and groundless jealousies.

4 And when he had gathered all the chief priests and scribes of the people together, he demanded of them where Christ should be born.

5 And they said unto him, in Bethlehem of Judea : for thus it is written by the prophet.

6 And thou Bethlehem in the land of Juda, art not the least among the princes of Juda : for out of thee shall come a Governor, that shall rule my people Israel.

Herod being in great perplexity, convened a council of the chief priests and scribes, and demands of them the place where Christ, the promised Messiah was to be born. They readily reply, out of the prophet Micah, chap. v. 2. that Bethlehem was a place ; this was the city of David's birth, and of Christ's the son of David. Bethlehem signifies the house of bread, and was so called from its fertility and fruitfulness, and as some think with reference to Christ, the true bread of life, born there. Bethlehem was a mean and contemptible place in itself, but being honored with Christ's presence, how great is it ! Learn thence, that the presence of Christ dignifies and exalts a place, how mean soever in itself. Bethlehem, though a little city in itself, yet is not the least among the cities of Judah, because Christ is born there.

7 Then Herod, when he had privily called the wise men, inquired of them diligently what time the star appeared.

8 And he sent them to Bethlehem, and said, Go, and search diligently for the young child; and when ye have found him bring me word again, that I may come and worship him also.

Observe here, 1. How Herod clokes his intended cruelty with disguised hypocrisy; he had murder in his heart when he pretended to worship Christ with his mouth. There is no villany so great, but will mask itself under a pretence and show of piety. Herod veils his intent to kill Christ, with a pretence to worship him. Observe, 2. Herod calls him the young child, not the young king; that word was too big to come out of Herod's mouth; he could neither bear the thing, nor brook the title. A king it is true he is, but one that will never be thy rival; he has a kingdom, but it is not of this world. Observe, 3. How craftily Herod lays his plot; he desires the wise men to inquire thoroughly, and to inform him privately. To be wise in doing mischief, is the worst wisdom in the world, it is not the wisdom from above, but from hell beneath.

9 When they had heard the king, they departed; and, lo, the star, which they saw in the east, went before them, till it came and stood over where the young child was.

10 When they saw the star, they rejoiced with exceeding great joy.

11 ¶ And, when they were come into the house, they saw the young child with Mary his mother, and fell down, and worshipped him: and when they had opened their treasures, they presented unto him gifts; gold, and frankincense, and myrrh.

Observe here, 1. How the star, which for some time disappeared now appears again, to their farther direction in finding Christ: teaching us, that God will not be wanting to such as are on the way to seek Christ, but will renew directions and encouragements to them, according as they stand in need; none ever sincerely sought Christ, but they certainly found him at the last. Observe, 2. That the joy which arises in such a soul as has found Christ, is unutterable and unspeakable. The wise men here rejoiced with joy, with great joy, with exceeding great joy. Observe, 3. The wise men having found this young King, they bring presents to him, according to the manner of the Eastern countries; namely, gold, frankincense, and myrrh, which were the principal commodities of the east. But the best present we can make to Christ is ourselves; he seeks not ours, but us: and rather desires what we are, than what we have. Yet the providence of God was wonderfully seen in these presents; for hereby provision was made for the sustenance of Joseph and Mary, and the child Jesus, in their exile or flight into Egypt, which they were shortly to undergo.

12 And, being warned of God in a dream, that they should not return to Herod, they departed into their own country another way.

God having warned these wise men in a dream not to go back to Herod, they returned home another way. But did these wise men play the parts of honest men, in that they returned not again to Herod? Answer, it appears not that they promised Herod to return though he expected it: or if they did, it was in consideration that Herod should come and worship Christ, not murder and destroy him. But if they promised him ever so positively, God Almighty gave them a dispensation from that promise, by commanding them to return home another way. Herod kept his design against Christ close from the wise men: but he could not conceal his intentions from the infinitely wise God; he knew the purposes of his heart, and, by his providence, kept Christ out of his hand. There is no wisdom, nor understanding, nor counsel, against the Lord.

13 And when they were departed, behold, the angel of the Lord appeareth to Joseph in a dream, saying, Arise, and take the young child and his mother, and flee into Egypt, and be thou there until I bring thee word: for Herod will seek the young child to destroy him.

14 ¶ When he arose, he took the young child and his mother by night, and departed into Egypt.

15 And was there until the death of Herod; that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet, saying, out of Egypt have I called my Son.

Observe here, 1. Our Lord's humiliation by persecution in the very morning of his life: he was banished almost as soon as born. Flee into Egypt; for Herod will seek the young child to destroy him. Ungrateful Herod! Was this entertainment for a Saviour! What! raise the country upon Christ, as if a destroyer, rather than a Saviour, had landed upon thy coast! O! barbarous injustice! to deny a subject the protection of those laws under which he was born! The child as a beggar might claim that as his birthright, which is here denied to the Son of God, Lord! how great an humiliation was this, not only to become an infant, but in thine infancy to be hurried up and down, and driven out of thine own land as a vagabond! Observe, 2. How our Lord himself in a time of persecution flies for safety, who was able a thousand ways to have preserved himself from danger; teaching us, that in times of difficulty and danger, it is neither unwarrantable nor unbecoming to preserve our lives by flight. Surely it is no shame for us to fly, when our captain doth both practise it, and command it also. Christ, by his own example, hath sanctified that state of life unto us; and by his command, has made it lawful for us. Observe, 3 The place which Christ flies unto for safety; and that is Egypt, an unlikely place, considered in itself. Who could expect liberty in that house of bondage. But any place is good, if God send us thither, and Christ be in our company. His presence can make Egypt itself not only safe but delightful also. Observe, 4. How readily Joseph complies with the divine command: instantly he arose, and took the young child, and fled. Faith gave wings to his obedience, and instantly vanished all his fears, and afforded a fuller supply than all the treasures of the Arabian princes; teaching us, that when our direction is clear, our compliance should be speedy. We cannot bet o forward and expeditious in the execution of divine commands. Observe, 5. Though Joseph, at the command of God, flies presently from Herod's rage, yet he flies privately by night, and prudently begins his journey when least notice should be taken of his motions: teaching us, that although we have ever so many promises of safety and deliverance, yet we must not put God upon working miracles for our preservation; when it may be obtained in the use of means.

16 Then Herod, when he saw that he was mocked of the wise men, was exceeding wroth, and sent forth, and slew all the children that were in Bethlehem, and in all the coasts thereof, from two years old and under, according to the time which he had diligently inquired of the wise men.

Observe here, how Herod having played the fox before, acts the lion now: his secret policy not succeeding, he breaks out into open and inhuman cruelty. Learn, that when fraud and subtilty fails the enemies of the church, then they fall to open rage and barbarous inhumanity. Thus here these holy innocents fall as a sacrifice to Herod's rage, and die for Christ, who came to die for them; and so were martyrs in deed, though not in will. Some affirm, that Herod did not spare his own child, then at nurse in the coasts of Bethlehem; which made Augustus say, "he had rather be Herod's hog than Herod's child," because the Jews did never eat swine's flesh; and Herod in compliance with the Jews, abstained from it.

17 Then was fulfilled that which was spoken by Jeremy the prophet, saying,

18 In Rama was there a voice heard, lamentation, and weeping, and great mourning, Rachel weeping for her children, and would not be comforted because they are not.

Observe here, the loud and bitter cry which the mothers of Bethlehem make for the death of their innocent children, which were barbarously slain by the sword of Herod. Here was lamentation, weeping, and great mourning, made by Rachel: that is, by the women inhabiting in and about Bethlehem, where Rachel's sepulchre was; for the land about Bethlehem, was called Rachel, from the sepulchre, so famous in those parts. Rachel here is not the name of a person, but of a place. Observe, 2. The cause and reason of this cry and bitter lamentation; the mothers weep, not because their children are, but because they are not; they did not, with some wicked parents, repine because they had children, but because they had lost them: mothers have the sharpest throes both in their children's births and burials. As children in their births are their mothers' Benjamins; so in their burials they are their mothers' Benonies, sons of sorrow.

19 But when Herod was dead, behold, an angel of the Lord appeareth in a dream to Joseph in Egypt, 20 Saying, Arise, and take the young child, and his mother, and go into the land of Israel; for they are dead which sought the young child's life.

Observe, 1. Herod's death; like a bloody persecutor, he is sent unlamented to the grave. Historians say, that out of his body issued forth such impure streams of blood, that the loathsomeness and pain made him attempt the killing of himself. God seldom suffers persecutors to pass in quiet to their graves: they rarely die the common death of all men, having no other balm at their funeral than their own blood. Observe, 2. The happy consequence of Herod's death, Christ is not called home without danger: Herod being sent to his grave the coast is clear for the return of the holy family. The death of persecutors in the delivery of the persecuted. Observe, 3. An angel is dispatched to acquaint Joseph with Herod's death. O! how cheerful do those glorious spirits execute the commands of their sovereign master! With what delight do they carry the messages of God's kindness to their fellow creatures! Lord! what an argument is this of thy love unto us, that in this our pilgrimage state thou allowest us thine own royal guard to attend and preserve us.

21 And he arose, and took the young child and his mother, and came into the land of Israel.

22 But when he heard that Archelaus did reign in Judea, in the room of his father Herod, he was afraid to go thither: notwithstanding, being warned of God in a dream, he turned aside into the parts of Galilee;

Observe here, 1. The just fear that Joseph has upon his mind, that Herod's son would be as bloody a tyrant as his flagitious father. No wonder that the children of cruel persecutors are suspected to tread in their bloody parents' steps. Observe, 2 How God's warrant and direction doth quiet Joseph's mind, resolve his doubts, and remove his fears, and make him readily comply with the command of God: being warned of God he removes out of Egypt into Galilee. O how safe and satisfactory is it, in all our ways, to follow the call and command of God! Joseph and Mary durst not move their feet, no not out of Egypt itself, till God gives them a warrant for their departure, and bids them go.

23 And he came and dwelt in a city, called Nazareth : that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophets : he shall be called a Nazarene.

A threefold interpretation is given of these words, he shall be called a Nazarene. Some read the words, 1. He shall be called a Nazarite. The Nazarites were a religious and separate rank of persons among the Jews, who abstained from wine, and came not near the dead, for fear of pollution. Christ was a holy person, but no Nazarite, in a strict sense; for he drank wine, and touched the dead. 2. Others read the words, he shall be called a Netzer, a branch, in allusion to Isaiah xi. 1. where he is called a branch of the root of Jesse. Christ was that true branch of which the prophets had so often spoken. 3. Others will have the word Nazarene refer to the city of Nazareth, where Christ was conceived, and lived most of his time, he shall be called a Nazarene, because he dwelt at Nazareth. Hence his disciples were called the sect of the Nazarenes: that is, the followers of him that dwelt at Nazareth; and Christ himself is pleased to own the title, Acts xxii. 8. I am Jesus of Nazareth, whom thou persecutest. Learn from hence, the great humility of mind that was found in our Saviour. He was born at Bethlehem, a little city; he lived at Nazareth, a poor, contemptible place: he aspires not after the grandeur of the world, but is meek and lowly in Spirit. May the humble mind be in us which was also in Christ Jesus!

CHAPTER. III.

The Evangelist having declared our Saviour's miraculous conception in the first chapter, and recorded several remarkable circumstances relating to his birth in the second chapter; in this chapter before us, he passes over in silence the whole course of our Saviour's life in private; taking no notice how he spent his minority whilst he dwelt at Nazareth, which was till he was thirty years old; at which time, he entered upon his public ministry, having John the Baptist for his harbinger and forerunner, as this chapter fully informs us.

IN those days came John the Baptist, preaching in the wilderness of Judea.

2 And saying, Repent ye; for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.

Observe here. 1. The preacher sent by God; John the Baptist, a pattern of mortification, and a preacher of repentance. Observe. 2. The place he is sent to preach in, the wilderness of Judea: not in populous Jerusalem, but in a barren wilderness, where the inhabitants are few, and probably very ignorant and rude. Learn hence, that it is God's prerogative to send forth the preachers of the gospel, when and whither, and to what people he pleases; and none must assume the office before they be sent. Observe. 3. The doctrine that he preaches: namely, the doctrine of repentance, Repent ye. This was to prepare the people for the Messiah, and the grace of the gospel. Learn thence, that the preaching of the doctrine of repentance is absolutely necessary, in order to the preparing of the hearts of sinners for the receiving Christ Jesus and his holy doctrine. Observe 4. The motives which St. John uses to enforce the exhortation to repentance. The kingdom of heaven is at hand, that is, now is the so much expected time of the appearing of the Messiah come; the Old Testament dispensation is now to be abolished, and the mercy, and grace of the gospel is now to be revealed; therefore repent, and amend your lives. Note thence, that the free and full tenders of grace and mercy in the gospel, are the most alluring arguments to move a sinner to repent, and to convert to God.

3 For this is he that was spoken of by the prophet Esaias, saying, the voice of one crying in the wilderness, prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight.

The Papists, from John the Baptist's living in the wilderness, would make him the first founder of the order of the hermits, but very groundlessly. For, 1. What he did was by God's command; what they do is by the dictates of their own fancy. 2. He busied himself in preaching in the wilderness; they bury themselves alive, and do nothing. 3. He lived in the wilderness but for a time, afterwards we find him at court, preaching a sermon to Herod; but they bind themselves by a vow to live and die hermits.

4 ¶ And the same John had his raiment of camel's hair, and a leathern girdle about his loins: and his meat was locusts and wild honey.

The plainness of John's habit and diet is here declared: he was habited in a plain suit of camel's hair, much as Elijah was before him; and as his habit was plain, so his diet was ordinary, feeding upon herbs, and such things as the wilderness affords. Hence it was that Nazianzen said he was all voice; a voice in his habit, a voice in his diet, and a voice in his whole conversation. His example teaches us, that the ministers of the gospel are not to affect bravery in apparel, or delicacy in diet; but having the necessary comforts and needful conveniences of life, to be therewith content.

5 Then went out to him Jerusalem, and all Judea, and all the region round about Jordan.

Observe here, The great encouragement which John had in his ministry, from the people's attendance upon it: he was now fishing for souls, and God brought the people very thick about the net of the gospel, and multitudes were inclosed, no doubt, to his joy and great satisfaction. For it is matter of great rejoicing to the ministers of Christ, when they find their people forward to encourage their ministry by a diligent attendance.

6 And were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins.

This place the Papists bring to support their doctrine of auricular confession; but very groundlessly. For, 1, the confession of those converts was voluntary, and not constrained. 2. It was general, and not of every particular sin. 3. It was public and open, not in the ear of a priest. 4. It was a confession of sin committed before baptism, not after they were baptized: in all which circumstances it differs from the auricular confession of the church of Rome very greatly. Note, that confession of sin past, together with a profession of faith in and obedience to Christ for the time to come, are necessary requisites and qualifications in all persons of riper years that are admitted to baptism. John admitted these persons to baptism, upon their confession of sin and promise of amendment. From whence we may learn, that such persons as have been very bad, upon a profession of their repentance, and a promise to become better, may be admitted to the holy sacrament, provided that we warn them, as the Baptist did these, not only to make profession of repentance, but to bring forth fruits worthy of repentance.

7 ¶ But when he saw many of the pharisees and sadducees come to his baptism, he said unto them, O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come?

8 Bring forth, therefore, fruits meet for repentance;

9 And think not to say within yourselves, we have Abraham to our father. For I say unto you, that God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham.

Here we have the entertainment which John gave to his unexpected auditors, the pharisees and sadducees, which came to hear him, and to be baptized by him. He gives them first a quick and cutting compellation, O generation of vipers! next a sharp and severe reprehension, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come? It was matter of wonder and admiration to see such men turn proselytes. Note thence, that the condition of the proud pharisees, pretending and false-hearted hypocrites, though it be very dangerous, yet is not hopeless and desperate; and their salvation, though very improbable, yet must not be despair'd of as impossible: and accordingly, the Baptist having given them a smart reproof subjoins, a seasonable exhortation, bring forth fruits meet for repentance; as if he had said, do not satisfy yourselves with a bare profession of repentance, but let us see the fruits of sincere repentance in your daily conversation. Learn thence, that sincere repentance is not a barren thing, but constantly brings forth the fruits of holiness answerable to its nature. As the body without the spirit, and as faith without works are dead, so repentance without fruits is dead also. Observe farther, how he enforces his exhortation with a necessary caution; think not to say within yourselves, we have Abraham to our father, &c. As if he had said, trust not to your outward privileges, and glory not in them, flatter not yourselves, that because you are Abraham's seed and the only visible church, that therefore the judgments of God will not reach you; for God can out of the obdurate Gentile world, who now worship stones, raise up a people to himself, and take them into covenant with himself, and cast you all out, who have Abraham's blood running in your veins, but nothing of Abraham's faith in your hearts, nor of his obedience in your lives. Now from St. John's plain dealing with these hypocritical pharisees, we learn, that it is the duty, and ought to be the endeavour of the ministers of Christ, to drive hypocrites from their vain confidence who do constantly bear up themselves upon their external privileges, in the enjoyment of which they promise themselves a freedom from the judgments of God. Think not to say within yourselves we have, &c.

10 And now also the axe is laid unto the root of the trees: therefore every tree which bringeth not forth good fruit, is hewn down and cast into the fire.

The Baptist had preached the doctrine of repentance in the former verses, he backs it with a powerful motive in this verse, drawn from the certainty, the severity, and suddenness of that vengeance which would come upon them, if they continued impenitent: now is the axe laid to the root of the trees. Learn, 1. That those whose hearts are not pierced with the sword of God's word, shall certainly be cut down and destroyed with the axe of his judgments. Learn 2. That it is not unsuitable for gospel preachers to press repentance and holiness of life upon their hearers from arguments of terror: John does it here, and Christ elsewhere. Observe farther, That forasmuch as the sin here specified, is a sin of omission, which brings this sore and severe judgment, every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit, as well as that which bringeth forth evil fruit, is hewn down and cast into the fire; we may gather, that sins of omission are certainly damning as well as sins of commission; the neglects of duty are as dangerous and damnable as the acts of sin. Such trees as stand in God's orchard, and bring forth no good fruit, are marked out as fuel for the devil's fire.

11 I indeed baptize you with water unto repentance: but he that cometh after me, is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear; he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire.

In these words John declares the excellency of Christ's person and ministry above his own. As to his person, he owns that he was not worthy to carry his shoes after him, or to perform the lowest offices of service for him. And as to his office, he declares that Christ should not baptize as he did, with water, but with the Holy Ghost, and with fire; that is, should plentifully pour down of the gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit upon his proselytes, which, like fire, in their operation, should purify their hearts from sin, consuming their lusts and corruptions: but at the same time he has a fiery indignation, and flaming judgments, to destroy and burn up impenitent sinners like combustible stubble.

Where observe, how Christ is represented by one and the same metaphor of fire, in a way of comfort to his children, and in a way of terror unto his enemies, he is a fire unto both; he sits in his church as a refiner's fire; he is amongst his enemies as a consuming fire: a fire for his church to take comfort in, a fire for his enemies to perish by.

12 Whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor, and gather his wheat into the garner: but he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire.

In these words the Baptist compares Christ, the promised Messiah, to an husbandman, the Jewish church to a barn-floor. The office of the husbandman is to thresh, fan, and winnow his corn, separating it from the chaff; preserving the one, and consuming the other. Learn hence, 1. That the church is Christ's floor. 2. That this floor Christ will purge, and that thoroughly. 3. That the word of Christ is the fan in his hand, by and with which he will thoroughly purge his floor. The church is compared to a floor, upon the account of that mixture which is in the church; in a floor there is straw as well as grain, chaff as well as corn, tares as well as wheat, cockle and darnel as well as good seed. Thus in the church there is and will be a mixture of good and bad, saints and sinners, hypocrites and sincere christians. But this floor Christ will purge; purge it, but not break it up: purge out its corruptions, but not destroy its essence and existence: and the fan with which he will purge his floor is his word, accompanied with the wind of discipline. The fan detects and discovers the chaff, and the wind dissipates and scatters it; and by the help of both, the floor is purged. His fan is in his hand, &c.

13 ¶ Then cometh Jesus from Galilee to Jordan, unto John, to be baptized of him.

Here we have our Saviour's solemn inauguration and public entrance upon his prophetic office, by baptism, or washing with water, according to the manner of the priests under the ceremonial law. Exod. xxix. 4. Where we have observable, 1. The circumstance of time: then cometh Jesus; that is, after he had lain hid in Nazareth thirty years he comes abroad, and enters upon his public ministry, teaching us by his example, that when we are ripe and fit for public services, we should no less willingly leave our obscurity, than we took the benefit of it for our preparation. Observe, 2. The action of itself, Christ is baptized now, as he was circumcised before; not because there was any impurity in him, either filth, or foreskin, which wanted either the circumcision knife, or the baptismal water; yet purity itself condescends to be washed, Christ to be baptized; for these reasons: 1. That by this symbol he might enter himself into the society of christians, as by the circumcision he had done into the society of Jews; as a king condescends sometimes to be made a freeman of a city or corporation. 2. That he might by his own baptism sanctify the ordinance of baptism unto his church. 3. That thereby he might fulfil the righteousness of the ceremonial law, which required the washing of the priests in water, when they entered their office, as appears from Exod. xxix. 4. Observe, 3. The great condescension of Christ, in seeking and submitting to the baptism of John: Christ cometh to John, not John to Christ. Behold! the Lord seeketh to his servant, Christ will be baptized of his messenger! Our Saviour's design hereby no doubt was, to put honor upon the ministry of John. Oh! how dare the greatest upon earth despise the ministry of man, being appointed by God, which Christ himself honored in his own person, and graced with his own presence.

14 But John forbade him saying, I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me?

Note here, 1. The modesty of John's refusal: John forbade him, and refused to admit him. But why? 1. In regard of Christ, because he knew he needed it not: such was his majesty and greatness, that he was above it; and such was his purity and holiness, that he could not want it. 2. In respect of himself, he knew his own uncleanness: I have need to be baptized of thee, &c. He thought it unsuitable that a sinner should baptize and wash him that was no sinner. 2. With respect to the people: lest they seeing Christ baptized should apprehend him to be a sinner, and one that wanted the baptism of repentance as well as themselves. Observe, 2. As the modesty of John's refusal, so the reason he assigns for it; I have need to be baptized of thee, as if he had said, "thou art purity, I am pollution; thou art spirit, I am flesh; thou art the Son of God, I am the son of Adam;" such an humble apprehension has this holy man of himself. Learn, that the more holy a person is, the more sensible he is of his unholiness: where there is most grace, there is the greatest sense of the want of grace.

15 And Jesus answering, said unto him, Suffer it to be so now: for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness, Then he suffered him.

These words contain our Saviour's reason, why he submitted to John's baptism, because it became him to fulfil all righteousness; that is, to own every divine institution, particularly the righteousness of the ceremonial law, which required the washing of the priests in water, when they entered upon their office, Exod. xxix. 4. Learn hence, 1. That whatever the law required in order to perfect righteousness, that Christ fulfilled in most absolute perfection. 2. That as it became Christ to fulfil the righteousness of the ceremonial law for himself, so it is our duty and interest to fulfil the righteousness of the moral law for ourselves, as an evidence of our being righteous in God's sight, 1 John iii. 7. He that doth righteousness is righteous, even as he is righteous.

16 And Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water: and lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him:

17 And, lo, a voice from heaven, saying, this is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased.

Here we have the solemn inauguration of Christ into his prophetic office, accompanied with a threefold miracle. 1. The opening of the heavens. 2. The descent of the Holy Ghost upon him, like a dove descends. 3. God the Father's voice concerning his Son. The heavens were opened, to show that heaven, which was closed and shut against us for our sins, is now opened to us, by Christ's undertaking for us. As the first Adam shuts us out of heaven, the second Adam let us into it; he opened heaven to us by his meritorious passion, and he keeps it open by his prevailing intercession. Next, the Holy Ghost descends like a dove upon our Saviour; here we have an evidence of the blessed Trinity; the Father speaks from heaven, the Son comes out of the water, and the Holy Ghost appears upon him. Hence we gather, that the Holy Ghost is not a quality, or an operation, but a person, and a person really distinct from the Father and the Son. But why did the Holy Spirit now descend upon Christ, seeing he was now truly and really God? Answer. The divinity of Christ was quiescent in him, till he entered upon his prophetic office at thirty years old, and after. And the Holy Ghost now descends, first, for the designation of his person, to show that Christ was the person set apart for the work and office of a mediator. Secondly, for the qualification of his person for the performance of his office. This was Christ's unction, Isa. lxi. 1. when he was anointed above his fellows, to be the king, priest, and prophet of his church. Last of all, we have the audible voice of God the Father pronouncing, 1. The nearness of Christ's relation to himself. This is my Son, not by adoption, but by his eternal generation. 2. The endearedness of his person, this is my beloved Son. 3. The fruit and benefit of this near and dear relation unto us: in him I am well pleased. Note, 1. There is no possibility for any person to please God out of Christ; both our persons and our performances find acceptance only for his sake. 2. That in and through Christ, God is well pleased with all believers: this is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased, &c. Lord! what reviving news is this to thy church, to hear that her head and husband, her surety, mediator, and intercessor, is that only Son of God in whom his soul is delighted and ever well pleased! That Son who always pleased thee, and by and through whom thou art well pleased with, and reconciled to, thy offending creatures.

CHAPTER IV.

The former part of this chapter acquaints us with our blessed Saviour's combat with, and conquest over, satan; and the first verse informs us of the time when, and the place where, the combat was fought.

THEN was Jesus led up of the spirit into the wilderness, to be tempted of the devil.

Observe, 1. The great humiliation of the Son of God, how exceedingly was he humbled by the horrid temptations wherewith he was assaulted, than which nothing could be more grievous to his holy heart. What could be more burdensome to him that was brought up from eternity with God the Father, than to be shut up in the wilderness with the devil, there to be baited by him so many days, having his ears filled, though not defiled with horrid blasphemies, spit upon the holy and reverend name of God! Oh deep abasement and wonderful humiliation of the Son of God! Observe, 2. The time when Christ entered the lists with satan, implied in the word then; that is, first, immediately after his baptism; he is no sooner out of the water of baptism, but he is in the fire of temptation. Secondly, immediately after the spirit descended upon, and the Father had by a voice from heaven, manifested his complacency and satisfaction in him. This is my beloved Son, &c. Note, thence, that great manifestations of love from God, are usually followed with great temptations from satan. Observe, 3. The place where this combat was fought, and that is, in the wilderness. Learn thence, that no place can privilege us from temptation, or be a sanctuary from satan's assaults: the solitary wilderness has a tempter in it, yea, satan sometimes makes use of men's solitariness, to further his temptations: a cell, a nunnery, or a cloister, are as open to satan as the open fields, and the persons that live in them have a tempter without, and an enticer within as well as other men. Observe, 4. The efficient cause of Christ's going into the wilderness to be tempted by satan: he was led up of the Spirit, says St. Matthew: the Spirit drove him, says St. Mark; that is, the Holy Spirit of God, not satan the unclean spirit, for the devil is seldom if ever called the Spirit, but usually some brand of reproach is annexed, as the evil spirit, or the unclean spirit. Christ was led by the Spirit; that is, he was carried by a strong impulse of the Spirit of God into the wilderness, to be tempted by satan. Learn hence, 1. That none of the children of God ought to expect a freedom from temptations; seeing Christ himself, in the days of his flesh, was strongly solicited by satan unto sin. 2. That all the temptations wherewith the children of God are assaulted, are ordered by divine and special dispensation. Satan could not assault our Saviour till he was led by the Spirit in the wilderness for that end; and he shall not assault any of his members, but by divine permission.

2 And when he had fasted forty days, and forty nights, he was afterwards an hungered.

Observe here, how the divine power upheld the human nature of Christ without food. What Moses did at the giving of the law, Christ doth at the beginning of the gospel, namely, fast forty days and forty nights. Christ hereby intended our admiration, not our imitation: or, if our limitation, of the action only, not of the time. Christ teaches us, by fasting and prayer to prepare ourselves for a conflict with our spiritual enemies; as he prepared himself by fasting to grapple with the tempter, so should we.

3 And when the tempter came to him, he said, if thou be the Son of God, command that these stones be made bread.

Observe here, 1. The occasion of temptation. 2. The temptation itself. The occasion of our Saviour's hunger and want of bread. Learn thence, that when God suffers any of his dear children to fall into want, and to be straitened for outward things, satan takes a mighty advantage thereupon, to tempt and assault them. But what doth he tempt our Saviour to? To the sin of distrust, to question his sonship; if thou be the Son of God: and next to distrust his Father's providence and care. Command that these stones be made bread. As if satan had said, "how unlikely is it that thou shouldst be highly favored, and yet deserted? What! the Son of God; and yet ready to starve! Certainly if thou canst not supply thy necessities, thou art nothing akin to God." Learn hence, 1. That satan's grand design is, first to tempt the children of God to doubt of their adoption; and next, to distrust God's fatherly care over them and provision for them; and last of all, to use unwarrantable means to help themselves. Thus satan dealt with Christ, and thus he deals with christians: for to work a miracle of satan's direction was not a lawful means of providing food for himself.

4 But he answered and said, it is written, a man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.

Observe here, The weapon which our Saviour made use of to repel the temptation, and to vanquish the tempter: and that is the word of God, it is written. Learn, that the scripture, or the written word of God, is the only sure weapon wherewith to vanquish satan, and to beat back all his fiery temptations. Satan himself has not the impudence to oppose scripture: what monsters of impiety then are they who ridicule and deride it! They not only run counter to the practice of Christ, but outdo the devil himself in impudence.

5 Then the devil taketh him up into the holy city, and setteth him on a pinnacle of the temple;

That is, satan, by God's permission, took up his body and carried it in the air, and set it upon one of the battlements of the temple. Learn hence, 1. What a mighty power evil spirits have over our bodies, if God permits them to execute and exercise their power upon them. 2. That it is owing to the gracious care, and watchful providence of God over us, that we are not hurried away bodily by satan. Thanks be to God, though the devil's malice be infinite, yet his power is limited and bounded: and as he cannot do all the mischief he would to the bodies and souls of men, so he shall not do all he can. Quest. But why is the holy city and holy temple chosen by satan to be the scene of this temptation? Ans. I cannot tell, unless he apprehended (as he might) that the holiness of the place would aggravate the sin. No place so sacred, no duty so holy, as to protect us from satan's assaults. This enemy pursues us even to the horns of the altar. Lord! how ought we at all times and in all places, to be upon our watch and guard, especially in thy presence, because then and there satan is most active and busy, and most desirous to draw us into sin!

6 And saith unto him, If thou be the Son of God, cast thyself down; for it is written, he shall give his angels charge concerning thee; and in their hands they shall bear thee up, lest at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone.

Here we have observable, first, the sin which satan tempts Christ unto; and next, the argument which he tempts him from. The sin tempted to, is the sin of self-murder; cast thyself down. Whence we learn, That self-murder is a sin which Christ himself was, and the best of saints may, by satan, be tempted to the commission of. But forasmuch as satan tempted Christ to murder himself, but had not power to do it himself; do thou cast thyself down; we learn, that though satan may tempt, yet he cannot compel; he may entice, but cannot enforce any to sin, without their own consent. Observe, 2. The argument which satan uses; it is a scriptural argument; he quotes the promise of God. He shall give his angels charge over thee. What a marvel is here, to find satan with a bible under his arm, and a text of scripture in his mouth! Christ had alledged scripture before to satan, here satan retorts scripture back again to Christ: it is written, says Christ; it is written, says satan. Learn thence, that it is no wonder to hear heretics and hypocrites quote scripture, when satan himself durst recite it: he that had profanely touched the sacred body of Christ with his hand, sticks not presumptuously to handle the holy scriptures of God with his tongue. Yet observe, how wretchedly the devil wrests, perverts, and misapplies the scriptures: when God promises his angels shall keep us, it is, in viis non in precipitiis; it is in all God's ways, not in any of our own crooked paths. Note here, that although the children of God have the promise of the guardianship of holy angels, yet then only may they expect their protection, when they are walking in the way of their duty, and using the means for their own preservation.

7 Jesus said unto him, it is written again, thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God.

Observe here, Though the devil had wrested and abused scripture, yet Christ still alledged scripture. The abuse of the holy scriptures, by heretics and seducers, is no argument against the use of them. We must not throw away our bibles because the devil quotes scripture; but as Christ here compares scripture with scripture, so shall we, in order to the finding out the true sense and meaning of it; for scripture is the best interpreter of itself: scripture is most clearly expounded by scripture. This satan knew full well, and therefore dares not make any farther reply.

8 Again the devil taketh him up into an exceeding high mountain, and sheweth him all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them;

9 And saith unto him, all these things will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me.

F

The next sin which satan tempts our Saviour to, is the sin of idolatry, even to worship the devil himself. O thou impudent and foul spirit! to desire thy Creator to adore thee an apostate creature! Surely there can be no sin so black and foul, so gross and monstrous, but that the christian may be tempted to it, when Christ himself was tempted to worship the tempter. St. Matthew reads the words, if thou wilt fall down and worship me. St. Luke, if thou wilt worship before me. Whence we may gather, says Dr. Lightfoot, That if to worship before the devil be to worship the devil, then to worship before the image is to worship the image. Observe, 2. The bait which satan makes use of to allure our Saviour to the sin of idolatry; and that was in representing to his eye and view all the glories of the world in the most inviting manner, and that in a moment of time; to the intent it might affect him the more, and prevail the sooner. Learn thence, that the pomp and greatness, the glory and grandeur of this world, is made use of by satan as a dangerous snare, to draw men to a compliance with him in his temptations unto sin. When satan sets thee on a pinnacle, look to thyself.

10 Then saith Jesus unto him, Get thee hence, satan: for it is written, thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve.

Observe here, 1. With what zeal and indignation of spirit our blessed Saviour repels and beats back the temptation of satan: get thee hence. Note thence, that the greater the sins are which the devil tempts us to, the greater our zeal and indignation ought to be in opposing and resisting of the temptation to them. A great temptation must be withstood with great resolution. Observe, 2. The weapon with which he repels and beats back the fiery dart of satan's temptation, and that is with the shield of scripture; it is written, thou shalt worship the Lord thy God. Learn thence, that God is the sole object of religious worship: it is so peculiarly the Creator's due, that to give it to any creature is gross idolatry, and repugnant to the scriptures. No creature is to pay divine adoration to any but his Creator; hence it appears, that Christ is not a creature, divine worship being given to him.

11 Then the devil leaveth him, and, behold, angels came and ministered unto him.

Observe here, 1. The issue of this combat; satan is conquered and quits the field; then the devil leaveth him: teaching us, that nothing like a vigorous resistance of temptation causes the tempter to flee from us; resist the devil, and he will flee from you. Observe, 2. Our Lord's triumph over his enemy: behold, angels came and ministered unto him: food to his hungry body, and comfort to his tempted soul. They came no sooner, lest it should be thought he needed their assistance: they came now, because he was now pleased to make use of their assistance. Learn thence, that those who in the hour of temptation do hold out in resisting satan, shall find the power and faithfulness of God will not be wanting to them, to send in succour and relief in the end.

12 Now, when Jesus heard that John was cast into prison, he departed into Galilee:

13 And leaving Nazareth, he came and dwelt in Capernaum, which is upon the sea-coast, in the borders of Zabulon and Nephthalim:

14 That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esaias the prophet, saying,

15 The land of Zabulon, and the land of Nephthalim, by the way of the sea, beyond Jordan, Galilee of the Gentiles:

16 The people which sat in darkness saw great light: and to them which sat in the region and shadow of death light is sprung up.

Observe here, 1. Our Saviour's hearing of John's imprisonment, provides for his own safety by departing into Galilee. As our holy Lord avoided persecution, so may we. Observe, 2. The place in Galilee he comes to, Capernaum. Christ had three cities which he called his own; Nazareth, where he was bred; Bethlehem, where he was born: and Capernaum, where he dwelt; this was a seacoast town in the borders of Zabulon and Nephthali. Observe, 3. The special providence of God, in this change of our Saviour's habitation; for by that means the prophecy, ix. 1. was fulfilled, which declares, that in that dark part of the country, the Messiah, the true light should shine forth. Learn hence,

1. That a people destitute of the saving knowledge of the gospel are in great darkness, how great soever the light of their outward comforts may be. This people had natural light enough, and civil light enough; they had an abundance of wealth and riches, peace and plenty: but they wanted the light of Christ and his gospel, and therefore are said to sit in darkness. 2. That wherever the gospel is preached amongst a people, it is as light springing up and shining forth among them; quickening and enlivening, reviving and cheering the souls of those who entertain it, how great soever their outward darkness and distress may be. The people that sat in darkness saw a great light, and to them that sat in the region and shadow of death, light is sprung up, &c.

17 ¶ From that time Jesus began to preach, and to say, repent; for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.

Here our Saviour begins to enter upon his prophetic office, and by preaching to make known the will of God to mankind; and observe, the doctrine which he preached is the same that John the baptist did preach, namely, the doctrine of repentance, repent ye, and the argument is the same also, the kingdom of heaven is at hand; that is, now is the so much expected time of the appearing of the promised Messiah. Learn hence, that the doctrine of Christ and his ambassadors is alike, and the same in substance: they both preach the doctrine of repentance to a lost world, as most suitable to the time and dispensation of the gospel.

18 ¶ And Jesus, walking by the sea of Galilee, saw two brethren, Simon called Peter, and Andrew his brother, casting a net into the sea: for they were fishers.

19 And he saith unto them, follow me, and I will make you fishers of men.

20 And they straightway left their nets, and followed him.

21 And going on from thence, he saw other two brethren, James the son of Zebedee, and John his brother, in a ship with Zebedee their father, mending their nets: and he called them.

22 And they immediately left the ship and their father, and followed him.

Our blessed Saviour, as he was the great prophet of his church, had power and authority to appoint teachers under him; and accordingly here he begins to call his apostles to that great work; and in his call we have several particulars very observable; as, 1. The meanness of the persons, whom he calls, illiterate fishermen; not a Paul, that had long studied at the feet of Gamaliel, is first called; but Peter, who was a stranger to eloquence and human learning. Hereby our Saviour took effectual care that his gospel should be known to be the power of God, and not the wisdom and device of man; and that the instrument should not carry away the glory of the work. Observe, 2. How our Saviour calls his apostles, by couples, two and two, Peter and Andrew, James and John, to let us understand, that the work of his ministry requires the concurrence of all hands that are called to it: all the ministers of God put their hands, join their hearts, and set their shoulders as one man to this great work; and all little enough to carry it on with advantage and success. Observe, 3. The work which they were called to from being fishermen, to be fishers of men. They caught fish before with the labor of their hands, they shall catch men now by the labor of their tongues. Observe, 4. Our Saviour's command; first to follow him, before they are sent out by him; follow me, and I will make you fishers of men. We must be Christ's disciples, before we are his ministers; his followers, before his ambassadors. We must learn Christ before we preach him; otherwise we may fish for a livelihood, for honor and applause, but not for souls: if we be not first inclosed in the net of the gospel, we can have but small hopes of bringing in of others. Observe, 5. The promise which Christ gives his apostles for their encouragement: 1. To qualify them, I will make you fishers. 2. To succeed them, I will make you fishers of men. Faithfulness and care, diligence and endeavour is our part; but the blessing and success is Christ's. "Our labor is only in the cast, Christ's power is wholly in the draught. Some fish cleave to the rocks, others play upon the sands, and more wallow in the mud; and we shall labor all our days and catch nothing, if Christ doth not bring our fish to the net, and inclose them in it, as well as assist us in the throwing of it," Bp. Hall. Observe, 6. The apostle's ready compliance with our Saviour's call, straightway they followed him. Whom Christ calls persuasively, and effectually; whom he calls, he draws, and works them to a willing compliance with their duty, lastly observe, upon their call to the ministry; they leave off their trade, they forsake their ship and their nets, and lie close to their ministerial employment. Teaching us, that the ministers of the gospel should wholly give themselves to their work, and not encumber themselves with secular affairs; nothing but an indispensable necessity in providing for a family can excuse a minister's entangling himself with worldly business.

23 And Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of sickness, and all manner of disease, among the people.

Our Saviour having called Peter, James, Andrew and John to be disciples, in order to their being apostles to preach the gospel, in the foregoing verses; this verse acquaints us how he went himself along with them in the work; he did not send them forth as his curates to labor, and lie at home himself upon his couch at ease. What shall we say to those lazy fishermen, who can set others to the drag, care only to feed themselves with the fish, not willing to wet their hands with the nets? Our blessed Saviour, when he sent forth his apostles, went along with them, and labored himself as much as any of them.

24 And his fame went throughout all Syria: and they brought unto him all sick people that were taken with divers diseases and torments, and those which were possessed with devils, and those which were lunatic, and those that had the palsy; and he healed them.

Observe here, 1. That although our Saviour's doctrine needed not confirmation beyond his own authority, yet he was graciously pleased to exert the power of his godhead in working miracles for the establishment of our faith. Observe, 2. That the miracles which Christ wrought were not judicial, but beneficial to mankind; Moses' miracles were as great judgments as wonders; but Christ's miracles were salubrious and healing, full of goodness and compassion, and very advantageous to the world: he dispossessed devils, healed the sick, cleansed the lepers, was eyes to the blind, and feet to the lame. O blessed Saviour! thy life, in all instances, was a life of universal serviceableness and beneficialness to mankind.

25 And there followed him great multitudes of people from Galilee, and from Decapolis, and from Jerusalem, and from Judea, and from beyond Jordan.

Observe here, how affecting our Saviour's ministry was at first; multitudes throng after him; they come from all parts to attend upon his ministry, when he first began to preach among them. His ministers find it thus also; at their first coming amongst a people, their labors are most acceptable, and they do most good; our people's affections are then warmest, and our own zeal perhaps is then greatest. Happy is that minister that improves all opportunities and advantages for the good of souls: "for he that winneth souls is wise,"

CHAPTER V.

This chapter, and the two next following, contain Christ's famous sermon upon the Mount, which comprehends the sum and substance both of the Old and New Testament. Our Saviour begins this his sermon with a declaration who are blessed; including an exhortation to duty, and annexes a reward to the performance of that duty. By this sermon the christian world will be judged in the last day; and by the particulars of it we must either stand or fall.

AND seeing the multitudes, he went up into a mountain: and when he was set, his disciples came unto him;

2 And he opened his mouth, and taught them, saying:

Observe here, 1. The preacher; he, that is, Christ, the great prophet and teacher of his church. Observe, 2. The place where he preached, upon a mountain; probably for conveniency to himself, and advantage to his auditors; though some will have a mystery in it; that as the law at first was given on a mountain, so Christ would now explain it upon a mountain: or to show the sublimity of his doctrine and precepts. Observe, 3. The posture in which he preached, sitting; when he was set, he taught, according to the custom of the Jewish doctors, who sat, to show their authority. Observe, 4. The sermon itself, which begins with beatitudes and blessings, and is accompanied with promises of reward. Not as the law was delivered on Mount Sinai, with threatenings and thunder, with fire and earthquake, but in a still and soft voice. Our Lord's lips are full of grace, they drop as the honeycomb. Blessings and promises are our encouragements to obedience.

3 ¶ Blessed are the poor in spirit: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.

Observe here, 1. It is not said, blessed are the poor in estate; but, blessed are the poor in spirit; it is not a poverty of purse and possession, but poverty of spirit, that entitles us to the blessing. 2. It is not said, blessed are the spiritually poor, but blessed are the poor in spirit, he that is destitute of the grace and spirit of Christ; that has no sense of his spiritual wants, he is spiritually poor, but he is not poor in spirit. Farther, 3. It is not said, blessed are the poor-spirited, but the poor in spirit. Such as act below and beneath themselves as men and as christians, these are poor spirited men; but these are not poor in spirit. 4. It is not said, blessed are they that make themselves poor by leaving their estates and callings, and turning beggars, as some do among the papists: but blessed are they whom the gospel makes poor, by giving them a sight of their spiritual wants and necessities, and directing them to Christ that they may be made rich. In sum, not those that are poor in estate, or those whom the world has made poor in possession, but those whom the gospel has made poor in spirit: that is, the truly humble, lowly spirits, have a right, and title to the kingdom of heaven. Now, humility is called poverty of spirit, because it is the effect and fruit of God's spirit.

4 Blessed are they that mourn: for they shall be comforted.

Observe here, 1. That mourning for sin is a gospel duty; the law allows no place for repentance, though we seek it carefully with tears. Observe, 2. The time and season for this duty; blessed are they that now mourn. Sorrow for sin is physic on earth, but is food in hell. Repentance is here a grace, but there a punishment. Observe, 3. As mourning goes before comfort, so comfort shall follow after mourning. Our godly sorrow for our own and others sins, shall end in everlasting joy and comfort.

5 Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth.

Observe here, 1. The grace and duty recommended, meekness. 2. The wages and reward belonging to that grace and duty, the inheritance of the earth. Meekness either respects God or our neighbour. As it respects God, so it implies flexibility to his commanding will, and submissiveness to his providential pleasure. As it respects our neighbour, it consists in forgiving injuries, bearing reproaches, and recompensing good for evil. The reward and blessing insured to this grace and duty is, the inheritance of earth, where heaven is not excluded, but included; yet the earth is mentioned, to show that men should be no losers by their meekness as to their outward estates: for Almighty God will make good to them, what they lose for peace sake. O happy temper of mind, that at once secures heaven and earth to boot! Blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth in this life, and heaven in the next.

6 Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness; for they shall be filled.

Observe, 1. The character of the persons whom Christ pronounces blessed; such as hunger and thirst after righteousness. 2. Wherein their blessedness doth consist; they shall be filled. By righteousness we are to understand, 1. A righteousness of justification; the righteousness of the mediator imputed to us, by which we stand righteous in God's sight, being freed from condemnation. Dr. Hammond's Pract. Catech. 2. A righteousness of sanctification, wrought in us by the Holy Spirit, enabling us to act righteously. By the former there is a relative change in our condition; by the latter a real change in our constitution. Learn, 1. That all, and only such as do spiritually hunger and thirst after Christ and righteousness are in a happy and blessed condition. 2. That to hunger after holiness, is to apprehend the worth of it, to be sensible of the want of it, to be desirous of it, and restless in endeavours after it, as men usually do that are pinched with hunger.

7 Blessed are the merciful: for they shall obtain mercy.

Here our blessed Redeemer recommends to us a compassionate regard towards the miseries of others, and that both in soul and body, name and estate; to be forward to pity and pardon, to relieve and help, to give and forgive. And as an encouragement he adds, That as we deal with others, God will deal with us; our charity towards men shall be crowned with mercy from God, and that in abundance too; for our rivulet of charity we shall partake of an ocean of mercy; blessed are the merciful for they shall obtain mercy. Learn, that the merciful man is a blessed man, and therefore blessed, because he shall obtain mercy, when he most wants it, and most desires it. Mercy, not wages.

8 Blessed are the pure in heart; for they shall see God.

Note here, 1. The duty required and called for, purity of heart and life: the first expressed, the other included: for a clean heart will be accompanied with a clean life. Where there is a principle of grace within, there will be the acting of grace without. Note, 2. The incentive to this duty; the pure in heart, and holy in life, shall see and enjoy God; the infinitely pure and perfectly holy God. They shall see him spiritually and mediately in this life, gloriously and immediately in the life to come.

9 Blessed are the peace-makers for they shall be called the children of God.

Observe, 1. The connexion between peace and purity; purity of heart and peaceableness of life accompany one another. There is no inward purity where there is not an endeavour after outward peace. 2. The duty exhorted to, namely, to love peace, and to labor after peace; to love it ourselves, and to promote it amongst others; to be not only peaceable, but peace-makers. Note, 3. The title of honor that is here put upon such as are of this peaceable and peace-making temper; they shall be called the children of God; that is, they shall be reputed and esteemed God's children, for their likeness to him who is the God of peace. And they shall be dignified and honored with the privileges of God's children; namely, grace here, and glory hereafter.

10 Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.

11 Blessed are ye when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely for my sake.

12 Rejoice, and be exceeding glad; for great is your reward in heaven: for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you.

Note here, 1. That all the disciples and followers of Christ, live they ever so holy and inoffensively in the world, yet must they expect suffering and persecution. 2. That the keenest and sharpest edge of persecution is usually turned against the ministers of Christ, and falls heaviest on the prophets of God. 3. That such sufferings and such persecution as will afford a man solid comfort, and entitle him to real blessedness, must be endured and undergone for righteousness' sake. 4. That it is the will and command of Christ, that those which suffer for him, and for righteousness' sake, should not only be meek and patient, but joyous and cheerful: rejoice, and be exceeding glad. 5. That such a patient and cheerful suffering of persecution for Christ in this life, shall certainly be rewarded with the glory and blessedness of the life that is to come. Great is your reward, &c.

13 ¶ Ye are the salt of the earth: but if the salt have lost its savor, wherewith shall it be salted? It is thenceforth good for nothing, but to be cast out, and to be trodden under foot of men.

Our Saviour compares christians in general, and his ministers in particular, unto salt, for a double reason. First, because it is the nature of salt to preserve things from corruption and putrefaction, and to render them savory and pleasant. Thus are the ministers of the gospel to labor and endeavour by the purity of their doctrine, to sweeten putrefying sinners, that they may become savory to God and man; and may be kept from being fly-blown with errors and false doctrine. Secondly, because salt has a piercing power in it, which subdues the whole lump, and turns it into its own nature: such a piercing power is there in the ministry of the word, that it subdues the whole man to the obedience of itself. As if Christ had said, "Ye are to be preachers and patterns to the world; ye are appointed by your pure doctrine, and good conversation, to purge the world from that corruption in which it lies: but if you lose either soundness of doctrine, or the savor of a good conversation, you will be wholly useless, as to these great ends, and must expect to be cast off by me, as unsavory salt is cast to the dunghill."

14 Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on a hill cannot be hid, 15 Neither do men light a candle and put it under a bushel, but on a candlestick; and it giveth light unto all that are in the house.

16 Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven.

Observe here, 1. Our Saviour's doctrine. 2. The inference which he draws from it by way of application. The doctrine delivered is this, that christians in general and the ministers of the gospel in particular, are the light of the world. But how? Not originally, but derivatively; not efficiently, but instrumentally. Christ himself is the light of the world by way of original, his ministers are lights by way of derivation, and participation from him. Farther, Christ teaches them the end why he communicated light unto them, namely, to enlighten, direct, and quicken others: even as the sun in the firmament, and a candle in the house, diffuses and disperses its light to all that are within reach of it; so should all christians, and particularly Christ's ministers, by the light of life and doctrine, direct people in their way towards heaven. Observe, 2. The inference which our Saviour draws from the foregoing doctrine, ye are the light of the world, therefore let your light shine before men. Where note, 1. That our good works must shine, but not blaze; all vain glory and ostentation must be avoided in the good works we do. 2. Although we must abound in good works that men may see them, yet not to be seen of men. 3. That the glorifying of God, and doing good to mankind, must be the great end we propound in all the good works which we perform.

17 Think not that I am come to destroy the law or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil.

Our Saviour here informs his followers, that he had no design to abrogate any part of the moral law, or to loose mankind from the least measure of their duty, either towards God or man, but that he came to fulfil it: 1. By yielding a personal obedience to it. 2. By giving a fuller and stricter interpretation of it, than the pharisees were wont to give: for they taught, that the law did only reach to the outward man, and restrain outward actions. As if Christ had said; "Though I preach a more special doctrine than is contained even in the letter of the moral law, yet think not that I am come to destroy and dissolve the obligations of that law, for I came to fulfil the types and predictions of the prophets, and to give you the full sense and spiritual import of the moral law."

18 For verily I say unto you, till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled.

Another reason is here given by our Saviour why he had no intention to abrogate or abolish the law; and that is drawn from the duration and perpetuity, the unchangeableness and immutability of the law: sooner shall heaven and earth be abolished, than the authority and obligation of the moral law be dissolved. Learn, 1. That the law of God is an eternal and unchangeable rule of life and manners, and is to stand in force as long as the world stands, and the fame of heaven and earth endures. Learn, 2. That christianity is not contrary to the laws by which mankind had formerly been obliged. Christ commands nothing that the natural or moral law had forbidden, and forbids nothing which they had commanded, but has perfected the law, and set it higher than any of the most studied doctors did think themselves formerly obliged by it. To suppose that Christ has added to the moral precepts of the first table, is to suppose that he has added to perfection; for that required the Jew to love God with all his heart, soul and strength: which is the same that Christ required of us christians here. Nor has Christ added to the duties of the second table, since that requires us to love our neighbour as ourselves, which St. Paul tells us, Rom. xiii. 9. is the fulfilling of the law.

19 Whosoever, therefore, shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, he shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven: but whosoever shall do and teach them, the same shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven.

To evidence yet farther, that the moral law is a perfect rule of life, our Saviour tells his disciples, that if any of them did either by their doctrine or practice, make void any one of the least of God's commands, either by allowing themselves in the omission of a known duty, or in the commission of any known sin, they shall never enter into the kingdom of God. Learn that such a professor of christianity as allows himself in the least voluntary transgression, either of omission or commission, and encourages others by his example to do the like, is certainly in a state of damnation.

20 For I say unto you, that except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven.

Observe here, 1. A glorious prize or reward set before the christian as attainable, namely, the kingdom of heaven. Observe, 2. The means required in order to our obtaining of this prize, and laying hold of this reward; we must be holy and righteous persons: heaven is the reward of righteousness, a reward conferred only upon righteous persons. Observe, 3. Here is the special qualification of that righteousness expressed, which will entitle us to heaven and salvation: it must be a righteousness which exceeds the righteousness of the scribes and pharisees, and that these three ways; 1. In its principle and motive: love to God, and obedience to his command; not the applause and commendation of men. 2. In its aim and end; the pharisees made themselves, their own credit and esteem, their worldly gain and interest, their ultimate end; and not God's glory, their supreme aim. 3. In the manner of performance; the pharisees' duty wanted that purity and spirituality which the law of God required. They had respect only to the outward action, without any regard to the inward intention, and to that purity of heart which God required. Quest. In what things are we to exceed the scribes and pharisees? Ans. In sincerity, or by being that within which we seem to be without. In simplicity, or having holy ends in our religious actions. In humility, or having low and humble thoughts of ourselves, and our best performances. In charity, or having compassion on all distressed persons. In universality of obedience to all commands. Learn, that holiness of heart, and righteousness of life, which God's law requires of us, is absolutely and indispensably necessary to salvation.

21 ¶ Ye have heard that it was said by them of old time, thou shalt not kill; and whosoever shall kill shall be in danger of the judgment :

22 But I say unto you, that whosoever is angry with his brother without a cause, shall be in danger of the judgment: and whosoever shall say to his brother, Raca, shall be in danger of the council: but whosoever shall say, thou fool, shall be in danger of hell-fire.

Here our blessed Saviour begins to expound the spiritual sense and meaning of the law, and to vindicate it from the corrupt glosses of the pharisees: where observe, Christ doth not deliver a new law, but he expounds the old; doth not enjoin new duties, but enforces the old ones. The law of God was always perfect, requiring the sons of men to love God with all their hearts, and their neighbours as themselves. In this exposition of the law, Christ begins with the sixth commandment, thou shalt not kill; where he shows, that besides the actual taking away of life, a person may violate that command. 1. By rash anger. 2. By disgraceful and reviling words. Thence learn, that every evil motion of our hearts consented to against our neighbour, all unjust anger towards him, all terms of contempt put upon him, are forbidden by the law of God, no less than the gross act of murder itself. Learn, 2. That wrath and anger, without just cause, hath its degrees: and according to the degrees of the sin, will the degrees of punishment be proportionable in the next world. Learn, 3. That self murder is here forbidden, and in no case lawful, man having no more power over his own life than over another's; though life be ever so miserable and painful, yet must we wait God's time for our dismissal and release.

23 Therefore, if thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath ought against thee;

24 Leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift.

25 Agree with thine adversary quickly, whilst thou art in the way with him; lest at any time the adversary deliver thee to the judge, and the judge deliver thee to the officer, and thou be cast into prison.

26 Verily I say unto thee, thou shalt by no means come out thence till thou hast paid the uttermost farthing.

For preventing the sin of rash anger, which in our Saviour's account is a degree of murder, he exhorts all his disciples and followers to brotherly agreement, and to seek mutual reconciliation with each other. Agree with thine adversary: that is, thy offended or offending brother; agree with him, as becomes a man; quickly, as becomes a christian: implying, that it is a necessary duty for every christian to seek reconciliation sincerely and speedily, with such as have offended him, or have been offended by him. Observe, 2. The argument or motive with which Christ enforces his exhortation to brotherly reconciliation, drawn from the peril and danger of the neglect; and this is two-fold; the first respects our present duties and services, when we wait upon God at his altar, and attend upon him in holy offices. None of our performances will find acceptance with God, if there be found malice and hatred, anger and ill-will against our brother. Learn, that no sacrifice we can offer will be acceptable to God, so long as we ourselves are implacable to men. A second danger respects us, when we appear before God in judgment; then God will be our adversary, Christ our judge, satan our accuser, hell our tormentor: if now from the heart we do not every one of us forgive our brother his trespasses. Lord! how heinous then is this sin of inveterate anger, hatred, and malice in our hearts against any person! No gift, though ever so costly, no devotions, though ever so specious, will prevail with God to pass it by, whilst we live; and if we die with hearts full of rancor and bitterness, we can never expect to be encircled in the arms of him who is all love all mercy, all goodness and compassion: no reconciliation with God without an hearty goodwill to all men. Nay, farther, the text here speaks of a prison, which is the dismal dungeon of hell: into which the implacable and unreconciled person must be cast, and lie for ever without mixture of pity; and it is not men's scoffing at it that will secure them against the horror of it.

27 Ye have heard that it was said by them of old time, thou shalt not commit adultery;

28 But I say unto you, that whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her, hath committed adultery with her already in his heart.

Our Saviour next proceeds to explain the seventh commandment, which forbids adultery; by which the pharisees understood only the gross act of uncleanness, and carnal lying with a woman. But says our Saviour, whosoever secretly in his heart desires such a thing, and casts his eye upon a woman in order to such an act, entertaining only a thought of it with pleasure and delight, he is an adulterer in God's account. Learn, that such is the purity and spirituality of the law of God, that it condemns speculative wantonness, no less than practical uncleanness; and forbids not only the outward action, but the secret purpose and intention, and first-out-going of the soul after unlawful objects.

29 And if thy right eye offend thee, pluck it out, and cast it from thee: for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell.

30 And if thy right hand offend thee, cut it off, and cast it from thee; for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell.

Our Saviour had condemned ocular adultery in the foregoing verse, or the adultery of the eye; he that looketh on a woman to lust after her, hath committed adultery with her, in his heart. Where note, that the eye is an inlet to sin, especially the sin of uncleanness; lust enters the heart at the window of the eye. Now in these verses Christ prescribes a remedy for the cure of this eye malady: if thine eye offend thee, pluck it out: which is not to be understood literally, as if Christ commanded any man to maim his bodily members: but spiritually, to mortify the lusts of the flesh and the lusts of the eye, which otherwise will prove a dangerous snare to the soul. Learn, 1. That sin may be avoided: it is our duty to avoid whatsoever leads to it, or may be an occasion of it; if we find the view of an ensnaring object will enflame us, we must, though not put out our eye, yet make a covenant with our eye that we will not look upon it. Note, 2. That the best course we can take to be kept from the outward acts of sin, is to mortify our inward affections and love to sin. This is to kill it in the root; and if once our inward affections be mortified, our bodily members may be spared and preserved; for they will no longer be weapons of sin, but instruments of righteousness unto holiness.

31 It hath been said whosoever shall put away his wife, let him give her a writing of divorcement:

32 But I say unto you, that whosoever shall put away his wife, saving for the cause of fornication, causeth her to commit adultery; and whosoever shall marry her that is divorced, committeth adultery.

Our blessed Saviour still proceeds in vindicating and clearing the seventh commandment from the corrupt glosses of the pharisees. Almighty God had tolerated the Jews, in case of uncleanness, to put away their wives, by a bill of divorce. Deut. xxiv. 1. Hereupon the pharisees maintained it lawful to put away the wife upon every slight occasion. This abuse Christ corrects; and shows that divorce, except in case of adultery, is a certain breach of the seventh commandment. Learn, 1. That so indissoluble is the marriage-covenant betwixt two persons, that nothing but adultery, which violates the bands of marriage, can dissolve or disannul it. Learn, 2. When persons are unjustly put away, it is unlawful for them to marry to any other, or for others knowingly to marry to them.

33 Again, ye have heard, that it hath been said by them of old time, thou shalt not forswear thyself, but shalt perform unto the Lord thine oaths:

34 But I say unto you, swear not at all; neither by heaven; for it is God's throne:

35 Nor by the earth; for it is his footstool: neither by Jerusalem; for it is the city of the great king:

36 Neither shalt thou swear by thy head, because thou canst not make one hair white or black,

The next commandment which our Saviour expounds and vindicates, is the third, which requires reverent use of God's name. Now the pharisees taught, that perjury was the only breach of this commandment: and that swearing was nothing, if they did not forswear themselves: and that persons were only obliged to swear by the name of God in public courts of justice, but in their ordinary and common discourse they might swear by any of the creatures. Now in opposition to these wicked principles and practices, Christ says, swear not at all: that is, 1. Swear not profanely in your ordinary discourse. 2. Swear not unduly by any of the creatures; for that is to ascribe a deity to them. 3. Swear not lightly upon any trifling or frivolous occasion; for oaths upon small occasions are great sins: so that an oath is not here forbidden by our Saviour, but restrained. For though light and needless, common and ordinary swearing be a very great sin; yet to take an oath upon a solemn occasion, when lawfully called thereunto, is a christian and necessary duty. Christ by this prohibition doth not forbid all swearing, as a thing, absolutely evil; nor doth he forbid all assertory or promissory oaths in matters testimonial, when imposed by the magistrate; for Christ himself, when adjured by the high priest, did answer upon oath. But he forbids all voluntary oaths in common conversation, and in our ordinary discourse; because an oath is an act of religious worship: therefore to trifle with it, is a horrid provocation.

37 But let your communication be, Yea, yea; Nay, nay: for whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil.

Here our Lord prescribes a proper mean and remedy for shunning the occasion and danger of rash swearing; and that is by using and accustoming ourselves in conversation to a true simplicity, and constant plainness of speech; either affirming or denying, according to the nature of the thing; letting oaths alone, till we are called to them upon great occasions, for ending strife between man and man. Learn, that the great end of speech being to communicate the sense of our minds to each other, we ought to use such plainness and simplicity in speaking, that we may believe one another without oaths, or more solemn and religious asseverations.

38 Ye have heard that it hath been said, an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth:

39 But I say unto you, that ye resist not evil: but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also.

40 And if any man will sue thee at the law, and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak also.

41 And whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him twain.

Our Saviour here vindicates the sixth commandment, which obliges us to do no wrong to the body of our neighbour. God hath given a law to the public magistrate, to require an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth, when a person was wronged: hereupon the pharisees taught that a private person, wronged by another, might exact satisfaction from him to the same degree in which he had been wronged by him: if he had lost an eye by another, he might revenge it by taking away the eye of another; but says Christ, I say unto you, resist not evil; that is, seek not private revenge, but leave the avenging of injuries to God and the magistrate, and in trivial matters not to appeal at all, and when forced, not for revenge sake. Teaching us, that christians ought rather to suffer a double wrong, than to seek private revenge; christianity obliges us to bear many injuries patiently, rather than to revenge one privately. Religion indeed doth not bid us to invite injuries, but it teaches us to bid them welcome: we are not to return evil for evil, but rather to endure a greater evil, than to revenge a less.

42 Give to him that asketh thee; and from him that would borrow of thee turn not thou away.

Our Saviour here presses the law of charity upon his disciples: this is two-fold; a charity in giving to them that beg, and a charity in lending to them that desire to borrow. Christianity obliges all those who have ability to abound in works of charity of all sorts and kinds whatsoever. He that is truly charitable, doth not only give, but lend; yea, sometimes lends, looking for nothing again. It is not enough to act charity of one sort, but we must be ready to act in every kind, and to the highest degree that our circumstances and abilities will admit. Giving is a god-like thing, he is the giver of every good and perfect gift; he gives before we ask; and we must imitate God in giving; namely, by giving what we give cheerfully, sincerely, discreetly, proportionably, universally, in obedience to God's command, and with an eye at his glory. And there is sometimes as great charity in lending, as there is in giving; many a poor family, by our lending them a small matter, may raise themselves into a condition to live comfortably and honestly in the world.

43 Ye have heard that it hath been said, thou shalt love thy neighbour, and hate thine enemy:

44 But I say unto you, love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that despitefully use you, and persecute you:

Another corrupt gloss which the pharisees had put upon the law of God, our Saviour here takes notice of: the law said, thou shalt love thy neighbour, Levit. xix. 18. This they interpreted to relate only to their own countrymen, he Jews; concluding, that they might hate all the uncircumcised nations, as enemies: but, saith our Saviour, I require you to love all men; for if enemies must not be shut out of your love, none must. Love your enemies; here the inward affection is required. Bless them that curse you; there outward civility, and affability is required. Do good to them that hate you; here real acts of kindness and charity are commanded to be done by us to our bitterest and most malicious enemies. Pray for them that despitefully use you, and persecute you; these are the highest expressions of enmity that can be, calumny and cruelty; yet we are commanded to pray for those that touch us in these two tenderest points, our reputation and our life. Learn, that christianity obliges us to bear a sincere affection towards our most malicious enemies; to be ready upon all occasions to do good unto them and pray for them.

45 That ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven: for he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust.

To encourage us to the foregoing duty of loving our enemies, our Saviour propounds the example of God himself to our imitation, that you may be the children of your Father: that is, that you may be known to be the children of your Father which is in heaven, by your likeness to him, and imitation of him. Note, 1. That the best evidence we can have of our divine sonship, is our conformity to the divine nature, especially in those excellent properties of goodness and forgiveness. Note, 2. That God doth good to them that are continually doing evil unto him. Rain and sun, fat and sweet, gold and silver, are such good things as their hearts and houses are filled with, who are altogether empty of grace and goodness.

46 And if ye love them which love you, what reward have ye; do not even the publicans the same?

47 And if ye salute your brethren only what do ye more than others? do not even the publicans so?

Yet farther to encourage us to this duty of loving our enemies, Christ assures his disciples, that he expects more from them than others; more than common humanity and civil courtesy towards friends; for even heathens by the light of nature were taught to love those that loved them: but he expected that christianity should teach them better, and lead them farther, even to love their enemies, and to bless them that curse them. Note, love for love is justice; love for no love is favor and kindness; but love for hatred and enmity is divine goodness; a Christ-like temper, which will render us illustrious on earth and glorious in heaven. But, Lord! how do men confine their love to little sects and parties? and from thence comes that bitterness of spirit of one party towards another; and oh! how hard it is to find a christian of a true catholic love and temper.

48 Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect.

That is, aim at perfection in all christian virtues and divine graces, but particularly in this of love, in imitation of your heavenly Father, who is the perfect pattern of all desirable goodness and adorable perfections. To be perfect, as our heavenly Father is perfect, is indeed impossible, as to equality, but not as to imitation. The word rendered here perfect by St. Matthew, is elsewhere by St. Luke rendered merciful, Luke vi. 36. implying, that charity is the perfection of a christian's graces; he that is made perfect in love, is perfect in all divine graces, in the account of God. Learn, 1. That there is no standing still in religion; he that will be saved must press on towards perfection. Learn, 2. That no less than perfect and complete perfection in grace, and particularly in the grace of love and charity, is and ought to be the aim of every christian in this life, and shall be his attainment in the next.

CHAPTER VI.

This chapter is a continuation of our Saviour's incomparable sermon upon the mount, in which he cautions his disciples against the hypocrisy and vainglory of the pharisees, both in their almsgiving and prayers; the former in the first four verses of this chapter, which speaks thus:

TAKE heed that ye do not your alms before men, to be seen of them; otherwise ye have no reward of your Father which is in heaven.

2 Therefore, when thou dost thine alms, do not sound a trumpet before thee, as the hypocrites do in the synagogues, and in the streets, that they may have glory of men. Verily I say unto you, they have their reward.

3 But when thou dost alms, let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth:

4 That thine alms may be in secret: and thy Father which seeth in secret, himself shall reward thee openly.

Observe here, 1. The duty directed to, almsgiving after a right manner; do not your alms before men: some copies read it, do not your righteousness before men:

because almsgiving is a considerable part of that righteousness and justice which we owe unto our neighbour: he that is uncharitable is unjust: acts of charity are acts of justice and equity. It also intimates to us, that the matter of our alms should be goods righteously gotten: to give them alms of what is gotten unjustly, is robbery, and not righteousness. Observe, 2. Our Saviour's cautionary direction is giving alms, Take heed that ye do them not to be seen of men. It is one thing to do our alms that men may see them, and another thing to do them that we may be seen of men. We ought to do alms before men, that God may be glorified: but not to be seen of men, that ourselves may be applauded. Observe 3. That particular sin which our Saviour warns his disciples against in giving their alms, namely, ostentation and vainglory, which the pharisees were notoriously guilty of: sounding a trumpet to call people about them when they gave their alms. Thence learn, that the doing any good work, especially any work of charity and mercy, vaingloriously, and not with an eye to God's glory, will certainly miss of the reward of well-doing in another world. Observe, 4. The advice given by our Saviour for the prevention of this sin and danger; and that is, to do our alms as secretly as we can: Let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth; that is conceal it from thy nearest relations, and, if possible, from thyself. Note thence, that the secrecy of our charity is one good evidence of its sincerity. Hence the Egyptians made the emblem of charity to be a blind boy reaching out honey to a bee that had lost her wings.

5 ¶ And when thou prayest, thou shalt not be as the hypocrites are; for they love to pray standing in the synagogues, and in the corners of the streets, that they may be seen of men. Verily, I say unto you, they have their reward.

6 But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet; and, when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret, and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly.

Here our Saviour warns his disciples against the same pharisaical hypocrisy in praying, which he had before reproved in almsgiving. It was lawful to pray in the synagogues, and to pray standing, and that before men; but to do this upon design to be applauded by men is condemned by Christ. Our business in prayer lies with God; we are not to concern ourselves how men like our performances; it is sufficient if God doth approve and will accept them. To cure the foregoing vanity, Christ directs to secret prayer, in our closets where God is the witness, and will be the rewarder of our sincerity. Note, that secret prayer is a commanded and encouraged duty, and when in sincerity performed, shall be attended with a public and glorious reward; pray to thy Father which is in secret, &c.

7 But, when we pray, use not vain repetitions, as the heathens do: for they think that they shall be heard for their much speaking.

8 Be ye not therefore, like unto them: for your Father knoweth what things ye have need of before ye ask him.

A vainglorious ostentation in prayer was condemned by our Saviour in the former verse; here a vainglorious multiplicity of words, by idle tautologies and impertinent repetitions is condemned also; after the manner of the heathens, who expected to have their prayers granted by God, for the multiplicity of words used by themselves. Hence note, that a christian's business in prayer being not to inform God (for he knoweth what things we need before we ask him) nor yet to move and persuade God (for he is our Father) it certainly argues an undue apprehension of God, when we lengthen out our prayers with vain repetitions and a multitude of words. Yet note, 1. That it is not all repetition of the same words in prayer which Christ here condemns, for he himself prayed thrice, using the same words, that the cup might pass from him. Note, 2. Are we to apprehend that prayers continued to a considerable length are forbidden by Christ; for Solomon's prayer was such, 1. Kings viii. Nehemiah's such, chapter ix. it is said, the people confessed, and worshipped for three hours; Christ continued in prayer all night; and the church, Acts xii. made prayers without ceasing for St. Peter's enlargement. And we read of St. Paul's praying night and day, 1. Thes. iii. 10. and of his commanding the churches to be continued in prayer, and to continue in prayer. But Christ here condemns prayers lengthened out upon an apprehension that we shall be heard for our much speaking, or can move God by arguments, whilst we continue in our sins. (Dr. Whitby.)

9 After this manner therefore, pray ye :

As if Christ had said, For preventing these, and all other faults in prayer, I will myself give you a complete form of prayer, and an exact pattern and platform, for your imitation when you pray. Note, that the Lord's prayer is both a perfect form of prayer, which ought to be used by us, and also a pattern and platform, according to which all our prayers ought to be framed. St. Matthew says, after this manner pray ye: St. Luke says, when ye pray, say,

Our Father which art in heaven, hallowed be thy name:

10 Thy kingdom come: thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven:

11 Give us this day our daily bread!

12 And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors:

13 And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil: for thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever. Amen.

The sense and signification of this best of prayers is this: "O thou, our Father in Jesus Christ! who remainest in thy throne in heaven, and art there perpetually praised, and perfectly obeyed, by glorious angels and glorified saints; grant that thy name may be glorified, thy throne acknowledged, and thy holy will obeyed, here on earth below, by us thy sons and servants, most sincerely and readily, and in some proportion to what is done in heaven. And because by reason of the frailty of our natures we cannot subsist without the comforts and supports of life, we crave that such a proportion of the good things of this life may be given unto us, as may be sufficient for us; and that we may be content with our allowance. And knowing that thy holiness and justice oblige thee to punish sin and sinners, we plead with thee, for the sake of thy Son's satisfaction, to pardon us our daily trespasses, which we are guilty of in this state of imperfection, as we do freely and heartily forgive others that have offended and wronged us. And seeing that by reason of the frailty of our nature, we are prone to rush upon and run into temptation, we crave, that by the power of thy omnipotent grace, we may be kept from satan's temptations, from the world's allurements, from our own evil inclinations, and be preserved unblameable to thine everlasting kingdom; which is exalted over all persons, over all places, over all things, in all times past, present, and to come: and accordingly, in testimony of our desires, and in assurance to be heard and answered, we say, Amen: so be it, so let it be, even so, O Lord, let it be for ever." More particularly in this comprehensive and compendious prayer, the following severals are remarkable, Namely, 1. That the learned observe, that this prayer is taken out of the Jewish liturgies, in which it is entirely found, excepting those words, as we forgive them that trespass against us. From whence Grotius notes, how far Christ, the Lord of his church, was from affecting novelties, or despising any thing because it was a form; a piteous weakness amongst some at this day. Observe, 2. The persons to whom Christ directs us to make our prayers; namely, to God, under the notion of a father; teaching us, that in all our religious addresses to God, we are to conceive of him and pray unto him, under the notion and relation of a father; our Father, &c. So he is by creation, by a right of providence and preservation, by redemption, by outward and visible profession, by regeneration and adoption; and this relation which God stands in to us, may encourage us to pray unto him: for being our Father, we are sure that he is of easy access unto, and graciously ready to grant what we pray for. And whereas it is added, which art in heaven; this is not to be understood as if his essence were included, or his presence circumscribed and confined there, for he fills heaven and earth with the immensity of it: but he is said to be in heaven, because there is the special manifestation of his presence, of his purity, of his power and glory; and teaches us with what holy fear, with what humble reverence, and not without a trembling veneration, polluted dust ought to make their solemn approaches to the God of heaven. Observe, 3. That the three first petitions relate more immediately to God. 1. That his name may be hallowed. By the name of God, understand God himself, as made known to us in his attributes, words and works. This name is hallowed or sanctified by us three ways; by our lips, when we acknowledge his divine per-fections, and tell of all his wondrous works; in our hearts, by entertaining suitable conceptions of God; and in our lives, when the consideration of these divine perfections engages us to suitable obedience. 2. That his kingdom may come. By which we are not to understand his general and providential kingdom, by which he ruleth over all the world, that being always come, and capable of no farther amplification; but principally the kingdom of grace, promoted in the hearts of his people by the preaching of the gospel. We may pray that God would dethrone sin and satan in our own and others souls, and increase grace and sanctification both in us and them, and that the kingdom of glory may be hastened, and we may be preserved blameless to the coming of Christ in his kingdom. 3. That his will may be done. By which the perceptive rather than the providential will of God is to be understood: we are to obey the former universally, and to submit to the latter very cheerfully. It intimates, that it ought to be the prayer and care, the study and endeavour, of every christian that the commanding will of God may be so done by men upon earth, as it is by the glorified saints and glorious angels done in heaven; namely, with that alacrity and cheerfulness, with that speed and readiness, with that constancy and diligence, that the imperfection of human nature will admit of; imitating the blessed angels, who execute the divine commands without reluctance or regret. Observe, 4. The three last petitions respect ourselves, as the three former did Almighty God. The first of which is a prayer for temporal blessings; give us this day our daily bread; where note, the mercy prayed for, bread, which comprehends all the comforts and conveniences of life, and whatever is necessary for the supporting human nature. Also the qualification, it must be our own bread, not another's, what we have a civil right to as men, and a covenant right to as christians. Note farther, the kind of bread we ask and desire; it is daily bread. Hereby we are put in mind of our continual dependance upon God for our lives, and for all the supports of life which we enjoy: and also kept in mind of our mortality. And mark the way and manner of conveying good things to us; it is in a way of free gift. Give us our daily bread, we cannot give it ourselves; and when we have it of God, we receive it not as a debt, but as a free gift. The next petition is for spiritual blessings; forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors. Where note, 1. Some things supposed; namely, that we are all sinners, and as such stand in need of pardon and forgiveness. 2. That our sins are debts, wilful debts, repeated debts, innumerable debts, inexcusable debts, debts difficultly discharged, and yet, if undischarged, undoing debts. 3. That we are obliged to pray every day for daily pardon, as we do for daily bread, for our sins are many and daily. 4. It is here supposed, that since we are to pray for forgiveness of sin, it is impossible ever to satisfy the justice of God for sin. Lastly note, the condition or qualification required, forgive, as we forgive; this requires, 1. That our minds be full of charity, free from rancor and ill-will, and all desires of revenge, and a secret grudge against another. 2. That we stand ready to help them, and do any office of love and service for them that have offended us. 3. That we admit our offending brother into friendship and familiarity, which is called a forgiving from the heart; our heart must be towards him, as formerly it was. The sixth, and last petition follows, lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. Here note, a double mercy prayed for; namely, preventing mercy, and delivering mercy. 1. Preventing mercy, lead us not into temptation. Hereby it is supposed, 1. That we are unable to keep ourselves from temptation, partly, through our natural depravity, partly through carnal security. 2. That it is God that must keep us from satan's assaults, his traps and snares, which every where he lays in ambush for us. 3. That it is our own daily duty to be earnest and instant with God in prayer, not to suffer us, by the subtraction of his grace, or in a way of punishment for sin, to run into the circumstances which may prove snares to us: but daily to afford such a measure of his grace as may keep us from falling by temptation, and not leave us falling under the temptation, but to recover us speedily by his power, and enable us to stand more firmly for the future. 2. We here pray for delivering mercy; deliver us from evil: by which may be understood, satan the evil one, but especially the evil of sin. We pray here, that God would graciously preserve us from those vicious inclinations of our minds, and evil dispositions of our hearts, which render us so prone to yield to the temptations of satan. Here we see the ugly and deformed face of sin: it is evil; evil in its author and original, it is of the devil, the evil one: evil in its effects and fruits, it doth debase and degrade us, pollute and defile us, befoul and deceive us, and without repentance, damns and destroys us. Observe, lastly, the conclusion of the Lord's prayer, which contains a complication of arguments to urge Almighty God with, for obtaining the mercy prayed for. 1. For thine is the kingdom: thou art the only absolute and rightful Sovereign, and all men are concerned to honour thee, and obey thy laws; thou art the supreme Governor of the world, and the king of thy church; therefore let thy kingdom come, and thy will be done. 2. Thine is the power, therefore give us thy daily bread, and forgive us our daily sins; for thou hast power to supply the one, and authority to pardon the other. The power of God is a mighty encouragement to prayer, and faith in the power of God has a mighty prevalence in prayer with God. 3. Thine is the glory: that is, thine will be the glory, as if we should say, "Lord! by enabling us to hallow thy name, by owning thy kingdom, by doing thy will, and by thy providing for us, and pardoning of us, thou wilt have much glory by us and from us." It teaches us, that as our prayers in general ought to be argumentative, so an argument in prayer drawn from the glory of God, is a mighty encouragement to hope for audience and acceptance. 4. For ever and ever; that is thy kingdom is eternal, thy power eternal; thy glory eternal; the God whom we pray to, is an eternal God, and this attribute of God is immoveable in prayer, an encouragement to expect the same blessings from God which others have done before us; for he is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever. Amen: a word used in all languages denoting an hearty assent to our own prayers, and an hearty desire to receive the mercies prayed for, and an humble assurance that we shall be heard and answered.

14 For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you :

15 But if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses.

There being no duty to which our corrupt natures are more backward than this of forgiving injuries, our Saviour repeats that duty over and over, and frequently inculcates it in the holy gospels ; assuring us, that forgiving others is the indispensable condition upon which we are to expect forgiveness from God. Learn thence, That every time we go to God in prayer, and beg forgiveness of him as we forgive others, if we do not forgive them heartily and sincerely, fully and freely, readily and willingly, we fly in the face of God, and our prayers are a sort of imprecations against ourselves. Note further, That although God promises us forgiveness if we forgive others, yet it is with this limitation, if no other condition of salvation be wanting ; for this virtue alone cannot obtain favor with God, unless other duties are performed.

16 ¶ Moreover, when ye fast be not as the hypocrites, of a sad countenance : they disfigure their faces, that they may appear unto men to fast. Verily, I say unto you, They have their reward.

17 But thou, when thou fastest, anoint thine head, and wash thy face.

18 That thou appear not unto men to fast, but unto thy Father which is in secret : and thy Father, which seeth in secret, shall reward thee openly.

The next duty which our Saviour instructs his disciples in, is that of religious fasting ; which is, a devoting of the whole man, soul and body, to a solemn and extraordinary attendance upon God, in a particular time set apart for that purpose ; in order to the depreciating of his displeasure, and for the supplicating of his favor, accompanied with an abstinence from bodily food and sensual delights, and from all secular affairs and worldly business. Now our Saviour's direction, as to this duty of fasting, is double : 1. He cautions us to beware of an abuse in fasting : Be not as the hypocrites are ; of a sad countenance : that is, do not affect a sullen sadness, ghastliness, and unpleasantness of countenance, like the hypocritical pharisees, who vitiate and discolor their faces, who mar and abolish their native complexion. Hypocrisy can paint the face black and sable, as well as pride with red and white. 2. He counsels us to take the right way in fasting ; to anoint the head and wash the face : that is, to look as at other times, using our ordinary garb and attire, and not to affect any thing that may make us look like mourners, when really we are not so. Where we may note, That though hypocrites by their dejected countenances and mortified habits do seek to gain an extraordinary reputation for piety and devotion, yet the sincere christian is to be abundantly satisfied with God's approbation of his services, and with the silent applause of his own conscience.

19 ¶ Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal :

20 But lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal.

21 For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also.

Observe here, 1. Something implied ; namely, that every man has his treasure ; and whatsoever or wheresoever that treasure is, it is attractive, and draws the heart of men unto it : for every man's treasure is his chief good. 2. Something permitted, namely, the getting, possessing, and enjoying of earthly treasure, as an instrument of doing much good. 3. Something prohibited ; and that is, the treasuring up of worldly wealth as our chief treasure ; Lay not up treasure on earth ; that is, take heed of an inordinate affection to, of an excessive pursuit after, of a vain confidence and trust in, any earthly comfort, as your chief treasure. 4. Here is something commanded ; But lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven ; treasure up those habits of grace which will bring you to an inheritance in glory ; be fruitful in "good works, laying up in store for yourselves a good foundation against the time to come, that ye may lay hold of eternal life." Observe, 5. The reason assigned, 1. Why we should not lay up our treasures on earth ; because all earthly treasures are of a perishing and uncertain nature, that they are subject to moth and rust, to robbery and theft ; the perishing nature of earthly things ought to be improved by us, as an argument to sit loose in our affections towards them. 2. The reason assigned, why we should lay up our treasures in heaven, is this ; because, heavenly treasures are subject to no such accidents and casualties as earthly treasures are, but are durable and lasting. The things that are not seen, are eternal. The treasures of heaven are inviolable, incorruptible, and everlasting. Now we may know whether we have chosen these things for our treasure by our high estimation of the worth of them, by our sensible apprehension of the want of them, by the torrent and tendency of our affection towards them, and by our laborious diligence and endeavours in the pursuit after them. Where the treasure is, there will the heart be also.

22 The light of the body is the eye : if therefore, thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light.

23 But if thine eye be evil, thy whole body shall be full of darkness. If, therefore, the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness !

H

In the foregoing verses our Saviour acquainted us what in our affections and judgments we should esteem as our chief treasure: now this judgment concerning our chief treasure, is by our Saviour here compared to the eye; as the eye is the candle of the body, that enlightens and directs it, so our understanding and judgment of the excellency of heaven, and the things above, will draw our affections towards them, and quicken our endeavours after them. Note thence, that such as our judgment is concerning happiness, such will our desires and endeavours be for the attainment of that happiness. Our affections are guided by our apprehensions; where the esteem is high, endeavours will be strong.

24 ¶ No man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon.

Observe here, a two-fold master spoken of, God and the world. God is our master by creation, preservation, and redemption: he has appointed us our work, and secured us our wages. This world is our master by intrusion, usurpation, and a general estimation: too many esteeming it as their chief good, and delighting in it as their chief joy. Observe, 2. That no man can serve these two masters, who are of contrary interests, and issue out contrary commands; when two masters are subordinate, and their commands subservient, each to the other, the difficulty of serving both is not great; but where the commands interfere, and interests clash, it is impossible. No man can serve God and the world, but he may serve God with the world: no man can seek God and mammon both as his chief good and ultimate end; because no man can divide his heart betwixt God and the world. Learn, That to love the world as our chief good, and to serve the world as our chief and sovereign commander, cannot stand with the love and service which we bear and owe to God. The world's slaves, whilst such, can be none of God's freemen.

25 Therefore I say unto you, Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on; Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment?

26 Behold the fowls of the air: for they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns: yet your heavenly Father feedeth them. Are ye not much better than they?

The next sin which our Saviour cautions his disciples against, is immoderate care for the things of this life, such a solicitous and voracious care for food and raiment as is accompanied with diffidence and distrust of God's fatherly providence over us; and provision for us; and the arguments which our Saviour uses to dissuade from this sin, are many and cogent, laid down in the following verses. Learn here, 1. That Almighty God will provide for every servant of his, food and raiment, and a competency of the comforts and conveniences of life. Learn, 2. That want of faith in God's promise and a distrust of his fatherly care, is a God-provoking and wrath-procuring sin. Learn, 3. That notwithstanding God's promise to supply our wants, we not only may, but must use such prudential and provident means as are in our power, in order to the supply of our own wants. Dr. Hammond's Pract. Catech.

27 Which of you, by taking thought, can add one cubit unto his stature?

28 And why take ye thought for raiment? Consider the lilies of the field how they grow: they toil not, neither do they spin:

29 And yet I say unto you, that even Solomon in all his glory, was not arrayed like one of these.

30 Wherefore, if God so clothe the grass of the field, which to-day is, and to-morrow is cast into the oven, shall he not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith?

31 Therefore take no thought, saying, What shall we eat? or, What shall we drink? or, Wherewithal shall we be clothed?

32 (For after all these things do the Gentiles seek;) for your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things.

Four arguments are here used by our Saviour to dissuade us from the sin of anxious care; it is needless, it is fruitless, it is heathenish, it is brutish. 1. It is needless; "Your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of these things," and will certainly provide for you; and what need you take care and God too! 2. It is fruitless; "Which of you by taking thought can add one cubit to his stature?" that is, by all our solicitous care, we can add nothing either to the length or comfort of our lives. 3. It is heathenish; "After all these things do the Gentiles seek." 4. It is brutish; nay, worse than brutish: the fowls of the air, and the beasts of the field, are fed by God; much more shall his children. Has not God a breakfast for every little bird, that comes chirping out of its nest; and for every beast in the wilderness, that comes leaping out of its den? and will he not much more provide for you, O ye of little faith? Surely he that feeds the ravens when they cry, will not starve his children when they pray. Naturalists observe of the raven, that she exposes her young ones as soon as they are hatched, and leaves them meatless and fatherless, to shift and struggle with hunger as soon as they come into the world: and whether by the dew from heaven, or flies, or worms, God feedeth them, when they gape and cry, they are provided for. From whence our Saviour infers, that man, being much better, that is, a more considerable creature than the fowls, the providence of God will provide for him, though no solicitude and anxious thoughtfulness of his contributes thereunto.

33 But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you.

That is, let your first and chief care be to promote the kingdom of grace in this world, and to secure the kingdom of glory in the next; and in order unto both, seek after an universal holiness and righteousness, both of heart and life, and then fear not the want of these outward comforts, they shall be added in measure, though not in excess; to satisfy, though not to satiate; for health, though not for surfeit. Observe, 1. That christians must here on earth set themselves to seek heaven or the kingdom of God. 2. That God's kingdom cannot be sought without God's righteousness: holiness is the only way to happiness. 3. That heaven, or the kingdom of God, must be sought in the first place, with our chief care and principal endeavour. 4. That heaven being once secured by us, all earthly things will be superadded by God, as he sees needful and convenient by us.

34 Take therefore no thought for the morrow; for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof.

Here our Saviour re-inforces his exhortation from solicitous care for worldly things, assuring us, that every day will bring with it a sufficient burden or trouble, and therefore we ought not to torment ourselves, by ante-dating our own sorrows, and foretelling what may or may not come to pass. Learn, That it is a painful, sinful, and unprofitable evil, to perplex ourselves with distrustful and distracting fears of what may come upon us: every day has its own duty and difficulty; and though sufferings must be expected and prepared for, yet we must not torment ourselves to-day with fears of what may be to-morrow; but every day cast our burden of care upon that God who daily careth for us.

CHAPTER VII.

Our blessed Saviour having continued his sermon on the mount in the former chapter, concludes it in this with an exhortation to several duties; the first of which is, to forbear rash judging of others.

JUDGE not, that ye be not judged. 2 For with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged; and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again.

Observe here, The prohibition, and the reason of that prohibition. Judge not, this is not meant of ourselves, but of our neighbour. Self-judging is a great duty; judging others a grievous sin; yet is not all judging of others condemned, but a judging of our neighbour's state or person rashly and rigidly, censoriously and uncharitably: especially unrighteously and unjustly. And the reason of the prohibition is added: If we judge others rashly, God will judge us righteously. Learn thence, That a rash and censorious judging of others, renders a person liable and obnoxious to the righteous judgment of God. Note farther, That Christ doth not here forbid judicial judging by the civil magistrate, nor ecclesiastical judging by the church governors, whose office gives them authority so to do. Nor does he forbid one christian to pass a judgment on the notorious actions of another, seeing the duty of reproof cannot be performed without it; but it is such a rash and censorious judging our brother as is void of charity towards him, as is accompanied with contempt of him; especially if we have been guilty of the same or greater sins before him.

3 And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye?

4 Or how wilt thou say to thy brother, Let me pull out the mote out of thine eye; and behold, a beam is in thine own eye?

5 Thou hypocrite, first cast out the beam out of thine eye; and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye,

By the mote in our brother's eye, is to be understood small and little sins, or some supposed sins: by the beam in our own eye, is meant some notorious sin of our own. Learn, 1. That those who are most censorious of the lesser infirmities of others, are usually most notoriously guilty of far greater failings themselves. 2. That those who desire others should look upon their infirmities with a compassionate eye, must not look upon the failings of others with a censorious eye. 3. That there is no such way to teach us charity in judging others, as to exercise severity in judging ourselves.

6 ¶ Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither cast ye your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet, and turn again and rend you.

By that which is holy, understand the word and ordinances in general, but admonition and reproof in particular; by dogs and swine, incorrigible and unreclaimable sinners, hardened scorers of holy things. It is a proverbial speech, expressing how sure charitable reprehensions are to be cast away upon incorrigible sinners. Learn, 1. That it is possible for sinners to arrive at such an height and pitch in wickedness and sin, that it may be a christian's duty not to admonish or reprove them. Observe, 2. How Christ provides, as for the honor of his word, so for the safety of those that publish it. As Christ will not have his word offered to some sinners, lest they should abuse it, so also lest they should abuse those that bring it: when sinners turn swine, and we are in danger of being rent by them, Christ himself gives us a permission to cease reproving of them.

7 ¶ Ask, and it shall be given you, seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you :

8 For every one that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened.

9 Or what man is there of you, whom if his son ask bread, he will give him a stone?

10 Or if he ask a fish, will give him a serpent?

11 If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father which is in heaven give good things to them that ask him?

Observe here, a precept and a promise; the precept, or duty commanded, is importunity and constancy in prayer, we must ask, seek, and knock; the promise, or mercy insured, is audience and acceptance with God. Note, 1. That man is a poor, indigent, and necessitous creature, full of wants, but unable to supply them. 2. That God is an all-sufficient good, able to supply the wants and to relieve the necessities of his creatures, if they call upon him and cry unto him. 3. Yet if we do not presently receive what we ask, we must still continue to seek and knock; though prayer be not always answered in our time, yet it shall never fail of an answer in God's time. 4. That natural propensity which we find in our breasts to hear the desires and to supply the wants of our own children, ought to raise in us a confident expectation, that Almighty God will hear our prayers, and supply our wants, when we call upon him: if a father will give when a child asks, much more will God. If ye being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father, &c. God loves to be giving, and to give good gifts is his delight. But prayer is the key that opens both his heart and hand: yet not every person nor every prayer shall find acceptance with God: the person praying must be a doer of God's will, St. John ix. 31. and not regard iniquity in his heart, nor entertain any grudge against his neighbours: the matter we pray for must be what is agreeable to God's will, and the manner of our prayer must be in faith, and with fervency, and unfeigned perseverance.

12 Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them; for this is the law and the prophets.

Observe here, 1. An incomparable rule of life; always to do as we would be done by. Note, That the great rule of righteousness and equity in all our dealings with men is this, To do as we would be done unto; it is a short rule, a full rule, and a clear rule; both the light of nature and the law of Christ bind it upon us. Observe, 2. The commendation of this rule. It is the law and the prophets: that is, the sum of the Old Testament, so far as concerns our duty to our neighbour, and the substance of the second table. Learn, That it is the design of the scriptures of the Old Testament, first to render men dutiful and obedient to God, and then righteous and charitable one to another. This is the law and the prophets, yea, the whole of the law and the prophets, to love God above ourselves, and to love our neighbours as ourselves.

13 ¶ Enter ye in at the strait gate; for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat:

14 Because strait is the gate and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it.

Observe here, 1. That every man is a traveller in a certain way. 2. That there are but two ways in which the race of mankind can travel; the one strait and narrow, that leads to life and salvation; the other broad and wide, which leads to hell and destruction. 3. That because of the difficulties in the way to salvation, and the easiness of the way to hell and destruction, hence it is that so few walk in the one, and so many in the other. 4. That christians having the strait way to heaven revealed to them, in and by the word of God, should choose rather to go in that way alone to life, than to run with the multitude in that broad way which leads down to the chambers of death and hell. 5. That the metaphor of a gate denotes our first entrance into a religious course of life, and its being strait denotes the difficulty that attends religion at first: evil habits to be put off, old companions in sin to be parted with; but when faith and patience have once smoothed our way, love will make our work delightful to us.

15 ¶ Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves.

16 Ye shall know them by their fruits. Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?

17 Even so every good tree bringeth forth good fruit: but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit.

18 A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit: neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit.

19 Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit, is hewn down and cast into the fire.

20 Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them.

Observe here, 1. A caution given. Beware of false prophets: There were two sorts of deceivers which our Saviour gave his disciples a special warning of; namely, false Christis and false prophets: false Christis were such as pretended to be the true Messias: false prophets were such as pretended to own christianity, but drew people away from the simplicity of the gospel. Observe, 2. The ground of this caution: "They come in sheep's clothing, but inwardly are ravening wolves;" that is, they make fair pretences to strictness in religion, and to greater measures and degrees of mortification and self-denial than others. Whence we learn, That such who go about to seduce others, usually pretend to extraordinary measures of sanctity themselves, to raise an admiration among those who judge of saints more by their looks than by their lives; more by their expressions than by their actions. What heavenly looks and devout gestures, what long prayers and frequent fastings had the hypocritical Pharisees beyond what Christ or his disciples ever practised! Observe, 3. The rule laid down by Christ, whereby we are to judge of false teachers; by their fruits ye shall know them. Learn, That the best course we can take to judge of teachers pretending to be sent of God, is to examine the design and tendency of their doctrines, and the course and tenor of their conversations. Good teachers, like good trees, will bring forth good fruits of truth and holiness; but evil men and seducers, like corrupt trees, will bring forth error and wickedness in their life and doctrine.

21 ¶ Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven.

22 Many will say unto me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works?

23 And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you; depart from me, ye that work iniquity.

Not every one; that is, Not any one that saith, Lord, Lord; that is, that owneth me by way of profession, by way of prayer, and by way of appeal, shall be saved; But he that doeth the will of my father sincerely and universally. Learn hence, 1. That multitudes at the great day shall be really disowned by Christ, as none of his servants, that did nominally own him for their Lord and Master: many that have now prophesied in his name, shall then perish in his wrath; many that have cast out devils now, shall be cast out to devils then: such as have now done many wonderful works, shall then perish for evil workers. Note, 2. That a bare name and profession of christianity, without the practice of it, is a very insufficient ground to build our hopes of heaven and salvation upon. A profession of faith and purposes of obedience, without actual obedience to the commands of God, will avail no person to salvation. 3. That gifts, eminent gifts, yea extraordinary and miraculous gifts, are not to be rested in or depended upon as sufficient evidences for heaven (No. 3.) and salvation. Gifts are as the gold which adorns the temple, but grace is like the temple that sanctifies the gold.

24 ¶ Therefore, whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock:

25 And the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house: and it fell not; for it was founded upon a rock.

26 And every one that heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them not, shall be likened unto a foolish man which built his house upon the sand:

27 And the rains descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell: and great was the fall of it.

Christ here speaks of two houses, the one built upon a rock, the other on the sand; these two houses were alike skilfully and strongly built to outward appearance; while the sun shone and the weather was fair, none could discern but that the house upon the sand was built as well, and might stand as long, as that on the rock; but when the rain fell the foundation failed. Thus, where is the hypocrite with all his faith and fear, with all his show and appearance of grace, in a wet and windy day? His goodly outside is like the apples of Sodom, fair and alluring to the eye, but being touched, instantly evaporate into dust and smoke. An hypocrite stands in grace no longer than till he falls into trouble: and accordingly our Saviour here concludes his excellent sermon with an elegant similitude. The wise builder is not the frequent hearer, but the faithful doer of the word, or the obedient christian; the house is heaven, and the hope of eternal life; the rock is Christ; The building upon the sand, is rested in the bare performance of outward duties: the rains, the winds, and the floods, are all kinds of afflicting evils, sufferings, and persecutions, that may befall us. Note, 1. That the obedient believer is the only wise man, that builds his hope of heaven upon a sure and abiding foundation. Note, 2. That such professors as rest in the outward performances of holy duties, are foolish builders, their foundation is weak and sandy, and all their hopes of salvation vain and uncertain. An outward profession of christianity, though set off by prophesying and doing miracles, will not avail any man towards his account at the great day, without that real and faithful, that universal and impartial, obedience to the laws of Christ, which the gospel requires.

28 And it came to pass, when Jesus had ended these sayings, the people were astonished at his doctrine;

29 For he taught them as one having authority, and not as the scribes.

Here we have two things observable, 1. The manner of our Lord's teaching, it was with authority; that is, it was grave and serious, pious and ardent, plain and profitable. With what brevity, without darkness! with what gravity, without affectation! with what eloquence, without meretricious ornament, were our Lord's discourses. The majesty he showed in his sermons, made it evidently appear that he was a teacher sent of God, and clothed with his authority. Observe, 2. The success of his teaching: The people were astonished at his doctrine; affected with admiration, believing him to be an extraordinary prophet. Learn, that such is the power of Christ's doctrine, when accompanied with the energy of the Holy Spirit, that it makes all auditors admirers, yea, believers; it causes astonishment in their minds, and reformation in their manners.

CHAPTER VIII.

This chapter is called by St. Ambrose, scriptura miraculosa, The miraculous scripture; there being several great miracles recorded in this chapter: as the cleansing the leper, the curing of the centurion's servant, the appeasing of the wind, &c. Our Saviour having delivered his doctrine in the former chapters, in this he backs his doctrine with miracles, for the establishment and confirmation of it.

WHEN he was come down from the mountain, great multitudes followed him.

2 And, behold, there came a leper, and worshipped him, saying, Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean.

3 And Jesus put forth his hand, and touched him, saying, I will; Be thou clean. And immediately his leprosy was cleansed.

4 And Jesus saith unto him, See thou tell no man: but go thy way, show thyself to the priest, and offer the gift that Moses commanded, for a testimony unto them.

Note here, in general, that the Jews paid civil adoration to their kings and to their prophets; thus Saul stooped with his face to the ground to Samuel; Nebuchadnezzar fell on his face before Daniel, and Obadiah before Elijah; from whence may be gathered, that the adorations given to Christ by them that knew nothing of his divinity, were paid him as a prophet sent from God. Only next, several particulars are here observable: as, 1. The petitioner, and that is a leper; he came and worshipped Christ, and petitions him to heal him, saying, Lord, if thou wilt thou canst make me clean. Where he discovers a firm belief of Christ's power, but a diffidence and distrust in Christ's will, to heal him. Learn, Christ's divine power must be fully assented to, and firmly believed by all those that expect benefit by him, and healing from him. Observe, 2. How readily our Saviour grants his petition; Jesus touched him, saying, I will; be thou clean. Our Saviour, by touching the leper, showed himself to be above the law, as God; though subject to the law, as man; for by the ceremonial law, the leper was forbidden to be touched. Yet it was a received rule among the Jews, that a prophet might vary from the punctilios of the ceremonial law, or change a ritual law; so did Elijah stretch himself on the dead child, and Elisha on the Shunamite's son; notwithstanding the prohibition of coming near the dead. But Christ's curing the leper by the word of his mouth, and the touch of his hand, showed his divine power, and proved himself to be truly and really sent of God; leprosy being called by the Jews the finger of God, a disease of his sending, and of his removing, our Saviour, therefore, as a proof of his being the Messiah, tells the disciples of John, That the lepers were cleansed, Matt. xi. 5. and the dead raised. Which being put together, intimates that the cleansing of the leper is as peculiar an act of divine power, as the raising of the dead; and accordingly, 2 Kings v. 7, said the king, "Am I a God, that this man sends to me to cure a man of his leprosy?" Observe, 3. The certainty and suddenness of the cure; immediately his leprosy was cleansed. Christ not only cured him without means, but without the ordinary time required for such a cure. Thus Christ showed both power, and will to cure him miraculously who believed his power, but questioned his willingness. Observe, 4. The charge and command given by Christ after the cure: first; To tell it to no man: wherein the modesty, humility, and piety, of Christ, is discovered, together with the care of his own safety. His modesty, in not desiring his good deeds should be proclaimed; his humility, in shunning vain-glorious applause and commendation; his piety, in desiring all the praise, honor, and glory should redound entirely to God; his care of his own safety, lest the publishing of this miracle should create him untimely danger from the pharisees. Christians, behold your pattern to do much good, and make but little noise. Christ affected no popular air, he did not spoil a good work by vain ostentation. When we work hard for God, take we great care that pride doth not blow either it or us. O how difficult it is for us to do much service, and not value ourselves too much for the services which we do! The second part of the charge which Christ gave the recovered leper, was, "To show himself to the priest, and offer the gift which Moses commanded for a testimony unto them;" that is, a testimony to the Jews, that he was the Messiah, and that he did not oppose the ceremonial law given by Moses. Where note, That our Saviour would have the ceremonial law punctually observed, so long as the time for its continuance did endure; though he came to destroy that law, yet whilst it stood, he would have it observed. Here Dr. Lightfoot observes, that though the priesthood was much degenerated from its primitive institution, by human inventions, yet Christ sends the leper to submit to it; because though they did corrupt, yet they did not extinguish the divine institution.

5 ¶ And when Jesus was entered into Capernaum, there came unto him a centurion, beseeching him,

6 And saying, Lord, my servant lieth at home sick of the palsy, grievously tormented.

7 And Jesus saith unto him, I will come and heal him.

8 The centurion answered and said, Lord, I am not worthy that thou shouldest come under my roof: but speak the word only, and my servant shall be healed.

9 For I am a man under authority, having soldiers under me; and I say to this man, Go, and he goeth; and to another, Come, and he cometh: and to my servant do this, and he doeth it.

10 When Jesus heard it, he marvelled, and said to them that followed, Verily, I say unto you, I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel.

The second miracle our Saviour works in this chapter, is the healing of the centurion's servant. Where observe, 1. The person that applies to our Saviour for help and healing: he was a gentile, an heathen, a Roman soldier, an officer or commander; yet he believes in, and relies upon the power of Christ. Note, That such is the freeness of divine grace, that it extends itself to all sorts and ranks, to all orders and degrees of men, without exception. Even the bloody trade of war yields worthy clients to Christ: he doth not so much regard who we are, and whence we are, as what we are, and with what dispositions and inclinations we come unto him. Observe, 2. The person whom the centurion comes to Christ for; not for himself, not for his son, but for his servant. His servant is sick, he doth not drive him out of doors, nor stand gazing by his bed-side, but looks out for relief for him: a worthy example! Some masters have not so much regard to their sick servants as they have to their oxen or their swine; but he is not worthy of a good servant, that in a time of sickness is not willing to serve his servant. A conceit of superiority must beget in no man a neglect of charitable offices towards inferiors. Observe, 3. Unto whom the centurion seeks, and with what zeal and application; he seeks not to wizards and conjurers, but to the physician, for his poor servant; yea, to Christ, the best physician; and this not with a formal relation in his mouth, but with a vehement aggravation of the disease; My servant is grievously tormented: where the master's condolency and tender sympathy with his afflicted servant, is both matter of commendation and imitation also. Observe, 4. The happy mixture of humility and faith which was found in the centurion; he owns his unworthiness of having Christ come under his roof, yet he acknowledged Christ's power, that by speaking of a word his servant might be healed by him. Humility is both the fruit of faith, and the companion of faith; an humble soul has an high esteem of Christ, and a low esteem of himself. Observe, 5. How our blessed Saviour exceeds both his desires and expectations; Christ says, not only will I heal him, but, I will come and heal him: wonderful condescension! In St. John. chap. iv. 47, we read of a certain nobleman and ruler that twice entreated our Saviour to come to his house and heal his son, but our Lord refused, and did not stir a foot, here the centurion doth but barely tell Christ of his poor servant's sickness, and Christ both unasked and undesired, says, I will come and heal him. O how far was Christ from seeming in the least to honor riches and despise poverty! he that came in the form of a servant, goes down and visits a sick servant upon his poor pallet-bed, that would not visit the rich couch of the ruler's son. How should we stoop to the lowest offices of love and kindness to one another, when Christ thus condescendingly abased himself before us! Observe, 6. The notice and observation which our Saviour takes of the centurion's faith: he wondered at it from him who had wrought it in him. Christ wrought this faith as God, and wondered at it as man; what can be more wonderful than to see Christ wonder! We do not find our Saviour wondering at worldly pomp and greatness. When the disciples wondered at the magnificence of the temple, Christ rather rebuked them, than wondered with them: but when he sees the gracious acts of faith, he is ravished with wonder. Let it teach us to place our admiration where Christ fixes his; let us be more affected with the least measure of grace in a good man, than with all the gaieties and glory of a great man: let us not envy the one, but admire the other.

11 And I say unto you, That many shall come from the east and west, and shall sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven:

12 But the children of the kingdom shall be cast out into outer darkness: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

13 And Jesus said unto the centurion, Go thy way; and as thou hast believed, so be it done unto thee. And his servant was healed in the self same hour.

This was the first occasion that Christ took to speak of the calling of the Gentiles, and rejection of the Jews. Observe, here, That the unbelieving Jews are called the children of the kingdom, because born within the pale of the visible church: they presumed that the kingdom of heaven was entailed upon them, because they were Abraham's seed; they boasted of, and gloried in, their external and outward privileges. Note, thence, 1. That gospel-ordinances, and church privileges enjoyed, are a special honor to a people, admitted to the participation of them: our Saviour here styles the Jews upon that account. The children of the kingdom. 2. That such privileges enjoyed, but not improved, do provoke Almighty God to inflict the heaviest of judgments upon a people;

"The children of the kingdom shall be cast into outer darkness," that is, into the darkness of hell, where shall be perpetual lamentations for the remembrance of the gospel kindly offered, but unthankfully rejected.

14 And when Jesus was come into Peter's house, he saw his wife's mother laid, and sick of a fever.

15 And he touched her hand, and the fever left her: and she arose, and ministered unto them.

The next miracle which our Saviour wrought, was in curing Peter's wife's mother of a fever: the miracle was not in curing an incurable distemper, but in the way and manner of curing; for, 1. It was by a touch of our Saviour's hand. 2. It was instantaneous and sudden: immediately the fever left her. 3. The visible effects of her recovery presently appeared; "She instantly arose and ministered unto them." That she could arise, argued her cure miraculous: that she could and did arise, and administer unto Christ, argued her thankfulness, and a great sense of his goodness upon her mind. Note here, 1. That marriage in the ministers of the gospel, yea, even in the apostles themselves, and in Peter, the chiefest of them, was neither censured nor condemned by our Saviour. St. Peter had a wife and family, which Christ condescends to visit. Observe, 2. That the first thing which Christ takes notice of in the house which he condescends to visit, is what aileth any in it; what need they stand in of his help and healing; and accordingly, together with his presence, he affords them relief. Learn, 3. That when Christ has graciously visited and healed any of his servants, it ought to be their first work and next care to administer unto Christ; that is, to employ their recovered health, and improve their renewed strength in his service; She arose and ministered.

16 ¶ When the even was come, they brought unto him many that were possessed with devils; and he cast out the spirits with his word, and healed all that were sick:

17 That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esaias the prophet, saying, Himself took our infirmities, and bare our sicknesses.

It was very common about the time of our Saviour's coming in the flesh, for the devil bodily to possess persons, and very grievously to torment them. This is one of the sad and dismal evils which sin has made us liable and obnoxious to, to be bodily possessed by satan; when we give satan the power of our hearts, it is a just and righteous thing with God, to give him the possession of our bodies. But who is the person that dispossesses satan? Christ Jesus: it is a stronger than the strong man that can cast out satan: our Jesus in whom we trust, by his powerful word alone can deliver us from satan's power, and all the sad effects and consequences thereof. But observe, with what condolency and sympathizing piety he exercises these acts of mercy and compassion towards poor creatures; he is said to take our "infirmities upon himself, and to bear our sicknesses;" he bare the guilt, which was the cause of these griefs and sorrows; and he bare the sorrows themselves, by a tender sympathy with us under the burden of them. Christ considers our sufferings as his own; he was afflicted in all our afflictions, and pained with all our pains; in this sense, "he took our infirmities and bare our sicknesses."

18 ¶ Now, when Jesus saw great multitudes about him, he gave commandment to depart unto the other side.

19 And a certain scribe came, and said unto him, Master, I will follow thee whithersoever thou goest.

20 And Jesus saith unto him, The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests: but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head.

Observe here, A person resolving to follow Christ; a good resolution, if made deliberately, and not rashly, nor for sinister ends and secular advantages; which it is to be feared was the case here, by the answer which our Saviour gives: for says he, foxes have holes, &c. that is, my condition in this world is very poor, worse than the birds of the air, for they have their fixed nests; or the beasts of the earth, for they have their dens and holes; but I have no fixed habitation. Note, 1. That many persons take up rash and sudden resolutions to follow Christ, before they have well considered what it will cost them; what they are likely to lose by being his disciples. 2. That such men may find themselves miserably mistaken, who expect to gain any thing by following of Christ, but their soul's salvation. Note, 3. The title given to Christ; he is styled here, and frequently elsewhere, The Son of man. 1. To show the truth of his humanity; the Son of man must be man. 2. To show the depth of his abasement; Christ humbled, yea, emptied himself, when being the Son of God he submitted to be made man: "The Son of man hath not where to lay his head."

21 And another of his disciples said unto him, Lord, suffer me first to go and bury my father.

22 But Jesus said unto him, Follow me, and let the dead bury their dead.

We must not suppose by this prohibition that Christ disallows or disapproves of any civil office from one person to another, much less of a child to a parent, either living or dying; but he lets us know, 1. That no office of love and service to man, must be preferred before our duty to God, unto whom we owe our first obedience. 2. That lawful and decent offices become sinful, when they hinder greater duties. 3. That such as are called to the work and employment of the ministry, must mind that alone, and leave inferior duties to inferior persons: as if our Saviour had said, Others will serve well enough to bury the dead: but thou that art a consecrated person must do that unto which thou art consecrated and set apart. Under the law the priest might not come near a dead corpse, nor meddle with the interment of their own parents, unto which our Saviour probably alludes.

23 ¶ And when he was entered into a ship his disciples followed him.

24 And, behold, there arose a great tempest in the sea, insomuch that the ship was covered with the waves; but he was asleep.

25 And his disciples came to him, and awoke him, saying, Lord save us: we perish.

26 And he saith unto them, Why are ye fearful? O ye of little faith! Then he arose, and rebuked the winds and the sea, and there was a great calm.

27 But the men marvelled, saying, What manner of man is this, that even the winds and the sea obey him?

Observe here, 1. Christ and his disciples no sooner put forth to sea, but dangers attend and difficulties do accompany them: a tempest arose, and the ship was covered with waves. Learn thence, That the presence of Christ itself doth not exempt his disciples and followers from trouble and danger: here is a great tempest about the disciples' fears, though Christ was in their company. Observe, 2. The posture our Saviour was in when the tempest arose; he being weary on the land, was fallen asleep in the ship: our blessed Redeemer hereby sheweth himself to be truly and really man; as he took upon him our human nature, so he subjected himself to our human infirmities. Observe, 3. The disciples' application made to him; they awake him with a sad outcry, Lord save us: we perish. Here was faith mixed with human frailty: they had faith in his power, that he could save them; but being asleep, they concluded he must awake before he could save them: whereas though his human nature was asleep, yet his divine nature neither slumbered nor slept. Learn hence, That the prevalency of fear in a time of great and imminent danger, though it may argue weakness of faith, yet it is no evidence of want of faith: in the midst of the disciples' fears they believed Christ's power. Observe, 4. A double rebuke given by our Saviour (1.) To the winds and seas; next to the fears of his disciples; He rebukes the winds, and seas, and instantly they are calm; when the sea was as furious as a madman, Christ by his divine power calms it. Learn hence, That the most raging winds and outrageous seas cannot stand before the rebukes of Christ; if once he rebukes them, their rage is down: God lays a law upon the most lawless creatures, even when they seem to act the most lawless part. (2.) Christ rebukes his disciples' fears: Why are ye fearful? No sooner was the storm up, but their fears were up, and they were as much overset with their boisterous passions, as the vessel was with the tempestuous winds; and accordingly Christ rebukes the tempest within, and then the tempest without: first he calms their hearts, and then the seas. From this instance we see, that great faith in the habit may appear little in act and exercise. The disciples' faith in forsaking all and following Christ, was great faith, but in this present act their faith was weak, through the prevalency of their fear. Note lastly, that the disciples' faith was lessened by their fear: fear is generated by unbelief, and unbelief strengthened by fear; as in things natural there is a circular generation, vapors beget showers, and showers vapors; so it is in things moral, nothing can cure us of fear till God cures us of unbelief: Christ therefore takes an effectual method to rid the disciples of their fears, by rebuking their unbelief.

28 ¶ And when he was come to the other side, into the country of the Gergesenes, there met him two possessed with devils, coming out of the tombs, exceeding fierce, so that no man might pass by that way,

We read of few, if any, in the Old Testament, that were possessed with evil spirits; but of many in the New Testament. Our Saviour came into the world to destroy the works of the devil; therefore he suffered satan to enter some human bodies, to show his divine power in casting them out. Note here, 1. That the evil angels by their fall, lost their purity, but not their power. 2. That they do no oftener exert their power in doing mischief to the bodies and lives of men, is from the restraining power of God. The devils cannot do all the mischief they would, and they shall not do all they can.

29 And, behold, they cried out, saying, What have we to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of God? art thou come hither to torment us before the time;

Observe, the devils knew Christ to be the Son of God, and that he came into the world to be a Saviour, but not their Saviour; and therefore they cry out, What have we to do with thee? or thou with us? O what an uncomfortable faith is this, to believe that Christ is a Saviour, and at the same time to know that he is none of our Saviour! But what is their outcry against Christ? This, Art thou come to torment us before the time? Learn, 1. That there are tortures appointed to the spiritual natures of evil angels. The fire of hell is conceived to be partly material, and partly spiritual; partly material, to work upon the bodies of evil men, and partly spiritual, to work upon the souls of men, and the spirits of evil angels. Learn, 2. That though the devils be now as full of discontent as they can be, yet they are not so full of torment as they shall be; their speech here intimates, that there will be a time when their torments shall be increased, when they shall have their fill of torments: therefore they pray, increase not our torments before the appointed time of their increase.

30 And there was a good way off from them an herd of many swine feeding.

K

31 So the devils besought him, saying, If thou cast us out, suffer us to go away into the herd of swine.

Observe, here, 1. A notable evidence of satan's limited power, that a whole legion of devils had not power to destroy one man, nor were able to hurt the meanest creatures without permission. Observe, 2. The devils' acknowledgment of their own impotency, and Christ's power; their asking leave of Christ to go into the swine, shows that they could not go of themselves. Learn hence, 1. The restlessness of satan's malice; he will hurt the swine rather than not hurt at all. 2. That though satan's malice be infinite, yet his power is limited and bounded; he cannot do all the mischief he would, so he shall not do all he can.

32 And he said unto them, Go. And, when they were come out, they went into the herd of swine; and, behold, the whole herd of swine ran violently down a steep place into the sea, and perished in the waters.

Although Christ seldom wrought any destructive miracle, and although he certainly foresaw that the swine would perish in the waters; yet that the people might see how great the power and malice of the devil would be, if not restrained by Christ, he permitted him to enter into the swine: Christ said unto them, Go: and how glad was satan of this permission to enter into the swine, in order to their destruction. Let it teach us our duty, by prayer to commit ourselves, and all that we have, morning and evening, into the hands of God's care; all that we have in the house, and all that we have in the field, that it may be preserved from the power and malice of evil spirits.

33 And they that kept them fled, and went their ways into the city, and told every thing; and what was befallen to the possessed of the devils.

34 And, behold, the whole city came out to meet Jesus; and, when they saw him, they besought him that he would depart out of their coasts.

Observe, 1. What a contrary effect this miracle which Christ wrought had upon these people: instead of believing on him for his miraculous cure of the possessed, the loss of their swine enrageth them, and makes them desire Christ to depart from them. Temporal losses are so great in worldly men's estimation, that spiritual advantages are nothing esteemed; carnal hearts prefer their swine before their Saviour; and had rather lose Christ's presence than their worldly profits. Observe, 2. How unanimous and importunate these Gadarenes were to get rid of Christ, the whole city came out, and are not only willing to his departure, but they beseech him to depart out of their coasts. Learn hence, That deplorably sad is the condition of such from whom Christ departs; more deplorably sad is their state who say unto Christ, depart: but most deplorably sad is the cause of them that intreat and beseech Christ to depart from them. Thus did the Gadarenes, and accordingly Christ took ship and departed from them, and we never read of his return unto them.

CHAPTER IX.

AND he entered into a ship, and passed over, and came into his own city.

In the last verse of the foregoing chapter, The Gadarenes with one consent desire Christ to depart out of their coasts; here we find our Saviour, according to their desire, departing from them into his own city, which was Capernaum; for Bethlehem brought him forth, Nazareth brought him up, and Capernaum was his dwelling place. From their desire of Christ's departure, and from Christ's departing according to their desire, we learn, That the blessed Jesus will not long trouble that people with his presence who are weary of his company and desirous of his departure.

2 And, behold, they brought to him a man sick of the palsy, lying on a bed; and Jesus, seeing their faith, said unto the sick of the palsy, Son be of good cheer, thy sins be forgiven thee.

Observe, 1. The patient, One sick of the palsy: which being a resolution of the nerves, weakens the joints, and confines the person to his bed or couch. As a demonstration of Christ's divine power, he was pleased to single out some incurable diseases (as the world accounts them) to work a cure upon, as the leprosy and palsy. 2. The physician, Jesus Christ; he alone is that wise, faithful, and compassionate physician, that can and doth cure both soul and body. Observe, 3. The moving and impulsive cause of this cure, Jesus seeing their faith; that is, their firm persuasion that he was clothed with a divine power, and able to help; together with their confidence in his goodness, that he was as willing as he was able; and no sooner did they exercise their faith in believing, that Christ did exert his divine power in healing. It was not the sick man's faith, but the faith of his friends: the faith of others may prevail for obtaining corporal benefits and temporal blessings for us: thus the centurion's faith healed his servant, and Jairus' faith raised his daughter. Observe, 4. The marvellous efficacy and power of faith: it obtained not only what was desired, but more than was expected: they desired only the healing of the body, but Jesus seeing their faith, heals body and soul too, saying, Be of good cheer, thy sins are forgiven thee; intimating, that diseases proceed from sin, because Christ first speaks of forgiving them: yet it is conceived that Christ rather speaketh here of the temporal remission of the punishment, than of the eternal; because that depends on our own faith and not on others.

3 And, behold, certain of the scribes said within themselves, This man blasphemeth.

See here, how the best of men are sometimes charged with saying and doing the worst of things; to do well, and bear ill, was the portion of Christ himself, and may be the portion of the holiest of those that belong to Christ: the innocent Jesus was accused of blasphemy, of sorcery, and of the blackest crimes. Innocency itself can protect no man from slander and false accusations.

4 And Jesus, knowing their thoughts, said, Wherefore think ye evil in your hearts?

5 For whether is it easier to say, Thy sins be forgiven thee? or to say, Arise and walk?

6 But that ye may know that the Son of man hath power on earth to forgive sins, (then saith he to the sick of the palsy,) Arise, take up thy bed, and go into thine house.

Our Saviour here gives the pharisees a two-fold demonstration of his godhead: first, by letting them understand that he knew their thoughts; for to search the hearts, and to know the thoughts of the children of men, is not in the power either of angels or men, but the prerogative of God only. Secondly, By assuming to himself a power to forgive sins; the Son of man hath power to forgive sins. Our Saviour here, by forgiving sins in his own name, and by his own authority, doth give the world an undeniable proof and convincing evidence of his godhead: for, Who can forgive sins but God only?

7 And he arose, and departed to his house.

8 But when the multitude saw it, they marvelled, and glorified God, which had given such power unto men.

Note here, The multitude marvelled, but not believed; they all admire our Saviour for an extraordinary man, but did not believe in him as the Son of God: they praise God, for giving such power to heal the bodies of men; but not for sending his Son into the world to save the souls of men. Learn hence, that the sight of Christ's miracles is not sufficient to work faith in our soul, that requires the concurring operation of the Holy Spirit; the one may make us marvel, the other must make us believe.

9 ¶ And as Jesus passed forth from thence, he saw a man named Matthew, sitting at the receipt of custom; and he saith unto him, Follow me. And he arose, and followed him.

Observe here, The number of our Lord's apostles not being filled up, what a strange election and choice he makes; Matthew, a grinding publican is the man. Learn, Such is the freeness of God's grace, that it chooses, and such is the efficacy of it, that it overpowers and brings in the worst of sinners unto God; Matthew a publican; Zaccheus, an extortioner; Manasseh, a murderer; Paul a persecutor; all these are brought home to God by the power of converting grace. Observe, 2. Matthew's ready compliance with God's call, He arose and followed Christ. When the inward call of the spirit accompanies the outward call of the word, the soul readily complies, and presently yields obedience to the voice of God. (Bp. Hall.) Christ sometimes speaks by his word to our ears, and we hear not, we stir not: but when he speaks by his Spirit to our hearts, satan shall not hold us down, the world shall not keep us back, but we shall arise, and follow our Lord and Master.

10 ¶ And it came to pass, as Jesus sat at meat in the house, behold, many publicans and sinners came and sat down with him and his disciples.

Observe here, Christ invites Matthew to a discipleship, Matthew invites Christ to a feast; the servant invites his master, a sinner invites his Saviour. We do not find, where-ever Christ was invited to any table, and he refused to go; if a pharisee, if a publican invited, he constantly went; not for the pleasure of eating, but for the opportunity of conversing and doing good: Christ feasts us when we feast him. From Matthew's example, learn, That new converts are full of affection towards Christ, and very expressive of their love unto him. Such as before conversion disesteemed him, do afterwards kindly and respectfully entertain him: Matthew, touched with a sense of Christ's rich love, makes him a royal feast. Observe farther, How at this feast many publicans and sinners were present, of Matthew's acquaintance no doubt, and probably invited by him, they might also see Christ, and be partakers of the same grace with him. Whence we learn, That grace teaches a man to desire and seek the conversion of others; and such as are truly brought home to Christ themselves, will study and endeavour to bring in all their acquaintance to Christ also.

11 And when the pharisees saw it, they said unto his disciples, Why eateth your Master with publicans and sinners?

See here, what a grief it is to the wicked men to find others brought in to Christ: the wicked pharisees murmur, repine, and envy, instead of admiring Christ's condescension, and adoring his divine goodness; they censure him for conversing with sinners: but Christ tells them in the following verses, that he conversed with them as their physician, not as their companion.

12 But when Jesus heard that, he said unto them, They that be whole need not a physician, but they that are sick.

13 But go ye and learn what that meaneth, I will have mercy and not sacrifice: for I am not come to call the righteous but sinners to repentance.

As if our Lord had said, "With whom should the physician converse, but with his sick patients? Now I come into the world to do the office of a kind physician unto men; surely then I am to take all opportunities to help and heal them: they that are sick need the physician: but for you pharisees, who are whole and well in your own opinion, and swelled with a conceit of your own righteousness, I have no hopes of doing any good upon you; for such as think themselves whole, desire no physician's help. Learn hence, 1. That sin is the soul's malady, its spiritual disease and sickness. 2. That Christ is the physician appointed by God for the cure and healing of this disease and malady. 3. That there are multitudes spiritually sick, who yet think themselves sound and whole. 4. That only such as are sensible of their spiritual sickness, are subjects capable of cure, and the persons whom Christ is a healing physician to; They that are whole need not a physician, but they that are sick.

14 ¶ Then came to him the disciples of John, saying, Why do we and the pharisees fast oft, but thy disciples fast not?

15 And Jesus said unto them, Can the children of the bride-chamber mourn as long as the bridegroom is with them? but the days will come, when the bridegroom shall be taken from them, and then shall they fast.

16 No man putteth a piece of new cloth unto an old garment: for that which is put in to fill up taketh from the garment, and the rent is made worse.

17 Neither do men put new wine into old bottles; else the bottles break, and the wine runneth out, and the bottles perish: but they put new wine into new bottles, and both are preserved.

The pharisees themselves had a contention with our Saviour in the foregoing verses; here they set on the disciples of John, to contend with him about fasting; alledging that the disciples of John fasted often, Christ's disciples not at all: our Saviour owns it, that his disciples did not fast at present, for two reasons, 1. Because it was unsuitable to them. 2. Because it was intolerable for them. It was unsuitable to them, because of Christ's bodily presence with them: this made it a time of joy and feasting, not of mourning and fasting; whilst Christ the bridegroom is with them, they must feast and rejoice; when removed from them, there will be cause enough to fast and mourn. Christ is the bridegroom, and the church the bride, which he has espoused and married to himself; and whilst his spouse did enjoy his bodily presence with her, it was a day of joy and rejoicing to her, and mourning and fasting were improper for her. Again, this discipline of fasting was at present intolerable for the disciples, for they were raw, green and tender, and could no more bear the severities of religion at present, than an old garment could bear a piece of new stiff cloth to be set into it, which will make the rent worse, if the garment come to a stretch; nor no more than old bottles can keep new wine. Thus says Christ, "My disciples are young and green, tender and weak, newly converted, they cannot bear the severer exercises of religion presently; but when I am ascended up into heaven, I will send my Holy Spirit, which shall enable them to do all the duties which the gospel enjoins." Hence we may gather, that young converts, till grown up to some consistency in grace, must not be put upon the severer exercises of religion, but handled with that tenderness and gentleness, which becomes the mild and merciful dispensation of the gospel. Our Saviour here commends prudence to his ministers; that they put not their people upon duties beyond their strength; but consult their progress in christianity and the proficiency they have made in religion, and treat them accordingly.

18 ¶ While he spake these things unto them, behold, there came a certain ruler, and worshipped him, saying, My daughter is even now dead: but come and lay thine hand upon her, and she shall live.

19 And Jesus arose and followed him, and so did his disciples.

Observe the humble posture in which this man came unto Christ, namely, falling at his feet and worshipping him; which was not only a sign of tender affection towards his daughter, but an evidence of his faith in our blessed Saviour; yet his confining Christ's power to his bodily presence, and to the touch of his hand, was a token of the weakness of his faith; Come, says he, and lay thine hand upon her, and she shall live. As if Christ could not have cured her, without either coming to her, or laying his hand upon her. Note here, That although all that come to Christ are alike strong in faith, yet our blessed Redeemer refuses none that come unto him with a sincere faith, though in much weakness of faith. Jesus arose and followed him.

20 ¶ (And behold a woman, which was diseased with an issue of blood twelve years, came behind him, and touched the hem of his garment.

21 For she said within herself, If I may but touch his garment, I shall be whole.

22 But Jesus turned him about; and, when he saw her, he said, Daughter, be of good comfort; thy faith hath made thee whole. And the woman was made whole from that hour.)

Whilst Christ is on his way to the ruler's house, a diseased woman comes behind him, touches his garment, and is instantly healed: the virtue lay not in her finger, but in her faith, or rather in Christ, which her faith instrumentally drew forth. Observe here, How faith oftentimes meets with a sweeter welcome than it could expect. This poor woman came to Christ trembling, but went away triumphing; Christ bids her, "Be of good comfort, thy faith hath made thee whole."

23 And when Jesus came into the ruler's house, and saw the minstrels and the people making a noise, 24 He said unto them, Give place, for the maid is not dead, but sleepeth. And they laughed him to scorn.

25 But when the people were put forth, he went in, and took her by the hand, and the maid arose.

26 And the fame hereof went abroad into all that land.

Our Saviour being come to the ruler's house, finds the people very busily preparing for the interment of the dead corpse, with music and other solemnities. The custom of having music at funerals came from the heathens, no mention is made thereof in the Old Testament; we read of tearing the flesh, shaving the head, eating the bread of mourners, also of funeral songs, but these were only sung with the voice: but instruments of music at funerals came from the pagans. Weeping and lamentation are the most proper funeral music: then, nothing sounds so well as a sigh, nor is any thing so much in season as a tear; yet are all demonstrations of immoderate and excessive mourning both hurtful to the living, and dishonorable to the dead; nor is it an argument of more love, but an evidence of less grace. Observe next, In what sense our Saviour affirms, that the damsel was not dead. Mortua est nobis, mihi dormit, says St. Jerom; "She is dead to you but asleep to me." I can as easily raise her from death, as you can awake her out of sleep. Her soul was separated from her body, but not yet fixed in its eternal mansion. Souls departed are under the conduct of angels, good or bad, to their several places of bliss or misery. Probably the soul of this damsel was under the guard of angels near the dead body, waiting the pleasure of Christ in reference to it; either to restore it again to the body, or to translate it to its eternal mansion. Note here, That from these words of our Saviour, The maid is not dead, but sleepeth, the Jesuits plead for their doctrine of equivocations, and mental reservations, alledging, that when Christ said, She is not dead, he reserved in his mind, "in respect of my power. But the words of Christ were plainly spoken to those who were preparing for her interment and funeral rites; and accordingly only intimate, that she was not so dead, as that they needed to make these preparations, he being come to awake her out of sleep.

27 ¶ And when Jesus departed thence, two blind men followed him, crying, and saying, Thou Son of David have mercy on us.

(No. 3)

28 And when he was come into the house, the blind men came to him: and Jesus saith unto them, Believe ye that I am able to do this? They said unto him, Yea, Lord.

29 Then touched he their eyes, saying, According to your faith be it unto you.

30 And their eyes were opened, and Jesus straitly charged them, saying, see that no man know it.

31 But they, when they were departed, spread abroad his fame in all that country.

The ruler, and others who came to Christ for cure and healing, believed him to be a man unto whom Almighty God had communicated divine power. But it is observable, That these poor blind men did believe him to be the Messias, by their calling him the Son of David; and according to their faith, so was their success; their faith capacitated them for a cure. But why did our Lord enjoin the blind men silence, and straitly charged them to tell no man of the cure? Herein the great modesty and humility of Christ appeared, in avoiding all ostentation and commendation; as also a due care of his own safety, lest the publishing of his miracles should create him untimely danger from the pharisees, 32 ¶ As they went out, behold, they brought unto him a dumb man possessed with a devil.

33 And when the devil was cast out, the dumb spake: and the multitude marvelled, saying, It was never so seen in Israel.

Still our Lord goes about doing good: before, he healed the diseased: here, he helps the possessed. Learn, 1. That amongst the many calamities which sin has rendered human nature liable and obnoxious to, this is one: to be bodily possessed by satan. This man's dumbness was caused by the devil's possession. Learn, 2. That one demonstration of Christ's divine power, and a convictive evidence of his being truly and really God, was his casting out devils by the word of his power.

34 But the pharisees said, He casteth out devils through the prince of the devils.

See here the dreadful and sad effects of blindness, obstinacy, and malice; the pharisees charge Christ with making a contract with the devil, affirming that he derived his power from him: but how unlikely was this, that satan should lend our Saviour a power against himself, and for the destruction of his own kingdom! O how dangerous is a wilful and obstinate oppression of the truth! it provokes God to deliver a person up to a final obduracy.

35 And Jesus went about all the cities and villages, teaching in their synagogues.

and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing every sickness and every disease among the people.

36 ¶ But when he saw the multitudes, he was moved with compassion on them, because they fainted, and were scattered abroad, as sheep having no shepherd.

Observe here, 1. Our Saviour's great work and business in this world; it was doing good both to the bodies and souls of men; the most pleasant and delightful, the most happy and glorious work that a person can be employed about. Observe, 2. His unwearied diligence and industry in this great and good work: "He went about all the cities and villages, preaching the gospel and healing diseases:" he travelled from place to place, to seek occasions, and to lay hold upon all opportunities, of being useful and beneficial to mankind. Observe, 3. The particular instance of our Lord's goodness and compassion towards the people in those cities and villages where he travelled; they wanted the preaching of the gospel, that is, faithful dispensers of it. For though they had the scribes and pharisees to teach them, they instructed them rather in their own traditions than in the simplicity of the gospel; Christ pities the people as sheep without a shepherd. Thence learn, That idle and lazy, unskilful and unfaithful laborers in Christ's harvest, are no laborers in his account: "They were as sheep having no shepherd." He who doth not instruct his flock, and feed them with the sincere milk of the word, from an heart full of love to God, and of compassion to souls, deserves not the name of a true shepherd. Dr. Whitby.

37 Then saith he unto his disciples, The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few.

38 Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth laborers into his harvest.

As if Christ had said, "There is a great number of people that are willing and prepared to receive instruction, but there are few that are able to instruct these poor people in the ways of righteousness and truth: therefore pray and plead with God, that he would provide skilful and faithful ministers to be sent out to preach the gospel throughout the world." Note here, 1. That God's church is an harvest-field. 2. That the ministers of God are laborers in his harvest, under God the Lord of the harvest. 3. That to God alone doth it belong to send forth laborers into his harvest: and none must thrust themselves in till God sends them forth. 4. That the number of faithful laborers in God's harvest is comparatively small and few. 5. That it is the church's duty to pray, and that earnestly and incessantly to the Lord of the harvest, to increase the number of faithful laborers, and also to increase their faithfulness.

CHAPTER X.

This chapter acquaints us with the first commission which our Saviour gave to his disciples to preach the gospel; he directs them, first, whither to go, and to whom to preach; namely, to the Jews, whom he calls the lost sheep of the house of Israel. He instructs them, secondly, as to the doctrine he would have them preach; namely, the doctrine of repentance. And lastly, he arms them against all the difficulties they might meet with in their ministry; and particularly fortifies them against the fears of poverty and persecution.

AND when he had called unto him his twelve disciples, he gave them power against unclean spirits, to cast them out, and to heal all manner of sickness, and all manner of disease.

As the Jewish church arose from twelve patriarchs, so did the christian church become planted by twelve apostles; the person commissionating them was Christ. None are to undertake the work and calling of the ministry, but those whom Christ appoints; and the persons commissioned were disciples before they were apostles; to teach us, That Christ will have such as preach the gospel to be disciples before they are ministers; trained up in the doctrine of the gospel, before they undertake a public charge. Note farther, The power here delegated by Christ to his apostles, over unclean spirits, and for healing diseases, in his name. And after Christ's resurrection, they were enabled to confer this miraculous power upon others, by laying their hands upon them; an eminent demonstration of the truth of the christian faith. Learn hence, That to the intent the apostles might preach the gospel with more authority and greater efficacy, Christ gave them a power of working miracles; namely to cast out devils, and heal all manner of diseases in his name; "When he had called together his disciples he gave them power against unclean spirits."

2 Now the names of the twelve apostles are these: The first Simon, who is called Peter, and Andrew his brother; James the son of Zebedee, and John his brother:

3 Philip and Bartholomew; Thomas, and Matthew the publican; James the son of Alphaeus, and Lebbeus, whose surname was Thaddeus;

4 Simon the Canaanite, and Judas Iscariot, who also betrayed him.

Observe here, Of the twelve apostles Peter is named first, and Judas last. Peter is named first, because first called, Matthew iv. 18. or because probably elder than the rest. Or, because, for order sake, he might speak before the rest: from whence may be inferred a primacy, but no supremacy; a priority of order, but no superiority of degree. As the foreman of a grand inquest has a precedency, but no pre-eminency. Judas is named last, with a brand of infamy set upon him, that he was the traitor, the person that betrayed his Lord and Master. Learn hence, That though the truth of grace be absolutely necessary to a minister's salvation, yet the want of it doth not disannul his office, nor hinder the lawfulness of his ministry: Judas, though a traitor, was yet a lawful minister. Inward holiness is not necessary to render the offices belonging to the ministerial function valid and effectual; Judas preaches Christ as well as the rest, and was not excepted when Christ said, He that receiveth you, receiveth me.

5 These twelve Jesus sent forth, and commanded them, saying, Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not,

6 But go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel.

This was only a temporary prohibition, whilst Christ was here upon earth; the Jews being Christ's own people, of whom he came and to whom he was promised, the gospel is first preached to them: but afterwards the apostles had a command to teach all nations, and after Christ's ascension, Samaria received the gospel by the preaching of Philip. From the character which Christ gives of the Jews, calling them lost sheep, we learn, 1. That the condition of a people, before brought home to Christ by the ministers of the gospel, is a lost condition; sinners are as lost sheep, wandering and going astray from God, till the ministry of the word finds them. 2. That the great work, and office of the ministers of the gospel, is to call home, and bring in, lost sheep unto Jesus Christ the great Shepherd. Go, says Christ, to the lost sheep, &c. Mark, Christ calls the Israelites sheep, though they were not obedient to the voice of their shepherd, because they were God's chosen people; and calls them lost sheep, because they were both lost in themselves, and also in great danger of being eventually and finally lost, by the ignorance and wickedness of their spiritual guides.

7 And as ye go, preach, saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand.

Observe here, 1. The duty enjoined the apostles in order to the bringing home of lost souls to Christ, and that is preaching; As ye go, preach. Note thence, That the plain and persuasive preaching of the gospel is the special means appointed by Christ for the salvation of lost sinners. Observe, 2. The doctrine they are enjoined to preach, namely, that The kingdom of heaven is at hand; that is, that the promised Messiah was come, and had set up his kingdom in the world, and expected their obedience to his laws. Where note, How the preaching of John, of Christ and his apostles, was one and the same: namely, the doctrine of repentance: Repent, say they all, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand; that is the time of the Messiah's appearing, which has been so long expected, is now come.

8 Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils; freely ye have received, freely give.

Here our Saviour impowers his apostles to work miracles for the confirmation of their doctrine, but gives them a charge, to work them freely, without making any private advantage to themselves. Where observe, 1. How beneficial the miracles were (which Christ and his apostles wrought) to mankind. Moses' miracles were as great judgments as wonders; but these were beneficent; they delivered men from miseries, from bodily diseases, from the power and malice of evil spirits: They healed the sick and cast out devils. Observe, 2. That Je-us Christ to show himself a free Saviour, and that whatever came from him was the effect of free grace, gave his apostles a charge to dispense their power in working miracles freely, without money and without price.

9 Provide neither gold, nor silver, nor brass in your purses;

10 Nor scrip for your journey, neither two coats, neither shoes, nor yet staves: (for the workman is worthy of his meat.)

This command of Christ was temporary, and extended only the apostles' first journey, which they were soon to dispatch: our Saviour encourages them to trust to God: first for protection; take no staves with you, that is, no striking or smiting staves for your own defence, preachers must be no strikers. Though a walking staff they might take with them: itinerant preachers might be wearied with travelling as well as speaking. Next for provision; he would not have them over-solicitous for that neither: saying, The workman is worthy of his meat, As it is a minister's great duty to trust to God for his maintenance; so it is the people's duty to take care of the minister's comfortable subsistence. "The laborer is worthy of his hire, and the workman is worthy of his meat."

11 And into whatsoever city or town ye shall enter, inquire who in it is worthy, and there abide till ye go thence.

12 And when you come into an house, salute it.

13 And if the house be worthy, let your peace come upon it; but if it be not worthy, let your peace return to you.

14 And whosoever shall not receive you, nor hear your words, when you depart out of that house, or city, shake off the dust of your feet.

15 Verily I say unto you, it shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment than for that city.

Our Saviour proceeds to direct his disciples how to manage this their first journey in preaching the gospel: he enjoins them, 1. To observe the rules of decency in their going from one place to another: not like beggars wandering from house to house, but having entered a city, or village, to make inquiry who stood best affected to the gospel, and there turn in. 2. Our Saviour enjoins them civil and religious courtesy towards those whom they applied themselves unto. When you come into a house salute it: give it a civil salutation, but especially a christian and spiritual salute, wishing them mercy, grace and peace. 3. He encourages his apostles in the want of success, if they hear you not: Shake off the dust of your feet. This action was emblematical, and signified that Almighty God would in like manner shake off them, and esteem them no better than the vilest dust. Note, That those who despise the message which the ministers of the gospel bring, shall hereafter find the dust of their feet, and the ashes of their graves, to give a judicial testimony against them in the day of Christ. Wherever the word is preached, it is for a testimony against them; for if the dust of a minister's feet bear witness against the despisers of the gospel, their sermons must much more. Here Grotius well notes: That the sin of those who reject the gospel, must be a wilful sin, which it was in their power to avoid; because it rendered them obnoxious to greater punishment than Sodom and Gomorrah were to suffer at the day of judgment, and because committed against greater light, and greater confirmation of the truth. Doubtless, the higher a people rise under the means of grace, the lower they fall if they miscarry.

16 ¶ Behold I send you forth as sheep in the midst of wolves: be ye therefore wise as serpents, and harmless as doves.

Our Saviour, in this and the following verses, arms his apostles against all the difficulties, dangers, and discouragements which they might meet with in the course of their ministry; he tells them he sent them forth as sheep amongst wolves; intimating thereby unto them that the enemies of the gospel have as great an inclination, from their malicious nature, to devour and destroy the ministers of Christ, as wolves have, from their natural temper, to devour sheep; he therefore recommends to them prudence and innocence; Be ye wise as serpents, to avoid the world's injuries; and harmless as doves, in not revenging them. The ministers of Christ must not be altogether doves, lest they fall into dangers; nor altogether as serpents, lest they endanger others: for as piety without policy is too simple to be safe, so policy without piety is too subtle to be good. Our Saviour in this text teaches us that wisdom and innocency should dwell together. Offend none by word or example.

17 But beware of men, for they will deliver you up to the councils, and they will scourge you in their synagogues.

18 And ye shall be brought before governors and kings for my sake, for a testimony against them and the Gentiles.

19 But when they deliver you up, take no thought how or what ye shall speak, for it shall be given to you in that same hour what ye shall speak.

20 For it is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of your Father which speaketh in you.

Here our Saviour lets his apostles know, That for their owning him, and preaching his gospel, they should be brought before all sorts of magistrates, and in all kinds of courts; but he advises them, when they are brought before kings and princes, not to be anxiously thoughtful what they should say; for it should be given them in that hour what they should answer. Learn hence, That though truth may be opposed, yet truth's defenders should never be ashamed; and rather than they shall want a tongue to plead for it, God himself will prompt them by his Spirit, and suggest such truths to their minds as all their opposers shall not be able to gainsay. Yet note, That Christ doth not here forbid all fore-thoughts what to say, but only distrustful thoughts, that they should not like orators or advocates, strive to make studied pleas, or rhetorical apologies for themselves, since the Spirit would be in their mouths, and give them immediate supplies. Note also, That because Christ here promised his apostles an immediate assistance from the Holy Spirit, how vain the anabaptists and quakers are, who, by virtue of this promise, do now expect the same assistance in praying and preaching! but they may as well expect to cast out devils as the apostles did, by virtue of the same assistance which the apostles had; whereas these extraordinary gifts are long ceased.

21 And the brother shall deliver up the brother to death, and the father the child; and the children shall rise up against their parents, and cause them to be put to death.

22 And ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake: but he that endureth to the end shall be saved.

Our Saviour goes on in a farther discovery of the world's hatred and enmity against the gospel, and the preachers of it; and gives all christians in general, and his ministers in particular, to understand, that such is the enmity of the world against holiness and the professors of it, that it will overcome and extinguish even the natural affections of the nearest and dearest relations towards each other. Grace teaches us, To lay down our lives for our brethren: but corruption teaches a brother to take away the life of a brother: The brother shall deliver the brother to death. Yet observe, Our Saviour comforts his disciples, that there will be an end of these sufferings; and assures them, That if their faith and patience did hold out unto the end, they should be saved. This is our comfort, that if our sufferings for Christ end not in our life-time, they will end in our lives.

23 But when they persecute you in this city, flee ye into another : for verily I say unto you, Ye shall not have gone over the cities of Israel till the Son of man be come.

Our Saviour here directs his apostles to a prudent care of their own preservation, and allows them to flee in time of persecution ; assuring them, that before they had gone through all the cities of the Jews, preaching the gospel, he would certainly come in judgment against Jerusalem, and with severity destroy his own murderers and their persecutors. Learn, That Christ allows his ministers the liberty of flight in time of persecution, that they may preserve their lives for future service. Surely it is no shame to fly when our Captain commands it, and also practises it, Mat. 2. Christ by his own example has sanctified that state of life unto us, and by his command made it lawful for us.

25 It is enough for the disciple that he be as his master, and the servant as his lord. If they have called the master of the house Beelzebub, how much more shall they call them of his household?

Our Saviour here teaches all christians, but especially ministers, how unreasonable and absurd it is for them to expect kinder usage from an unkind world, than he himself met with : are we greater, holier, or wiser than he ? Why then should we expect better usage than he ? Was he hated, persecuted, reviled, murdered, for the holiness of his doctrine and the usefulness of his life ? Why then should any of us think strange of the fiery trial, as if some strange thing had befallen us ? 1 Pet. iv. 12. Is it not enough, That the disciple be as his master, and the servant as his lord, but must he hope to be above him ?

26 Fear them not therefore : for there is nothing covered that shall not be revealed ; and hid that shall not be known.

27 What I tell you in darkness that speak ye in light ; and what ye hear in the ear, that preach ye upon the house-tops.

Christ here exhorts his disciples to a free profession and open publication of the doctrine of the gospel, from this consideration, that whatever they say or do shall be brought to light, proclaimed and published to the world. I will make the excellency of your doctrine and the innocency of your lives shine as the light : your integrity in despising of it, and patience in suffering for it, shall redound to God's glory and your commendation, at the revelation of your Lord from heaven. As wicked men have cause to fear, because their evil deeds shall be made evident, so good men have cause to rejoice, because their goodness and good deeds shall be made manifest. Let it be our care to do good, and it shall be Christ's care to discover the goodness which we do, to vindicate it from misconception, and set it in its clearest light.

28 And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul : but rather fear him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell.

Observe here the following particulars, 1. An unwarrantable fear condemned : and that is the sinful, servile, slavish fear of impotent man ; Fear not him that can kill the body. 2. An holy, awful, and prudential fear of the omnipotent God commanded ; Fear him that is able to kill both the body and soul. 3. The persons that this duty of fear is recommended to and bound upon. Christ's own disciples, yea, his ministers and ambassadors ; they both may and ought to fear him : not only for his greatness and goodness, but upon the account of his punitive justice ; as being able both to cast soul and body into hell : such a fear is not only lawful but laudable, not only commendable but commanded, and well becomes the servants of God themselves. This text contains a certain evidence that the soul dies not with the body : none are able to kill the soul, but it continues after death in a state of sensibility : it is granted that men can kill the body, but it is denied that they can kill the soul : it is spoken of temporal death ; consequently then the soul doth not perish with the body, nor is the soul reduced into an insensible state by the death of the body ; nor can the soul be supposed to sleep as the body doth till the resurrection : for an intelligible, thinking, and perceiving being, as the soul is, cannot be deprived of sensation, thought, and perception, no more than it can lose its being ; the soul after the death of the body being capable of bliss or misery, must continue in a state of sensation.

29 Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing ? and one of them shall not fall to the ground without your Father.

30 But the very hairs of your head are all numbered.

31 Fear ye not, therefore : ye are of more value than many sparrows.

Observe here, 1. The doctrine which our Saviour preaches to his disciples ; and that is, the doctrine of divine providence ; which concerns itself for the meanest creatures : even the birds of the air, and the hairs of our head, do fall within the compass of God's protecting care. 2. Here is the use which our Saviour makes of the doctrine ; namely, to fortify the spirits of his disciples against all distrustful fears and distracting cares. Learn, That the consideration of the divine care and gracious providence of God over us and ours, ought to antidote our spirits against all distrustful fears whatsoever. If an hair from the head falls not to the ground without a providence, much less shall the head itself : if the very excrements of the body (such are the hairs) be taken care of by God, surely the more noble part of the body, and especially the noble part of ourselves, our souls, shall fall under his particular regard.

32 Whosoever, therefore, shall confess me before men, him will I confess also before my Father which is in heaven.

33 But whosoever shall deny me before men, him will I also deny before my Father which is in heaven.

Observe here, 1. That not to confess Christ, in his account is to deny him: and to deny him is to be ashamed of him. 2. That whosoever shall deny, disown, or be ashamed of Christ, either in his person, in his gospel, or in his members, for any fear or favor of man, shall with shame be disowned, and eternally rejected by him at the dreadful judgment of the great day. Christ may be denied three ways; doctrinally, by an erroneous and heretical judgment; verbally, by oral expressions; vitally, by a wicked and unholy life. But woe to that soul that denies Christ any of these ways.

34 Think not that I am come to send peace on earth: I came not to send peace, but a sword.

35 For I am come to set a man at variance against his father, and the daughter against her mother, and the daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law.

36 And a man's foes shall be they of his own household.

We must distinguish here betwixt the intentional aim of Christ's coming, and the accidental event of it. His intentional aim was to propagate and promote peace in the world; but through the corruption of man's nature, the accidental event of his coming is war and division: not that these are the genuine and natural fruits of the gospel, but occasional and accidental only. Note, That the preaching of the gospel, and setting up the kingdom of Christ in the world, though it be not the natural cause, yet it is the accidental occasion of much of that war and tumult, of much of that distraction and confusion which the world abounds with.

37 He that loveth father or mother more than me, is not worthy of me: and he that loveth son or daughter more than me, is not worthy of me.

38 And he that taketh not his cross, and followeth after me, is not worthy of me.

39 He that findeth his life shall lose it: and he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it.

Note here, That by worthiness we are not to understand the meritoriousness of the action, but the qualification of the person. He that cometh to Christ, (that is, will be his disciple) must by a deliberate act of the understanding, and well advised choice of the will prefer him before all the world and his dearest relations whatsoever; not that our Saviour, by these expressions, doth condemn natural love and affection, either to our relations, or to our own lives, but only regulates and directs it: and shows that our first and chief love must be bestowed upon himself. We may have tender and relenting affections towards our dear relations; but then the consideration of Christ's truth and religion must take place of these; yea, of life itself; nay, when these come in competition, we are to regard them no more than if they were the objects of our hatred. Luke xiv. 26. If a man hate not his father, &c. Learn hence, That all the disciples of Christ should be ready and willing, whenever God calls them to it, to quit all their temporal interests and enjoyments, even life itself, and to submit to any temporal inconvenience, even death itself, and all this willingly, cheerfully, and patiently, rather than disown their relation to Christ, and quit the profession of his truth and religion. 2. That such as, for secular interest, and the preservation of temporal life, do renounce their profession of Christ and his religion, they do not only greatly hazard their temporal life, but expose their eternal life to the greatest danger. He that findeth his life shall lose it, &c.

40 He that receiveth you, receiveth me, and he that receiveth me, receiveth him that sent me.

41 He that receiveth a prophet in the name of a prophet shall receive a prophet's reward: and he that receiveth a righteous man, in the name of a righteous man, shall receive a righteous man's reward.

42 And whosoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water only in the name of a disciple, verily, I say unto you, he shall in no wise lose his reward.

Here in the close of the chapter, our blessed Saviour encourages his apostles to faithfulness in their office, by assuring them that he should reckon and esteem all the kindness shown to them as done unto himself: and to encourage the world to be kind to his disciples and ministers, he assures them, that even a cup of cold water should meet with a liberal reward: how cold is their charity who deny a cup of cold water to the ministers and disciples of Christ! Learn, 1. That there is some special and eminent reward due to the faithful prophets of God above other men. 2. That he who shall entertain a prophet, and do any good office for him, under that name, that is for his office sake, shall be partaker of that reward. 3. That the least office of love and respect, of kindness and charity, which we show to any of the ministers or members of Jesus Christ for his sake, Christ accounts it as done unto himself, and it shall be rewarded by himself.

CHAPTER XI.

AND it came to pass, when Jesus had made an end of commanding his twelve disciples, he departed thence to teach and to preach in their cities.

Our blessed Saviour having sent forth his twelve apostles in the foregoing chapter, to plant and propagate the gospel, we find him, in this chapter, following them himself in that great and necessary work; "He departed to teach and to preach in their cities." Christ, the great bishop and shepherd of souls, sent not forth the apostles as his curates, to labor and sweat in the vineyard, whilst he took his ease at home; but he followed them himself: his word of command to them was, Præite, sequar: Go ye before, I will follow after. Note, 1. That preaching of the gospel is a great and necessary work, incumbent upon all the ministers of Christ, let their dignity and pre-eminency in the church be what it will. None of the servants are above their lord. 2. That if there be a distinction betwixt teaching and preaching, as some apprehend, they are both the work of Christ's ministers, who are obliged from their master's example to perform both: teaching is in order to the conversion of sinners, and preaching in order to the edification of saints.

2 Now when John had heard in the prison the works of Christ, he sent two of his disciples.

3 And said unto him, Art thou he that should come, or do we look for another?

It was not for John's information that he sent his disciples to Jesus, but for their satisfaction; that he was the true and promised Messiah: John was assured of it himself by a sign from heaven at our Saviour's baptism, chap. iii. 17. But John's disciples, out of great zeal to him their master, envied Christ himself, and were unwilling to believe any person greater than their master, (Archbishop Tillotson, vol. 5.) therefore John, out of a pious design to confirm his disciples in the belief of Jesus being the true Messiah, sends them to our Saviour, to hear the doctrine which he taught, and to see the miracles which he wrought. Learn hence, what a pious desire there is in such as know Christ experimentally themselves, to bring all that belong to them to a saving acquaintance with him.

4 Jesus answered and said unto them, Go and show John again those things ye do hear and see;

5 The blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the gospel preached to them.

Observe here, 1. The way and means which our Saviour takes for the conviction and satisfaction of John's disciples, that he was the true Messiah; he appeals to the miracles wrought by himself, and submits the miracles wrought by him to the judgment of their sense; "Go and show John the miracles which you hear and see." Observe, 2. The miracles themselves. "The blind receive their sight, the lame walk, the deaf hear," &c. Christ was all this in a literal sense, and in a mystical sense also; he was an eye of understanding to the ignorant, a foot of power to the weak; he opened an ear in deaf hearts, to receive the word of life; and the poor are evangelized, that is, turned into the spirit and temper of the gospel; the rich hear the gospel, but the poor receive; that is, they feel the powerful impressions of it: as we say, such an one is Italianized, when his carriage is such as if he were a natural Italian. The passive verb Ἐυαγγελίζονται denotes, non actum prædicationis, sed effectum evangelii prædicati; the good effect which the gospel had upon the hearts and lives of the poor, transforming them into the likeness of itself. Learn, It is a blessed thing, when the preaching of the gospel has such a powerful influence upon the minds of men, that the temper of their minds and the actions of their lives are a willing transcript of the spirit and temper of the holy Jesus. Note, That as it was prophesied of the Messiah, that he should preach the gospel to the poor, Isaiah lxi. 1. accordingly they were the poor whom Christ preached unto; for the pharisees and rabbies neglected them as the people of the earth, Job vii. 49. And Grotius says, that they had a proverb, That the spirit of God never rests but upon a rich man. Besides, the pharisees and rabbies' doctrines, which they preached, were vain traditions, allegorical interpretations, and cabalistical deductions, which transcended the capacities of the vulgar, so that they could profit very little by repairing to their schools, and by hearing their interpretations of the law; and therefore our Saviour in the close of this chapter, calls the people off from them to learn of him, verse 28. Come unto me, &c.

6 And blessed is he whosoever shall not be offended in me.

Our Saviour here, by pronouncing them blessed that are not offended in him, doth intimate the misery of those who stumble at him, and to whom he is the rock of offence. Some are offended at the poverty of his person, others at the sublimity and sanctity of his doctrine. Some are offended at his cross, others are offended at his free grace; but such as, instead of being offended at Christ, believe in him, and bottom their expectations of heaven and salvation upon him, are in a happy and blessed condition: Blessed is he that shall not be offended in me.

7 ¶ And as they departed, Jesus began to say unto the multitudes concerning John, What went ye out into the wilderness to see? a reed shaken with the wind?

8 But what went ye out for to see? a man clothed in soft raiment? Behold, they that wear soft clothing are in King's houses.

9 But what went ye out for to see? a prophet? Yea, I say unto you, and more than a prophet.

10 For this is he of whom it is written, Behold, I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare thy way before thee.

Our Saviour having given satisfaction to John's disciples, next enters upon a large commendation of John himself: where observe, 1. The persons whom he commended him before; not John's own disciples, for they had too high an opinion of their master already, and were so much addicted to John, that they envied Christ for his sake: see John iii. 26. Behold the same baptizeth, and all men come unto him. It was a great eye-sore that Christ had more hearers and followers than John; therefore not before John's disciples, but before the multitude, Christ commends John; for as John's disciples had too high, so this multitude had too low an opinion of him, possibly because of his imprisonment and sufferings. There was a time when the people had high thoughts of John, but now they undervalued him. Learn hence, The great uncertainty of popular applause; the people condemn to-day whom they admired yesterday; he who to-day is cried up, to-morrow is trodden down. The word and the ministers are the same; but this proceeds from the fickleness and inconstancy of the people: nothing is so immutable as the mind of man, nothing is so variable as the opinion of the multitude. Observe, 2. The time when our Saviour thus commended John; not in the time of his prosperity and greatness, when the people flocked after him, and Herod got him to court, and revered him; but when the giddy multitude had forsaken him, and he was fallen into disgrace at court, and had preached himself into a prison: now Christ vindicates his innocency, and maintains his honor, proclaims his worth, and tells the people that the world was not worthy of such a preacher as John was. Learn thence, That Christ will stand by, and stick fast to, his faithful ministers, when all the world forsake them. Let the world slight and despise them at their pleasure, yet Christ will maintain their honor, and support their cause; as they bear a faithful witness to Christ, so Christ will bear witness to their faithfulness for him. Observe, 3. The commendation itself. Our Saviour commends John, 1. For his constancy; he was not a reed shaken with the wind; that is, a man of unstable and unsettled judgment, but fixed and steadfast. 2. For his sobriety and high measures of mortification; he was no delicate, voluptuous person, but grave, sober, and severe; he was mortified to the glory and honor, to the ease and pleasures of the world. John wrought no miracles; but his holy conversation was as effectual as miracles to prevail with the people. 3. For his humility; he might have been what he would, the people were ready to cry him up for the Messiah, the Christ of God; but John's lowly spirit refuses all; He confessed and denied not, saying I am not the Christ, but a poor minister of his, willing, but not worthy to do him service. This will commend our ministry to the consciences of our people, when we seek not our own glory, but the glory of Christ. 4. Our Saviour commends John for his clear preaching and revealing of Christ to the people. He was more than a prophet, ver. 9. because he pointed out Christ more clearly and fully than any before him. The ancient prophets saw Christ afar off; John beheld him face to face; he prophesied of him; he pointed at him, saying, This is he. Whence learn, That the clearer any ministry is in discovering of Christ, the more excellent it is.

11 Verily I say unto you, Among them that are born of woman, there hath not risen a greater than John the Baptist: notwithstanding, he that is least in the kingdom of heaven is greater than he.

Our Saviour having highly commended John in the foregoing verses, here sets bounds to the honors of his ministry, adding, That though John was greater than all the prophets that went before him, seeing more of Christ than all of them, yet he saw less than they that came after him. The meanest evangelical minister that preaches Christ to come is to be preferred before all the old prophets, who prophesied of Christ to come. That minister who sets forth the life, death, resurrection, and ascension of Jesus Christ, is greater in the kingdom of heaven, that is, has an higher office in the church, and a more excellent ministry, than all the prophets, yea, than John himself. The excellency of a ministry consists in the light and clearness of it. Now though John's light did exceed all that went before him, yet he fell short of them that came after him: and thus he that was least in the kingdom of grace on earth, much more he that is least in the kingdom of glory in heaven, was greater than John. Not that the meanest christian but the meanest evangelical prophet, or preacher of the christian doctrine, is greater than John; partly in respect of his doctrine, which is more spiritual and heavenly; partly in respect of his office, which was to preach Christ crucified and risen again; and partly in respect of divine assistance, for John did no miracle, but the apostles that succeed him "went forth, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following." Add to this, that the Holy Ghost fell not upon John, and he spake not by any extraordinary inspiration of the Holy Spirit sent down from heaven, as the apostles did; thus he that was least in the kingdom of heaven was greater than John.

12 And from the days of John the Baptist until now, the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force.

Our Saviour goes on commending John's ministry, from the great success of it: it had that powerful influence upon the consciences of men, that no soldiers were ever more violent and eager in the storming and taking a strong hold, than John's hearers were in pursuing the kingdom of heaven. Never any minister (before) discovered the Messiah and his kingdom so clearly as John did; and therefore never was there such zeal to press into the kingdom amongst any as the hearers of John had. Learn hence, 1. That the clearer knowledge any people have of the worth and excellency of heaven, the more will their zeal be inflamed in the pursuit of heaven. 2. That all they who intend and resolve for heaven must offer violence in the taking of it: none but the violent are victorious; they take it by force. Which words are both restrictive and promissive. They are the violent, and none other that take it; and all the violent shall take it. Though careless endeavours may prove abortive, vigorous prosecution shall not miscarry. There is also another exposition of those words; The violent take the kingdom of heaven by force; that is, the publicans and sinners, and poorer sorts of people, who were looked upon by the scribes and pharisees as persons who had no right to the blessings of the Messiah; these as violent invaders and bold intruders, embrace the gospel, and do as it were take it by force from the learned rabbies, who challenged the chiefest place in this kingdom: and accordingly our Saviour tells them, St. Matt. xxi. 31. The publicans and harlots go into the kingdom of God before you; for you believed not John coming to you in the way of righteousness, but the publicans and harlots believed him, when at the same time the pharisees and lawyers rejected, &c. being not baptized of him.

13 For all the prophets and the law prophesied until John.

14 And if ye will receive it, this is Elias which was for to come.

15 He that hath ears to hear let him hear.

Here is still a farther commendation of John. The law and the prophets till the coming of John, did foretel the Messiah, but not so determinately, not so nearly, not so clearly as John did: and accordingly, he was that Elias which Isaiah and Malachi foretold should be the harbinger and forerunner of Christ. But why hath John the Baptist the name of Elias? Possibly because they were alike zealous in the work of God; they were alike successful in that work, and they were alike persecuted for their work: the one by Jezebel, the other by Herodias.

16 But whereunto shall I liken this generation? It is like unto children sitting in the markets, and calling unto their fellows, 17 And saying, We have piped unto you, and ye have not danced: we have mourned unto you, and ye have not lamented.

18 For John came neither eating nor drinking, and they say, He hath a devil.

19 The Son of man came eating and drinking, and they say, Behold a man gluttonous and a wine-bibber, a friend of publicans and sinners. But wisdom is justified of her children.

Our Saviour in these words describes the perverse humor of the pharisees, whom nothing could allure to the embracing of the gospel, neither John's ministry nor Christ's. This our Saviour sets forth two ways. 1. Allegorically, ver. 16, 17. Properly, ver. 18, 19. By way of allegory (No. 4.)

he compares them to sullen children, whom nothing would please, neither mirth nor mourning; if their fellows piped before them, they would not dance; if they sung mournful songs to them, they would not lament: that is, The pharisees were of such a censorious and capricious humor, that God himself could not please them, though he used variety of means and methods in order to that end. Neither the delightful airs of mercy, nor the doleful ditties of judgment, could affect or move their hearts. Next, our Lord plainly interprets this allegory, by telling them, That John came to them neither eating nor drinking; that is, not so freely and plentifully as other men, being a very austere and mortified man, both in his diet and in his habit: and all this was designed by God, that the austerity of his life, and severity of his doctrine might awaken the pharisees to repentance: but instead of this, they censure him for having a devil, because he delighted in solitude, and avoided converse with men; according to the ancient proverb, that every solitary person is either an angel or a devil, either a wild beast or a god. John being thus rejected, Christ himself comes to them, who being of a free and familiar converse, not shunning the society of the worst of men, even of the pharisees themselves, but complying with their customs, and accompanying with them at their feasts, yet without the least compliance with them in their sins; but the freedom of our Saviour's conversation displeased them as much as John's reservedness of temper; for they cry. Behold a man gluttonous. Christ's affability towards sinners, they call approbation of their sins; and his sociable disposition, looseness and luxury. Learn hence, 1. That the faithful and zealous ministers of God, let their temper and converse be what it will, cannot please the enemies of religion, and the haters of the power of godliness; neither John's austerity, nor Christ's familiarity, would gain upon the pharisees. It is our duty in the course of our ministry to seek to please all men for their good: but after all our endeavours to please all, we shall please but very few; but if God and conscience be of the number of those few we are safe and happy. Observe, 2. That it has been the old policy of the devil, that he might hinder the success of the gospel, to fill the minds of persons with an invincible prejudice against the ministers and dispensers of the gospel. Observe, 3. That after all the scandalous reproaches cast upon religion, and the ministers of it, such as are wisdom's children, wise and good men, will justify religion; that is, approve it in their judgments, honor it in their discourses, and adorn it in their lives. Wisdom is justified of her children.

20 ¶ Then began he to upbraid the cities wherein most of his mighty works were done, because they repented not.

21 Woe unto thee, Chorazin: woe unto thee, Bethsaida: for if the mighty works which were done in you, had been done in Tyre and Sidon, they would have repented long ago in sackcloth and ashes.

22 But I say unto you, It shall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon, at the day of judgment, than for you.

Our Saviour having gone through the cities of Galilee, preaching the doctrine of repentance, and confirming his doctrine with miracles, and finding multitudes, after all his endeavours, remain in their impotency, he proceeds to upbraid them severely for their contempt of gospel-grace; Then began he to upbraid their cities, &c. Where observe, 1. The cities upbraided, Chorazin, Bethsaida, and Capernaum: in their pulpits he daily preached, and those places were the theatres upon which his miracles were wrought; other cities only heard, these saw; but where he preached most, he prevailed least; like some fishermen, he caught least in his own pond. Observe, 2. What he upbraids them for; not for disrespect to his person, but disobedience to his doctrine; because they repented not. The great design of Christ both in the doctrine which he preached, and the miracles which he wrought was to bring men to repentance; that is, to forsake their sins, and live well. Observe, 3. Whom he upbraids them with; Tyre and Sidon, Sodom and Gomorrah, nations rude and barbarous, out of the pale of the church, ignorant of a Saviour, and of the ways of salvation by him. Learn, that the higher people rise under the means, the lower they fall if they miscarry. They who have been nearest in conversion, and yet not converted, shall have the greatest condemnation when they are judged. Capernaum's sentence shall exceed Sodom's for severity, because she exceeded Sodom in the enjoyment of means and mercy. The case of those who are impenitent under the gospel, is of all others the most dangerous, and their damnation shall be heaviest and most severe. Sodom, the stain of mankind, a city soaked in the dregs of villany; yet this hell upon earth shall have a milder hell at the last day of judgment, than unbelieving Capernaum, as the next verse informs us, ver. 23.

23 And thou, Capernaum, which art exalted unto heaven, shalt be brought down to hell: for if the mighty works which have been done in thee had been done in Sodom, it would have remained until this day.

This city lying under greater guilt than the rest, Christ names it by itself, without the rest: nay, he doth not only name it, but notify it, as being lifted up to heaven by signal favors and privileges, namely, Christ's presence, Christ's preaching and miracles. Observe, 1. Capernaum's privileges enjoyed, though a poor obscure place in itself, yet she was by the person, ministry, and miracles of Christ, lifted up in heaven. Learn thence, That gospel ordinances and church-privileges enjoyed are a mighty honor and advancement to the poorest persons and obscurest places. Observe, 2. An heavy doom denounced, Thou shalt be brought down to hell: that is, thy condition shall be as sad as that of the worst of men, for thy non-proficiency under the means enjoyed. Learn thence, That gospel-ordinances and church-privileges enjoyed but not improved, provoke Almighty God to inflict the sorest of judgments upon a people. Thou, Capernaum, which art exalted to heaven, shalt be brought down to hell.

24 But I say unto you, that it shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom, in the day of judgment, than for thee.

Observe here, 1. That there shall be a day of judgment. 2. That in the day of judgment some sinners shall fare worse than others. There are degrees of punishment among the damned. 3. That the worst of heathens, who never heard of a Saviour, nor ever had an offer of salvation by him, shall fare better in the day of judgment than those that continue impenitent under the gospel. Christ here avouches, that Capernaum's sentence shall exceed Sodom's for severity.

25 ¶ At that time, Jesus answered and said, I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes.

26 Even so, Father, for it seemed good in thy sight.

In these verses our Saviour glorifies his Father for the wise and free dispensation of his gospel-grace to the meanest and most ignorant; whilst the great and learned men of the world undervalued and despised it. By wise and prudent, Christ means worldly-wise men, particularly scribes and pharisees, from whom God in judgment did hide the mysteries of the gospel, and said ye shall not see; because they had closed their eyes, and said, we will not see. By babes, understand such as are at the greatest distance in natural considerations from a capacity for such rich and heavenly manifestations. By hiding these things from the wise and prudent we are not to understand God's putting darkness into them, but his leaving them to their own darkness, or denying them that light which they had no desire to see; plainly intimating, that God judiciously hides the mysteries of heavenly wisdom from worldly-wise men. Learn, 1. That till God reveals himself, his nature and will, no man can know either what he is, or what he requires: Thou hast revealed. 2. That the wise men of the world have in all ages despised the mysteries of the gospel, and therefore been judiciously given up by God to their own wilful blindness: Thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent. 3. That the most ignorant and most humble, not the most learned, if proud, do stand ready to receive and embrace the gospel revelation: thou hast revealed them unto babes. 4. That this is no less pleasing to Christ, than it is the pleasure of the Father; Even so, Father, as it seemeth good in thy sight. As if Christ had said, Father, thy election and choice pleaseth me, as being the choice and good pleasure of thy wisdom.

27 All things are delivered unto me of my Father: and no man knoweth the Son but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father, save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him.

In this verse our Saviour opens his commission, and declares, 1. His authority; that all power is committed to him, as a Mediator from God the Father. 2. His office; to reveal his Father's mind and will to a lost world. No man knoweth the Father, but the Son: that is, the essence and nature of the Father, the will and counsel of the Father, only as the Son reveals them. Learn, That all our saving knowledge of God is in and through Jesus Christ: he, as the great Prophet of the church, reveals the mind and will of God unto us for our salvation: and no saving knowledge without him.

28 Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest.

Here we have a sweet invitation, backed with a gracious encouragement: Christ invites such as are weary of the burden of sin, of the slavery of satan, of the yoke of the ceremonial law, to come unto him for rest and ease; and as an encouragement assures them, that upon their coming to him they shall find rest. Learn, 1. That sin is the soul's laborious burden; Come unto me, all ye that labor. Laboring supposes a burden to be labored under; this burden is sin's guilt. 2. That such as come to Christ for rest must be laden sinners. 3. That laden sinners not only may, but ought to come to Christ for rest; they may come, because invited; they ought to come, because commanded. 4. That the laden sinner, upon his coming, shall find rest. Come, &c. Note here, That to come unto Christ in the phrase of the New Testament is to believe in him, and to become one of his disciples. John vi. 35. He that cometh unto me shall not hunger: he that believeth on me shall not thirst.

29 Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls.

Here note, That the phrase of take the yoke is judaical; the Jewish doctors spake frequently of the yoke of the law; the yoke of the commandments: and the ceremonies imposed upon the Jews are called a yoke, Acts xv. 10. Now as Moses had a yoke, so had Christ: and accordingly, observe, 1. Christ's disciples must wear Christ's yoke. This yoke is two-fold; a yoke of instruction; and a yoke of afflictions; Christ's law is a yoke of instruction; it instructs; it restrains our natural inclination, it curbs our sensual appetites; it is a yoke to corrupt nature: this yoke Christ calls his yoke, Take my yoke upon you: 1. Because he, as a Lord, lays it upon our necks. 2. Because he, as a servant bore it upon his own neck first, before he laid it upon ours. Observe, 2. That the way and manner how to bear Christ's yoke must be learnt of Christ himself. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; that is, learn of me, both what to bear and how to bear. Observe, 3. That Christ's humility and lowly mindedness, is great encouragement to christians to come unto him, and learn of him, both how to obey his commands, and how to suffer his will and pleasure. Learn of me, for I am meek.

30 For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light

Observe here, 1. Christ's authority and greatness; he has power to impose a yoke, and inflict a burden. My yoke; my burden. 2. His clemency and goodness, in imposing an easy yoke, and a light burden. My yoke is easy, my burden is light: that is, my service is good and gainful, profitable and useful; not only tolerable but delightful: and as is my yoke such is my burden; The burden of my precepts, the burden of my cross, both light, not absolutely, but comparatively; the weight of my cross is not comparable with the glory of my crown. Learn, That the service of Christ, though hard and intolerable to corrupt nature, yet is a most desirable and delightful service to grace or renewed nature; Christ's service is easy to a spiritual mind. 1. It is easy, as it is rational service; consonant to right reason, though contradictory to depraved nature. 2. Easy, as it is a spiritual service; delightful to a spiritual mind. 3. Easy, as it is an assisted service; considering that we work not in our strength, but in God's. 4. Easy, when once it is an accustomed service; though hard to beginners, it is easy to progressors; the further we walk, the sweeter is our way. 5. Easy as it is the most gainful service; having the assurance of an eternal weight of glory; as the reward of our obedience. Well therefore might our holy Lord say to his followers; My yoke is easy, and my burden is light.

CHAPTER XII.

Our blessed Saviour in this chapter takes occasion to instruct his disciples in the doctrine of the sabbath: showing, that works of necessity and mercy may be performed upon that day, without any violation of the divine command.

AT that time Jesus went on the sabbath-day through the corn; and his disciples were an hungered, and began to pluck the ears of corn, and to eat.

Observe here, The poor estate and low condition of Christ's own disciples in this world; they wanted bread, and are forced to pluck the ears of corn to satisfy their hunger. God sometimes suffers his dearest children in this world to fall into straits, and to taste of want, for the trial of their faith, and dependance upon his power and providence.

2 But when the pharisees saw it, they said unto him; Behold, thy disciples do that which is not lawful to do upon the sabbath-day.

Observe here, 1. The persons finding fault with this action of the disciples the pharisees; many of whom accompanied our Saviour, not out of any good intentions, but only with a design to cavil at, and quarrel with, every thing that either Christ or his disciples said or did. Observe, 2. The action which they found fault with; The disciples plucking off the ears of corn on the sabbath-day. Where note, It is not theft which the disciples are accused of by the pharisees! for to take, in our necessity, so much of our neighbour's goods, as we may reasonably suppose that if he were present, and knew our circumstances, he would give us, is no theft: but it was a servile labor on the sabbath, in gathering the corn, that the pharisees scrupled: plucking the ears was looked upon as a sort of reaping. Learn thence, How zealous hypocrites are for the lesser things of the law, whilst they neglect the weightier; and how superstitiously addicted to the outward ceremonies, placing all holiness in the observation of them.

3 But he said unto them, Have ye not read what David did when he was an hungry, and they that were with him:

4 How he entered into the house of God, and did eat the show-bread, which it was not lawful for him to eat, neither for them that were with him, but only for the priests?

5 Or have ye not read in the law, how that on the sabbath-day the priests in the temple profane the sabbath, and are blameless?

6 But I say unto you, that in this place is one greater than the temple.

In these words our Saviour defends the action of his disciples in plucking the ears of corn in their necessity, by a double argument: 1. From David's example; necessity freed him from fault in eating the consecrated bread, which none but the priests might lawfully eat; for in cases of necessity, a ceremonial precept must give place to a moral duty: works of mercy and necessity, for preserving our lives, and the better fitting us for the sabbath services, are certainly lawful on the sabbath-day. 2. From the example of the priests in the temple, who upon the sabbath do break the outward rest of the day, by killing their sacrifices and many other acts of bodily labor, which would be accounted sabbath profanation, did not the service of the temple require and justify it. Now saith our Saviour, if the temple-service can justify labor on the sabbath, I am greater than the temple, and my authority and service can justify what my disciples have done. From the whole we learn, That acts of mercy, which tend to fit us for works of piety, not only may, but ought to be done on the sabbath-day.

7 But if ye had known what this meaneth, I will have mercy and not sacrifice, ye would not have condemned the guiltless.

Learn hence, That the law of mercy is much more excellent than the law of ceremonies; and where both cannot be observed, the less must give place to the greater. God never intended that the ceremonies of his service in the first table, should hinder works of mercy prescribed in the second table. All God's commands are for man's good. Where both cannot be obeyed, he will have the moral duty performed, and the ceremonial service omitted. He will have mercy and not sacrifice; that is, he will have mercy rather than sacrifice, where both cannot be had.

8 For the Son of man is Lord even of the sabbath-day.

As if Christ had said, "I, who am Lord of the sabbath, declare to you, that I have a power to dispense with the observation of it; and it is my will that the sabbath, which was appointed for man, should yield to man's safety, and welfare." Christ the Son of man was really the Son of God; and as such, had power over the sabbath, to dispense with it, yea, to abrogate and change it at his pleasure.

9 And when he was departed thence, he went into their synagogue.

10 ¶ And behold, there was a man which had his hand withered: and they asked him, saying, Is it lawful to heal on the sabbath-days? that they might accuse him.

11 And he said unto them, What man shall there be among you, that shall have one sheep, and it fall into a pit on the sabbath day, will he not lay hold of it and lift it out?

12 How much, then, is a man better than a sheep? wherefore it is lawful to do well on the sabbath-days.

Here we have another dispute between our Saviour and the pharisees concerning the sabbath; whether it be a breach of that day, mercifully to heal a person having a withered hand? Christ confutes them from their own practice, telling the pharisees, that they themselves judged it lawful to help out a sheep, or an ox, if fallen into a pit on that day; how much more ought the life of a man to be preferred? Here we may remark, how inveterate a malice the pharisees had against our Saviour, when they could find no crime to charge him with, they blamed him for working a merciful and miraculous cure upon the sabbath-day. When envy and malice (which are evermore quick-sighted) can find no occasion of quarrel, they will invent one against the innocent.

13 Then saith he to the man, Stretch forth thine hand: and he stretched it forth; and it was restored whole, like as the other.

14 ¶ Then the pharisees went out, and held a counsel against him, how they might destroy him.

15 But when Jesus knew it, he withdrew himself from thence; and great multitudes followed him, and he healed them all.

16 And he charged them, that they should not make him known.

Observe, 1. The merciful and miraculous cure wrought by our Saviour's power upon the impotent man; "He said unto him, Stretch out thine hand, and his hand was restored." Observe, 2. What a contrary effect this cure had upon the pharisees; instead of convincing them, they conspire against him. Christ's enemies; when arguments fail, fall to violence. Observe, 3. The prudent means which our Saviour uses for his own preservation, He withdrew himself. Christ's example teaches his ministers; their duty to avoid the hands of persecutors, and prudently to preserve their lives, unless when sufferings are like to do more good than their lives. Observe, 4. The great humility of Christ in concealing his own praises; he had no ambition that the fame of his miracles should be spread abroad, for he sought not his own glory; neither would he by the noise of his miracles enrage the pharisees against him to take away his life; knowing that his time was not yet come, and he had much work to do before his death.

17 That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esaias the prophet, saying.

18 Behold my servant, whom I have chosen; my beloved, in whom my soul is well pleased; I will put my spirit upon him, and he shall show judgment to the Gentiles.

19 He shall not strive, nor cry; neither shall any man hear his voice in the streets.

20 A bruised reed shall he not break, and smoking flax shall he not quench, till he send forth judgment unto victory.

21 And in his name shall the Gentiles trust.

That is, our blessed Saviour did those good acts before spoken of, that it might appear that he was the true Messiah prophesied of by Esaias the prophet, chap. xlii. 1, 2. Behold my servant whom I have set apart for accomplishing the work of salvation for a lost world; he, by the fulness of my Spirit, shall teach the nations the way of truth and righteousness; he shall not subdue men by force and violence, but, as the Prince of Peace, shall deal gently with the weak, and cherish the least measures of grace, and degrees of goodness. Observe here, 1. A description of Christ as Mediator: he is God the Father's servant, employed in the most noble service, namely, that of instructing and saving a lost world. Observe, 2. With what meekness and gentleness Christ sets up his spiritual kingdom in the world: he doth not with noise and clamor, with force and violence, subdue and conquer, but with meekness and gentleness, gains persons' consent to his government and authority. Observe, 3. The gentle carriage of Christ in treating those of infirmer grace: he doth and will graciously preserve, and tenderly cherish the smallest beginnings, the weakest measures and the lowest degrees, of sincere grace, which he observes in any of his children and people. By the bruised reed and smoking flax, understand, such as are broken with a sense of sin, such as are weak in faith, such as are so much overpowered by corruption, that they do rather smoke than burn or shine; such as are thus low and mean in spirituals, Christ will not break with his power, nor quench with his rebukes, till he has perfected their conversion, and their weak grace is become victorious.

22 ¶ Then was brought unto him one possessed with a devil, blind and dumb:

and he healed him, insomuch that the blind and dumb both spake and saw.

23 And all the people were amazed, and said, Is not this the Son of David?

24 But when the pharisees heard it, they said, This fellow doth not cast out devils but by Beelzebub, the prince of devils.

As a farther instance of Christ's miraculous power, he healeth one whom the devil hath cast into a disease which deprived him both of speech and sight: at this miracle the multitude wondered, saying, Is not this the Son of David? that is, the promised Messiah. The pharisees hearing this, with great bitterness and contempt said, "This fellow casteth out devils by Beelzebub the prince of devils." Observe from hence, how obstinacy and malice will make men misconstrue the actions of the most holy and innocent; Christ casteth out devils, say the pharisees, by the help of the devil. There never was any person so good, nor any action so gracious, but they have been subject both to censure and misconstruction. The best way is to square our actions by the right rule of justice and charity, and then let the world pass their censures at their pleasure. When the holy and innocent Jesus was thus assaulted, what wonder is it if we his sinful servants be branded on all sides by reviling tongues? Why should we expect better treatment than the Son of God?

25 And Jesus knew their thoughts, and said unto them, Every kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation; and every city and house divided against itself shall not stand.

26 And if satan cast out satan, he is divided against himself; how shall then his kingdom stand?

27 And if I by Beelzebub cast out devils, by whom do your children cast them out? therefore they shall be your judges.

28 But if I cast out devils by the spirit of God, then the kingdom of God is come unto you.

29 Or else, how can one enter into a strong man's house, and spoil his goods, except he first bind the strong man? and then he will spoil his house.

30 He that is not with me is against me; and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad.

Our blessed Saviour, to clear his innocence, and to convince the pharisees of the unreasonableness of this their calumny and false accusations, offers several arguments to their consideration. 1. That it was very unlikely that satan should lend his power to use it against himself. As satan has a kingdom, so he has wit enough to preserve his kingdom, and will do nothing to weaken his own interest. Now if I have received my power from satan for destroying him and his kingdom, then is satan divided against himself. 2. Our Saviour tells them, they might with as much reason attribute all miracles to the devil, as those that were wrought by him. There were certain Jews among themselves, who cast out devils in the name of the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob; Christ asks the pharisees, by what power these their children cast them out? They acknowledged that those did it by the power of God, and there was no cause, but their malice, why they should not acknowledge that what he did was by the same power. "If I cast out devils by the Spirit of God, then the kingdom of God is come unto you;" that is, the Messias is come: because he wrought the miracles to prove that he was the Messias. 3. Another argument to prove that the miracles which Christ wrought were by the power of God, and not by the help of satan, is this; the devil is very strong and powerful, and there is no power but God's only that is stronger than his: now, says Christ, if I were not assisted by a divine power, I could never cast out this strong man, who reigns in the world as in his house: it must be stronger than the strong man that shall bind satan; and who is he but the God of Strength?

31 ¶ Wherefore I say unto you, All manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men; but the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall not be forgiven unto men.

32 And whosoever speaketh a word against the Son of man, it shall be forgiven him; but whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, neither in the world to come.

Observe, 1. How our Saviour makes a difference betwixt speaking against the Son of man, and speaking against the Holy Ghost. By speaking against the Son of man, are meant all those reproaches which were cast upon our Saviour's person as man, without reflecting upon his divine power as God, which he testified by his miracles. Such were, their reproaching him with the meanness of his birth, their censuring him for a wine-bibber and a glutton, and the like. But, By speaking against the Holy Ghost, is meant, their blaspheming and reproaching that divine power whereby he wrought his miracles; which was an immediate reflection upon the Holy Spirit, and a blaspheming of him. Observe, 2. The nature of this sin of speaking against the Holy Ghost: it consisteth in this, that the pharisees seeing our Saviour work miracles, and cast out devils by the Spirit of God contrary to the conviction of their own minds, they maliciously ascribed his miracles to the power of the devil, charging him to be a sorcerer and a magician, and to have a familiar spirit by whose help he did those mighty works; when in truth he did them by the Spirit of God. Observe, 3. That this sin above all others is called unpardonable, and upon what account it is so. The case of such blasphemers of the Holy Spirit, is not only dangerous but desperate; because they resist their last remedy, and oppose the best means for their conviction. What can God do more to convince a man that Jesus Christ is the true Messias, than to work miracles for that purpose? Now if when men see plain miracles wrought, they will say it is not God that works them, but the devil; as if satan would conspire against himself, and seek the ruin of his own kingdom; there is no way left to convince such persons, but they must and will continue in their opposition to truth to their inevitable condemnation.

33 Either make the tree good, and his fruit good: or else make the tree corrupt, and his fruit corrupt; for the tree is known by his fruit.

These words may either refer to the pharisees, or to Christ himself. If to the pharisees, the sense is, you hypocritical pharisees show yourselves what you are by your words and actions, even as the fruit sheweth what the tree is. If they refer to Christ, then they are an appeal to the pharisees themselves, to judge of our Saviour and his doctrine by the miracles which he wrought. If he wrought by the devil, his works would be as bad as the devil's; but if his works were good, they must own them to be wrought by the power of God. The expression implies, that a man may be known by his actions, as a tree may be known by his fruit; yet not by a single action, but by a series of actions; not by a particular act, but by our general course.

34 O generation of vipers! how can ye, being evil, speak good things? For out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh.

Note here, 1. The fervency and zeal of our Saviour's Spirit, in the compellation given to the pharisees, he calls them a generation of vipers: intimating, that they were a venomous and dangerous sort of men. Learn hence, That it is not always railing and indiscreet zeal to call wicked men by such names as their sin deserves. Observe farther, From our Saviour's saying, that "out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh;" that the heart is the fountain both of words and actions: according as the heart is, so is the current of men's words and actions; either good or evil.

35 A good man, out of the good treasure of the heart, bringeth forth good things; and an evil man, out of the evil treasure, bringeth forth evil things.

Observe here, a double treasure discovered in the heart of man. 1. An evil treasure of sin and corruption, both natural and acquired, from whence proceed evil things. Now this is called a treasure, not for the preciousness of it, but for the abundance of it; a little doth not make a treasure; and also for the continuance of it: though it be perpetually overflowing in the life, yet doth the heart continue full: this treasure of original corruption in man's nature may be drawn low in this life, by sanctifying grace, but it can never be drawn dry. 3. Here is a good treasure of grace discovered in a sanctified and renewed man: which is the source and spring from whence all gracious actions do proceed and flow. For as the heart of man by nature is the fountain from whence all sin springs, so the heart renewed by grace is the source and spring from whence all gracious actions do proceed and flow.

36 But I say unto you, That every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment.

I say unto you: I, that have always been in my Father's bosom, and fully know his mind: I, that am constituted Judge of quick and dead, and understand the rule of judgment; I, even, I, do assure you, that every word that has no tendency to promote the glory of God, or some way the good of others, will fall under censure at the great day, without an intervening repentance. Note here, That there are two sorts of words for which we must be judged; sinful words, and idle words. Sinful words are blasphemous words, censorious words, lying and slandering words. Idle words are such as savor nothing of wisdom and piety; that have no tendency to make men either wiser or better; how light soever men make of their words now, yet in God's balance another day they will be found to weigh very heavy. What a bridle should this text be to extravagant tongues? see Col. iv. 6. Let your speech be always seasoned with salt: that is, with wisdom &c for our words may mischief others a long time after they are spoken; how many years may a frothy or filthy word, a profane scoff, an atheistical jest, stick in the minds of them that hear it, after the tongue that spake it is dead! A word spoken is physically transient, but morally permanent.

37 For by thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned.

Observe here, The argument which our Saviour uses to move us to watchfulness over our words; By our words we shall be justified: not meritoriously but declaratively: good words declare goodness in ourselves, and we shall be declared good to others by our words, if our words and actions do correspond and agree with one another. Death and life are in the power of the tongue; that is, according to the right and wrong using of the tongue, we may judge and gather whether men are dead or alive as to God, and bound for heaven or hell. Doubtless justification or condemnation will pass on men at the day of judgment, according to the state of the person, and frame of the heart; now our words will justify or condemn us in that day, as evidences of the state and frame of the soul. We used to say, such witnesses hanged a man, that is, the evidence they gave cast and condemned him. O think of this seriously; if words evidence the state of thy soul, what an hellish state must thy soul be in, who hast injured thyself to the language of hell, to oaths and curses; sins whereby the devil cheats men more than by any sins whatsoever! They are damned for them, yet get nothing by them, neither profit nor pleasure.

38 ¶ Then certain of the scribes and of the pharisees answered, saying, Master, we would see a sign from thee.

39 But he answered and said unto them, An evil and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign; and there shall be no sign given to it, but the sign of the prophet Jonas.

40 For as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly: so shall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth.

41 The men of Nineveh shall rise up in judgment with this generation, and shall condemn it: because they repented at the preaching of Jonas: and, behold, a greater than Jonas is here.

42 The queen of the south shall rise up in judgment with this generation, and shall condemn it; for she came from the uttermost parts of the earth to hear of the wisdom of Solomon: and, behold, a greater than Solomon is here.

Observe here, 1. The request which the pharisees make to Christ; Master, we would see a sign from you. But had not Christ showed them signs enough already? What were all the miracles wrought in their sight, but convincing signs that he was the true Messiah? But infidelity mixed with obstinacy is never satisfied. Observe, 2. Our Saviour's answer to the pharisees' request: he tells them that they should have one sign more, to wit, that of his resurrection from the dead: "for as Jonas lay buried three days in the whale's belly," and was then wonderfully restored, so should (and did) our Saviour continue in the grave part of three natural days, and then rise again. Observe, 3. How Christ declares the inexcusableness of their state, who would not be convinced by the former miracles he had wrought that he was the true Messiah; nor yet he brought to believe in him by this last sign or miracle of his resurrection. The Ninevites shall condemn the pharisees; They repent at the preaching of Jonas: but these would not be convinced by the preaching and miracles of Jesus. The queen of Sheba who also came from the south to hear and admire the wisdom of Solomon, shall rise up in judgment against those that reject Christ, who is the wisdom of the Father; and the doctrine delivered by him, which was the power of God, and the wisdom of God. Learn, That the sins of infidelity and impenitency are exceedingly heightened, and their guilt aggravated, from the means afforded by God to bring a people to faith and obedience. The sin of the pharisees in rejecting Christ's miracles and mercy, was by far greater than that of the Ninevites, had they rejected Jonas, his message and ministry sent by God amongst them.

43 When the unclean spirit is gone out of a man, he walketh through dry places, seeking rest and findeth none.

44 Then he saith, I will return into my house from whence I came out; and when he is come, he findeth it empty, swept, and garnished.

45 Then goeth he, and taketh with himself seven other spirits more wicked than himself, and they enter in and dwell there; and the last state of that man is worse than the first. Even so shall it be also unto this wicked generation.

The design and scope of this parable, is to show that the pharisees, by rejecting the gospel, and refusing to believe in Christ, were in a seven-fold worse condition than if the gospel had never been preached to them, and a Saviour had never come among them; because by our Saviour's ministry satan was in some sort cast out; but for rejecting Christ and his grace, satan had got a seven-fold stronger possession of them now than before. From this parable, learn, 1. That satan is an unclean spirit: he has lost his original purity, his holy nature in which he was created, and is become universally filthy in himself, no means being allowed him by God for purging off his filthy and unclean nature. Nay, he is a perfect enemy to purity and holiness, maligning all that love it, and would promote it. 2. That satan is a restless and unquiet spirit; being cast out of heaven, he can rest no where; when he is either gone out of man through policy, or cast out of a man by power, he has no content or satisfaction, till he returns into a filthy heart, where he delights to be as the swine in miry places. 3. That wicked and profane sinners have this unclean spirit dwelling in them; their hearts are satan's house and habitation; and the lusts of pride and unbelief, malice and revenge, envy and hypocrisy, these are the garnishing of satan's house. Man's heart was God's house by creation, it is now satan's by usurpation and judiciary tradition. 4. That satan, by the preaching of the gospel, may seem to go out of persons, and they become sober and civilized: yet may he return to his old habitation, "and the last end of that man may be worse than the beginning."

46 ¶ While he yet talked to the people, behold, his mother and his brethren stood without, desiring to speak with him.

47 Then one said unto him, Behold, thy mother and thy brethren stand without desiring to speak with thee.

48 But he answered, and said unto him that told him, Who is my mother? and who are my brethren?

49 And he stretched forth his hand towards his disciples, and said, Behold my mother, and my brethren.

50 For whosoever shall do the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my brother, and sister, and mother.

Observe here, 1. The verity of Christ's human nature; he had affinity and consanguinity with men, persons near in blood to him called his brethren, that is, his cousin-germans. 2. That the holy virgin herself was not wholly free from failings and infirmities: for here she does untimely and unseasonably interrupt our Saviour when preaching to the people, and employed about his Father's business. 3. That Christ did not neglect his holy mother, nor disregard his near relations: only showed, that he preferred his Father's service before them. Learn. 4. How dear believers are to Jesus Christ: he prefers his spiritual kindred before his natural. Alliance in faith, and spiritual relation to Christ, is much nearer and dearer than alliance by blood: to bear Christ in the heart is much better than to bear him in the womb. Blessed be God, this greatest privilege is not denied to us even now; though see Christ we cannot, yet love him we may; his bodily presence cannot be enjoyed by us, but his spiritual presence is not denied us. Though Christ be not ours, in house, in arms, in affinity, in consanguinity; yet in heart, in faith, in love, in service, he is, or may be ours. Verily, spiritual regeneration brings men into a more honorable relation to Christ, than natural generation ever did. "Whosoever shall do the will of my Father, he is my brother, sister, and mother."

CHAPTER XIII.

THE same day went Jesus out of the house, and sat by the sea-side.

2 And great multitudes were gathered together unto him, so that he went into a ship, and sat; and the whole multitude stood on the shore.

3 And he spake many things unto them in parables, saying,—

The foregoing chapter gave us an account of an awakening sermon preached to the pharisees. In this chapter we are acquainted with the continuance of his preaching to the multitude: where three things are observable. 1. Our Lord's assiduity and unwearied diligence in preaching the gospel; for this sermon was made the same day with that in the former chapter, ver. 1. "The same day went Jesus out of the house, and sat by the sea-side." A good pattern for the preachers of the gospel to follow. How ashamed may we be to preach once a week, when our Lord preached twice a day! Observe, 2. The place our Saviour preached in, a ship; not that he declined the temple or the synagogue, when he had the opportunity; but in the want of them, Christ thought a house, a mountain, a ship, no unmeet place to preach in. It is not the place that sanctifies the ordinance, but the ordinance that sanctifies the place. Observe, 3. The manner of our Lord's preaching; it was by parables and similitudes; which was an ancient way of instruction amongst the Jews; and a very convincing way, at once working upon men's minds, memories, and affections: making the mind attentive, the memory retentive, and the auditors inquisitive after the interpretation of the parable. Some are of opinion that our Saviour's parables were suited to his hearers' employments; some of whom being husbandmen, he resembles his doctrine to seed sown in the field: for he speaks:

—Behold a sower went forth to sow.

4 And when he sowed, some seeds fell by the way-side, and the fowls came and devoured them up.

5 Some fell upon stony places, where they had not much earth; and forthwith they sprung up because they had no deepness of earth.

6 And when the sun was up, they were scorched; and because they had not root, they withered away.

7 And some fell among thorns; and the thorns sprung up and choked them.

8 But others fell into good ground, and brought forth fruit, some an hundred-fold, some sixty-fold, some thirty-fold,

9 Who hath ears to hear, let him hear.

The scope of this parable is to show, that there are four several sorts of hearers of the word, and but one sort only that hear to a saving advantage: also to show us the cause of the different success of the word preached. Here observe, 1. The sowers, Christ and his apostles, he the prime and principal sower, they the secondary and subordinate seedsmen. Christ sows his own field, his ministers sow his field; he sows his own seed, they sow his seed. Woe unto us, if we sow our own seed and not Christ's. Observe, 2. The seed sown, the word of God. Fabulous legends, and unwritten traditions, which the seedsmen of the church of Rome sow, these are not seed but chaff; or their own seed, not Christ's. Our Lord's field must be sown with his own seed, not with mixed grain. Learn, 1. That the word of God preached is like seed sown in the furrows of the field. As seed has a fructifying virtue in it, by which it increases and brings forth more of its own kind; so has the word of God a quickening power, to regenerate and make alive dead souls. Learn, 2. That the seed of the word, where it is most plentifully sown, is not alike fruitful. As seed doth not thrive in all grounds alike, so neither doth the word fructify alike in the hearts of men. There is a difference both from the nature of the soil, and from the influence of the Spirit. Learn, 3. That the cause of the word's unfruitfulness is very different, and not the same in all: in some it is the policy of satan, that bird of prey, which follows God's plough, and steals away his precious seed. In others, it is a hard heart of unbelief; in others, the cares of the world, like thorns choke the word, overgrow the good seed, draw away the moisture of the earth, and the heart of the soil, and hinder the influences of the sun. The far greater part of hearers are fruitless and unprofitable hearers. Learn, 4. That the best ground doth not bring forth fruit alike; some good ground brings forth more, and some less; some thirty, some sixty, and some an hundred-fold. In like manner a person may be a profitable hearer of the word, although he doth not bring forth so great a proportion of fruit as others, provided he brings forth as much as he can.

10 And the disciples came and said unto him, Why speakest thou unto them in parables?

11 He answered and said unto them, Because it is given unto you to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, but to them it is not given.

Here we have the disciples' question, and our Saviour's answer. Their question is, Why speakest thou to the people in parables which they do not understand? They cannot see the soul of thy meaning, through the body of thy parables. Christ answers, "To you, my disciples, and such as you are, who love the truth, and desire to obey it, the Spirit gives you an affective, operative, and experimental knowledge, not barely to know these things, but to believe them, and feel the power of them in and upon your own hearts; but the generality of hearers do satisfy and content themselves with a bare and notional knowledge of what they hear; a parable therefore is well enough for them." Learn, 1. That the doctrines of the gospel are mysterious. 2. That it is a matchless and invaluable privilege, practically and savingly to understand and know gospel-mysteries. 3. That this privilege all are not sharers in or partakers of, but only those to whom it is given; "Unto you it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom, but to them it is not given."

12 For whosoever hath, to him shall be given, and he shall have more abundance; but whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken away even that he hath.

That is, whosoever improves the measures of grace received, shall obtain farther measures and degrees of it: But from him that doth not improve what he has already received, shall be taken away that which to himself or others he seemed to have, his common gifts and moral endowments. Learn, That where there are beginnings of true grace, and a right and wise improvement of it, God will make rich additions of more grace to the present stock which we have received.

13 Therefore speak I unto them in parables: because they seeing, see not; and hearing, they hear not, neither do they understand.

14 And in them is fulfilled the prophecy of Esaias, which saith, by hearing ye shall hear, and shall not understand; and seeing, ye shall see, and shall not perceive.

15 For this people's heart is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes they have closed; lest at any time they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and should understand with their hearts, and should be converted, and I should heal them.

These words of our blessed Saviour, as I conceive, have a peculiar reference and relation to the pharisees, who attended upon Christ's ministry, not with an honest simplicity of mind, to be instructed by it, but to carp and cavil at it. Our Saviour tells them, he had formerly spoken things very plainly and clearly to them, and also wrought miracles before them, to convince them of the divinity of his person, and of the verity of his doctrine: but they would not believe either his person or his doctrine to be from God; and therefore he would now speak to them in dark parables, that they may be judicially blinded; they sinfully shut their eyes against the clearest light, and said they would not see; and now Christ closes their eyes judicially, and says they shall not see. Learn hence, To acknowledge the divine justice, which speaks darkly to them that despise the light: such who see and yet see not, they shall see the shell but not the kernel; they shall hear the parable, but not understand the spiritual sense and meaning of it. When wilful blindness of mind is added to natural blindness, it is a just and righteous thing with God to superadd judicial blindness, and give them obstinacy of heart, his curse unto them.

16 But blessed are your eyes; for they see: and your ears, for they hear.

17 For verily I say unto you, that many prophets and righteous men have desired to see those things which ye see, and have not seen them; and to hear those things which ye hear, and have not heard them.

Here our Saviour pronounces such of his disciples and followers blessed, who received the truths of the gospel so far as they were already taught them: he assures them that they shall receive farther light and fuller measures of spiritual illumination: Blessed are your eyes, for they see. Learn, That such as have received the least measures of spiritual knowledge and saving illumination, and do improve it, are in a happy and blessed condition; for as they are capable of farther measures of divine knowledge, so shall they be partakers of them.

18 ¶ Hear ye therefore the parable of the sower.

19 When any one heareth the word of the kingdom, and understandeth it not, then cometh the wicked one, and catcheth away that which was sown in his heart: this is he which received seed by the way side.

20 But he that received the seed into stony places, the same is he that heareth the word, and anon with joy receiveth it;

21 Yet hath he not root in himself, but dureth for awhile; for when tribulation or persecution ariseth because of the word, by and by he is offended.

22 He also that received seed among the thorns, is he that heareth the word, and the care of this world and the deceitfulness of riches choke the word, and he becometh unfruitful.

23 But he that received seed into the good ground, is he that heareth the word, and understandeth it: which also beareth fruit, and bringeth forth, some an hundred-fold, some sixty, some thirty.

As if our Lord had said, "You, my disciples, who are not satisfied with a sound of words, I will explain to you the sense and signification of this parable: the scope of which is to show the different effects which the word of God has upon men's hearts, and the reason of that difference. The seed is the word, the sower is the preacher, the soil is the heart and soul of man." Now our Saviour assures us, that the hearts of some hearers are like highway ground, in which the seed is not covered with the harrow of meditation; others are like stony ground, in which the word has no root; no root in their understandings, memories, conscience, will, or affections: but they are offended, either at the depth and profoundness of the word, or at the sanctity and strictness of it, or at the plainness and simplicity of it. Again, some hearers our Lord compares to thorny ground. Thorns are covetous desires, which choke the good seed, shadow the blade when sprung up, keep off the influences of the sun, and draw away the fatness of the soil from the seed. All these effects have thorns in and among the seed; and the like effects have worldly affections and covetous desires in the heart of man rendering the word unfruitful and unprofitable. But the good christian hears the word attentively, keeps it retentively, believes it steadfastly, applies it particularly, practises it universally, and brings forth fruit with patience and perseverance; fruit that will redound to his account, in the great day of account. Learn, 1. That no hearers are in Christ's account good hearers of the word, but such as bring forth the fruits of a holy, humble, and peaceable conversation. 2. That a person may be a good hearer of the word, if he brings forth the best fruit he can, though it be not in so great a proportion as others do: as some ground brings forth thirty, some sixty, and some a hundred-fold: in like manner do all the sincere hearers of the word, they all bring forth fruit, though not all alike; all in sincerity and reality, though not all to the same degree, and none to perfection. Observe lastly, Satan is here compared to the fowls of the air, which pick up the seed before it takes any root in the earth. The devil is very jealous of the success of the word, and therefore labors all he can to destroy the word before it comes to operate upon the heart; which he doth sometimes by the cares of the world, sometimes by vain companions, who prove mere quench-coals unto earthly convictions; if he can steal away the word, or choke it, he has his desire and design.

24 ¶ Another parable put he forth unto them, saying, The kingdom of heaven is likened unto a man which sowed good seed in his field.

25 But while men slept, his enemy came, and sowed tares among the wheat, and went his way.

26 But when the blade was sprung up, and brought forth fruit, then appeared the tares also.

27 So the servants of the householder came, and said unto him, Sir, didst not thou sow good seed in thy field? from whence, then, hath it tares?

28 He said unto them, An enemy hath done this. The servants said unto him, Wilt thou then that we go and gather them up?

29 But he said, Nay: lest, while ye gather up the tares, ye root up also the wheat with them.

30 Let both grow together until the harvest: and in the time of harvest I will say to the reapers, Gather ye together first the tares, and bind them in bundles to burn them; but gather the wheat into my barn.

The design and scope of this parable is, to show that there is no expectation of universal purity in the church of God in this life; but as the tares and the wheat grow together in the same field, so hypocrites and sincere christians are and will be intermixed in the same church, and can hardly be discerned one from the other. St. Jerome observes, That in the eastern countries, the tares and the wheat were so like one another, whilst they were in the blade, that there was no knowing them asunder. Learn, 1. That in the outward and visible church there ever has been and will be a mixture of good and bad, of saints and sinners, of hypocrites and sincere christians, until the day of judgment. 2. That in that day Christ will make a thorough and perfect separation, and divide the tares from the wheat; that is, the righteous from the wicked. 3. That in the mean time none ought to be so offended at this mixture in the church, as to separate from the church communion on that account: until the harvest, it is not to be expected that the tares and the wheat should be perfectly separated. Yet observe, 4. That though the tares are forbidden to be plucked up when sown, yet it is the church's duty, all she can, to hinder their sowing. Though we must not root the wicked up, yet we must prevent the rooting of wickedness all we can. Our Saviour, that forbade to pluck up the tares, did not forbid to hinder their sowing. Note here, How vain is the collection of the Erastians from hence, that the wicked are not to be cut off by excommunication from the communion of the church; nor doth this text prove that the magistrates may not cut off evil doers; seeing this was not spoken to them, but to the ministers of the church.

31 ¶ Another parable put he forth unto them, saying, The kingdom of heaven is like unto a grain of mustard-seed, which a man took and sowed in his field.

32 Which indeed is the least of all seeds; but when it is grown it is the greatest among herbs, and becometh a tree: that the birds of the air come and lodge in the branches thereof.

33 ¶ Another parable spake he unto them, The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven, which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal, till the whole was leavened.

34 All these things spake Jesus unto the multitude in parables: and without a parable spake he not unto them;

35 That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet, saying, I will open my mouth in parables, I will utter things which have been kept secret from the foundation of the world.

Our Saviour's design in this parable, is to show how the gospel, from small and little, from unlikely and contemptible beginnings, shall spread and increase, fructify and grow up; like as mustard-seed, one of the smallest grains, grows up to a considerable tallness: and as a little leaven turns a great heap of meal into its own nature; so the gospel shall spread and increase, nations and countries becoming christians. Learn, That how small beginnings soever the gospel had in its first plantation, yet by the fructifying blessing of God, it has had, and shall have, a wonderful increase.

36 Then Jesus sent the multitude away, and went into the house; and his disciples came unto him, saying, Declare unto us the parable of the tares of the field.

37 He answered and said unto them, He that soweth the good seed, is the Son of man.

38 The field is the world: the good seed are the children of the kingdom, but the tares are the children of the wicked one;

39 The enemy that sowed them is the devil; the harvest is the end of the world, and the reapers are the angels.

40 As therefore the tares are gathered and burned in the fire, so shall it be in the end of this world.

41 The Son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity.

42 And he shall cast them into a furnace of fire; there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth.

43 Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father: Who hath ears to hear, let him hear.

The parable of the tares of the field, Christ is pleased to explain to his disciples after this manner. The person sowing good seed was himself, The Son of man, who first planted the gospel; the field in the which the seed was sown was the world; that is, the church in the world: the good seed, called The children of the kingdom, are sincere christians: the tares, called The children of the wicked one, are profane sinners, and unsound hypocrites: the enemy is the devil, the harvest is the end of the world, and the angels are the reapers. Learn, 1. That the mixture of the tares and the wheat, of the righteous and the wicked, must and shall remain in the church unto the end of the world. 2. That in the end of the world the angels shall perform the works of separation, gathering the righteous from among the wicked; when every one's harvest shall be according to his fruit; "The righteous shining in the kingdom of our Father, the wicked cast into a furnace of fire."

44 ¶ Again the kingdom of heaven is like unto treasure hid in a field; the which when a man hath found, he hideth, and for joy thereof, goeth and selleth all that he hath, and buyeth the field.

45 ¶ Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto a merchant-man, seeking goodly pearls:

46 Who, when he had found one pearl of great price, he went and sold all that he had and bought it.

By the treasures hid in the field, and the pearl of great price, are understood, Christ, the grace of the gospel, and the way to life and salvation therein discovered; he that is thoroughly convinced of the worth and excellency of Christ's grace, will part with all that he has to purchase and obtain it. Learn, That the sinner who will have interest in Christ, and a part in the gospel grace, must part with all that he has to purchase and to obtain them, even with his goods and lands, with his wife and children; for Christ and his grace are a real good, a substantial good, a durable good; he outbids all the offers the world can make, and therefore it is our wisdom to part with all for him, and especially our sins, dearer to us than all the rest.

47 ¶ Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto a net that was cast into the sea; and gathered of every kind;

48 Which when it was full they drew to shore, and sat down, and gathered the good into vessels, but cast the bad away.

49 So shall it be at the end of the world; the angels shall come forth, and sever the wicked from among the just.

50 And shall cast them into the furnace of fire: there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth.

The design and scope of this parable also is to set forth the state of the gospel church, which is like a floor, where chaff is mixed with wheat; a field, where tares are mixed with good corn; a net where bad fishes are involved with the good. As the wheat must not be removed out of the floor before the time of winnowing; nor the tares gathered out of the field before the time of reaping; nor the good fishes break through the net to get from the bad before the time of separation; so must not christians forsake a church's communion, because of the present mixture of good and bad in the church. For a mixed communion, in the church, and the good christians communicating with bad, do neither defile the ordinances of Christ, nor pollute those that sincerely join in them.

51 Jesus saith unto them, Have ye understood all these things? They say unto him, Yea, Lord.

52 Then said he unto them. Therefore every scribe which is instructed unto the kingdom of heaven, is like unto a man that is an householder, which bringeth forth out of his treasure things new and old.

Observe here, 1. The title which our Saviour puts upon gospel ministers; they are household-stewards. 2. He points out the office of those stewards; and that is, to provide for the household both with plenty and variety, He must bring forth out of his treasure in plenty; and things new and old for their variety. There are two essential qualifications in a steward, faithfulness and prudence: he must be honest and faithful, in bringing out of his own treasure, not another's; and he must be prudent, in bringing things new as well as old; not new truths, but old truths in a new dress; lest the household, by always feeding upon the same dish, do nauseate it, instead of being nourished by it.

53 ¶ And it came to pass, that when Jesus had finished these parables, he departed thence.

54 And when he was come into his own country, he taught them in their synagogue, insomuch that they were all astonished, and said, Whence hath this man this wisdom and these mighty works?

55 Is not this the carpenter's son? Is not his mother called Mary? and his brethren, James, and Joses, and Simon, and Judas?

56 And his sisters, are they not all with us? whence then hath this man all these things?

57 And they were offended in him —

Observe here, 1. Christ's tender and compassionate regard to his own countrymen, the people of Galilee and Nazareth: he preached to them in their synagogue. 2. The effect which his doctrine had upon them. They were astonished at it, but not converted by it: they admired, but did not believe. 3. The cause of their rejecting Christ's ministry was the meanness of his person, the contemptibleness of his outward condition, the poverty of his relations: Is not this the carpenter's son? Mark vii. 3, he is called the carpenter; whence the fathers concluded, that our Saviour, during the time of his obscure privacy wrought at the trade of Joseph his reputed father; and Justin Martyr says, he made ploughs and yokes. Sure we are our Lord spent no time in idleness, though we are not certain how he employed his time before he entered upon his public ministry. Note, That the poverty and meanness of Christ's condition was that which multitudes stumbled at; and which kept many, yea most, from believing on him. None but a spiritual eye can discern beauty in an humble Saviour: Is not this the son of the carpenter? 2. That it is no impediment to, or hindrance of, our faith, that we never saw Christ's person in the flesh, nor knew his parentage and education; for here are his own countrymen, who daily saw his person, heard his doctrine, and were witness of his holy conversation, yet instead of believing in him they were offended at him.

—But Jesus said unto them, A prophet is not without honor, save in his own country, and in his own house.

Our Saviour tells them, he doth not wonder that so many of his own countrymen, to whom he had been so familiarly known, did despise his person and reject his doctrine; a prophet generally has least esteem where he has been brought up; because, perhaps the follies of his childhood, and indecencies of his youth, are remembered and reported to his disparagement. Learn, 1. That there is a real tribute of honor due and payable to every prophet, or faithful minister of Jesus Christ. 2. That the ministers of Christ, for the most part, have least honor from their own countrymen, to whom they are best known. 3. That although it be so, yet this may not be through their own fault, for Christ was so amongst his.

58 And he did not many mighty works there, because of their unbelief.

This sin not only locks up the heart of a sinner, but also binds up the hands of a Saviour. Unbelief obstructed Christ's miraculous works when on earth, and it obstructs his gracious works now in heaven. Ah! cursed unbelief!

(No. 4)

which shuts up, O sinner, thy heart, and shuts out thy Saviour, and will effectually shut thee out of heaven, and not only procure damnation, but no damnation like it! Mark xiv. 16. Christ was unable, because they were unwilling; his impotency was occasioned by their infidelity; he did not, because he would not; and that he would not, proceeded from a defect in their faith, not from any deficiency in Christ's power; their unbelief bound his hands, and hindered the execution of his power.

CHAPTER XIV.

The former part of this chapter gives an account of the death of John the Baptist, together with the occasion of it, which was his plain and faithful reproving of Herod for the uncleanness he lived in.

AT that time Herod the Tetrarch heard of the fame of Jesus.

2 And said unto his servants. This is John the Baptist: he is risen from the dead, and therefore mighty works do show forth themselves in him.

Observe here, 1. How strange it was that Herod should not hear of the fame of Jesus till now; all the country and adjoining regions had rung of his fame, only Herod's court hears nothing. Miserable is that greatness which keeps princes from the knowledge of Jesus Christ. How plain is it from hence that our Saviour came not to court: he once sent indeed a message to that fox (Herod) whose den he would not approach; teaching us by his example, not to affect, but to avoid outward pomp and glory. The courts of princes are too often a very bad air for piety and religion to thrive in. Observe, 2. The misconstruction of Herod, when he heard of our Saviour's fame: this, says he, is John the Baptist, whom I beheaded. His conscience told him he had offered an unjust violence to an innocent man; and now he is afraid that he is come again to be revenged on him for his head. A wicked man needs no worse tormentor than his own mind. O the terrors and tortures of a guilty conscience! How great are the anxieties of guilt, and the fears of divine displeasure, than which nothing is more stinging and perpetually tormenting.

3 ¶ For Herod had laid hold of John and bound him, and put him in prison for Herodias' sake, his brother Philip's wife.

4 For John said unto him, It is not lawful for thee to have her.

5 And when he would have him put to death, he feared the multitude, because they counted him a prophet.

Observe here, 1. The person that put the holy Baptist to death: it was Herod, it was Herod the king, it was Herod that invited John to preach at court, and heard him gladly. 1. It was Herod Antipas, son to that Herod, who sought Christ's life, chap. ii. cruelty runs in the blood. Herod the murderer of John, who was the forerunner of Christ, descended from that Herod who would have murdered Christ himself. 2. It was Herod the king. Sad! that princes, who should always be nursing-fathers to, should at any time be the bloody butchers of, the prophets of God. 3. It was Herod that heard John gladly; John took the ear and the heart of Herod, and Herod binds the hands and feet of John. O how inconstant is a carnal heart to good resolutions; the word has oft-times an awakening influence, where it does not leave an abiding impression upon the minds of men. Observe, 2. The cause of the Baptist's death; it was for telling a king of his crime. Herod cut off that head whose tongue was so bold as to tell him of his faults. The persecutions which the prophets of God fall under, is usually for telling great men of their sins: men in power are impatient of reproof, and imagine their authority gives them a licence to transgress. Observe, 3. The plain dealing of the Baptist, in reproving Herod for his crime, which, in one act was adultery, incest, and violence. Adultery, that he took another's wife; incest, that he took his brother's wife; violence, that he took her in spite of her husband. Therefore John does not mince the matter, and say, it is not convenient; but, It is not lawful for thee to have her; it is not the crown and sceptre of Herod that could daunt the faithful messenger of God. There ought to meet in God's ministers, both courage and impartiality. Courage, in fearing no faces; impartiality, in sparing no sins. For none are so great, but they are under the authority and command of the law of God.

6 But when Herod's birth-day was kept, the daughter of Herodias danced before them, and pleased Herod.

7 Whereupon he promised with an oath, to give her whatsoever she would ask.

8 And she, being before instructed of her mother, said, Give me here John Baptist's head in a charger.

9 And the king was sorry: nevertheless, for the oath's sake, and them that sat with him at meat, he commanded it to be given her.

10 And he sent and beheaded John in the prison.

11 And his head was brought in a charger, and given to the damsel: and she brought it to her mother.

Severable observables are here to be taken notice of. 1. The time of this execrable murder: it was upon Herod's birth-day. It was an ancient custom among the eastern kings to celebrate their birth-days: Pharaoh's birth-day was kept Gen. xl. Herod's here; both with blood; yet these personal stains do not make the practice unlawful. When we solemnize our birth-day with thankfulness to our Creator and Preserver, for life and being, for protection and preservation to that moment, and commend ourselves to the care of his good providence for the remainder of our days, this is an act of piety and religion. But Herod's birth-day was kept with revelling and feasting, with music and dancing: not that dancing which in itself, is a set, regular, harmonious motion of the body, can be unlawful; any more than walking or running: circumstances may make it sinful. But from this, although disorderly banquet on Herod's birth day, we learn that great men's feasts and frolics are too often, a season of much sin. Observe, 2. The instigator and promoter of the Holy Baptist's death, Herodias and her daughter; that good man falls a sacrifice to the fury and malice, to the pride and scorn, of a lustful woman, for being a rub in the way of her licentious adultery. Resolute sinners, who are mad upon their lusts, run furiously upon their gainsayers, though they be the prophets of God themselves, and resolve to bear down all opposition they meet with in the gratification of their unlawful desires. Observe, 3. With what reluctance Herod consented to this villainy; The king was sorry: wicked men oft-times sin with a troubled and disturbed conscience; they have a mighty struggle with themselves before they commit their sins: but at last their lusts get the mastery over their consciences. So did Herod's here; for, 4. Notwithstanding his sorrow, he commands the fact: He sent and beheaded John in the prison. And a threefold cord tied him to this performance. 1. The conscience of his oath. See his hypocrisy: he made conscience of a rash oath, who made no scruple of real murder. 2. Respect to his reputation, Them that sat with him heard his promise, and will be witness of his levity, if he do not perform. Insisting upon punctilios of honor has hazarded the loss of millions of souls. A loathsomeness to discontent Herodias and her daughter. O vain and foolish hypocrite, who dreaded the displeasure of a wanton mistress, before the offending of God and conscience! Observe, 5. These wicked women not only require the Baptist to be beheaded, but that his head be brought in a charger to them. What a dish is here to be served up at a prince's table on his birth-day! A dead man's head swimming in blood! How prodigiously insatiable is cruelty and revenge! Herodias did not think herself safe till John was dead; she could not think him dead till his head was off; she could not believe his head was off till she had it in her hand. Revenge never thinks it has made sure enough. O how cruel is a wicked heart, that could take pleasure in a spectacle of so much horror! How was that holy head tossed by impure and filthy hands! That true and faithful tongue, those impure eyes, those mortified cheeks are now insultingly handled by an incestuous harlot, and made a scorn to the drunken eyes of Herod's guests. From the whole learn, 1. That neither the holiest of prophets, nor the best of men, are more secure from violence, than from natural death. He that was sanctified in the womb, conceived and born with so much miracle, lived with so much reverence and observation, is now at midnight obscurely murdered in a close prison. Learn, 2. That it is as true a martyrdom to suffer for duty, as for faith: he dies as truly a martyr that dies for doing his duty, as he that dies for professing the faith, and bearing witness to the truth.

12 And his disciples came and took up the body and buried it, and went and told Jesus.

13 ¶ When Jesus heard of it, he departed thence by ship, into a desert place apart: and when the people had heard thereof, they followed him on foot out of the cities.

The disciples of John hearing that their holy master was thus basely and barbarously murdered, took up his dead body and buried it. Whence we learn, That the faithful servants of God are not ashamed of the suffering of the saints, but will testify their respect unto them both living and dead. Observe farther, our blessed Saviour, upon the notice of John's death, flies unto the desert for the preservation of his own life. Jesus knew that his hour was not yet come, and therefore he keeps out of Herod's way. It is no cowardice to fly from persecutors, when Christ our captain both practises it himself, and directs us to it, saying, When they persecute you in one city, flee, &c.

14 And Jesus went forth, and saw a great multitude, and was moved with compassion toward them, and he healed their sick.

Observe here, With what condolency and tender sympathy the compassionate Jesus exercised acts of mercy and compassion towards the miserable and distressed. He was moved with compassion; that is, touched with an inward sense and feeling of their sorrow; And he healed their sick. Those that came to Christ for healing, found three advantages of cure, above the power and performance of any earthly physician: to wit, certainty, bounty, and ease. Certainty, in that all comers were infallibly cured: bounty, in that they were freely cured without charge; and ease, in that they were cured without pain.

15 And when it was evening, his disciples came to him, saying, This is a desert place, and the time is now past: send the multitude away, that they may go into the villages, and buy themselves victuals.

Note here, 1. The disciples' pity towards the multitude that had been long attending upon Christ's ministry in the desert: they presuming the people hungry, having fasted all the day, requested our Saviour to dismiss them, that they may procure some bodily refreshment. Learn hence, That it well becomes the ministers of Christ to respect the bodily necessities, as well as to regard the spiritual wants of their people. As the bodily father must take care of the soul of his child, so must the spiritual Father have respect to the bodily necessities of his children. Observe, 2. The motion which the disciples make on behalf of the multitude, Send them away, that they may buy victuals. Here was a strong charity, but a weak faith. A strong charity in that they desire the people's relief: but a weak faith, in that they suppose that they could not be otherwise relieved, but by sending them away to buy victuals; forgetting that Christ, who had healed the multitude miraculously, could as easily feed them miraculously, if he pleased: all things being equally easy to omnipotency.

16 But Jesus said unto them, they need not depart: give ye them to eat.

Ob-serve here, 1. Our Saviour's strange answer to the disciples' motion: They need not depart, says Christ. Need not! Why? the people must either feed or famish. Victuals they must have, and this being a desert place, there was none to be had. Surely then there was need enough, But, 2. Christ's command was more strange than his assertion: Give ye them to eat. Alas, poor disciples! they had nothing for themselves to eat, how then should they give the multitude to eat! When Christ requires of us what of ourselves we are unable to perform, it is to show us our impotency and weakness, and to provoke us to look to him that worketh all our works in us, and for us.

17 And they said unto him, We have here but five loaves and two fishes.

Note here, What a poor and slender provision the Lord of the whole earth has for his household and family; five loaves, and those barley; two fishes, and they small: teaching us, That these bodies of ours must be fed, but not pampered. Our belly must not be our master, much less our God. We read but twice that Christ made any entertainments, and both times his guests were fed with loaves and fishes, plain fare and homely diet. The end of food is to sustain nature, we stifle it with gluttonous variety: meat was ordained for the belly, the belly for the body, the body for the soul, and the soul for God. Observe farther, As the quality of the victuals was plain and coarse, so the quantity of it was small and little: Five loaves and two fishes. Well might the disciples say, What are these among so many? The eye of sense and reason sees an impossibility of those effects which faith can easily apprehend, and divine power more easily produce.

18 He said, bring them hither to me.

19 And he commanded the multitude to sit down on the grass, and took the five loaves and the two fishes, and looking up to heaven, he blessed, and brake, and gave the loaves to his disciples, and the disciples to the multitude.

Observe, 1. How the master of the feast marshals his guests, he commands them all to sit down: none of them reply, "Sit down, but to what? Here are the mouths, but where is the meat? We can soon be set, but whence shall we be served?" Nothing of this; but they obey and expect. O how easy is it to trust to God, and rely upon Providence, when there is corn in the barn, and bread in the cupboard! But when our stores are all empty, and nothing before us, then to depend upon an invisible bounty, is a true and noble act of faith. Observe, 2. The actions performed by our blessed Saviour. "He blessed and brake, and gave the loaves to his disciples and they to the multitude." 1. He blessed. Teaching us by his example, in all our wants to look up to heaven for a supply, to wait upon God for his blessing, and not to sit down to our food as a beast to his forage. 2 He brake the loaves. He could have multiplied them whole, why would he rather do it in the breaking? Perhaps to teach us, that we are to expect his blessing in the distribution, rather than in the reservation of what he gives us. Scattering is the way to increasing: not grain hoarded up in the granary, but scattered in the furrows of the field, yields increase. Liberality is the way to riches, and penuriousness the road to poverty. 3. Christ gave the bread thus broken to his disciples that they might distribute it to the multitude. But why did not our Lord distribute it with his own hand, but by the hands of his disciples? Doubtless to win respect to his disciples from the people. The same course doth our Lord take in spiritual distributions. He that could feed the world by his immediate hand, chooses rather by the hands of his ministers to divide the bread of life to all hearers.

20 And they did all eat, and were filled: and they took up of the fragments that remained, twelve baskets full.

21 And they that had eaten were about five thousand men, besides women and children.

They did all eat, not a crumb or bit but to satiety and fulness! They did eat and were filled, yet twelve baskets remained; more was left than was at first set on. So many bellies, and yet so many baskets filled. The miracle was doubled by an act of boundless omnipotency. It is hard to say, which was the greatest miracle, the miraculous eating, or the miraculous leaving. If we consider that they ate, we may justly wonder that they left any thing; if what they left, that they ate any thing. Observe farther, These fragments, though of barley bread and fish bones must not be lost; but by our Saviour's command, gathered up. The liberal housekeeper of the world will not allow the loss of his orls. O how fearful then will the account of those be, who have large and plentiful estates to answer for as lost, being spent upon their lusts in riot and excess!

22 ¶ And straightway Jesus constrained his disciples to get into a ship, and to go before him unto the other side, while he sent the multitudes away.

Jesus constrained them; that is, he commanded them to go away before him. No doubt but they were very loath to leave him, and to go without him; both out of the love which they bare to him and themselves. Such as have once tasted the sweetness of Christ, are hardly drawn away from him; however, as desirous as the disciples were to stay with Christ, yet at his word of command they depart from him. Where Christ has a will to command, his disciples and followers must have a will to obey.

23 And when he had sent the multitudes away, he went up into a mountain apart to pray: and when the evening was come, he was there alone,

Observe here, 1. Christ dismisses the multitude, and then retires to pray; teaching us, by his example, when we have to do with God, to dismiss the multitude of our affairs and employments, of our cares and thoughts. O how unseemly it is to have our tongues talking to God, and our thoughts taken up with the world! Observe, 2. The place Christ retires to for prayer, a solitary mountain; not so much for his own need, for he could be alone, when he was in company, but to teach us, that when we address ourselves to God in duty, we are to take all the helps, furtherances and advantages we can, for the doing of it. When we converse with God in duty, O how good is it to get upon a mountain, to get our hearts above the world, above worldly employments and worldly cogitations! Observe, 3. The occasion of Christ's prayer: he had sent the disciples to sea, he foresaw the storm arising, and now he gets into a mountain to pray for them, that their faith might not fail them when their troubles were upon them. Learn hence, That it is the singular comfort of the church of God, that in all her difficulties and distresses Christ is interceding for her: when she is on the sea conflicting with the waves, Christ is upon the mountain praying for her preservation.

24 But the ship was now in the midst of the sea tossed with waves: for the wind was contrary.

Note here, The great danger the disciples were in, and the great difficulties they had to encounter with; they were in the midst of the sea, they were tossed with the waves, the wind was contrary, and Christ was absent. The wisdom of God often suffers his church to be tossed upon the waves of affliction and persecution, but it shall be swallowed by them: often is the ark of the church upon the waters; seldom off them; but never drowned.

25 And in the fourth watch of the night Jesus went unto them walking on the sea.

Christ having seen the distress of his disciples on the shore, he hastens to them on the sea. It was not a stormy and tempestuous sea that could separate betwixt him and them; he that waded through a sea of blood, and through a sea of wrath, to save his people, will walk upon a sea of water to succour and relieve them. But observe, The time when Christ came to help them, not till the fourth watch, a little before the morning. They had been many hours upon the waters, conflicting with the waves, with their fears and dangers. God oftentimes lengthens out the troubles of his children before he delivers them; but when they are come to an extremity, that is the season of his succour. As God suffers his church to be brought into extremities before he helps her, so he will help her in extremity. "In the fourth watch Jesus came," &c.

26 And when the disciples saw him walking on the sea, they were troubled, saying, It is a spirit: and they cried out for fear.

See how the disciples take their deliverer to be a destroyer: their fears were highest when their deliverer and deliverance were nearest. God may be coming with salvation and deliverance for his church, when she for the present cannot discern him.

27 But straightway Jesus spake unto them, saying, Be of good cheer: it is I; be not afraid.

Observe, When the disciples were in the saddest condition, how one word from Christ revives them: it is sufficient support in all our afflictions to hear Christ's voice speaking to us, and to enjoy his favorable presence with us. Say but, O Saviour, It is I; and then let evils do their worst; that one word, It is I, is enough to lay all storms, and to calm all tempests.

28 And Peter answered him and said, Lord, if it be thou, bid me come unto thee on the water.

29 And he said, Come. And when Peter was come down out of the ship, he walked on the water to go to Jesus.

30 But when he saw the wind boisterous, he was afraid; and beginning to sink, he cried, saying, Lord, save me.

Observe here, 1. The mixture of Peter's faith and distrust; it was faith that said, Master; it was distrust that said, If it be thou: it was faith that said, Bid me come to thee: it was faith that enabled him to step down on the watery pavement: it was faith that said, Lord, save me: but it was distrust that made him sink. O the imperfect composition of faith and fear in the best of saints here on earth! Sincerity of grace is found with the saints here on earth; perfection of grace with the saints in heaven. Here the saints look forth, fair as the moon, which has some spots in her greatest beauties: hereafter they shall be clear as the sun, whose face is all bright and glorious. Observe, 2. That whilst Peter believes, the seas as firm as brass under him; when he begins to fear, then he begins to sink. Two hands upheld Peter; the hand of Christ's power, and the hand of his own faith. The hand of Christ's power laid hold on Peter, and the hand of Peter's faith laid hold on the power of Christ. If we let go our hold on Christ, we sink: if he lets go his hold on us, we drown. Now Peter answered his name Cephaz, and he sunk like a stone.

31 And immediately Jesus stretched forth his hand, and caught him, and said unto him, O thou of little faith! wherefore didst thou doubt?

32 And when they were come into the ship, the wind ceased.

33 Then they that were in the ship came and worshipped him saying, Of a truth thou art the Son of God.

Observe here, 1. The mercy of Christ is no sooner sought, but found: "Immediately Jesus put forth his hand and caught him." O with what speed, and with what assurance, should we flee to that sovereign bounty, from whence never any sutor was sent away empty. Observe, 2. Though Christ gave Peter his hand, yet with this hand he gave him a check; "O thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt?" Though Christ likes believing, yet he dislikes doubting. A person may be truly believing, who nevertheless is sometimes doubting, but his doubting eclipses the beauty of his believing.

(No. 5)

34 And when they were gone over, they came into the land of Gennesaret.

35 And when the men of that place had knowledge of him, they sent out into all that country round about, and brought unto him all that were diseased;

36 And besought him that they might only touch the hem of his garment; and as many as touched were made perfectly whole.

Observe, 1. Our Saviour's unwearied diligence in going about to do good: he no sooner landeth, but he goeth to Gennesaret, and healeth their sick. Observe, 2. The people's charity to their sick neighbours, in sending abroad to let all the country know that Christ the great physician was come amongst them. Observe, 3. Where lay the healing virtue: not in their finger, but in their faith: or rather in Christ whom their faith apprehended.

CHAPTER XV.

THEN came to Jesus, scribes and pharisees, which were of Jerusalem, saying,

2 Why do thy disciples transgress the tradition of the elders? for they wash not their hands when they eat bread.

The former part of this chapter acquaints us with a great contest between our Saviour and the pharisees, about their traditions and old customs, which they valued more than the commandments of God: they accused the disciples with eating bread with unwashed hands, which, though it were in itself but a decent custom, the pharisees made it a religious rite: for which reason our Saviour and his disciples would not observe it. Whence we learn, That what is in itself and may without offence be done as a civil custom, ought to be discountenanced and opposed when men require it of us as a religious act, or place religion in it. The pharisees placed so much religion in washing their hands before meat, that they looked upon it as highly criminal to neglect it as to lie with a whore. One of them being in prison, and not having water enough to drink and to wash his hands too, chose rather to die with thirst, than to transgress the tradition of the elders.

3 But he answered and said unto them,

R

Why do ye also transgress the commandment of God by your tradition?

4 For God commanded, saying, Honor thy father and mother; and, He that curseth father or mother, let him die the death.

5 But ye say, Whosoever shall say to his father, or his mother, It is a gift, by whatsoever thou mightest be profited by me,

6 And honor not his father or his mother, he shall be free. Thus have ye made the commandment of God of none effect by your tradition.

Observe here, 1. The heavy charge which our Saviour brings in against the pharisees; namely, for violating an express command of God, and preferring their own traditions before it: you make void the commandments of God by your traditions. Observe, 2. The command which our Saviour instances in, as violated by them; it is the fifth commandment, which requires children to relieve their parents in their necessity. Now though the pharisees did not deny this in plain terms, yet they made an exception from it, which if children had a mind, rendered it void and useless. For the pharisees taught, that in case any would give a gift to the temple, which gift they called corban, and of which they themselves had a great share; that then children were discharged from making further provision for their poor, or impotent parents; and might say unto them after this manner, "That which thou askest for thy supply, is given to God, and therefore I cannot relieve thee." So that covetous and graceless children looked upon it as the most frugal way, once for all to fine to the temple, rather than pay the constant rent of daily relief to their poor parents. Learn, That no duty, gift, or offering to God, is accepted, where the duty of charity is neglected. It is more acceptable to God to refresh the bowels of his saints, who are the living temples of the Holy Ghost, than to adorn material temples with gold and silver.

7 Ye hypocrites! well did Esaias prophesy of you, saying,

8 This people draweth nigh unto me with their mouth, and honoreth me with their lips; but their heart is far from me.

9 But in vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men.

Our Saviour reproves the hypocritical pharisees for these things: 1. That they preferred human traditions before the divine precepts. 2. That by their human traditions they made void the worship of God. It is God's undoubted prerogative to prescribe all the parts of his own worship; and whoever presumes to add thereunto, they worship him in vain. Our Saviour farther shows, that all this proceeded from the insincerity of their hearts: "This people honoreth me with their lips, but their heart is far from me." Whence learn, 1. That the removing of the heart far from God in worship, is a great sin, and an high degree of hypocrisy. 2. That whatever outward show or profession of religion men make, if their hearts be not right with God, and what they do proceeds not from an inward principle of love and obedience to God, they are under the reign and power of hypocrisy. "Ye hypocrites, in vain do ye worship me" Learn, 3. That we must not be forward, from Christ's example, to pronounce men hypocrites; because we have neither that authority nor knowledge of the heart which Christ had, to authorize us so to do. Christ here calls the pharisees hypocrites, 1. Because they placed holiness and religion in ceremonies of human invention. 2. Because being so superstitiously careful to avoid bodily pollution, they left their hearts within full of hypocrisy and iniquity.

10 ¶ And he called the multitude, and said unto them, Hear and understand:

11 Not that which goeth into the mouth, defileth a man; but that which cometh out of the mouth, this defileth a man.

Our blessed Saviour leaving the pharisees with some dislike, applies himself to the multitude, and shows them the true spring and original fountain of all spiritual pollution and uncleanness; namely, the filthiness and impurity of man's heart: and nature, which boiling in the heart, the scum runs out at the mouth; thereby informing the multitude, that not that which is eaten, but that which is spoken, defiles a man: not the meat eaten with the mouth, but the wickedness of the heart vented by the mouth, pollutes a person in God's account.

12 Then came his disciples, and said unto him, knowest thou that the pharisees were offended after they heard this saying?

13 But he answered and said, Every plant which my heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up.

14 Let them alone: they be blind leaders of the blind. And if the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch.

Observe here, 1. How the disciples wonder that our Saviour did so little regard the displeasure of the pharisees: "Knowest thou not that the pharisees were offended?" Although nothing vexed the pharisees more than the discovery of their false doctrine before the multitude, yet our Saviour did not stick to detect their errors, and to declare the truth, let the effects of their displeasure be what they would: sinful man-pleasing is froiless and endless. 2. Observe, Our Lord's answer, which shows a double reason why he thus slighted the offence taken by the pharisees. 1. He compares the pharisees' doctrine and tradition to noisome weeds in the church, planted there, not by God, but themselves; and consequently shall certainly be rooted up. In matters of religion, if men will act according to the dictates of their own fancies, and not walk by the rule of God's word, they may please themselves perhaps, but they can never please their Maker. Divine institution is the only sure rule of religious worship. 2. Christ compares the pharisees themselves to blind guides; They are blind leaders of the blind; leaders and followers both blind, who will certainly and suddenly fall into the ditch of temporal and eternal destruction. Learn, 1. That ignorant, erroneous and unfaithful ministers, are the heaviest judgments that can befall a people. 2. That the following of such teachers and blind guides will be no excuse to people another day, much less free them from the danger of eternal destruction.

15 Then answered Peter and said unto him, Declare unto us this parable.

16 And Jesus said, Are ye also yet without understanding?

17 Do not ye yet understand, that whatsoever entereth in at the mouth goeth into the belly, and is cast out into the draught?

18 But those things which proceed out of the mouth come forth from the heart; and they defile the man.

19 For out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false-witness, blasphemies;

20 These are the things which defile a man: but to eat with unwashen hands defileth not a man.

The disciples desiring the interpretation of the foregoing parable, our Saviour gives it them; but withal expostulates with them, that they do not understand a thing so obvious and plain; Are ye yet without understanding? As if he had said, "Have ye sat thus long under my ministerial teaching, and enjoyed the benefit of my company and conversation, and are yet no farther proficient in knowledge?" Whence learn, That our Lord expects a proficiency in knowledge from us, answerable to the opportunities and means of knowledge enjoyed by us. Next he gives them the sense and signification of the parable; telling them, that it is out of a sinful heart that all sin proceeds; the heart is the cage or nest, which is full of those unclean birds, and from whence they take their flight. Though the occasions of sin are from without, yet the source and origin of sin is from within. Learn, That the heart of man is the sink and seed-plot of all sin, and the fountain of all pollution; the life could not be so bad, if the heart were not worse; all irregularity of our lives flows from the impurity of our hearts and natures.

21 ¶ Then Jesus went thence, and departed into the coasts of Tyre and Sidon.

22 And behold, a woman of Canaan came out of the same coasts, and cried unto him, saying, Have mercy on me, O Lord, thou Son of David: my daughter is grievously vexed with a devil.

Observe here, The constant employment of our Saviour, He went about doing good, from place to place. In the borders of Tyre and Sidon he finds a faithful woman of the race of the Canaanites, who becomes an humble suppliant to Christ, while the Jews neglected so great a salvation. Yea, she not only speaks, but cries unto him. Were we duly affected with our spiritual wants, we could speak to God in no other language than that of cries and tears; nothing but cries can pierce heaven. Observe, 2. Though all Israel could not example the faith of this Canaanite, yet was her daughter tormented with a devil. Learn, That neither truth, nor strength of faith, can secure us either against Satan's inward temptations, or outward vexations; and consequently, the worst of bodily afflictions are no sufficient proof of divine displeasure. Observe, 3. The daughter did not come to Christ for herself, but the mother for her. Perhaps the child was not sensible of its own misery, but the good mother feels both the child's sorrow and her own. True goodness teaches us to appropriate the afflictions of others to ourselves; it causes us to bear their griefs, and to sympathize with them in their sorrows.

23 But he answered her not a word. And his disciples came, and besought him, saying, Send her away; for she crieth after us.

Strange! That a miserable suppliant should cry and sue, whilst the God of mercy is speechless. What! is the fountain of mercy dried up? O Saviour! we have oft found cause to wonder at thy words, but never till now at thy silence. Learn hence, That Christ doth sometimes delay to return an answer to a well qualified prayer. Sometimes his people do not pray earnestly enough; sometimes they pray too earnestly, for some outward and temporal mercy; sometimes the mercy they pray for is not good for them, or it may be it is not yet good for them. Let us not then judge of God's hearing prayer, by his present answer.

24 But he answered and said, I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel.

Observe, When our Saviour doth answer, he gives not one word of comfort, but rather a repulse. Christ has often-times love in his heart to his people, when they can read none in his countenance, nor gather it from his discourse. Observe, The answer itself, Christ says not, I am sent unto the lost sheep of the house of Adam, but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. The Jews are compared unto sheep, the Gentiles unto dogs. Christ insinuates that though she were a lost sheep of Adam, yet not being one of the lost sheep of Israel, he could do nothing for her. It was a common saying among the Jews, "That the nations of the world were likened to dogs, whereas they were God's sons and daughters."

25 Then came she and worshipped him, saying, Lord help me.

Yet hath not this poor woman done; Christ's former silence and his present denial, cannot silence her. She comes, she worships, she cries, Lord, help me. O what an undaunted grace is the grace of faith! It has a strong heart and a bold forehead, peremptory denials cannot dismay it. This woman will not despond, though her prayer of faith, from the knees of humility, succeed not.

26 But he answered and said, It is not meet to take the children's bread and to cast it to dogs.

Observe here, The seeming severity of Christ to this poor woman; he calls her not a woman but a dog; and as it were, spurns her from his feet with a harsh repulse. Did ever so severe a word drop from those mild lips? What shall we say? Is the lamb of God turned a lion? That a woman in distress imploring pity, yea, a good woman, and an humble suppliant, should be thus rated out of Christ's presence for a dog! Learn hence, That Christ put the strongest faith of his own children upon the severest trials: the trial had never been so sharp, if her faith had not been so strong. Usually, where God gives much grace, he tries grace much.

27 And she said, Truth, Lord: yet the dogs eat of the crumbs which fall from their master's table.

Observe, How her humility grants all, her patience overcomes all, she meekly desires to possess the dog's place: not to crowd to the table, but to creep under it, and to partake of the crumbs of mercy that fall from thence. Indeed she showed one of the best qualities of a dog, in keeping her hold where she had once fastened: not letting go, or giving over, until she had gotten what she desired. Learn hence, That nothing is so pleasing unto Christ, as to see his people following him with faith and importunity, when he seems to withdraw from them.

28 Then Jesus answered and said unto her, O woman, great is thy faith: be it unto thee even as thou wilt. And her daughter was made whole from that very hour.

The disciples observing her behaviour, might have been ready to say, O woman, great is thy patience, great is thy humility: but says Christ, Great is thy faith; he sees the root, we the branches. Nothing but faith could thus temper the heart, thus strengthen the soul, thus charm the tongue. O powerful grace of faith, which Christ himself could no longer withstand, but cries out as a person overcome by the prevalency of it; O woman, great is thy faith. Note, That no grace ever goes away from Christ uncrowned: though we may wait long for mercy, yet the hand of faith never knocked in vain at the door of heaven. Mercy is as surely ours, as if we had it, if we have but faith and patience to wait for it. This good woman found it so to her unspeakable comfort; and the same shall we find, in the exercise of the same grace. Quest. But how doth this poor woman's faith appear to be great faith?

Ans. Because having no promise to rely upon, and suffering so many repulses with seeming contempt, she still retained a good hope of Christ's kindness and mercy. Learn hence, 1. That the faith of those who, depending on God's goodness, do place an humble confidence in God, and are not by great temptations or discouragements removed from that confidence; such faith is deservedly styled great faith. 2. That the faith of believing Gentiles was not only praiseworthy and well-pleasing to God, but more excellent and better pleasing than that of the Jews, to whom the promises did belong.

29 ¶ And Jesus departed from thence, and came nigh unto the sea of Galilee; and went up into a mountain, and sat down there.

30 And great multitudes came unto him, having with them those that were lame, blind, dumb, maimed, and many others, and cast them down at Jesus' feet; and he healed them;

31 Insomuch that the multitude wondered, when they saw the dumb to speak, the maimed to be whole, the lame to walk, and the blind to see; and they glorified the God of Israel.

Observe here, 1. The charity, 2. The faith, of the multitude, in bringing the blind, the deaf, and the dumb to Christ: their charity in lending eyes to the blind, and a tongue to the dumb; who could neither come to Christ themselves, nor speak for themselves. Every man has a tongue to speak for himself, happy is he that has a tongue to pray and intercede for other: this charity did the people exercise here. Observe also their faith; they laid the lame and blind down at Jesus' feet, relying upon his power, and believing his willingness to help and heal them. Observe farther the effect of this miracle upon the multitude; it was twofold: 1. They were struck with admiration and wonder, to see such cures wrought as exceeded the course of nature, and the power of art. 2. They glorified the God of Israel; that is, they acknowledged it to be a wonderful work of the power and mercy wrought by that God whom Israel worshipped. Whence we learn, That the miraculous works of Christ, which he wrought before the multitude, were obvious to their senses; and did constrain the beholders (if not blinded with pharisaical obstinacy) to acknowledge the power of God communicated to Christ, and to praise him for it: "The multitude marvelled, and glorified God!"

32 ¶ Then Jesus called his disciples unto him, and said, I have compassion on the multitude, because they continue with me now three days, and have nothing to eat; and I will not send them away fasting, lest they faint in the way.

33 And his disciples say unto him, Whence shall we have so much bread in the wilderness as to fill so great a multitude?

34 And Jesus saith unto them, How many loaves have ye? and they said seven, and a few little fishes.

35 And he commanded the multitude to sit down on the ground.

36 And he took the seven loaves, and the fishes, and gave thanks, and brake them, and gave to his disciples, and the disciples to the multitude.

Here we have the second miracle of Christ's compassion feeding the hungry multitude. Chapter xiv. we read of five thousand fed with five loaves and two fishes; here Christ feeds four thousand with seven loaves and a few small fishes. Where observe, That Christ had fewest, when he had most provision; when he had seven loaves, he fed but four thousand; when he had five loaves, he fed five thousand. Thus the wisdom and power of Christ is glorified by him as he pleases. The feeding of one thousand with one loaf, was as true a miracle as the feeding seven thousand. Our Saviour did put forth the power of his godhead in working miracles, after what manner seemed best to his own wisdom. Observe farther, A double action performed by our Saviour. 1. He gave thanks; that is, he prayed for a blessing upon the food. Teaching us our duty, That if the Son of God did look up to heaven, and bless his food, we should not sit down to our food as a beast to his fodder, without craving a blessing upon it. The next action was, He gave to his disciples. But why did he distribute the loaves by the hands of his disciples? Ans. Because the disciples questioned, through the weakness of their faith, whether such a multitude as four thousand could be fed with so small a provision as seven loaves. Now our Saviour, to convince them how easily he could do that thing which they had judged impossible, distributes the bread by them: making use of their own eyes and hands, for their conviction and satisfaction. Thus Christ to shame the unbelief of his disciples, makes them not only spectators but actors in that work which they judged impossible to be effected.

37 And they did all eat, and were filled; and they took up of the broken meat that was left, seven baskets full.

38 And they that did eat were four thousand men, beside women and children.

39 And he sent away the multitude, and took ship, and came into the coasts of Magdala.

They did all eat, not a crumb or a bit, but to fulness and satisfaction: yet seven baskets remain; answering the number of the loaves, as the twelve baskets in the former miracle answered the twelve apostles: in both, more is left than was at first set on: it is hard to say, which was the greater miracle, the miraculous eating, or miraculous leaving. If we consider what they eat, we may justly wonder that they left any thing; if what they left, that they ate any thing. (Dr. Fuller.) Observe lastly, Christ would not have these fragments lost but gathered up; the great housekeeper of the world will not allow the loss of his orts. O how dreadful will the account of those be, who have large and plentiful estates to answer for as lost, being spent upon their lusts in riot and excess.

(No. 5)

CHAPTER XVI.

THE pharisees also with the sadducees came, and tempting, desired him that he would show them a sign from heaven.

2 He answered and said unto them, When it is evening, ye say, It will be fair weather, for the sky is red.

3 And in the morning, It will be foul weather to-day: for the sky is red and lowering. O ye hypocrites, ye can discern the face of the sky; but can ye not discern the signs of the times?

4 A wicked and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign, and there shall no sign be given unto it but the sign of the prophet Jonas. And he left them and departed.

Observe here, 1. The persons demanding of our Saviour a sign, the pharisees and sadducees, persons of contrary opinions and interests; yet both agree in tempting and opposing Christ. Learn thence, That the wicked men, how opposite soever they are one to another, yet can agree together in opposing Christ, and undermining his truth. Observe, 2. The sign demanded: Show us a sign from heaven: as if they had said, Put us not off with such earthly signs as we have seen, in multiplying loaves; but let us see a miracle from heaven, such as Moses and Elias wrought. This they desired, not so much for their satisfaction, as out of curiosity, nay wicked treachery. Learn thence, That to demand a sign, not to confirm our faith, but to harden ourselves in our unbelief, is a dangerous tempting of Christ. Observe, 3. Our Saviour's rejection of this demand of the pharisees to give them a sign; O ye hypocrites, says he, ye can discern the face of the sky, but ye cannot discern the signs of the times. As if Christ had said, "Did not malice and obstinacy blind your eyes, ye might as easily see and discern that these are the times of the Messias, and that I am he, by the miracles wrought by me, as you can make a judgment of the weather, by looking upon the sky." Learn, that to pretend more ignorance and uncertainty in discerning the signs of gospel times, than the signs of the weather, is great hypocrisy: "Ye hypocrites, ye can discern the face of the sky, but can ye not discern the signs of the times?" Observe lastly, That our Saviour doth not condemn the study of nature, or making observation of the state of the weather, from the face of the sky. All that our Saviour blamed was, that they were better skilled in the signs of the weather, than in the signs of the times. As God by natural signs gives us warning of a change in natural things: so by his providential dispensations he gives us warning of a change in civil things. He that is wise, will observe these things: and by their observation will come to understand the pleasure of the Lord.

5 ¶ And when his disciples were come to the other side, they had forgotten to take bread.

6 Then Jesus said unto them, Take heed and beware of the leaven of the pharisees and of the sadducees.

7 And they reasoned among themselves, saying, It is because we have taken no bread.

8 Which when Jesus perceived, he said unto them, O ye of little faith, why reason ye among yourselves, because ye have brought no bread?

9 Do ye not understand, neither remember the five loaves of the five thousand, and how many baskets ye took up?

10 Neither the seven loaves of the four thousand, and how many baskets ye took up?

11 How is it that ye do not understand, that I spake it not to you concerning bread, that ye should beware of the leaven of the pharisees and of the sadducees?

Observe here, 1. How dull the disciples of Christ were under Christ's own teaching, how apt to put a carnal sense upon his words; they apprehended he had spoken to them of the leaven of bread, what he intended of the leaven of the pharisees' doctrine. Observe, 2. That smart and sharp reproof which Christ gave his disciples, for not understanding the sense and signification of what he spake. The Lord Jesus Christ is much displeased with his own people, when he discerns blindness and ignorance in them after more than ordinary means of knowledge enjoyed by them; How is it that ye do not yet understand? Observe, 2. The metaphor which Christ sets forth the corrupt doctrine of the pharisees by; he compares it to leaven, partly for its sourness and partly for its diffusiveness. Leaven is a piece of sour dough, that diffuses itself into the whole mass or lump of bread with which it is mixed. From whence our Saviour intimates, that the pharisees were a sour and proud sort of people; and their doctrines, like themselves, poisonous and pernicious in their consequences; the contagion of which our Lord warns his disciples to avoid and shun. Whence learn, That error is as damnable as vice; persons erroneous in their judgments are to be avoided, as well as those that are lewd and wicked in their conversations. He that has a due care of his soul's salvation, must as well beware of erroneous principles as of debauched practices. Observe, 4. Our Saviour does not command his disciples to separate from communion with the pharisees, and oblige them not to hear their doctrine; but only to beware of the errors that they mixed with their doctrine. We may and ought to hold communion with a church, though erroneous in doctrine, if not fundamentally erroneous. Separation from a church is not justifiable upon any other ground than that which makes a separation between God and that church: which is either the apostasy of that church into gross idolatry; or in point of doctrine into damnable heresy, or imposing sinful terms of communion.

13 ¶ When Jesus came into the coasts of Cesarea Philippi, he asked his disciples, saying, Whom do men say, that I, the Son of man, am?

14 And they said, Some say that thou art John the Baptist; some Elias; and others, Jeremias, or one of the prophets.

15 He saith unto them, but whom say ye that I am?

16 And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God.

17 And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou Simon-Barjona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven.

Observe here, 1. Our Saviour's question, and the disciples' answer. Our Saviour's question is twofold: 1. Whom do men say that I am? Not that the Son of God was ignorant what men said of him: but he had an intention more firmly to settle and establish his disciples in the belief of his being the promised Messiah. And therefore, 2. He puts the question to them, Whom do you, my disciples, say that I am? "You that have heard the holiness of my doctrine, and seen the divinity of my miracles: what say you to me? And what confession do you make of me?" Christ expects greater measures of grace and knowledge, and higher degrees of affiance and faith from those that have enjoyed the greatest means of grace and knowledge. The disciples were eye and ear-witnesses of his doctrine and miracles, and accordingly he expects from them a full confession of his divinity. Observe, 2. The answer returned, 1. By the apostles in general; "and they said, Some say that thou art John the Baptist: some Elias: some Jeremias." It is no new thing, it seems to find diversity of judgments and opinions concerning Christ and the affairs of his kingdom. We find, that when our Saviour was amongst men, who daily both saw and heard him, yet there was then a diversity of opinions concerning him. 2. Peter, in the name of the rest, and as the mouth of the apostles, makes a full and open confession of his being the Son of God; thou art the Christ the Son of the living God. Whence note, that the veil of Christ's human nature did not keep the eye of his disciples' faith from seeing him to be the Son of God as well as the Son of Man; thou art Christ the Son of the living God. Observe, 3. How highly pleased our Saviour was with this confession; he pronounces Peter, and the rest in him Blessed, who had by him made this christian confession; Blessed art thou Simon; and tells him, 1. What did not enable him to make that confession, Not flesh and blood; that is, not man, nor the wisdom and reason of man: 2. But positively, God the Father, by the operation of his Spirit, and the dispensation of the gospel, has wrought this divine faith in you, and drawn forth this glorious confession from you, that I am indeed the Son of God. Thence learn, That no man can savingly believe that Jesus Christ is the eternal Son of God, and Saviour of the world, but he in whom God himself by his Holy Spirit has wrought such a persuasion by the ministry of the gospel.

18 And I say also unto thee that thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church: and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.

Observe here, 1. As Peter confessed Christ, so Christ confesses him; Peter said, Thou art Christ: Christ says, Thou art Peter, alluding to his name, which signifies a rock; he having made good that title, by the strength, stability, and firmness of his faith. Observe, 2. A double promise made by Christ to Peter. 1. For the building. 2. For the upholding of his church. For the building of his church; 1. Upon this rock will I build my church. Upon what rock? "Upon Peter, the rock confessing, say the papists: but if so, no more is said of Peter here, than of all the apostles elsewhere." Galat. ii. 9. James and John are called pillars as well as Peter. So that Peter's superiority over the rest of the apostles can with no show of reason be from hence inferred. "Upon Christ, the rock confessed" say the protestants; for Christ is the foundation-stone upon which his church is built; Ephes. ii. 20. "Ye are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone." So then, not upon Peter the rock confessing, but upon Christ the rock confessed, and upon the rock of Peter's confession, that fundamental truth, that Christ is the Son of the living God, is the church built. Upon this rock will I build my church. Super hanc confessionis tue Petram edificabo. Ecclesiam meam. Yet Christ may here be said to build his church upon Peter, because he used St. Peter's ministry in laying the foundation of a christian church among the Jews and Gentiles; he being the first preacher of that faith which he here confessed first to the Jews, Acts ii. and then to the Gentiles, Acts x. And accordingly St. Peter's conversion of three thousand souls by his ministry, Acts ii. 41. is looked upon by some as a punctual fulfilling of this promise here made unto him. He was styled the rock, because he laid the foundations of faith among the nations, that is, the first foundations of a christian church in the world. Whence it appears, that in this matter St. Peter neither had nor can have a successor; but if the Pope will pretend to be his successor in this affair, he must not sit at Rome, lording it there over God's heritage, but must go in person to the unbelieving Jews, and unconverted Heathens, as Peter did; and labor by his preaching to bring over the Turk, the Jew, and the Infidel to christianity. Observe next, Our Saviour's promise for the upholding, as well as the building, of his church; The gates of hell shall not prevail against it; that is, all the policy and power of the devil and his instruments shall neither destroy my church, nor extinguish the light of this divine truth which thou hast now made confession of; namely, "That I am the true Messias, the Son of the living God." Note, 1. That Jesus Christ is the builder, and will be the upholder of his church. 2. That the church upheld by Christ's power and promise, shall never be vanquished by the devil's policy or strength; upon this rock, &c. and the gates, &c. By the gates of hell understand, 1. The wisdom of hell, gates being the seat of council. 2. The censures and sentence of hell, gates being the place of judicature. 3. By the gates of hell, understand the arms and powers of hell, gates being a place of strength and guards. So that when Christ secures against hell, he secures against all that receive their commission from hell; neither hell nor any convened by hell, shall prevail against my church.

19 And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whosoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven.

Observe here, 1. The person to whom this promise is made, namely, to Peter, with the rest of the apostles; the confession being made by him in the name of the rest. Elsewhere we find the same authority and power given to them all, which is here committed unto Peter: John xx. 23. "Whose sins soever ye remit, they are remitted." Although there might be a priority of order among the apostles, yet no superiority of power was founded in any one of them over and above the rest. Observe, 2. The power promised: I will give thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven; that is, the key of doctrine, and the key of discipline, or full power and authority to preach the gospel, to administer sacraments, and execute church censures. The speech is metaphorical, and alludes to stewards and officers in great houses, to whose trust the keys of the household are committed. Christ's ministers are the stewards of his house, into whose hands the keys of his church are committed by Christ; the Pope would snatch them out of all hands, and keep them in his own; he snatches at Peter's keys, but makes shipwreck of faith, arrogating Peter's power, but abrogating his holy profession. Learn, 1. That the authority and power which the ministers of the gospel do exercise and execute, is from Christ: I will give thee the keys of the kingdom. 2. That this power of the keys Christ dispensed promiscuously to all his apostles, and never designed it as peculiar for St. Peter. As they made the same profession of faith by Peter, so they all received the same authority and power with Peter. And accordingly the apostles exercised their office independently upon Peter, in converting those of the circumcision as well as he. And St. Paul, who was the apostle of the Gentiles, opened the kingdom of heaven to far more Gentiles than ever Peter did; and therefore had this key of the kingdom of heaven given to him, as much as to St. Peter.

20 Then charged he his disciples that they should tell no man that he was Jesus the Christ.

That is, till after his resurrection. It may seem strange, that our Saviour should charge his disciples to tell no man that he was Jesus the Christ, seeing the knowledge of it was so necessary. The reason is conceived to be: 1. Because the glory of his godhead was not to be fully manifested till after his resurrection, and then to be published by himself, and confirmed by his own miracles. 2. Lest the knowledge of it should have hindered his death; for "had the rulers known they would not have crucified the Lord of Glory." Learn, That Christ has his own fit times and proper seasons, in which he reveals his own mysteries to the world. 3. That Christ was so intent upon his laying down his life for sinners, that he would not have his death hindered by an untimely declaration of his being truly and really God; after his death it was, "that he declared himself to be the Son of God with power, by the resurrection from the dead."

21 ¶ From that time forth began Jesus to show unto his disciples how that he must go unto Jerusalem, and suffer many things of the elders, and chief priests, and scribes, and be killed, and be raised again the third day.

Observe, 1. The wisdom of our Saviour, in acquainting his disciples with the nearer approach of his death and sufferings. This he did for several reasons: 1. To let them understand that he was really God, (as they had just before confessed him to be) by his fore-knowing, and fore-telling things to come. 2. To convince them of their error, in apprehending that his kingdom was of this world, and that he was to reign here as a temporal prince. 3. To prevent their being offended at his sufferings, and to prepare them for their own, that they might not shrink at them, nor sink under them. Observe, 2. The persons foretold by Christ, that should be the bloody actors in the tragedy of his death; namely, the rulers and chief priests; it was the poor that received Christ, and embraced the gospel; it was the great ones of the world that rejected him, and set him at nought; and the rulers both in church and state condemned and crucified him.

22 Then Peter took him, and began to rebuke him, saying, Be it far from thee, Lord: this shall not be unto thee.

No doubt Peter spake all this out of a sincere intention, and a singular affection towards our Saviour; but pious intentions and good affections will not justify unwarrantable actions. From this counsel of St. Peter to Christ, we learn, 1. How ready flesh and blood is to oppose all that tends to suffering; Master spare thyself. 2. What need we have to be fortified against the temptations of friends as well as of enemies! for satan can make good men his instruments to do his work, when they little think of it. Peter little suspected that satan set him on work to hinder the redemption of mankind, by dissuading Christ from dying. But observe in the next verse with what indignation Christ rejects Peter's advice.

23 But he turned, and said unto Peter, Get thee behind me satan; thou art an offence unto me: for thou savorest not the things that be of God, but those that be of men.

Christ looked upon Peter with anger and displeasure; Christ heard satan speaking in Peter. It was Peter's tongue, but satan tuned it; therefore Christ calls Peter by satan's name. They that will do the devil's work shall have the devil's name too. He that would hinder the redemption of mankind, is satan, an adversary to mankind. From our Saviour's smart reproof given to Peter, Learn, that no love or respect to men's persons or piety must draw us to flatter them in their sins, or cause us to speak lightly of their sins. From our Saviour's resolution not to favor himself, notwithstanding Peter's advice, Learn, That so intent was the heart of Christ upon the great work of man's redemption, that he could not bear the least word that should obstruct it, or divert him from it.

24 Then said Jesus unto his disciples, if any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me.

Observe here, 1. How our Saviour recommends his religion to every man's choice; not attempting by force and violence to compel any to the profession of it. If any man will come after me, that is, if any man choose and resolve to be a christian. 2. Our Saviour's terms propounded: 1. Self-denial, Let him deny himself. By which we are not to understand the denying and renouncing of our senses in matters of faith, nor yet the renouncing of our reason in matters of religion; but by self-denial is meant, that we should be willing to part with all our earthly comforts, and quit all our temporal enjoyments, for the sake of Christ and his holy religion. 2. Gospel-suffering, He must take up his cross. An allusion to a Roman custom, that the malefactor, who was to be crucified, took his cross upon his shoulder, and carried it to the place of execution. Where note, Not the making of the cross for ourselves, but the patient bearing of it when God lays it upon our shoulder, is the duty enjoined: let him take up his cross. 3. Gospel-service, He must follow me: that is obey my commands, and follow my example; he must set my life and doctrine continually before him, and must be daily correcting and reforming his life by that rule and pattern. See on Luke ix. 23.

25 For whosoever will save his life shall lose it; and whosoever will lose his life for my sake shall find it.

Observe here, 1. That the love of this temporal life, is a great temptation to men to deny Christ, and renounce his holy religion. 2. That the surest way to attain eternal life is cheerfully to lay down a mortal life, when the glory of Christ and his service calleth us thereunto.

26 For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? or, what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?

Learn, 1. That God has intrusted every one of us with a soul of inestimable worth and preciousness, capable of being saved or lost and that to all eternity. 2. That the gain of the whole world is not comparable with the loss of one precious soul. The soul's loss is an incomprehensible and irrecoverable loss.

27 For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels: and then he shall reward every man according to his works.

There is a twofold judgment spoken of by this evangelist St. Matthew, namely, a particular coming of Christ to execute vengeance on the Jews, at the destruction of Jerusalem; and a general coming at the day of judgment. If we understand this place of the latter, we have then, 1. The Judge described, "The Son of man," he who was and is both God and man, shall judge both angels and men. 2. The splendor of that day declared. "He shall come in glory with his holy angels." The attendance of angels shall be required by Christ not for necessity but for majesty. 3. The work and business of that day demonstrated, and that is, "To render to every man according to his work." Learn, That the judgment of the great day will be most glorious and righteous: Christ will be glorious in his person, and glorious in his attendance: and judgment will be according to righteousness, "Without respect of persons, according to what has been done in the body."

28 Verily I say unto you, There be some standing here which shall not taste of death, till they see the Son of man coming in his kingdom.

A threefold sense and interpretation is given of these words. 1. Some will have them refer to our Saviour's transfiguration mentioned in the next chapter: as if he had said, "Some of you, as Peter, James, and John, shall shortly see me upon mount Tabor, in such glory as I will come unto judgment." 2. Others understand the words of Christ's exercising his kingly power in the destruction of Jerusalem and the Jewish nation; which St. John did live to see. 3. Others refer the words to the time of the gospel after Christ's resurrection and ascension, when the gospel (No. 5) was propagated and spread far and near, according to St. Mark is. 1. There are some standing here, that shall not taste of death, till they see the kingdom of God come with power;" that is, till they see the increase and enlargement of the church by the gospel. Thence note, That where the gospel is powerfully preached, and cheerfully obeyed, there Christ cometh most gloriously in his kingdom.

CHAPTER XVII.

AND after six days Jesus taketh Peter, James, and John his brother, and bringeth them up into an high mountain apart.

2 And was transfigured before them; and his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light.

The former part of this chapter gives us an account of our Saviour's glorious transfiguration, he laid aside as it were the garments of frail humanity and mortality aside for a little time, and assuming to himself the robes of majesty and glory, the rays of his divinity darted forth, his face shined with a pleasing brightness, and his raiment was such a glorious lustre, as did at once both dazzle and delight the eyes of the beholders. Here observe, 1. The reason of our Lord's transfiguration; 1. To demonstrate and testify the truth of his divinity; that "he was Christ the Son of the living God;" according to St. Peter's confession just before. This divine glory was an evidence of his divine nature. 2. Christ was thus transfigured, to prefigure the glory of his second coming to judgment, "when he shall be admired of his saints," as here he was admired by his disciples. Observe, 2. The choice which our Saviour makes of the witnesses of his transfiguration, his three disciples, Peter, James, and John. But why disciples? Why three disciples? Why these three? 1. This transfiguration was a type and shadow of the glory of heaven: Christ therefore vouchsafes the earnest and first-fruits of that glory only to saints; upon whom he intended to bestow the full harvest. 2. Three disciples were witnesses sufficient to testify this miracle. Judas was unworthy of this favor, yet lest he should murmur or be discontented at his being left out, others are also left out besides him. 3. These three rather than others; because, 1. These disciples are more eminent for grace, zeal, and love to Christ; and consequently, are most highly dignified and honored by him. The most eminent manifestations of glory are made by God to those that are most eminent in grace. 2. These three were witnesses of Christ's agony and passion, to prepare them for which, they are here made witnesses of his transfiguration. This glorious vision from mount Tabor fitted them to abide the terrors of mount Calvary. Learn, That those whom God singles out for the greatest trials, he will fit beforehand with the best enablements.

3 And, behold, there appeared unto them Moses and Elias talking with him.

Observe here, The glorious attendance upon our Saviour at his glorious transfiguration; they were two men, Moses and Elias. This being but a glimpse of Christ's glory, not a full manifestation of it, only two of the glorified saints attend upon Christ at it; when he shall come in his full glory, ten thousand of thousands shall attend him. These two attendants were two men, not two angels; because men were more nearly concerned in what was done; they were not only spectators but partners. Man's restoration was Christ's principal aim: the angel's confirmation his less principal design. But why Moses and Elias? 1. Moses the giver of the law, and Elias the chief of the prophets, attending both upon Christ, did show the consent of the law and the prophets with Christ, and their fulfilling and accomplishment in him. 2. Because these two were the most laborious servants of Christ, both adventured their lives in God's cause, and therefore are highly honored by Christ. "Such as honor him, he will honor."

4 Then answered Peter, and said unto Jesus, Lord, it is good for us to be here; if thou wilt, let us make here three tabernacles; one for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias.

Observe here, 1. The person supplicating, Peter. No doubt the other two, James and John, were much affected, but Peter is more fervent and forward; yet there is no arguing with the papists from his fervency to his superiority; his personal prerogatives were not hereditary. Observe, 2. The person supplicated, Jesus; not Moses, nor Elias; the disciples make no prayer, no suit to them, but to Christ only. Prayers to saints departed are both vain and unlawful. Observe, 3. The supplication itself, and that was for their continuance where they were. "It is good for us to be here." O what a ravishing comfort is the fellowship of the saints! but the presence of Christ among them renders their joys transporting. Observe, 4. Their proffer of service to farther this continuance; "Let us make three tabernacles." This motion was well meant and devout. St. Peter will stick at no cost or pains for the enjoyment of Christ's presence, and his saints' company, yet was the motion unadvised and rash. St. Peter erred in desiring a perpetuity of that condition which was but transient and momentary. This vision was only a taste of glory, not a full repast. He errs, in that he would bring down heaven to earth, and take us with Tabor instead of heaven. He errs, in that he would enter upon the possession of heaven's glory, without suffering, and without dying. "Peter would be clothed upon, but was not willing to be unclothed." Learn, 1. That a glimpse of glory is enough to wrap a soul into ecstasy, and to make it out of love with worldly company. 2. That we are apt to desire more of heaven upon earth than God will allow; we would fain have the heavenly glory come down to us, but we are unwilling to go by death to that; we know not what we say, when we talk of felicity in tabernacles upon earth.

5 While he yet spake, behold, a bright cloud overshadowed them: and, behold, a voice out of the cloud, which said, This is my beloved Son; in whom I am well pleased: hear ye him.

Observe here, 1. A cloud was put before the disciples' eyes for two reasons. 1. To allay the lustre and resplendency of that glory which they were swallowed up with. As we cannot look upon the sun in its full brightness, but under a cloud by reflection; so the glory of heaven is insupportable, till God veils it, and shelters us from the sarcharge of it. 2. A cloud overshadows them to hinder their farther prying and looking into the glory. We must be content to behold God here through a cloud darkly, ere long we shall see him face to face. Observe, 2. The testimony given by God the Father out of the cloud concerning Jesus Christ his son; This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased. Here note, 1. The dignity of his person, he is a son therefore, for nature co-essential, for dignity co-equal, for duration co-eternal, with the Father; and a beloved son, because of his likeness and conformity to him. A father's likeness is the cause of love; an union of wills causes a mutual endearing of affections. Note, 2. The excellency of his mediation, In whom I am well pleased. Christ in himself was most pleasing to God the Father, and in and through him he is well pleased with all believers. Christ's mediation for us makes God appeasable to us. Note, 3. The authority of his doctrine: Hear him, not Moses and Elias who were servants but Christ my Son, whom I have commissioned to be the great Prophet and Teacher of my church: therefore adore him as my Son, believe in him as your Saviour, and hear him as your lawgiver. He honors Christ most, that obeys him best. The obedient ear honors Christ more than either the gazing eye, the adoring knee, or the applauding tongue, This is my beloved Son; hear ye him.

6 And when the disciples heard it, they fell on their face, and were sore afraid.

7 And Jesus came and touched them, and said, Arise, and be not afraid.

8 And when they had lifted up their eyes, they saw no man, save Jesus only.

9 And, as they came down from the mountain, Jesus charged them saying, Tell the vision to no man, until the Son of man be risen again from the dead.

Observe here, 1. The effects which this voice from heaven had upon the apostles, it cast them into a passion of horror and amazement. They were sore afraid, and fell on their face. Learn thence, That such is the majesty and glory of God, that man in his sinful state cannot bear so much as a glimpse of it, without great consternation and fear. How unable is man to hear the voice of God! and yet how ready to despise the voice of man: if God speaks by himself, his voice is too terrible; if he speaks by his ministers, it is contemptible. Observe, 2. The person by whom the disciples were recovered out of these amazing fears into which they were cast; namely, by Christ; "Jesus came and said, be not afraid." It is Christ alone who can raise and comfort those whom the terrors of the Almighty have dejected and cast down. Observe, 3. The manner how Christ recovered them out of this passionate amazement, it was threefold: 1. By his gracious approach, "he came unto them. Christ will come with comfort unto his children, when they are disabled from coming to him with comfort. 2. By his comfortable touch; "He came and touched them." Christ comforts believers by a real and close application of himself unto them. An unapplied Christ saves none, comforts none. 3. By his comforting voice, "He said, "Be not afraid." It is a word of assurance, that there is no ground or cause of fear: and it is a word of assistance. It is verbum operatorium: he that said unto them. "Arise be not afraid," did by his spirit breathe life and convey strength into their souls, to enable them to arise. Observe, 4. The strict injunction given by Christ to his disciples, not to publish or proclaim this vision till after his resurrection, for two reasons: 1. Lest it should hinder his passion; for had the rulers of the world known him to be the Lord of life and glory, they would not have crucified him;" therefore Christ purposely concealed his deity to give way to his passion. 2. Christ being now in a state of humiliation, would have his majesty veiled, his glory concealed, and consequently forbids that the glorious vision of his transfiguration should be published, and accordingly charges his disciples, "That they tell the vision to no man till he was risen." As if Christ had said, Tell no man the things which you have seen; not the residue of his disciples, that they be not troubled, that they were not admitted to see with you; nor those believers which now follow me, that they be not scandalized at my suffering after so glorious a transfiguration.

10 And his disciples asked him, saying, Why then say the scribes that Elias must first come?

11 And Jesus answered, and said unto them; Elias truly shall first come, and restore all things;

12 But I say unto you, that Elias is come already, and they knew him not; but have done unto him whatsoever they listed; likewise shall, also, the Son of man suffer of them.

13 Then the disciples understood that he spake unto them of John the Baptist.

Here we have the disciples' question, and our Saviour's answer. They ask our Saviour, how the observation of the Jewish doctors holds good, that Elias must come before the Messiah come? We see the Messiah, but we see no Elias; our Saviour answers, that Elias was come already: not Elijah in person, but one in the spirit and power of Elias; one of his spirit and temper; to wit John the Baptist, who was prophesied under the same name of Elias. And great indeed was the resemblance between the Elias of the Old Testament, and the New, namely, John the Baptist; they were both born in bad times; they were both zealous for God and religion; they were both undaunted reprovers of the faults of princes; and they were both hated and implacably persecuted for the same. Learn, That hatred and persecution, even unto death, has often been the lot and portion of such as have had zeal and courage to reprove the faults of princes; "Elias is come, and they did unto him whatsoever they would."

14 ¶ And when they were come to the multitude, there came to him a certain man kneeling down to him, and saying,

15 Lord have mercy on my son: for he is a lunatic, and sore vexed: for oft-times he falleth into the fire, and oft into the water.

16 And I brought him to thy disciples, and they could not cure him.

Observe, 1. A sick patient brought to Christ, the great physician, for cure and healing. A lunatic, that is a person, at certain times of the moon, afflicted with the falling sickness. 2. This sickness of his was aggravated by satan, who bodily possessed him, and cruelly cast him into the fire and into the water, but rather for torture than dispatch. O how does satan, that malicious tyrant, rejoice in doing hurt to mankind! Lord abate his power, since his malice will not be abated. Observe, 3. The person who brought him forth for cure, his compassionate father, who kneeled down and cried out; need will make a person both humble and eloquent. Every one has a tongue to speak for himself; happy is he that keeps a tongue for others. 4. The physicians that he was first brought unto: first to the disciples: and when they could not cure him, then to Jesus. We never apply ourselves importunately to the God of power, till we begin to despair of the creature's help.

17 Then Jesus answered, and said, O faithless and perverse generation! how long shall I be with you? how long shall I suffer you? Bring him hither to me.

These words are a severe rebuke given by Christ to his own disciples. Where observe, The persons upbraided, his disciples: and the sin upbraided with, unbelief. O faithless generation! Yet was it not the total want of faith, but the weakness and imperfection of faith, that they were upbraided with and reprov'd for. Hence learn, 1. That secret unbelief may lie hid and undiscerned in a person's heart, which neither others nor himself may take notice of, until some trial doth discover it. The disciples were not sensible of that unbelief which lay hid in them, till this occasion did discover it. Learn, 2. That the great obstacle and obstruction of all blessings both spiritual and temporal, coming to us, is our unbelief: O faithless generation! Others conceive that these words were not spoken to the disciple but to the scribes, which St. Mark chap. ix. says, at this time were disputing with Christ's disciples, and perhaps insulting over them, as having found out a distemper which could not be cured by Christ's name and power; and these he called now, as he had done heretofore, a generation of rippers.

18 And Jesus rebuked the devil, and he departed out of him: and the child was cured from that very hour.

Observe here, With what facility and ease our Saviour cured this poor man, who was bodily possessed by satan: with one word speaking, he delivered the distressed person from the malice and power of satan. Thence learn, That how long soever, and how strong soever satan's possession has been in a person, Christ can eject and cast him out both easily and speedily.

19 Then came the disciples to Jesus apart, and said, Why could not we cast him out?

20 And Jesus said unto them, Because of your unbelief: for verily I say unto you, If ye have faith as a grain of mustard-seed, ye shall say unto this mountain, Remove hence to yonder place, and it shall remove: and nothing shall be impossible unto you.

21 Howbeit, this kind goeth not out but by prayer and fasting.

Observe here, How ashamed the disciples were of this open rebuke given them by their Master; they privately asked him the cause of their ill success, "Why they could not cast out satan," according to the power promised them to work miracles? Our Saviour tells them, that their power to work this miracle now failed them for a double reason. 1. For their unbelief, by which we are to understand the weakness of their faith, not the total want of faith. 2. Because they neglected the special means appointed by God, in order to that end, to wit, fasting and prayer: that is, a fervor of devotion, joined with faith and fasting. Thence learn, That fasting and prayer are two especial means of Christ's appointment, for enabling us victoriously to overcome satan, and cast him out of ourselves and others. We must set an edge upon our faith by prayer, and upon our prayer by fasting. Quest. But what are we to understand by faith as a grain of mustard-seed, or a faith as strong and active in heart as mustard-seed, is on the palate. And by removing mountains, understand the performing things that are most difficult; as if Christ had said, did your faith increase as a grain of mustard-seed grows it would enable you to surmount all difficulties whatsoever. Others by faith as a grain of mustard-seed, understand, the least degree of sincere faith on God, it being a proverbial speech among the Jews, used pro re minima, for the least thing; as if Christ had said, "Had you the least measure of that faith which casts out fear and doubting of success in the discharge of your office, you might perform things most difficult, and even this faith in its effects would be mighty." Dr. Whitby.

22 And, while they abode in Galilee, Jesus said unto them, The Son of man shall be betrayed into the hands of men;

23 And they shall kill him, and the third day he shall be raised again. And they were exceeding sorry.

Observable it is, how frequently our Saviour forewarned his disciples of his approaching sufferings. All was little enough to arm them against the scandal of the cross, and to reconcile them to the thoughts of what he was to suffer for them, and they were to suffer with him. Learn, That we can never hear too much of the doctrine of the cross; nor can we be too often instructed in our duty to prepare for a suffering condition. As Christ went by his cross to his crown, from a state of abasement to a state of exaltation, so must all his disciples and followers likewise.

24 ¶ And when they were come to Capernaum, they that received tribute-money came to Peter, and said, Doth not your master pay tribute?

25 He saith, Yes. And when he was come into the house, Jesus prevented him, saying, What thinkest thou, Simon? Of whom do the kings of the earth take custom or tribute? of their own children, or of strangers?

26 Peter saith unto him, Of strangers. Jesus saith unto him, Then are the children free.

27 Notwithstanding, lest we should offend them, go thou to the sea, and cast an hook, and take up the fish that first cometh up; and, when thou hast opened his mouth, thou shalt find a piece of money: that take, and give unto them for me and thee.

Observe here, 1. The question put to Peter; Doth your master pay tribute? This tribute-money originally was a tax paid yearly by every Jew to the service of the temple, to the value of fifteen pence a head. But when the Jews were brought under the power of the Romans, this tribute-money was paid to the emperor, and was changed from a homage-penny to God, to a tribute-penny to the conqueror. The collectors of this tribute-money asked Peter, whether his master would pay it or not. Observe, 2. The answer returned, positively and suddenly, He does pay. Peter consults not first with our Saviour, whether he would pay it; but knowing his readiness to render to all their due, he says, Yes. There was no truer pay-master of the king's dues, than he that was King of Kings. He preached it, and he practised it: Give unto Cesar, the things that are Cesar's. Yet observe, 3. Our Saviour insinuates his own exception, privilege, and freedom from paying this tribute-money, as he was the Son of God, the Universal King; subjects pay tribute, but king's children are free. Though Christ was free from paying tribute by a natural right, yet he would not be free by a voluntary dispensation. Therefore observe, To prevent all scandal and offence, he works a miracle, rather than the tribute money should go unpaid. Whether Christ by his almighty word created this piece of money in the mouth of the fish, (which was half a crown for himself and St. Peter, who had a house in Capernaum, and was there to pay his poll) or whether Christ caused the fish to take up this piece of money at the bottom of the sea, is not necessary to inquire, nor possible to determine. Our duty is reverentially to adore that Omnipotent power, which could command the fish to be both his treasurer to keep his silver, and his purveyor to bring it to him. 2. Industrious to imitate his example, in shunning all occasions of offence especially towards those whom God has placed in sovereign authority over us. Observe lastly, The poverty of our holy Lord, and his contempt of all worldly wealth and riches: he had not so much as fifteen-pence by him to pay his poll. Christ would not honor the world so far as to have any part of it in his own possession. The best man that ever lived in the world had not a penny in his purse, nor a house to hide his head in, which he could call his own.

CHAPTER XVIII.

AT the same time came the disciples unto Jesus, saying, Who is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven?

Notwithstanding our blessed Saviour had so often told his disciples that his kingdom was not of this world, yet they still dreamed of a temporal and earthly kingdom, which he as the Measias, should show forth the glory of: in which there should be distinct places of honor and offices, one above another: and accordingly, at this time the ambition of the disciples led them to inquire of our Saviour, who should have the chief place of honor and dignity under him, in that his kingdom, who should be the principal officers of state; concluding it must be some of them, though they could not agree who were fittest for those high posts of honor and service. Learn hence, that the best and holiest of men are too subject to pride and ambition, to court worldly dignity and greatness, to affect a precedence before, and a superiority above others; the disciples themselves were tainted with the itch of ambition, which prompted them to inquire of their Master, Who should be the greatest in his kingdom of the church?

2 And Jesus called a little child unto him, and set him in the midst of them,

(No 5.)

3 And said, Verily I say unto you, Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven.

Our Saviour intending to cure this pride and ambition in his disciples, first preaches to them the doctrine of humility, and to enforce his doctrine he sets before them a little child, the proper emblem of humility; assuring them that unless they be converted, or turned from this sin of pride and ambition, and become as a little child in lowliness of mind, and contempt of worldly greatness, they cannot be saved. Learn hence, 1. That no sins are more odious and abominable in the sight of God, than pride and ambition; especially amongst the ministers of the gospel. Learn. 2. The persons already converted do stand in need of farther conversion: they that are converted from a state of sin, may want to be converted from a particular act of sin; this was the disciples' case here; they were turned from a course of sin, but they wanted conversion, from a particular act of sin; to wit from ambition. Learn. 3. That conversion, though sincere, may be very imperfect. Converts still have remains of corruption, some lust often breaking forth, which they must take special care to resist and subdue.

4 Whosoever therefore, shall humble himself as this little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven.

As if our Lord had said, "That apostle, or minister, who thinks as meanly of himself as a little child, and is humble and lowly in his own esteem, he deserves the highest place of dignity and honor in my church." Note, That the truly humble person, who is freest from affecting pre-eminency, is most worthy of the highest dignity and eminency in the church of God; and in the account of Christ, the way to be honorable is to be humble, Before honor is humility.

5 And whoso shall receive one such little child in my name, receiveth me.

6 But whoso shall offend one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea,

Our Saviour having declared, that the humblest persons should be always highest in his esteem: he next declares how exceeding dear and precious such christians are to him, who resemble little children in humility of heart, and innocency of life: assuring the world, that whatever kindness and respect is shown to such for his sake, he reckons shown to himself; and all the disrespect and unkindness which is offered to them, he accounts as done unto himself: so near is the union, and so dear the relation, betwixt Christ and his members, that whatever good, or evil, is done unto them, he reckons as done unto himself.

7 ¶ Woe unto the world because of offences! for it must needs be that offences come; but woe to that man by whom the offence cometh!

Two things are here observable: 1. The necessity of scandalous offences; It must needs be that offences come; 2. The misery and mischief that comes by them: Woe unto the world because of offences; Woe unto such as give offence: this is vox indignantis, the woe of one denouncing; and woe to such as stumble at offences given, this is, vox dolentis, the woe of one lamenting. From the whole, Note, 1. That scandals, or offensive actions in the church of Christ will certainly fall out among those that profess religion, and the name of Christ. Offences will come; Their necessity is partly from the malice of satan, partly from the wickedness and deceitfulness of men's own hearts and nature, God permitting those to have their natural effects. 2. That scandalous and offensive actions from such as profess religion and the name of Christ are baneful and fatal stumbling-blocks to wicked and worldly men. 3. That the offence which wicked men take at the falls of the professors of religion, to the hardening of themselves in their wicked practices, is matter of just and great lamentation: Woe unto the world because of offences.

8 Wherefore if thy hand or thy foot offend thee cut them off, and east them from thee: it is better for thee to enter into life halt or maimed, rather than having two hands or two feet, to be cast into everlasting fire.

9 And if thine eye offend thee, pluck it out, and cast it from thee: it is better for thee to enter into life with one eye, rather than having two eyes to be cast into hell-fire.

This command of Christ is not to be understood literally, as if it were our duty to maim our bodily members; but the exhortation is, to cut off all occasions that may betray us into sin: and to mortify our darling and beloved lust, though as dear to us as our right eye. Learn, 1. That sin may be avoided. It is our duty to avoid whatever leads unto it, or may be the instrument or occasion of it. 2. That the best way to be kept from the outward acts of sin, is to mortify our inward affection and love to sin. If our love and affection to sin be mortified, our bodily members may be preserved, for they will no longer be weapons of sin, but instruments of holiness.

10 Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones; for I say unto you, That in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven.

Observe here, 1. A cautionary direction given by Christ to the men of the world concerning his members: "take heed that ye offend not one of my little ones;" that is, that ye do not undervalue and neglect, much less injure and afflict them. 2. A reason assigned, "Because their angels being constantly and immediately in the presence of God," are perpetually ready to execute his will, by revenging any wrongs and injuries done unto his friends and children. Learn, 1. What is the office and employment of the glorious angels; namely, to be the immediate attendants upon the royal person of the supreme King and Sovereign of the world. Learn hence, 2. In what esteem good men are with God, and what a mighty regard he has for the meanest of his children, that he commits the care and preservation of them to the holy angels, who are nearest to him, and in the highest favor and honor with him. It is St Jerome's note upon this place, That great is the dignity of these little ones, seeing every one of them from his birth, hath an angel delegated to preserve him. But though others think that the opinion of a tutelary angel, or of one particular angel having the custody of one particular saint, as his continual charge, has not a sufficient foundation in the holy scriptures; yet all the angels in heaven are ministering spirits unto them: and though they do not always attend upon their persons (for they stand before the face of God) yet it is to receive his commands, either to help them in their exigences, or punish those that injure them.

11 For the Son of man is come to save that which was lost.

12 How think ye? If a man have an hundred sheep, and one of them be gone astray, doth he not leave the ninety and nine, and goeth into the mountains, and seeketh that which is gone astray?

13 And if so be that he find it, verily, I say unto you, he rejoiceth more of that sheep than of the ninety and nine which went not astray.

14 Even so it is not the will of your Father which is in heaven, that one of these little ones should perish.

Here our Saviour continues his argument against giving offence to his children and members; he came into the world to redeem and save them: therefore none ought to scandalize and offend them. And to illustrate this, he compares himself to a good shepherd, who regards every one of his sheep: and if any wander or go astray, he seeks to recover it with desire and joy. Learn, 1. That the natural condition of mankind is like to that of wandering sheep; they err and go astray from God, their chief good, and the object of their complete happiness. 2. That it was the work and business, the care and concern of Jesus Christ, to seek and recover lost souls, as the shepherd doth lost sheep. 3. That the love and care of Christ towards his sheep, in seeking to save and preserve them, is a forcible argument unto all, not to scandalize and offend them, much less to persecute and destroy them.

15 Moreover, if thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone; if he shall hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother.

16 But if he will not hear thee, then take with thee one or two more, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established.

17 And if he shall neglect to hear them, tell it unto the church: but if he neglect to hear the church, let him be unto thee as a heathen man and a publican.

In these words our Saviour gives us an excellent rule for the duty of fraternal correction, or brotherly admonition. Where note, 1. That brotherly reproof and admonition is a duty incumbent upon church members. 2. That it may be administered successfully, it must be administered privately and prudently. 3. When private admonition prevails not, Christ has appointed church-governors to execute church-censures on the obstinate and irreclaimable. 4. Persons justly falling under the censures of the church, and rightly excommunicated, are to be looked upon as obstinate and contumacious offenders, and the members of the church to shun society and conversation with them; "If he neglect to hear the church, let him be unto thee as an heathen man, and as a publican was among the Jews;" wholly neglected, and not thought fit to be conversed with.

18 Verily, I say unto you, Whatsoever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven.

That is, whosoever the officers of my church shall justly excommunicate upon earth, shall, without repentance, be shut out of heaven; and whosoever upon their true repentance, shall be absolved on earth, shall be absolved in heaven. Learn, That Christ will ratify in heaven whatsoever the church assembled doth in his name upon earth: whether to the censuring of the guilty or the absolving of the penitent. This power of binding and loosing is by Christ committed to his church.

19 Again I say unto you, That if two of you shall agree on earth as touching any thing that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven.

20 For where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them.

Here we have a gracious promise made by Christ of his presence with all his members in general, and with his ministers in special, whenever they meet together in his name, that is by his authority, in obedience to his command, and with an eye to his glory. Whenever they celebrate any sacred institution of his, or execute any church censures, he will be in the midst of them, to quicken their prayers, to guide their counsels, to ratify their sentence, to accept their endeavours. Learn, 1. That Christ will be graciously present with and amongst his people, whenever they assemble and meet together in his name, be it ever so small a number. 2. That Christ will, in a special manner, be present with the guides and officers of his church, to direct their censures, and to confirm the sentence passed in his name, and pronounced by his authority upon obstinate offenders.

21 ¶ Then came Peter to him, and said, Lord, how oft shall my brother sin against me, and I forgive him? till seven times?

22 Jesus saith unto him, I say not unto thee, Until seven times: but, Until seventy times seven.

Here St. Peter puts a question to our Saviour, how often christians should forgive offences to their brethren professing repentance: Christ answers that there should be no end of our mutually forgiving one another, but we are to multiply our pardon as our brother manifests his repentance. Not that we are hereby obliged to take the frequent offender into our bosom, and to make him our intimate; but to lay aside all malice, and all thoughts and desire of revenge, and to stand ready to do him any office of love and friendship. Learn, That to fall often into the same offence against our brother, is a great aggravation of sin, so the multiplication of forgiveness is a great demonstration of a God-like temper in us. He that multiplies sin, doth like satan, sin abundantly; and he that multiplies pardon, doth like God, pardon abundantly.

23 ¶ Therefore is the kingdom of heaven likened unto a certain king, which would take account of his servants;

24 And when he begun to reckon, one was brought unto him, which owed him ten thousand talents.

25 But forasmuch as he had not to pay, his lord commanded him to be sold, and his wife, and children, and all that he had, and payment to be made.

26 The servant, therefore, fell down and worshipped him, saying, Lord, have patience with me, and I will pay thee all.

27 Then the Lord of that servant was moved with compassion, and loosed him, and forgave him the debt.

28 But the same servant went out, and found one of his fellow-servants which owed him an hundred pence: and he laid hands on him, and took him by the throat, saying, Pay me that thou owest.

29 And his fellow-servant fell down at his feet, and besought him, saying, Have patience with me, and I will pay thee all.

30 And he would not; but went and cast him into prison, till he should pay the debt.

31 So when his fellow-servants saw what was done, they were very sorry, and came and told unto their lord all that was done.

32 Then his lord, after that he had called him, said unto him, O thou wicked servant, I forgave thee all that debt, because thou desiredst me :

33 Shouldst not thou also have had compassion on thy fellow-servant, even as I had pity on thee?

34 And his lord was wroth, and delivered him to his tormentors, till he should pay all that was due unto him.

35 So likewise shall my heavenly Father do also unto you if ye from your hearts forgive not every one his brother their trespasses.

Our blessed Saviour, to enforce the foregoing doctrine of mutual forgiveness, propounds a parable: the main scope of which is to show, that unless we do actually forgive and pass by injuries done to us, we cut ourselves off from all interest in God's pardoning mercy, and must expect no forgiveness at the hand of God. From the whole, Note, 1. That as we all stand in need of forgiveness from God, so likewise of forgiveness from one another. 2. That we all stand bound by the laws of our holy religion, to forbear and forgive one another. 3. That Almighty God has made the forgiving one another, the certain and necessary condition of his forgiving us. 4. That such as are inexorable towards their brethren, shall find God Almighty hard to be intreated towards themselves. We may expect the same rigor and severity from God, which we show to men. 5. That the freeness of God's love in forgiving us, ought to be both an argument to excite us to forgive one another, and also a rule to direct us in the manner of forgiving each other.

Doth God forgive us, when he has power in his hand to punish us? So must we when we have ability and opportunity for revenge. Doth God forgive universally all persons? So must we all provocations. Doth he forgive us freely and willingly, heartily and sincerely? So must we; we must be as forward in forgiving, as they in provoking. Learn from the whole, the equity of unlimited forgiveness of our brother, because our God and Saviour forgives us more numerous and heinous sins than our brother is capable of committing against us. Let all unmerciful and unchristian creditors remember this text, who cast poor men into prison for debt, who have nothing to pay; surely, he who bids us lend, looking for nothing again, will not allow us to imprison where nothing can be hoped for. It is to be feared, such will find but little mercy hereafter, who have showed no mercy here; for if at the great day such shall be condemned as did not visit christians in prison, what will their condemnation be, who cast them into prison?

CHAPTER XIX.

AND it came to pass, that when Jesus had finished these sayings, he departed from Galilee, and came into the coasts of Judea, beyond Jordan:

2 And great multitudes followed him: and he healed them there.

The country of the Jews was divided into three provinces; namely, Galilee, Samaria, and Judea. In Galilee, where the cities of Nazareth, Chorazin, Bethsaida and Capernaum; here Christ dwelt and spent a considerable part of his time, preaching to them, and working miracles among them. But now comes the time in which our holy Lord takes his leave of this province of Galilee, and returned no more to it: woe to that people, whose unthankfulness for Christ's presence and ministry amongst them, causes him finally to forsake them. Having left Galilee, our holy Lord passes through Samaria (the Samaritans being prejudiced against him, and refusing to receive him) and comes into the coasts of Judea, where multitudes of people flocked after him. But observe the qualities of his followers, not the great ones of the world, not many mighty, not many noble: but the poor and despised multitude, the sick and weak, the deaf and blind, the diseased and distressed. Thence observe, That none but such as find their need of Christ, will seek after him, and come unto him. None will apply to them for help, till they feel themselves helpless. Great multitudes of the sick and diseased came unto him, and he healed them all.

3 ¶ The pharisees also came unto him, tempting him, and saying unto him, Is it lawful for a man to put away his wife for every cause?

Observe here, 1. That wheresoever our blessed Saviour went, the pharisees followed him: not out of a sincere intention, but with a design to ensnare him; and accordingly they propound a question to him concerning divorce, Whether a man might put away his wife on any occasion, as the manner of the Jews was? Concluding that they should entrap him in his answer, whatever it was. If he denied the lawfulness of a divorce, then they would charge him with contradicting Moses, who allowed it. If he affirmed it, then they would condemn him for contradicting his own doctrine, chap. v. 32, for favoring men's lusts, and for complying with the wicked custom of the Jews, who upon every slight and frivolous occasion, put away their wives from them. Learn thence, 1. That whosoever our Lord went, as he had disciples and sincere followers, so the devil stirred him up bitter and malicious enemies, who sought to render his person unacceptable, and his doctrine unsuccessful. 2. That of all Christ's enemies, none had such a bitter hatred and enmity against his person, ministry, and miracles as the pharisees. Men of great knowledge, who rebelled against the light of their own consciences, and the clear convictions of their own mind. 3. That such was the wisdom of our Saviour in all his answers to his enemies, that neither their wit nor malice could lay hold upon any thing to ensnare him: but observe the piety and prudence of his answer to the pharisees in the next words.

4 And he answered and said unto them, Have ye not read, that he which made them at the beginning, made them male and female.

5 And he said, For this cause shall a man leave father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife: and they twain shall be one flesh!

6 Wherefore they are no more twain, but one flesh. What therefore, God hath joined together let no man put asunder.

Observe here, Christ gives no direct answer to the pharisees' insinuating question, but refers them to the first institution of marriage, when God made them one, to the intent that matrimonial love might be both incommunicable and indissoluble. Whence learn, 1. The sacred institution of marriage; it is an ordinance of God's own appointment, as the ground and foundation of all sacred and civil society, What God has joined together. Learn, 2. The antiquity of this institution, it was from the beginning: He which made them at the beginning made them male and female. Marriage is almost as old as the world, as old as nature; there was no sooner one person, but God divided him into two; and no sooner were there two, but he united them into one. Learn hence, 3. The intimacy and nearness of this endeared and endearing relation: the conjugal knot is tied so close, that the bonds of matrimonial love are stronger than those of nature: stricter is the tie betwixt husband and wife, than betwixt parent and children, according to God's own institution. "For this cause shall a man leave father and mother, and cleave to his wife."

7 They say unto him, Why did Moses then command to give a writing of divorcement, and to put her away?

8 He saith unto them, Moses, because of the hardness of your hearts, suffered you to put away your wives; but from the beginning it was not so.

9 And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away his wife, except it be for fornication, and shall marry another, committeth adultery; and whosoever marieth her which is put away, doth commit adultery.

(No. 6)

Observe here, The pharisees' demand, and our Saviour's reply. They demand, Why Moses commanded to put away the wife by a bill of divorce? Where note, The wicked abuse which the pharisees put upon Moses, as if he had commanded them, whereas he only permitted to put them away. Moses suffered it for the hardness of their hearts: that is, he did not punish it: not allowing it as good, but winking at it as a lesser evil, because the Jews were so barbarously cruel to their wives, as to turn them away upon every disgust. Now our Saviour, in his reply, refers them again to the primitive institution of marriage, bidding them compare the precept and their practice together: for in the beginning it was not so. Learn, That according to the word and will of God, nothing can violate the bonds of marriage, and justify a divorce between man and wife, but the defiling of the marriage bed by adultery and uncleanness: this is the only case in which man and wife may lawfully part. "Whosoever shall put away his wife, except for fornication, committeth adultery."

10 His disciples say unto him, If the case of the man be so with his wife, it is not good to marry.

That is, if a man be so strictly tied by marriage, it is best for him not to marry. A very rash saying of the disciples, discovering both their great carnality, and also the tyranny of a sinful practice, grown up into custom. Learn, 1. That the best of men have their weaknesses and infirmities: and the flesh takes its turn to speak, as well as the spirit in them. All that the saints say is not the gospel. Learn, 2. How impatient nature is of restraint, and how desirous of sinful liberty, and to be freed from the ties and bonds which the holy and wise laws of God put upon it.

11 But he said unto them, All men cannot receive this saying, save they to whom it is given.

12 For there are some eunuchs which were so born from their mother's womb: and there are some eunuchs, which were made eunuchs of men: and there be eunuchs, which have made themselves eunuchs for the kingdom of heaven's sake. He that is able to receive it, let him receive it.

As if our Lord had said, "You my disciples do not consider what you say. All men without sinning against God cannot abstain from marriage, but those only to whom God has given the gift of continency, and grace of chastity. Some indeed by nature, or natural impotency, are unfit for marriage. Others wickedly are made unfit by castration; others by religious mortification, bring under their bodies, that being free from the incumbrances that attend a marriage state, they may give up themselves the better to the exercises of a holy life." Learn, 1. That Almighty God has given us divers persons, different tempers, and constitutions: some can subdue their impure desires and affections without the remedy of marriage, others cannot. 2. That continency or ability to live chastely, without the use of marriage, is the special gift of God; not common to all, but bestowed only upon some. A gift it is, worthy of our fervent prayers, worthy of our best endeavours. 3. That a vow of chastity is not in our power; to quench a natural affection requires a supernatural gift. All have not received it: that is, all men cannot live single, and abstain from matrimony. From whence it follows, That men and women are not by monastical vows to be obliged to live a single life, which some cannot perform without sin. Note farther. When Christ says, that some have made themselves eunuchs for the kingdom of heaven's sake: the meaning is, That some have abstained from matrimony that they might be more expeditious in preaching the gospel, if ministers; or more prompt, fit and ready, to regard only the things of the Lord, if private christians.

13 Then were there brought unto him little children, that he should put his hands on them, and pray: and the disciples rebuked them.

14 But Jesus said, Suffer little children, and forbid them not to come unto me: for of such is the kingdom of heaven.

15 And he laid his hands on them, and departed thence.

Observe here, a solemn action performed. Children are brought to Christ, to be blest by him. Where note, 1. The persons brought, children, young children, sucking children, as the word imports: St. Luke xviii. 15. They brought them in their arms, not led them by the hand. 2. The person they are brought unto, Jesus Christ: but for what end? Not to baptize them, but to bless them: the parents looking upon Christ as a prophet, a great prophet, the great prophet, do bring their infants to him, that they may receive the benefits of his blessings and prayers. Whence learn, 1. That infants are subjects capable of benefit by Jesus Christ. 2. That it is the best office that parents can perform unto their children to bring them unto Christ, that they may be made partakers of that benefit. 3. If infants be capable of benefit by Christ; if capable of his blessing on earth, and presence in heaven; if they be subjects of his kingdom of grace, and heirs of his kingdom of glory: then they may be baptized; for they that are in covenant, have a right to the seal of the covenant. If Christ denies not infants the kingdom of heaven, which is the greater, what reason have his ministers to deny them baptism, which is the less? But say some, Christ did neither baptize them, nor command his disciples so to do? Ans. That is not to be wondered at, if we consider that they had already entered into a covenant with God by circumcision, and christian baptism was not yet instituted: John's baptism was the baptism of repentance, of which infants were incapable.

16 And, behold, one came and said unto him, Good Master, what good thing shall I do, that I may have eternal life?

Observe here, A person addressing himself to Christ, and propounding an important question to him: namely, What he should do to gain eternal life? Where note, 1. He believes the certainty of a future state. 2. He professes his desire of an eternal happiness in that state. And, 3. He declares his readiness to do some good, that he may obtain that happiness. Learn, That the light of nature, or natural religion, directs and teaches men, that good works are necessary to salvation, or that some good thing must be done by men that at death expect eternal life. What good thing shall I do, that I may have eternal life? It is not talking well, and professing well, but doing well, and living well, that entitles us to eternal life.

17 And he said unto him, Why callest thou me good? there is none good but one, that is God: but if thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments.

The person thus addressing himself unto Christ, was either a pharisee or a disciple of the pharisees, who did not own Christ to be God, or to come from God; but taught that eternal life was attainable, by fulfilling of the law in that imperfect sense which the pharisees gave of it. And accordingly, 1. Christ reproves him for calling him good; Why callest thou me good? When thou wilt neither own me to be God, nor to come from God! For there is none good, that is, essentially and originally good but God only: nor any derivatively good, but he that receives his goodness from God also. From this place the Socinians argue against the divinity of Christ; thus, "He to whom the title of good doth not belong, cannot be God most high. But by our Lord's words this title belongs not to him, but only to God the Father; therefore God the Father must be God alone." Answer, Christ may be supposed to speak to this young man thus, "Thou gavest me a title which was never given to the most renowned rabbins, and which agrees to God alone; now thou oughtest to believe that there is something in me more than human. If thou conceivest that this title of good doth belong to me." Observe, 2. That our Saviour might convince him of the error of the pharisees, who believed that they might, without the knowledge of him, the true Messiah, enter into life by keeping the law of God, according to that lax and loose interpretation which they, the pharisees, had given of it: he bids him, Keep the commandments. Where note, Christ calls him off from outward ceremonies, which the pharisees abounded in, to the practice of moral duties; yet withal lets him understand, that if he expected salvation by the moral law, he must keep it perfectly and exactly, without the least deficiency, which is an impossibility to man in his lapsed state. Learn, 1. That such as seek justification and salvation by the works of the law only must keep the whole law only, or covenant of works, perfectly and exactly. Learn, 2. That the best way to prepare men for Jesus Christ, is, to let them see their own impotency to keep and fulfil the covenant of works.

18 He saith unto him, Which? Jesus said, Thou shalt do no murder, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not steal, Thou shalt not bear false witness.

19 Honor thy father, and thy mother : and Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.

20 The young man saith unto him, All these things have I kept from my youth up; What lack I yet?

Observe here, That the duties which our Saviour instances in, are the duties of the second table, which hypocrites are most failing in; but the sincere practice of our duty to our neighbour, is a singular evidence of our love to God. These duties of the second table the young man says he had kept from his youth, and perhaps might say it truly according to the pharisees' interpretation, which condemned only the gross, outward act, not the inward lusts and motions of the heart. Learn hence, How apt men are to think well of themselves, and have too high an opinion of their own goodness and righteousness before God: All these have I kept from my youth.

21 Jesus said unto him, If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come and follow me.

That is, "Thou hast been all thy days a pharisee; if now thou wilt be a christian, thou must maintain a readiness and disposition of mind to part with all that thou hast in this world at my call and at my command, and follow after me." Learn, That such as enter themselves disciples of Christ, must be ready at Christ's call to part with all, for Christ's sake, that they have in this world. All that profess themselves to be Christ's disciples, must be his followers: that is, that they must obey his doctrine, and imitate his example, his holiness, his humility; his heavenly mindedness, his patience, his meekness, his readiness to forgive injuries: "and the same mind must be in us which was in Christ Jesus."

22 But when the young man heard that saying, he went away sorrowful; for he had great possessions.

This parting with all for Christ seemed so hard a condition to the young man, that he went away sorrowful from Christ. Whence learn, 1. That a man wedded to the world will renounce Christ rather than the world, when both stand in competition. 2. That unregenerate and carnal men are exceeding sorrowful, and sadly concerned, that they cannot have heaven upon their own terms, and win it in their own way. The young man went away sorrowful.

23 ¶ Then Jesus said unto his disciples, Verily I say unto you, That a rich man shall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven.

Our blessed Saviour takes occasion, from what had passed, to discourse with his disciples concerning the danger of riches, and the difficulties that attend rich men in their way to salvation. A rich man shall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven. Whence note, 1. That rich men do certainly meet with more difficulties in their way to heaven, than other men; it is difficult to withdraw their affections from riches, to place their supreme love upon God in the midst of their abundance. It is difficult to depend upon God in a rich condition. "The poor committeth himself to God, but the rich man's wealth is his strong tower." 2. That yet the fault lies not in riches, but in rich men; who by placing their trust and putting their confidence in riches, do render themselves incapable of the kingdom of God.

24 And again I say unto you, It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God!

These words were a proverbial speech among the Jews to signify a thing of great difficulty, next to an impossibility; and they import thus much: "That it is not only a very great difficulty, and an impossibility, for such as abound in worldly wealth to be saved, without an extraordinary grace and assistance from God. It is hard for a rich man to become happy even by God, because he thinks himself happy without God."

25 When his disciples heard it, they were exceedingly amazed, saying, Who then can be saved?

The disciples understanding how naturally and strongly men love the world, and how idolatrously and inordinately their hearts run out upon it, they say unto Christ, Lord, who then can be saved? Learn, 1. That when the general difficulties which lie in the way to salvation, are laid forth, and sufficiently understood, we may justly wonder that any are or shall be saved. 2. That such are the special and peculiar difficulties in the rich man's way to heaven, that his salvation is matter of wonder and great admiration to the disciples of Christ. "When the disciples heard this, they were exceedingly amazed, saying, Who then can be saved?"

26 But Jesus beheld them, and said unto them, With men this is impossible; but with God all things are possible.

As if Christ had said, "Were all men left to themselves, no man either rich or poor would be saved: but God can bring men to heaven by the mighty power of his grace: he can make the rich in estate, poor in spirit; and them that are poor in this world, rich in grace." Learn, 1. That it is impossible for any man rich or poor, by his own natural strength, to get to heaven. 2. That when we are discouraged with a sense of our impotency, we should consider the power of God, and act our faith upon it: With God all things are possible.

27 ¶ Then answered Peter and said unto him, Behold we have forsaken all, and followed thee; what shall we have therefore?

28 And Jesus said unto them, Verily, I say unto you, that ye which have followed me in the regeneration, when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel.

The apostles having heard our Saviour's command to the young man to sell all and give to the poor, St. Peter, in the name of the rest, tells Christ, that they had left all, and followed him; Behold, we have left all. Where note, How Peter magnifies that little which he had left for Christ, and ushers it in with a note of observation and admiration also, Behold! we have forsaken all, what shall we have then? Learn thence, That although it be very little that we suffer for Christ, and less that we have to forsake upon his account, yet we are apt to magnify and extol it as if it were some great matter, Lord, we have forsaken all. What all! His tattered fisher-boat, and ragged nets; scarce worthy to be mentioned: yet how is it magnified! Behold, Lord, we have left all! But observe our Lord's kind and glorious answer; "You that have left all to follow me, shall be no losers by me: for in the regeneration, that is, at the resurrection when believers shall be perfectly renewed, both in soul and body, and shall enjoy my kingdom, then as I sit upon the throne of my glory, so shall you sit with me in a higher degree of dignity and honor, judging the twelve tribes of Israel; that is, the Jews first, for their unbelief, and then all other despisers of gospel grace and mercy." Learn, 1. That such ministers as do most service for Christ, and forsake most to follow him, shall, in his kingdom, partake of most honor and dignity with him and from him. 2. That as the ministers of Christ in general, so his twelve apostles in particular, shall sit nearer the throne of Christ, and have an higher place in glory at the great day, than ordinary believers.

29 And every one that hath forsaken houses, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my name's sake, shall receive an hundred-fold, and shall inherit everlasting life.

The foregoing promises, verse 28, respected the apostles; this, all christians, who forsake the dearest enjoyments for Christ: he assures them, they shall be recompensed in this life an hundred-fold; how? Non formaliter sed eminenter: Not in specie, but in valor: not in kind, but in equivalence: not an hundred brethren or sisters, or lands, but first, He shall have that in God, which all creatures would not be to him if they were multiplied an hundred times. Secondly, The gifts and graces, the comforts and consolations, of the Holy Spirit, shall be an hundred-fold better portion than any thing we can part with for the sake of Christ and his gospel here. Though we may be losers for Christ, yet shall we never be losers by him. Christ gives present recompences, as well as future rewards; inasmuch that they who have suffered and lost most for Christ have never complained of their sufferings or losses. Therefore never be afraid to lose any thing for Christ, he will not only see you indemnified, but plentifully rewarded: in this world an hundred-fold: in that to come, life eternal.

30 But many that are first shall be last; and the last shall be first.

A twofold sense and interpretation is given of these words: the first respects the Jews and Gentiles in general: the second, all professors of christianity in particular. "The Jews (as if Christ had said) look upon themselves as first and nearest to the kingdom of heaven, but for their infidelity they shall be last in it; that is never shall come there. And the gentiles, who were looked upon as dogs, and farthest from heaven, shall be first there, upon their conversion to me, and faith in me." As the words respect all professors, the sense is, many that are first in their own esteem, and in the opinion of others, and forward in a profession of religion, yet at the day of judgment they will be last, and least in mine and my Father's estimation and account. And many that were little in their own, and less in the esteem of others, who had a less name and vogue in the world, yet shall be first and highest in my favor." Learn hence, That the day of judgment will frustrate a great many persons' expectations, both as touching others, and concerning themselves. Many will miss of heaven, and be last, who looked upon themselves to be first. And many will find others in heaven, whom they least expected there. "The Lord judgeth not as man judgeth:" We judge of man by outward appearances, "but we are sure that the judgment of God is according to truth." He can neither be deceived, nor deceive.

CHAPTER XX.

FOR the kingdom of heaven is like unto a man that is an householder, which went out early in the morning to hire laborers into his vineyard.

2 And when he had agreed with the laborers for a penny a day, he sent them into his vineyard.

3 And he went out about the third hour, and saw others standing idle in the market-place.

4 And said unto them, Go ye also into the vineyard: and whatsoever is right I will give you. And they went their way.

5 Again he went out about the sixth, and ninth hour, and did likewise.

6 And about the eleventh hour he went out, and found others standing idle, and said unto them, Why stand ye here all the day idle?

7 They say unto him, Because no man hath hired us, He saith unto them, Go ye also into the vineyard; and whatsoever is right, that shall ye receive.

A twofold sense and interpretation is given of this parable; but both analogical. One of which relates to the calling of the Gentiles. The Jews were the first people that God had in the world; they were hired into the vineyard betimes in the morning, the Gentiles not till the day was far spent: yet shall the Gentiles, by the favor and bounty of God, receive the same reward of eternal life, which was promised to the Jews who bore the heat of the day, while the Gentiles stood idle. In the other analogical sense we may understand all persons indefinitely called by the gospel into the visible church, those that are called last shall be rewarded together with the first; and accordingly the design and scope of this parable, is to show the freeness of the divine grace, in the distribution of those rewards which the hand of mercy confers upon God's faithful servants. The vineyard is the church of God, the husbandman is God himself; the laborers are particular persons. God's going at diverse times into his vineyard, imports the several ages of man's life; some are called early in the morning, some at noon, others at night. Now when God comes to dispense his rewards, those that entered first into the vineyard and did most service for God, shall be plentifully rewarded by him; and such as came in later, but did faithful service, shall not miss of a merciful reward. Learn, 1. That so long as a person keeps out of Christ's vineyard and service, he is idle. Every unregenerate man is an idle man. 2 That persons are called by the preaching of the gospel at several ages and periods of life into God's vineyard; that is, into the communion of the visible church. 3. That such as do come, though late, into God's vineyard, and work diligently, and faithfully, shall not miss of a reward of grace at the hand of free mercy.

8 So when even was come, the Lord of the vineyard saith unto his steward, Call the laborers, and give them their hire, beginning from the last unto the first.

(No 6)

9 And when they came that were hired about the eleventh hour, they received every man a penny.

10 But when the first came, they supposed that they should have received more: and they likewise received every man a penny.

11 And when they had received it, they murmured against the good man of the house, 12 Saying, These last have wrought but one hour, and thou hast made them equal unto us, which have borne the burden and heat of the day.

13 But he answered one of them, and said, Friend, I do thee no wrong: didst thou not agree with me for a penny?

14 Take that thine is, and go thy way: I will give unto this last, even as unto thee.

15 Is it not lawful for me to do what I will with mine own; Is thine eye evil because I am good?

16 So the last shall be first, and the first last; for many be called, but few chosen.

Here observe, 1. That the time of God's full rewarding of his laborers, is the evening of their days; that is, when their work is done. "When the evening was come, the lord of the vineyard called his laborers, and gave them their hire;" not but that they have part of their reward in hand, but it is chiefly laid up in hope. Observe, 2. That though God makes no difference in his servants' wages for the time of their work, yet he will make a difference for the degrees of their service. Undoubtedly, they that have done most work, shall receive most wages. "He that soweth bountifully shall reap bountifully: God will reward every man according to his works:" that is, not only according to the nature and quality, but the measure and degree, of his work. All shall have equity, but all shall not have equal bounty. Observe, 3. That all inequality in the distribution of rewards, doth not make God an unjust acceptor of persons; he may dispense both grace and glory, in what measure and degree he pleases, without the least shadow of unrighteousness. "Is it not lawful for me to do what I will with mine own?" Observe, 4. That when we have done much service for God, by laboring longer than others in his vineyard, it is our duty to have a low esteem, both of our services and of ourselves, for the first shall be last, and the last first: that is, they that are first and highest in their own esteem, shall be the last and least in God's account.

17 ¶ And Jesus going up to Jerusalem, took the twelve disciples apart in the way, and said unto them,

X

18 Behold, we go up to Jerusalem; and the Son of man shall be betrayed unto the chief priests, and unto the scribes, and they shall condemn him to death,

19 And shall deliver him to the Gentiles to mock, and to scourge, and to crucify him: and the third day he shall rise again.

This is now the third time that Christ had acquainted his disciples very lately with his approaching sufferings, and bloody passion. He did it twice before, chap. xvi, and chap. xvii. yet now he mentions it again, that they might not be dismayed, and their faith might not be shaken to see him die, who called himself the true Messiah, and the Son of God. The first time he told his disciples of his death in general; the second time he declares the means, by treason; now he tells them the manner, by crucifying; that he should be scourged, mocked, spit upon, and crucified: all this he did to prevent his disciples' dejection at his sufferings. Learn thence, That it is highly necessary that the doctrine of the cross be preached to us; that so being armed with expectation of sufferings before they come, we may be the less dismayed and disheartened when they come. Our Lord's frequent fore-warning his disciples of his death and sufferings, was to fore-arm them with expectation of his, and with preparation for their own.

20 ¶ Then came to him the mother of Zebedee's children with her sons, worshipping him, and desiring a certain thing of him.

21 And he said unto her, What wilt thou? She saith unto him, Grant that these my two sons may sit, the one on thy right hand, and the other on the left, in thy kingdom.

To sit on the right hand, and on the left, is to have the most eminent places of dignity and honor after Christ. This the mother might be encouraged to ask for James and John because of their alliance to Christ, and because Christ had admitted them with Peter to be with him at his transfiguration. However, the rest of his disciples hearing of this ambitious request of the two brethren: and being as desirous, and in their own opinions as deserving of the same honor, they had indignation against them. Whence note, That none of the disciples did imagine that Christ had promised the supremacy to Peter, by these words, Tu es Petrus, Thou art Peter; for then neither James nor John had desired it, nor would the rest have contended for it. Observe here, 1. The persons making this request to Christ, Zebedee's children, that is, James and John, by the mouth of their mother. They spake by her lips, and made use of her tongue to usher in a request, which they were ashamed to make themselves. Observe, 2. The request itself. "Grant that these two may sit, the one on thy right hand, and the other on thy left hand." Where note, How these disciples did still dream of Christ's temporal kingdom, (although he had so often told them, That his kingdom was not of this world) and ambitiously seek to have preference and pre-eminence in that kingdom. See here how these poor fishermen had already learnt craftily to fish for preferment. Who can wonder to see some sparks of ambition and worldly desires in the holiest ministers of Christ, when the apostles themselves were not free from aspiring thoughts, even when they lay in the bosom of their Saviour? Ambition has all along infested churchmen, and troubled the church, even from the very first original and foundation of it. Observe, 3. Both the unseasonableness and unreasonableness of this request made by the disciples. Christ speaks of his sufferings to them, and they sue for dignity and great places from him, in optimis non nihil est pessimi; the holiest, the wisest, and the best of men, in their imperfect state, are not wholly free from passionate infirmities. Who would have expected, that when our Saviour had been preaching the doctrine of the cross to his disciples, telling them that he must be mocked, scourged, spit upon, and crucified for them, that they should be seeking and suing to him for secular dignity and honor, pre-eminence and power? But we plainly see, the best of men are but men, and that none are in a state of perfection on this side of heaven.

22 But Jesus answered and said, Ye know not what ye ask: Are ye able to drink of the cup that I shall drink of, and to be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with? They say unto him, We are able.

As if Christ had said, "You do but abuse yourselves with fond and idle dreams; there is other work cut out for you in the purpose of God, than sitting upon thrones and tribunals; to think of suffering would do you more service." And accordingly our Saviour, in his answer, tells these disciples, 1. That they were greatly ignorant of the nature and quality of his kingdom, which was not secular but heavenly: but the carnal notion of a glorious earthly kingdom upon earth, in which they should be delivered from the Roman power, was so deeply imprinted in their minds, that they frequently declare their expectation of it, notwithstanding all the assurances which Christ had given them of the contrary. Observe, 2. The course which our Saviour takes to cool the ambition of his disciples; he tells them, they must expect here, not crowns on their heads, but a cross on their backs; they must first taste of his sufferings, before they talk of his glory; and patiently suffer for him, before they expect to reign with him; plainly intimating, that the cross is the way to the crown, suffering the way to reigning, and that those that suffer most for Christ, shall partake of highest dignity and glory from him. Observe, The presumptuous confidence which the disciples had of their own strength and ability for suffering. Are ye able, says Christ, to drink of my cup? They replied, We are able, Alas! poor disciples! when it came to the trial; they all cowardly forsook him and fled. A bold presumption makes us vaunt of our own ability: holy jealousy makes us distrustful of our own strength. Those that are least acquainted with the cross, are usually the most confident undertakers.

23 And he saith unto them, Ye shall drink, indeed, of my cup, and be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with: but to sit on my right hand, and on my left, is not mine to give, but it shall be given to them for whom it is prepared of my Father.

Observe here, our blessed Saviour's wonderful mildness and goodness towards his disciples; he doth not with passion, much less with indignation, reprehended them, either for their ambition or presumption, but makes the best of their answer, and encourages their good intentions: he tells them, they should have the honor to share with him in his sufferings, to pledge him in his own cup, and after a conformity to him in his sufferings, they might expect to be sharers with him in his glory. Yet observe, That when Christ says, That to sit at his right hand, was not his to give; he means, as he was man, or as he was mediator; for elsewhere, as God, we find him asserting his power to dispose of the kingdom of heaven; John x. 28. I give unto them eternal life. However, the Arians of old, and Socinians of late, do from this text infer, that God the Father has a power reserved to himself, which he hath not committed to Christ his Son; from whence they would conclude, that he is not the same God which the Father is, because he hath not the same power which the Father has. Answer, But if Christ be here supposed to deny his power to himself, he must then manifestly contradict himself, when he says, I appoint to you a kingdom, and all power in heaven and earth is given to me. When Christ, therefore, saith, he could only give this to them for whom it was appointed of his Father, this doth not signify any defect in his power, but a perfect conformity to his Father's will, and that he could no do this, unless the divine essence and nature abided in him. This the words rather show, than that there is any want of power in Christ.

24 And when the ten heard it, they were moved with indignation against the two brethren.

25 But Jesus called them unto him, and said, Ye know that the princes of the Gentiles exercise dominion over them, and they that are great exercise authority upon them.

26 But it shall not be so among you: but whosoever will be great among you, let him be your minister;

27 And whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant:

Note here, 1. That Christ, by these words, doth not forbid the exercise of civil dominion and lawful magistracy; for then all order, all defence of good men, and punishment of evil-doers would be taken away. Magistracy is God's ordinance; and the magistrate is God's minister for the good of human society, and consequently not here censured or condemned by Christ. True, when Christ was here on earth he refused to execute the magistrate's office, because his kingdom was not of this world, and because he would give no umbrage to Cesar or the Jews; and because he would leave us an example of humility and contempt of worldly grandeur, and not because the office of civil magistracy was unlawful. Note, 2. That Christ by this text doth not condemn the exercise of ecclesiastical government, that being as necessary in the church, as the former in the state. The welfare of the church necessarily depends on the exercise of ecclesiastical discipline. Note, 3. Christ here forbids only the exercise of that dominion which is attended with tyranny and oppression, and is managed according to men's wills and lusts. Now says Christ, you shall have no such government, you shall command nothing for mere will and pleasure, but your whole office shall consist in being ministers to the good of others: and herein ye shall resemble me the Son of man, who came not to be ministered unto, but to minister. And accordingly, that Christ might effectually quench those unhappy sparks of ambition which were kindled in his apostles' minds, he tells them, that supremacy and dominion belong to secular princes, not to evangelical pastors, who ought to carry themselves with humility towards one another: not that Christ directs to a purity and equality amongst all his ministers, and forbids the pre-eminence of some over others; but the affectation of superiority, and the love of pre-eminency, is that which our Saviour disallows. Learn, 1. That so far ought the ministers of Christ to be from affecting a domination and superiority of power over their fellow brethren, that, in imitation of Christ their Lord and Master, they ought to account themselves fellow-servants, I am amongst you, says Christ, as one that serveth. 2. That such ministers as do love and affect pre-eminency and superiority, are most unfit for it; and they deserve it best, who seek it least. 3. That the dignity and honor which the ministers of Christ should chiefly and only affect, is in another world; and the way to be greatest and highest there, is to be low and humble here, mean in our own eyes, and little in our own esteem. Whosoever will be chief, says Christ, let him be your servant.

28 Even as the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many.

To encourage his disciples to the forementioned condescending humility one towards another, our Saviour propounds to them his own instructive example, I came not to be ministered unto, says Christ, but to minister to the wants and necessities of others, both for soul and body. "O what a sight will it be, as if our Lord had said, to behold an humble God, and a proud creature; an humble Saviour, and an haughty sinner!" Yea, our Lord urges his example farther, that as he laid down his life for us, so should we be ready to lay down our lives for one another. Did Christ lay down his life for us, and shall we not only lay down a lust for him? our pride, our ambition, our affectation of dignity and superiority over others? Note here two things: 1. Whereas it is said that Christ gave his life a ransom for many; it is elsewhere affirmed that he tasted death for every man, even for them that denied the Lord who bought them. The word many, in other places of scripture, is not exclusive of some, but inclusive of all. Thus Dan. xii. 2. "Many that sleep in the dust shall arise;" answer, St John v. 28, 29. "All that sleep in the grave shall hear his voice" Thus Rom v. 15. "Through the offence of one many died;" answer, 1st Cor. xv. 22. "In Adam all died"

There is a virtual sufficiency in the death of Christ for the salvation of mankind, and an actual efficacy for the salvation of them that repent, and believe, and obey the gospel. Note, 2. From these words, he gave his life a ransom. That Christ suffered in our stead, and died in our place, and gave his life instead of ours. It was the constant opinion both of the Jews and Gentiles, that their piacular victims were ransoms for the life of the offender, and that he who gave his life for another, suffered in his stead, to preserve him from death. And who can reasonably suppose, but that our Lord intended by saying, he gave himself a ransom, that he gave his life instead of the lives of those for whom he suffered? Vain are the Socinians, when they say this price was to be paid to satan, because he detained us captive: True; the price is to be paid to him that detains the captive, when he doth this for gain to make money of him, as the Turks detain the christians captive at Algiers; but when a man is detained in custody for violation of a law, then it is not the gaoler, but the legislature, to whom the price of redemption must be paid, or satisfaction be made. Accordingly this price was paid to God; for Christ became our ransom, as he offered up his life and blood for us: now he offered himself without spot to God. Heb. ix. 14. he therefore paid the price of our redemption to God.

29 ¶ And as they departed from Jericho, a great multitude followed him.

30 And, behold, two blind men sitting by the way-side, when they heard that Jesus passed by, cried out, saying, Have mercy on us, O Lord, thou Son of David.

31 And the multitude rebuked them, because they should hold their peace: but they cried the more, saying, Have mercy on us, O Lord, thou Son of David.

32 And Jesus stood still, and called them, and said, What will ye that I shall do unto you?

33 They say unto him, Lord, That our eyes may be opened.

34 So Jesus had compassion on them, and touched their eyes: and immediately their eyes received sight, and they followed him.

This chapter concludes with a famous miracle, wrought by Christ upon two blind men, in the sight of a great multitude, which followed him. Where observe, 1. The blind men's faith in acknowledging Jesus to be the true Messiah, for so much the title of the Son of David signifies. Observe, 2. Their fervency, in crying so earnestly to Christ for mercy and healing: Have mercy upon us, thou Son of David. A true sense of want will make us cry unto Christ for help earnestly, and with undeniable importunity. Observe, 3. The great condescension of Christ towards these poor blind men: "He stood still, he called them, he had compassion on them, he touched their eyes and healed them." A mighty instance of Christ's divine power. He that can open blind eyes with the touch of his finger, and that by his own power, is really God, his touch is an omnipotent touch. Observe, 4. Although Christ well knew the condition of these blind men, yet before he will restore them to sight they must sensibly complain of the want of sight, and cry unto him for mercy and healing. Learn hence, That although Christ, perfectly knows all our wants, yet he takes no notice of them till we make them known to him by prayer. Observe, 5. The best way and course which the blind men take to express their thankfulness to Christ for recovered sight, they followed him. Learn hence, That mercy from Christ is then rightly improved, when it engages us to follow Christ. This should be the effect of all salvation wrought for us. He praiseth God best, that serveth and obeyeth him most: the life of thankfulness consists in the thankfulness of the life.

CHAPTER XXI.

AND when they drew nigh unto Jerusalem, and were come to Bethphage, unto the mount of Olives, then sent Jesus two disciples.

2 Saying unto them, Go into the village over against you, and straightway ye shall find an ass tied, and a colt with her: loose them, and bring them unto me.

3 And if any man say ought unto you, ye shall say, The Lord hath need of them; and straightway he will send them.

The former part of this chapter gives us an account of our Saviour's solemn and triumphant riding into the city of Jerusalem. Where observe, That in all our Saviour's journeys and travels from place to place, he constantly went like a poor man, on foot, without noise, and without train; now he goes up to Jerusalem to die for sinners, he rides, to show his great cheerfulness in that service, and his forwardness to lay down his life for us. But what doth he ride upon? An ass, according to the manner of great persons amongst the Jews; but especially to fulfil the prophecy, Zech. ix. 9. that the Messiah, a King of the Jews, "should come riding upon an ass." But this ass was a colt, the foal of an ass, on which never man had rode before," says St. Mark, chap. xi. 12; signifying thereby, that the most unruly and untamed creatures become obedient and obsequious to him: and upon a borrowed ass, the use of which he demands, thereby manifesting his sovereign right to all the creatures; and accordingly, he bids his disciples tell the owner of the ass, That the Lord hath need of them; not our Lord but the Lord; that is, he that is the Lord of all, whose are the cattle upon a thousand hills; he that is Lord of all the beasts and the owners too. Observe farther, That notwithstanding Christ's supreme right to the ass and the colt, he will have neither of them taken without the owner's knowledge, or against his will; but the disciples must acquaint him with it, and by a double argument move him to it. 1. Christ's right of dominion and sovereignty over them; he is the Lord that sends for them. 2. His present occasion for them; the Lord has need of them. Note also here, A wonderful instance of Christ's prescience or foreknowledge, even in the most minute and smallest matters. 1. You shall find a colt. 2. On which no man ever sat. 3. A colt tied and bound with its dam. 4. In the place where two ways met. 5. As they entered the village. 6. That the owner should be willing to let him go. Such an exact knowledge had Christ of persons and actions, even of the circumstances of actions.

4 All this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet, saying,

5 Tell ye the daughter of Sion, Behold, thy King cometh unto thee, meek, and sitting upon an ass, and a colt the foal of an ass.

Here the reason is assigned why Christ rode upon the ass into Jerusalem; it was to fulfil an ancient prophecy, that the Messiah, or king of the Jews should come riding upon that beast into Jerusalem. There was not any prophecy of Christ more plainly fulfilled than this. The prophecy alluded to, is Zech. ix. 9: "Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion: shout O daughter of Jerusalem: behold, thy King cometh unto thee; he is just, and having salvation; lowly, and riding upon an ass; and upon a colt, the foal of an ass." Where note the character given of the Messiah; he is the Supreme King and Governor of his church, thy King cometh. The errand that he comes upon, bringing salvation: and the entertainment which his church was to give him; namely, to receive him with triumph of joy, and universal acclamations. "Rejoice, O daughter of Zion; and shout O Jerusalem for joy."

6 And the disciples went, and did as Jesus commanded them.

7 And brought the ass, and the colt, and put on them their clothes, and they set him thereon.

8 And a very great multitude spread their garments in the way; others cut down branches from the trees, and strawed them in the way.

(No. 6)

9 And the multitudes that went before, and that followed, cried, saying, Hosanna to the Son of David: Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord; Hosanna in the highest.

Observe here, 1. The obedience of his disciples, and the motions of the multitude; the disciples never dispute their Lord's commands, nor raise objections, nor are afraid of dangers, but speedily execute their Lord's pleasure, and find every thing according to their Lord's predictions. When our call is clear, our obedience must be speedy. What God commands we are not to dispute, but to obey. The disciples did as Jesus commanded them. Observe, 2. The actions of the multitude in acknowledging Christ to be their king; They cast their garments on the ground for him to ride upon, according to the custom of princes when they rode in state; and they do not only disrobe their backs, but expand their breath in joyful acclamations and loud Hosannas, wishing all manner of prosperity to this meek but mighty king. In this princely, yet poor and despicable pomp, doth our Saviour enter into that famous city of Jerusalem. O how far was our holy Lord from affecting worldly greatness and grandeur! He despised that glory which worldly hearts fondly admire; yet because he was a king, he would be proclaimed such, and have his kingdom confessed, applauded and blest; but that it might appear, that his kingdom was not of this world, he abandons all worldly magnificence. O glorious, yet homely pomp! O meek, but mighty prince.

10 And when he was come into Jerusalem, all the city was moved, saying, Who is this?

11 And the multitude said, This is Jesus the prophet of Nazareth of Galilee.

This is not the first or only time that Jerusalem was moved and troubled at the appearance of Christ; at his birth, Mat. ii. we read all Jerusalem was troubled, together with Herod; and now that he rides into Jerusalem, though in so mean a port, yet there is a new commotion. Jerusalem, instead of being thankful for his company, is troubled at his presence. Thence learn, That such persons and places as have the greater helps and privileges afforded them, are not always the most answerable in their returns of thankfulness. It is not Christ's presence with us, but his welcome to us, that makes us happy. Christ is daily taught in our synagogues, and preached in our streets: yet alas! multitudes are ignorant of him, and say, with the men of Jerusalem, when Christ was before their eyes, Who is this?

12 ¶ And Jesus went into the temple of God, and cast out all them that sold and bought in the temple, and overthrew the tables of the money-changers, and the seats of them that sold doves,

13 And said unto them, It is written, My house shall be called the house of prayer; but ye have made it a den of thieves:

Our blessed Saviour having entered Jerusalem, Observe, his first walk was not to the palace, but to the temple, and his work there was to purge and reform: all reformation of manners must begin first at the house of God. Our Lord's business was to reform the temple, not to ruin it. Places dedicated to the service of God, if profaned and polluted, ought to be purged from their abuses, not pulled down and destroyed, because they have been abused. But what was the profanation of the temple, which so offended our Saviour? Answer, within the third or outward court of the temple, there was a public mart or market held, where were sold oxen, sheep, and doves, and such things as were needful for sacrifice: many of the Jews coming an hundred miles to the temple, it was burdensome to bring their sacrifices so far with them: wherefore order was taken by the priest, that sheep and oxen, meal and oil, and all other requisites for sacrifice should be had for money, close by the altar, to the great ease of the offerer. Nothing could be more plausible than this plea. But the fairest pretences cannot bear out a sin with God; therefore our blessed Saviour, in indignation at so foul an abuse, whips out these chapmen, casts down their tables, and vindicates the honor and reputation of his Father's house. Learn thence, That there is a reverence due to God's house, for the owner's sake, and for the service sake. Nothing but holiness can become that place, where God is worshipped in the beauty of holiness. Observe lastly, The reason which our Saviour gives for this act of his; for, says he, It is written, My house shall be called an house of prayer. Where by prayer is to be understood, the whole worship and service of Almighty God, of which prayer is an eminent and principal part. That which gives denomination to an house, is certainly the chief work to be done in that house. Now God's house being called an house of prayer, certainly implies that prayer is the chief and principal work to be performed in his house; yet must we take heed that we set not the ordinances of God at variance one with another; we must not idolize one ordinance, and vilify another; but pay an awful respect and regard to all the institutions of our Maker.

14 And the blind and the lame came to him in the temple: and he healed them.

15 And when the chief priests and scribes saw the wonderful things that he did, and the children crying in the temple, and saying, Hosanna to the Son of David; they were sore displeased, 16 And said unto him, Hearest thou what these say? And Jesus saith unto them, Yea: Have ye never read, Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings thou hast perfected praise.

Observe here, 1. That our blessed Saviour works his miracles not secretly in a corner, but openly in the temple, and submits them to the examination of all persons' senses. A miracle is a supernatural action, which is obvious to sense. Popish miracles are talked of by many, but seen by none. Observe, 2. That Christ's enemies are never more incensed, than when his divine power is most exerted, and his divine nature owned and acknowledged. "When the chief priests saw the miracles which Jesus did, and heard the children crying, Hosanna to the Son of David, they were sore displeased." Observe, 3. That Christ can glorify himself by the mouths of babes and sucklings: he can form and fit up what instruments he pleases, to show forth his excellencies, and celebrate his praises. "Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings thou hast perfected praise."

17 And he left them, and went out of the city into Bethany; and he lodged there.

18 Now in the morning, as he returned into the city, he hungered.

19 And when he saw a fig-tree in the way, he came to it, and found nothing thereon but leaves only, and said unto it. Let no fruit grow on thee henceforward for ever. And presently the fig-tree withered away.

Our blessed Saviour having driven the buyers and sellers out of the temple, lodges not that night in Jerusalem, but withdraws to Bethany, a place of retirement from the noise and tumult of the city. Where note, Our Lord's love of solitude and retiredness. How delightful is it to a good man to dwell sometimes within himself, to take the wings of a dove, and fly away, and be at rest. Yet the next morning our Lord returns to the city: he knew when to be solitary, and when to be sociable: when to be alone, and when to converse in company. In his passage to the city, he espied a fig-tree; and being an hungered (to show the truth of his humanity) he goes to the fig-tree, and finds it full of leaves, but without any fruit. Displeased with this disappointment, he curses the tree which had just deceived his expectations. This action of our Saviour, in cursing the barren fig-tree was typical; an emblem of the destruction of Jerusalem in general, and of every person in particular, that satisfies himself with a withered profession, bearing leaves only, but no fruit. As this fig-tree was, so are they, nigh unto cursing. Learn thence, That such as content themselves with a fruitless profession of religion, are in great danger of having God's blasting added to their barrenness.

20 And when the disciples saw it, they marvelled, saying, How soon is the fig-tree withered away!

21 Jesus answered, and said unto them, Verily, I say unto you, If ye have faith, and doubt not, ye shall not only do this which is done to the fig tree, but, also, if ye shall say unto this mountain, Be thou removed, and be thou cast into the sea: it shall be done.

22 And all things, whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer believing, ye shall receive.

The disciples being filled with admiration at the sudden withering of the fig-tree, thereupon our Saviour exhorts them to have faith in God; that is, firmly to rely upon the power of God whereby he is able, upon the goodness of God whereby he is willing, to perform his promises to us. Learn, That faith is a necessary ingredient in prayer. Praying without faith, is like shooting without a bullet; it makes a noise, but doth no execution. 2. That whatsoever good thing God has made the matter of a promise, shall be given to good men, praying in faith. Whatsoever ye ask in prayer believing, ye shall receive. Yet note, That the faith here promised to root up mountains, must be restrained to that age of miracles, and to the persons to whom this was spoken, namely, the apostles and first propagators of the gospel: it being certain from experience, that this is no ordinary and perpetual gift of christians.

23 ¶ And when he was come into the temple, the chief priests and the elders of the people came unto him as he was teaching, and said, By what authority doest thou these things? and who gave thee this authority?

24 And Jesus answered, and said unto them, I, also, will ask you one thing, which if ye tell me, I, in like wise will tell you by what authority I do these things.

25 The baptism of John whence was it? from heaven, or of men? And they reasoned with themselves, saying, If we shall say from heaven; he will say unto us, Why did ye not then believe him?

26 But if we say, Of men: we fear the people: for all hold John as a prophet.

27 And they answered Jesus, and said, We cannot tell. And he said unto them, Neither tell I you by what authority I do these things.

The pharisees having often questioned our Saviour's doctrine before, they call in question his mission and authority now: although they might easily have understood his divine mission by his divine miracles. Almighty God never empowered any to work miracles that were not sent by him. When the adversaries of Christ can object nothing against his doctrine, they then quarrel with him about his commission and calling, and demand by what authority he doth teach and work miracles. Our blessed Saviour well understanding their drift and design, answers them one question by asking them another. The baptism of John, was it from heaven or of men? Was it of divine institution or of human invention? Implying, that the calling of such as call themselves the ministers of God, ought to be from God. "No man ought to take this honor upon himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron." Heb. v. 4. The pharisees reply they could not tell whence John had his mission and authority. This was a manifest untruth; by refusing to tell the truth, they fall into a lie. One sin ensnares, and draws men into the commission of more. Such as will not speak exact truth, according to their knowledge, they fall into the sin of lying against their conscience. Our Saviour answers them, Neither tell I you by what authority I do these things. He doth not say, I cannot, or I will not tell you: but I do not, I need not tell you: because the miracles which I work before you, are sufficient demonstration of my divine commission, that I am sent of God amongst you; for God never set the seal of his omnipotence to a lie, or impowered an impostor to work real miracles.

28 But what think ye? A certain man had two sons; and he came to the first, and said, Son, go work to-day in my vineyard.

29 He answered and said, I will not; but afterward he repented, and went.

30 And he came to the second, and said, likewise. And he answered and said I go, sir; and went not.

31 Whether of them twain did the will of his father? They say unto him, the first. Jesus saith unto them, Verily, I say unto you, That the publicans and the harlots go into the kingdom of God before you.

32 For John came unto you in the way of righteousness, and ye believed him not; but the publicans and the harlots believed him; and ye, when ye had seen it, repented not afterward, that ye might believe him.

The design and scope of this parable is to show, That publicans and harlots, that is, the vilest, the profanest, and worst of sinners, who upon the hearing of Christ's doctrine and miracles did repent and believe, were in a much better condition than the proud pharisees, who though they pretended to great measures of knowledge, and high degrees of holiness, yet did obstinately oppose Christ, disobey his doctrines, deny his miracles, and set at nought his person. Learn hence, That the greatest, the vilest, and the worst of sinners, upon their repentance and faith in Christ, shall much sooner find acceptance with God, than proud pharisaical Justiciaries, who confidently rely upon their own righteousness: Publicans and harlots, says Christ here to the pharisees, shall go into the kingdom of God before you. Publicans were the worst sort of men, and harlots the worst kind of women; yet did these repent sooner, and believed in Christ before the proud pharisees. The reason was because their hearts lay more open to the strokes of conviction, than those that were blinded by vain hopes and presumptuous confidence. Security frustrates all means of recovery.

33 ¶ Hear another parable: There was a certain householder, which planted a vineyard, and hedged it round about, and digged a wine-press in it, and built a tower, and let it out to husbandmen, and went into a far country:

34 And, when the time of the fruit drew near, he sent his servants to the husbandmen, that they might receive the fruits of it.

35 And the husbandmen took his servants, and beat one, and killed another, and stoned another.

36 Again, he sent other servants more than the first; and they did unto them likewise.

37 But last of all he sent unto them his son, saying, They will reverence my son.

38 But when the husbandmen saw the son, they said among themselves, This is the heir; come, let us kill him, and let us seize on his inheritance.

39 And they caught him, and cast him out of the vineyard, and slew him.

In this parable, God compares the Jewish church to a vineyard: himself to an householder: his planting, pruning and fencing his vineyard, denotes his care to furnish his church with all needful helps and means to make it spiritually fruitful. His letting it out to husbandmen, signifies his committing the care of his church to the priests and levites, the public pastors and governors of the church. His servants are the prophets and the apostles, whom he sent from time to time, to admonish them to bring forth fruit answerable to the cost which God had expended on them. His son is Jesus Christ, whom the rulers of the Jewish church slew and murdered. The scope of the parable is to discover to the Jews, particularly to the pharisees, their obstinate impenitency under all means, their bloody cruelty to the prophets of God, their tremendous guilt in crucifying the Son of God; for all which, God would unchurch them finally, and ruin their nation, and set up a church among the Gentiles, that should bring forth better fruit than the Jewish church ever did. From the whole note,

1. That the church is God's vineyard, exceeding dear and precious to the planter and the owner of it. 2. As dear as God's vineyard is unto him, in case of barrenness and unfruitfulness, it is in great danger of being destroyed and laid waste by him. 3. That the only way and course to engage God's care over his vineyard, and to prevent his giving it to other husbandmen, is to give him the fruits of it. It is but a vineyard that God lets out, it is no inheritance; no people ever had so many promises of God's favor as the Jews had, nor ever enjoyed so many privileges whilst they stood in his favor, as they did; yet though they were the first, "and the natural branches, they are broken off, and we Gentiles stand by faith; let us not be high minded, but fear." Rom. xi. 20.

40 When the Lord, therefore, of the vineyard cometh, what will he do unto those husbandmen?

41 They say unto him, He will miserably destroy those wicked men, and will let out his vineyard unto other husbandmen, which shall render him the fruits in their seasons.

Observe here, At the first mentioning of the parable the pharisees express a bitter indignation against such wicked servants, not considering what a dreadful sentence they passed upon themselves and their own nation. Little did they think, that thereby they condemned their temple to be burnt, their city to be destroyed, their country to be ruined; but in these words they vindicate God, they condemn themselves, and own the justice of God, in inflicting the severest punishments on them.

42 Jesus saith unto them, Did ye never read in the scriptures, The stone which the builders rejected, the same is become the head of the corner: this is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes?

43 Therefore say I unto you, The kingdom of God shall be taken from you and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof.

Which words are the application that our Saviour makes of the foregoing parable concerning the vineyard; which the chief priests and pharisees did not apprehend themselves to be concerned in, till he brought the application of it home unto them. Therefore say I unto you, the kingdom of God shall be taken from you, &c. Note, 1. The greatest mercy that God can bestow upon any people, is his giving his kingdom to them; that is, all gospel ordinances, and church privileges leading to the kingdom of heaven. 2. Observe the terms upon which God either gives or continues his kingdom to a church and nation, And that is, upon bringing forth the fruits thereof. Learn, 3. That the greatest judgment which can befall a people, is the taking away the kingdom of God from them. The kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given, &c.

44 And whosoever shall fall on this stone, shall be broken: but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder.

These words are taken out of the cxviiith Psalm, which the Jews understood to be a prophecy of the Messiah, and accordingly Christ applies them to himself. The church is the building intended, Christ himself the stone rejected; the rejecters or the builders rejecting, were the heads of the Jewish church; that is, the chief priests and pharisees. God, the great master-builder of his church, takes this precious foundation-stone out of the rubbish, and sets it in the head of the corner. Nevertheless, there are those who stumble at this stone. Some through ignorance, others through malice, stumble at his person, at his doctrine, at his institutions: "these shall be broken in pieces: but on whomsoever this stone shall fall, it will grind him to powder." That is, Christ himself will fall as a burden-some stone upon all those that knowingly and maliciously oppose him; and particularly upon the Jews, who not only rejected him, but persecuted and destroyed him. Thus Christ tells the chief priests and pharisees their own particular doom, and also declares what will be the fatal issue of all that opposition which is made against himself and his church. It will terminate in their inevitable and irreparable destruction. Whosoever shall fall on this stone, shall be broken; and on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder." That is, "He that stumbles on this stone, while Christ is here on earth, being offended at his doctrine, life, and miracles, shall be broken by his fall upon it; as the person stoned is by the sharp stone which he falls upon. But he on whom this stone shall fall, when Christ is elevated to his throne of glory, shall be more violently shattered by it, as is the person stoned by the great stone as big as two men can lift, thrown down violently upon his breast."

45 And when the chief priests and pharisees had heard his parables, they perceived that he spake of them.

46 But when they sought to lay hands on him, they feared the multitude, because they took him for a prophet.

When the chief priests came to understand that the parables were all applied to them, that they were the murderers of the king's son, that they were the builders that rejected the chief corner-stone, they were enraged at the close application made to themselves; and had not fear restrained them, they would have laid violent hands upon him. Learn thence, That nothing doth more provoke and exasperate unsound hypocrites than the particular application, and close coming home of the word of God unto their hearts and consciences. So long as the truths of God are generally delivered, sinners are easy, looking upon themselves as unconcerned, but when the word of God comes close to them, and says, Thou art the man, this is thy wickedness; they are angry at the message, and rage at the messenger.

CHAPTER XXII.

AND Jesus answered, and spake unto them again by parables, and said,

2 The kingdom of heaven is like unto a certain king, which made a marriage for his son,

3 And sent forth his servants to call them that were bidden to the wedding: and they would not come.

4 Again he sent forth other servants, saying, Tell them which were bidden, Behold, I have prepared my dinner; my oxen and my fatlings are killed, and all things are ready: come unto the marriage.

5 But they made light of it, and went their ways, one to his farm, another to his merchandize;

6 And the remnant took his servants, and entreated them spitefully, and slew them.

7 But when the king heard thereof, he was wroth: and sent forth his armies, and destroyed those murderers, and burned up their city.

8 Then saith he to his servants, The wedding is ready, but they which were bidden were not worthy.

9 Go ye, therefore, into the highways, and as many as ye shall find, bid to the marriage.

10 So those servants went out into the high-ways, and gathered together all, as many as they found both bad and good; and the wedding was furnished with guests.

11 ¶ And, when the king came in to see the guests, he saw there a man which had not on a wedding garment:

12 And he saith unto him, Friend, how camest thou in hither, not having a wedding garment? and he was speechless.

13 Then said the king to the servants, Bind him hand and foot, and take him away, and cast him into outer darkness: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

The design and scope of this parable of the marriage-supper, is to set forth that gracious offer of mercy and salvation, which was made by God in and through the preaching of the gospel to the church of the Jews. The gospel is here compared to a feast, because in a feast there is plenty, variety, and dainties. Also to a marriage-feast, being full of joy, delight and pleasure. And to a marriage-feast made by the king as being full of state, magnificence, and grandeur. To this marriage-feast or gospel-supper, Almighty God invited the church of the Jews, and the servants, sent forth to invite them, were the prophets and the apostles in general, and John the Baptist in particular, whom they intreated spitefully and slew. The making light of the invitation, signifies the generality of the Jews' refusal and careless contempt of the offer of grace in the gospel. By the "armies which God sent forth to destroy those murderers," are meant the Roman soldiers, who spoiled and laid waste the city of Jerusalem, and were the severe executioners of God's wrath and judgment upon the wicked Jews. The highways signify the despised Gentiles, who upon the Jews' refusal were invited to this supper, and prevailed with to come in. The king's coming to see the guests, denotes that inspection which Christ makes into his church, in the times of the gospel. By the man without the wedding garment, understand such as are destitute of true grace and real holiness, both in heart and life. In the examination of him, Christ says, Friend, how camest thou in hither? not Friends, why came ye along with him? Teaching us, that if unholy persons will press into the Lord's Supper, the sin is theirs; but if we come not, because they will come the sin is ours. The presence of an unholy person at the Lord's table, ought not to discourage us from our duty, or cause us to turn our back upon that ordinance. The command to bind the unqualified person hand and foot, to cast him into outer darkness, plainly intimates, that the condition of such persons as live under the light, and enjoy the liberty of the gospel, but walk not answerably to their profession, is deplorably sad and doleful: they do not only incur damnation, but no damnation like it. "Bind him hand and foot, and cast him into outer darkness." From the whole, Note, 1. That the gospel, for its freeness and fulness, for its varieties and delicacies, is like a marriage-supper. 2. That gospel-invitations are mightily disesteemed. 3. That the preference which the world has in men's esteem is a great cause of the gospel's contempt. "They went one to his farm, and another to his merchandize." 4. That such as are careless in the day of grace, shall undoubtedly be speechless in the day of judgment. 5. That Christ takes a more particular notice of every guest that cometh to his royal supper, than any of his ministers do take, or can take. There was but one person without the wedding garment, and he falls under the eye and view of Christ. 6. That it is not sufficient that we come, but clothed we must be before we come, if ever we expect a gracious welcome to Christ's Supper; clothed with sincerity, clothed with humility; clothed with love and charity; if we be not thus clothed we shall appear naked to our shame, and bear that dreadful charge. "Bind him hand and foot, and cast him into outer darkness, where is weeping and gnashing of teeth." See Luke xiv. 17.

14 For many are called, but few are chosen.

This is our blessed Saviour's application of the foregoing parable to the Jews; he tells them that many of them, indeed all of them were called; that is, invited to the gospel supper, but with few, very few of them, was found that sincere faith; and that sound repentance, which doth accompany salvation. Learn thence, That amongst the multitude of those that are called by the gospel unto holiness and obedience, few, very few comparatively, do obey that call, and shall be eternally saved.

15 ¶ Then went the pharisees, and took counsel how they might entangle him in his talk.

16 And they sent out unto him their disciples, with the Herodians, saying, Master, we know that thou art true, and teachest the way of God in truth, neither carest thou for any man: for thou regardest not the person of men.

17 Tell us, therefore, What thinkest thou? Is it lawful to give tribute unto Cesar, or not?

18 But Jesus perceived their wickedness, and said, Why tempt ye me, ye hypocrites?

19 Show me the tribute-money. And they brought unto him a penny.

20 And he saith unto them, Whose is this image and superscription?

21 They say unto him Cesar's. Then saith he unto them, Render, therefore, unto Cesar the things which are Cesar's; and unto God the things that are God's.

22 When they had heard these words, they marvelled, and left him, and went their way.

Here we have another new design to entangle our blessed Saviour in his discourse. Where observe, 1. The persons employed to put the ensnaring question to our Saviour; namely, the pharisees and the Herodians. The pharisees were against paying tribute to Cesar, looking upon themselves as a free people, and the emperor as an usurper. But the Herodians were for it. Herod being made by the Roman emperor king of the Jews, was zealous for having the Jews pay tribute to Cesar, and such of the Jews as sided with him, and particularly his courtiers and favorites were called Herodians. Observe, 2. The policy and craft here used, in employing these two contrary sects to put the question to our Saviour concerning tribute; thereby laying him under the necessity (as they hoped) to offend one side, let him answer how he would. If to please the pharisees, he denied paying tribute to Cesar, then he is accused of sedition; if to gratify the Herodians, he voted for paying tribute, then he is looked upon as an enemy to the liberty of his country, and exposed to a popular odium: it has been the old policy of satan, and his instruments to draw the ministers of God into dislike, either with the magistrates or with the people, that they may either fall under the censure of one, or the displeasure of the other. Observe, 3. With what wisdom and caution our Lord answers them: he first calls for the tribute-money, which was the Roman penny, answering to seven-pence half-penny of our money, two of which they paid by way of tribute, or poll-money, for every head to the emperor. Christ asks them, Whose image or superscription their coin bore? they answer Cesar's; Render then, says Christ, to Cesar the things that are Cesar's. As if he had said, "The admitting of the Roman coin amongst you is a testimony that you are under subjection to the Roman emperor, because the coining and imposing of money is an act of sovereign authority. Now ye have owned Cesar's authority over you by accepting of his coin as current among you, give unto him his just dues, and render unto Cesar the things that are Cesar's." Learn hence, That there was no truer paymaster of the king's dues, than he that was King of kings; he preached it, and he practised it; Mat. xvii. 27. And as Christ is no enemy to the civil rights of princes, and his religion exempts none from paying their civil duties; so princes should be as careful not to rob him of his divine honor, as he is not to wrong them of their civil rights. As Christ requires all his followers to render unto Cesar the things that are Cesar's, so should princes oblige all their subjects to render unto God the things that are God's.

23 ¶ The same day came unto him the sadducees, which say that there is no resurrection, and asked him, 24 Saying, Master, Moses said, If a man die, having no children, his brother shall marry his wife, and raise up seed unto his brother.

25 Now there were with us seven brethren, and the first, when he had married a wife, deceased, and having no issue, left his wife unto his brother;

26 Likewise the second also, and the third, unto the seventh.

27 And last of all the woman died also.

28 Therefore, in the resurrection, Whose wife shall she be of the seven? for they all had her.

29 Jesus answered, and said unto them, Ye do err, not knowing the scriptures, nor the power of God.

30 For in the resurrection, they neither marry, nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels of God in heaven.

31 But, as touching the resurrection of the dead, Have ye not read that which was spoken unto you, by God, saying, 32 I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob? God is not the God of the dead, but of the living.

33 And when the multitude heard this, they were astonished at his doctrine.

Our blessed Saviour having put the pharisees and Herodians to silence, next the sadducees encounter him. This sect denied the immortality of the soul, and the resurrection of the body, and as an objection against both, they propound a question to our Saviour, of a woman that had seven brethren successively to her husbands; they demand, "Whose wife of the seven this woman shall be at the resurrection?" As if they had said, "If there be a resurrection of bodies, surely there will be a resurrection of relations too, and the other world will be like this, in which men will marry as they do here. And if so, whose wife of the seven shall this woman be, they all having an equal claim to her? Now our Saviour for resolving of this question, 1. Shows the different states of men in this world, and in the other world. "The children of the world, says Christ, marry and are given in marriage, but in the resurrection they do neither." As if our Lord had said, "After men have lived a time in this world, they die, and therefore marriage is necessary to maintain a succession of mankind; but in the other world men shall become immortal, and live for ever; and then the reason of marriage will wholly cease. For when men can die no more, there will be no need of any new supplies of mankind." 2. Our Saviour having got clear of the sadducees' objection, by taking away the ground and foundation of it, he produceth an argument for the proof of the soul's immortality, and the body's resurrection. Thus, "Those to whom Almighty God pronounced himself a God are alive; but God pronounced himself a God to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, many hundred years after their bodies were dead; therefore their souls are yet alive, federally alive unto God; their covenant relation lives still, otherwise God could not be their God; for he is not the God of the dead but of the living. If one relation fails, the other necessarily fails with it; if God be their God, then certainly they are in being, for God is not the God of the dead; that is, of those that are utterly perished. Therefore it must needs be, that although their bodies be naturally dead, yet do their souls still live, and their bodies shall as so live again at the resurrection of the just. From the whole, Note, 1. That there is no opinion so absurd, no error so monstrous, that having had a mother, will die for the lack of a nurse. The beastly opinion of the mortality of the soul, and the annihilation of the body, finds sadducees to profess and propagate it." Note, 2. The certainty of another life after this, in which men shall be eternally happy, or intolerably miserable, according as they behave themselves here; though some men live like beasts, they shall not die like them; nor shall their last end be like theirs. Note, 3. That glorified saints in the morning of the resurrection, shall be like unto the glorious angels; not like them in essence and nature, but like them in their properties and qualities, in holiness and purity, in immortality and incorruptibility, and in their manner of living; they shall no more stand in need of meat or drink, than the angels do; but shall live the same heavenly, immortal, and incorruptible life, that the angels live. Note, 4. That all those that are in covenant with God, whose God the Lord is, their souls do immediately pass into glory, and their bodies, at the resurrection, shall be sharers in the same happiness with their souls. If God be just, the soul must live, and the body must rise: for good men must be rewarded, and wicked men punished: God will most certainly, some time or other, plentifully reward the righteous, and punish the evildoers; but this being not always done in this life, the justice of God requires it to be done in the next.

34 ¶ But when the pharisees had heard that he had put the sadducees to silence, they were gathered together.

35 Then one of them which was a lawyer, asked him a question, tempting him, and saying, 36 Master, which is the great commandment in the law?

37 Jesus said unto him, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind.

38 This is the first and great commandment.

39 And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.

40 On these two commandments hang all the Law and the Prophets.

The sadducees being put by Christ to silence, The pharisees again encounter him; they send to him a lawyer, that is, one of their interpreters and expounders of the law of Moses, who propounds this question to him, "Which is the great commandment of the law?" Our Saviour tells them, "It is to love the Lord with all the heart, and with all the soul, and with all the mind." That is, with all the powers, faculties, and abilities of the soul, with the greatest measure and highest degrees of love. This is the sum and substance of the duties of the first table. And the second is like unto it, not equal with it, but like unto it. The duties of the second table are of the same authority, and of the same necessity with the first. As a man cannot be saved without the love of God, so neither without the love of his neighbour. "On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets:" that is, the whole duty of man, required by Moses and the prophets, is comprehended in, and may be reduced to these two heads, namely, the love of God and our neighbour. From the whole, Note, 1. That the fervency of all our affections, and particularly the supremacy of our love, is required by God as his right and due. Love must pass through and possess all the powers and faculties of the soul; the mind must meditate upon God, the will must choose and embrace him, and the affections must take complacency and delight in him; the measure of loving God, is to love him without measure. God reckons that we love him not at all, if we love him not above all. 1. We must love him above all, appretiative; so as to prize him in our judgment and esteem above all, and before all things. 2. We are to love God above all things, comparative, preferring his favors above all things, comparatively hating whatever stands in competition with him. 3. We are to love God above all things, intensive. That is, our longing desires must run out after him, we must pant and thirst for the enjoyment of him. 4. We must love every thing in subordination to God, and nothing co-ordinately, or equal with God. Note, 2. That thus to love God is the first and great commandment. Great, in regard of the object, which is God, the first cause, and the chief Good. Great, in regard of the obligation of it. To love God is so indispensable a command, that God himself cannot free us from the obligation of it; for so long as he is God, and we his creatures, we shall lie under a natural and necessary obligation to love and serve him. Great, in regard of the duration of it, when faith shall be swallowed up in vision, and hope in fruition; love will then be perfected in a full enjoyment. Note, 3. That every man may, yea, ought to love himself, not his sinful self, but his natural self, and especially his spiritual self, the new nature in him. This it ought to be his particular care to increase and strengthen. Indeed there is no express command in scripture for a man to love himself, because the light of nature directs, and the law of nature binds and moves every man so to do. God has put a principle of self-love, and of self-preservation into all his creatures, but especially into man. Note, 4. As every man ought to love himself, so it is every man's duty to love his neighbour as himself. 1. Not as he does love himself, but as he ought to love himself. 2. Not in the same degree and measure that he loves himself, but after the same manner, and with the same kind of love that he loves himself. As we love ourselves freely and readily, sincerely and unfeignedly, tenderly, and compassionately, constantly, and perseveringly, so should we love our neighbour. Though we are not commanded to love our neighbour as much as we love ourselves, yet we are to love him like as we love ourselves. Note lastly, That the duties of the first and second table are inseparable. The love of God and our neighbour, must not be parted. "He that loveth not his neighbour whom he hath seen, never loveth God whom he hath not seen." A conscientious regard to the duties of both tables, will be an argument of our sincerity, and an ornament to our profession. Let it then be our prayer and daily endeavour, that "we love the Lord our God with all our heart, and our neighbour as ourselves." For this is the sum of the law and the substance of the gospel.

41 ¶ While the pharisees were gathered together, Jesus asked them, 42 Saying, what think ye of Christ? whose son is he? They say unto him, The Son of David.

43 He saith unto them, How then doth David in spirit call him Lord, saying, 44 The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand, till I make thine enemies thy footstool?

45 If David then call him Lord, how is he his Son?

46 And no man was able to answer him a word; neither durst any man, from that day forth, ask him any more questions.

The pharisees had often put forth several questions maliciously unto Christ, and now Christ puts forth one question innocently unto them; namely, What they thought of the Messiah whom they expected? They reply, that he was to be the Son of David, a secular prince descending from David, that should deliver them from the power of the Romans, and restore them to their civil rights. This was the notion they had of the Messiah, that he should be a man, the Son of David, and nothing more. Our Saviour replies, Whence is it then that David calls the Messiah, Lord? Psalm cx. 1. The Lord said unto my Lord; how could he be both David's Lord, and David's son? No son is lord to his father; therefore if Christ were David's sovereign, he must be more than man, more than David's son. As man, so he was David's son; as God-man, so he was David's Lord. Note hence, That although Christ was truly and really man, yet he was more than a bare man; he was Lord unto, and was the salvation of his own forefathers. Note, 2. That the only way to reconcile the scriptures which speak concerning Christ, is to believe and acknowledge him to be God and man in one person. The Messiah, as a man, who was to come forth out of David's loins; but as a God-man, he was David's Sovereign and Saviour. As man, he was his father's son; as God, he was Lord to his own father.

CHAPTER XXIII.

THEN spake Jesus to the multitude, and to his disciples,

2 Saying, the scribes and the pharisees sit in Moses' seat.

3 All therefore, whatsoever they bid you observe, that observe and do; but do not ye after their works; for they say, and do not.

The scribes and pharisees, so often mentioned in the gospels, were the great doctors and spiritual guides amongst the Jews. Scribe is the name of an office; pharisee the name of a sect. They were both learned in the law, and teachers of the law of Moses. Our blessed Saviour, in the former part of his gospel, held many conferences with these men, and used the most persuasive arguments to convince (No. 7.)

them both of their errors and wickedness. But their obstinacy and malice being such, that neither our Saviour's ministry nor miracles could convince them; hereupon our Lord denounces, in this chapter, eight several woes against them. But first he charitably warns his disciples and the multitude against the pernicious practices of this sort of men, saying, The scribes and pharisees sit in Moses' seat; that is, they teach and expound the law of Moses, which they were wont to do sitting, Whatsoever they bid you observe, that observe and do. That is, "What they teach you consonant to the word of God, and agreeable to the writings of Moses and the prophets: if they go not out of Moses' chair into their own unwritten traditions, follow their doctrine, and obey their precepts: but do not after their works, follow not their example, take heed of their pride and hypocrisy, of their ambition and vain-glory. Obey their doctrine wherein it is sound; but follow not their example wherein it is corrupt." Learn, 1. That the personal miscarriages of ministers, must by no means beget a disesteem of their office and ministry. Charity must teach us to distinguish betwixt the calling and the crime. 2. That the infallible truths of God, recommended to us by a vicious teacher, ought to be entertained and obeyed by us, without either scruple or prejudice. What the pharisees themselves, says Christ, bid you observe, that observe and do. 3. That no people are obliged to follow their teacher's pattern and example any farther than it is agreeable to scripture rule, and conformable to Christ's example: Do not after their works, who say and do not.

4 For they bind heavy burdens, and grievous to be borne, and lay them on men's shoulders; but they themselves will not move them with one of their fingers.

These heavy burdens which the pharisees laid upon the people's shoulders, were counsels and directions, rules and canons, austerities and severities, which the pharisees introduced and imposed upon their hearers, but would not undergo the least part of those severities themselves. If we do not follow our own counsels, we must not think to oblige our people to follow them. No man ought to press upon others what he is unwilling to perform himself. It is very sinful to give that counsel to others, which we refuse to take to ourselves.

5 But all their works they do for to be seen of men: They make broad their phylacteries, and enlarge the borders of their garments.

6 And love the uppermost rooms at feasts, and the chief seats in the synagogues,

7 And greetings in the markets, and to be called of men, Rabbi, Rabbi.

In these words our blessed Saviour admonishes his disciples and the multitude to take heed of imitating the pharisees in their ostentation and hypocrisy, in their ambition and vain-glory; and he instances, in three particulars, wherein they expressed it: 1. All their works, says Christ, they do to be seen of men. To do good works that men may see them, is a duty; but to do all or any of our works to be seen of men, is hypocrisy. 2. "They make broad their phylacteries, and enlarge the borders of their garments." These phylacteries were certain scrolls and labels of parchment, in which were written the ten commandments, and some sections of the law; these they tied to their foreheads, and pinned upon their left sleeve, that the law of God might be continually before their eyes, and perpetually in their remembrance. This ceremony they judged God prescribed them, Deut. vi. 8. "Thou shalt bind them for a sign upon thine hand, and they shall be as frontlets between thine eyes." By enlarging the borders of their garments, our Saviour points at the fringes and blue ribbons which the Jews did wear upon their garments, in obedience to the command, Numb. xv. 37, 38. As the threads in those fringes and ribbons close woven together, did represent the connection, complication, and inseparable conjunction of God's commandments among themselves; so the wearing of these fringes was to put them in mind of the laws of God, that which way soever they turned their eyes, they might meet with some pious admonition to keep the law of God. Now the vain-glorious pharisees, that they might be thought more mindful of the law of God than other men, did make their phylacteries broader, and their fringes thicker and longer than other men. 3. They fondly affected and ambitiously contended for the first and uppermost seats in all conventions, as at feasts, and in the synagogues, and loved to be respectfully saluted in open and public places, and to have titles of honor, such as rabbi, master, father, and doctor, put upon them. Now that which our Saviour condemns, is the pharisees' fond affection of these little things, and unduly seeking their own honor and glory. It was not their taking, but their loving, the uppermost rooms at feasts, that Christ condemns. From the whole, note, 1. That hypocrites are fond of affecting ceremonial observations, and outward parts of commanded duties, neglecting the substance of religion itself. These pharisees were carrying a library of God's law on their clothes, scarce a letter of it in their hearts. They wore the law of God, as frontlets before their eyes, but not engraven on the tables of their hearts. Observe, 2. That the nature of hypocrisy is to study more to seem religious in the sight of men, than to be religious indeed before God. The hypocrite is the world's saint, and not God's: he courts the world's acceptance, more than the divine favor and approbation.

8 But be ye not called Rabbi: for one is your Master, even Christ; and all ye are brethren.

9 And call no man your father upon the earth: for one is your Father, which is in heaven.

10 Neither be ye called masters; for one is your Master, even Christ.

11 But he that is greatest among you shall be your servant.

12 And whosoever shall exalt himself shall be abased; and he that shall humble himself shall be exalted.

The word rabbi signifies a doctor or teacher, eminently endowed with a variety of knowledge whose place it was to sit in an exalted chair, or chief seat in the synagogue; their disciples and scholars sat upon lower forms at the feet of their teachers. Our Saviour doth not simply condemn the giving or receiving of these titles, of rabbi, master, and father; but the things forbidden, are, 1. A vain-glorious affectation of such titles as these, the ambitious seeking of them, and glorying in them. 2. He condemns that authority and dominion over the consciences of men, which the pharisaical doctors had usurped; telling the people that they ought to believe all their doctrines, and practise all their injunctions, as the commands of the living God. They did in effect assume infallibility to themselves. Learn hence, 1. That there have been in all ages of the church a sort of teachers, who have usurped authority and dominion over the faith and consciences of men. 2. That christians ought not to submit their faith and conscience in matters of religion to any human authority whatsoever, nor give up themselves absolutely to the conduct of any man's judgment or opinion in matters of faith. 3. That Christ alone, the great prophet and infallible teacher of his church, is the only person to whose doctrine and precepts we owe absolute faith and obedience: One is our Master, even Christ. 4. As God will abase, and men will despise the proud, especially ministers who are such; so shall God exalt, and men will honor them that stoop to the meanest services for the good of souls: "Whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased." This was a sentence often used by our Saviour, and was a frequent saying among the Jews.

13 ¶ But woe unto you, scribes and pharisees, hypocrites! for ye shut up the kingdom of heaven against men: for ye neither go in yourselves, neither suffer ye them that are entering to go in.

From the thirteenth verse to the thirtieth, the pharisees have eight several woes denounced against them by our Saviour; the first is, for perverting the scriptures, and keeping the true sense and knowledge of them from the people. This St. Matthew calls the shutting up of the kingdom of heaven against men. St. Luke calls it, A taking away the key of knowledge from men, which is an allusion to a known custom among the Jews in admission of their doctors: for those that had authority given them to interpret the law and the prophets, were solemnly admitted into that office, by delivering to them a key and a table-book. So that by the key of knowledge, is meant the interpretation and understanding of the scriptures; and by taking away the key of knowledge is signified, first, that they arrogated to themselves alone the understanding of the scriptures. Secondly, that they kept the true knowledge of the scriptures from the people, especially the prophecies which concerned the Messiah, and so they hindered men from embracing our Saviour's doctrine, who were otherwise well enough disposed for it. Learn hence, 1.

That the knowledge of the holy scriptures is absolutely and indispensably necessary in order to salvation. This our Saviour calls the key, which lets men into the kingdom of heaven. Learn, 2. That great is the guilt, and inexcusable the fault of those who deprive the people of the knowledge of the scriptures. They shut the kingdom of heaven against men, and do what in them lies to hinder their eternal salvation. Men may miscarry with their knowledge, but they are sure to perish for want of knowledge.

14 Woe unto you, scribes and pharisees, hypocrites! for ye devour widows' houses, and for a pretence make long prayer: therefore ye shall receive the greater damnation.

The second woe denounced against the pharisees, is for their gross hypocrisy, in coloring over their covetousness with a pretence of religion: making long prayers in the temple and synagogues for widows, and thereupon persuading them to give bountifully to the corban or the common treasure of the temple, some part of which was employed for their maintenance. Learn, 1. It is no new thing for designing hypocrites to cover the foulest transgressions with the cloak of religion. The pharisees make long prayers a cover for their covetousness. 2. That to make use of religion in policy for worldly advantage sake, is the way to be damned with a vengeance for religion sake: Woe unto you scribes, &c.

15 Woe unto you, scribes and pharisees, hypocrites! for ye compass sea and land to make one proselyte; and, when he is made, ye make him two-fold more the child of hell than yourselves.

The next woe denounced is for their false-ended zeal and earnestness in proselyting heathens to the Jewish religion; not with a pious intention to save them, but to serve themselves upon them, to have their consciences and purses under their power: and when you have poisoned them, says our Saviour, by your corrupt doctrine, and hardened them in a course of sin by your wicked example, they are more the children of hell than before you practised upon them. Learn, 1. Great is the diligence and indefatigable the industry which false teachers use in gaining proselytes to their opinion and party: They compass sea and land to make one proselyte. 2. That such as are proselyted to error, are oftentimes faster riveted in their false opinions than their teachers themselves: "They are made two-fold more the children of hell than yourselves."

16 Woe unto you, ye blind guides! which say, Whosoever shall swear by the temple, it is nothing; but whosoever shall swear by the gold of the temple, he is a debtor.

17 Ye fools, and blind! for whether is greater, the gold, or the temple that sanctifieth the gold?

18 And, Whosoever shall swear by the altar, it is nothing; but whosoever sweareth by the gift that is upon it, he is guilty.

19 Ye fools, and blind! for whether is greater, the gift or the altar that sanctifieth the gift?

20 Whoso, therefore, shall swear by the altar, sweareth by it, and by all things thereon.

21 And whoso shall swear by the temple, sweareth by it, and by him that dwelleth therein.

22 And he that shall swear by heaven, sweareth by the throne of God, and by him that sitteth thereon.

The fourth woe which our Saviour denounceeth against the pharisees is for their false and erroneous doctrine concerning oaths. 1. They taught men to swear by the creatures. 2. They taught that some oaths made by the creatures were obligatory and binding, others not; particularly they affirmed, that "If a man swear by the temple, or the altar, it was nothing;" that is, he was not bound by such an oath; but "if a man swear by the gold of the temple, and the altar;" that is, by the gifts offered to the corban, or treasury of the temple, and by the sacrifices and oblations on the altar; such an oath, they affirmed, was binding, because it was for their profit that the gifts on the altar; and the gold brought into the treasury, should be accounted most holy, seeing that would encourage the people to be more ready to contribute and offer. This horrid hypocrisy and covetousness our blessed Saviour here sharply reproves, and shows, that oaths made by the creatures, though unlawful, yet being once made, did oblige, as if the parties had sworn by God himself. For he that swears by the temple, swears by it and him that dwelleth therein. Learn, 1. That swearing by the creatures is no new sin, but as old as the pharisees. 2. That swearing by the creatures is a great profanation of the name of God, and a mighty provocation to him. 3. That is notwithstanding, if the matter of such oaths be not sinful, they are obligatory and binding. He that sweareth by the creatures, sweareth indeed by the God of the creatures; "for," says our Saviour, "he that sweareth by the heavens, sweareth by the throne of God, and by him that sitteth thereon."

23 Woe unto you, scribes and pharisees, hypocrites! for ye pay tythe of mint and annise, and cummin, and have omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith: these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone.

24 Ye blind guides! which strain at a gnat, and swallow a camel.

The next woe denounced is for the pharisees' ostentation of a precise keeping of the law in smaller matters, and neglecting weightier duties: They paid tythe of mint, anise, and cummin; but at the same time omitted judgment, mercy, and faith, that is, just dealing with men, charity towards the poor, and faithfulness in their promises and covenants one with another. This, says our Saviour, is to strain at a gnat, and swallow a camel. A proverbial expression, intimating, that some persons pretend great niceness and scrupulosity about small matters, and none or but little about duties of the greatest moment. Hence note, 1. That hypocrites lay the greatest stress upon the least matters in religion, and place holiness most in those things where God places it least. "Ye tythe mint, &c. but neglect the weightier matters of the law." This is indeed the bane of all religion and true piety, to prefer ritual and human institutions before divine commands, and the practice of natural religion. Thus to do, is a certain sign of gross hypocrisy. Observe, 2. That although some duties are of greater moment than others, yet a good man will omit none, but perform every duty, the least as well as the greatest, in obedience to the command of God. "These things ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone."

25 Woe unto you, scribes and pharisees, hypocrites! for ye make clean the outside of the cup and of the platter, but within they are full of extortion and excess.

26 Thou blind pharisee! cleanse first that which is within the cup and platter, that the outside of them may be clean also.

Our Saviour doth not here condemn their legal or traditional washing of pots or cups, or any external decency and cleanliness in conversation; but his design is to show them the vanity of outward purity, without inward sanctity, and to convince them of the necessity of cleansing the heart, in order to the purifying and reforming the life: plainly intimating, 1. That men's lives could not be so bad, if their hearts were not worse, all the obliquity of their lives proceeding from the impurity of their hearts and natures. 2. That an holy heart will be accompanied with an holy life. A man may be outwardly pure, and yet inwardly filthy; but he that has a pure heart will live a pure and holy life. Cleanse "that which is within the cup, that the outside may be clean also."

27 Woe unto you, scribes and pharisees, hypocrites! for ye are like unto whited sepulchres which, indeed, appear beautiful outward, but are within full of dead men's bones, and of all uncleanness.

28 Even so ye also outwardly appear righteous unto men, but within ye are full of hypocrisy and iniquity.

Here we have a woe denounced against the pharisees for cheating and deceiving the people with an outward show, an external appearance of piety and religion: their lives were seemingly very religious, but their hearts were full of hypocrisy and impurity, like sepulchres painted without, and full of rottenness within. Whence learn, That the great design of hypocrisy is to cheat the world with a vain and empty show of piety. The ambition of the hypocrite is to be thought good, not to be so; he is the world's saint not God's.

29 Woe unto you, scribes and pharisees, hypocrites! because ye build the tombs of the prophets, and garnish the sepulchres of the righteous.

30 And say, If we had been in the days of our fathers, we would not have been partakers with them in the blood of the prophets.

31 Wherefore ye be witnesses unto yourselves, that ye are the children of them which killed the prophets.

32 Fill ye up then the measure of your fathers.

33 Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers! how can ye escape the damnation of hell?

This is the eighth woe denounced by our blessed Saviour against the pharisees for their grand hypocrisy, in pretending great honor to the saints departed, building their tombs, and garnishing their sepulchres, and declaring against their fathers' impiety, That "had they lived in their days, they would not have been partakers with them in the blood of the prophets." Now their hypocrisy appeared in three particulars. 1. In that they continued in their own wickedness, and yet recommended the saints departed; they magnify the saints, but multiply their sins, and instead of imitating their virtues, they content themselves with garnishing their sepulchres. 2. In professing great respect to the dead saints, and at the same time persecuting the living. Palpable hypocrisy! And yet as gross as it is, it prevails to this day. The church of Rome, who magnify martyrs, and canonize saints departed, have yet added to their numbers, by shedding of their blood. 3. In taking false measures of their love to the saints departed, from their building their tombs, and garnishing their sepulchres; whereas the best evidence of our love unto them is the imitating their virtues, and cherishing their followers. It is gross hypocrisy to pay respect to the relics of saints, and veneration to their images; and at the same time to persecute and afflict their followers.

Learn hence, 1. That the world has all along loved the dead saints better than living ones. Mortui non mordent. The dead saints' example, how bright soever, is not so scorching and troublesome at a distance; and he himself no longer stands in other men's light, whereas the living saints' example is a cutting reproof to sin and vice. Observe, 2. That there is a certain civility in human nature, which leads men to a just commendation of the dead and to a due estimation of their worth. The pharisees here, though they persecuted the prophets whilst alive, yet had they a mighty veneration for their piety and virtue after they were dead, and thought no honor too great to be done unto them. Note, 3. That it is the grossest hypocrisy to pretend to love goodness, and yet hate and persecute good men. These hypocritical pharisees pretended highly to piety and religion, and at the same time killed the prophets, and stoned them that were sent unto them. 4. That the highest honor we can pay to the saints departed, is not by raising monuments, and building tombs to their memory; but by a careful imitation of their piety and virtue, following the holiness of their lives, and their patience and constancy at their deaths.

34 ¶ Wherefore, behold, I send unto you prophets, and wise men, and scribes; and some of them ye shall kill and crucify; and some of them shall ye scourge in your synagogues, and persecute them from city to city:

35 That upon you may come all the righteous blood shed upon the earth, from the blood of righteous Abel unto the blood of Zacharias, son of Barachias, whom ye slew between the temple and the altar.

36 Verily I say unto you, All these things shall come upon this generation.

Observe here, A prophetic prediction and a severe denunciation. 1. A prediction foretelling what cruel usage the apostles should meet with from the Jews, killing and crucifying some, scourging and stoning others; which accordingly was fulfilled in the crucifying of St. Peter, the scourging of St. Paul, in the stoning of St. Stephen, and killing of St. James. The first planters and propagators of the gospel sealed their doctrine with their blood, and the blood of the martyrs has all along been the seed of the church. Observe, 2. A severe denunciation, "That upon you may come all the righteous blood shed upon the earth from Abel to Zacharias, the son of Jehoiada," 2 Chron. xxiv. 20. who was the last prophet whose murder is related by name in the Old Testament. These words are not to be understood as if the end and intent of Christ's sending the prophets were that the Jews might put them to death, and bring their righteous blood upon themselves. This was the consequence and event indeed of their sending, but by no means the design and intent of it. Learn, 1. That raging persecutors have no regard either to the extraordinary mission, or eminent sanctity of persons who reprove them for sins. I sent unto you prophets, says our Saviour, wise men and scribes, and some of them ye shall kill and crucify. 2. That as the piety of persons, so neither can the sanctity of the place discourage and deter bloody persecutors from their rage and fury against the prophets of God. In the temple itself, in the court of the house of the Lord even betwixt the porch and the altar, was Zacharias slain. That it is a righteous thing with God to punish god men for the impie-ties of their parents; this is to be understood, 1. Where the children tread in their fathers' steps, and continue in their parents' sins; which they do, if they do not confess them, abhor them, and be humbled for them. 2. This is to be understood of temporal evils, not of eternal punishments. No man shall for his father's sins lie down in everlasting burnings. As our fathers' faith will not let us into heaven, so neither will their impiety shut us into hell. At the day of judgment every man shall be separately considered according to his deeds.

(No. 7)

37 O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not!

38 Behold, your house is left unto you desolate.

39 For I say unto you, Ye shall not see me henceforth, till ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord.

Our Lord concludes this chapter with a pathetic lamentation over Jerusalem. His imprecation or doubling of the word, O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, shows the vehemency of Christ's affection towards them, and the sincerity of his desires for their salvation. Observe, 1. The great kindness and compassion of Christ to the Jews in general, and Jerusalem in particular, set forth by a lively metaphor and similitude: that of a hen gathering her chickens under her wings. As the hen doth tenderly cherish, and carefully hide and cover her young from the eye of the destroyer; so would Christ have shrouded and sheltered his people from all those birds of prey, and particularly from the Roman eagle, by which they were at last devoured. Again, As the hen continueth her call to her young ones from morning to night, and holds out her wings for shelter to them all the day long, so did Christ wait for his people's repentance and conversion for more than forty years after they had killed his prophets, and murdered himself, before they met with a final overthrow. Observe, 2. The amazing obstinacy and wilfulness of this people, in rejecting this grace and favor, this kindness and condescension of the Lord Jesus Christ: I would have gathered you, but ye would not. Observe, 3. The fatal issue of this obstinacy, Behold your house is left unto you desolate. Is left; that is certainly and suddenly will be so. The present tense put for the paulo post futurum, it denotes both the certainty and nearness of this people's ruin. Learn, 1. That the ruin and destruction of sinners is wholly chargeable upon themselves; that is, on their own wilfulness and obstinacy: I would have gathered you, says Christ but ye would not. Learn, 2. How deplorably and inexcusably they will perish, who perish by their own wilfulness under the gospel. 3. That there is no desire like unto God's desire of a people's repentance; no longing like unto God's longing for a people's salvation: O Jerusa- lem, Jerusalem, how often would I have gathered thee? When shall it once be? Christ did very seriously desire the conversion of the Jews, who continued still in their impenitency and unbelief. And consequently they whom he so seriously desired to convert, might have been converted, but they would not be so: I would have gathered you, but ye would not.

CHAPTER XXIV.

AND Jesus went out, and departed from the temple: and his disciples came to him, for to show him the build-ings of the temple.

2 And Jesus said unto them, See ye not all these things? Verily I say unto you, There shall not be left here one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down.

Our blessed Saviour had often acquainted his disciples with his approaching death at Jerusalem. "The Son of man must go up to Jerusalem to be crucified." Now in this chapter he acquaints them with the destruction that should come upon Jerusalem in general, and upon the temple in particular, for their putting him the Son of God to death. The disciples looking upon the temple with wonder and admiration, were apt to think that the temple, in regard of its invincible strength could not be destroyed; or, at the least in regard of its incredible magnificence it was a great pity it should be destroyed; and accordingly they say to Christ, "See what goodly buildings are here." As if they had said, Master, what great pity it is, that such a magnificent structure should become a ruinous heap! But hence we learn, 1. That sin brings cities and kingdoms, as well as particular and private persons to their end. There are no places so strong, but an Almighty God is able to destroy them: and sin is sufficient to lay them waste. Observe, 2. That the threatenings of God are to be feared, and shall be fulfilled, whatever appearing improbabilities there may be to the contrary. God had threatened Jerusalem with destruction for her sin, and now it is not all her strength that can oppose his power. Learn, 3. That notwithstanding magnificence and worldly glory doth mightily dazzle our eye, yet how little doth it affect Christ's heart. Even the temple itself, that most magnificent structure, Christ values no more than a heap of rubbish, when the impiety of the worshippers had devoted it to destruction. Not one stone, says Christ shall be left upon another unthrown down. This threatening was fulfilled forty years after Christ's death, when Titus the Roman emperor destroyed the city, and burnt the temple, and Turnus Rufus, the general of his army, ploughed up the very foundation upon which the temple stood. Thus was the threatening of God fulfilled, Jer. xxvi. 18. "Zion shall be ploughed as a field, and Jerusalem shall become heaps." The truth and veracity, the faithfulness and fidelity of God, is as much concerned in the execution of his threatenings, as in the performance of his promises.

3 ¶ And as he sat upon the mount of Olives, the disciples came unto him privately, saying, Tell us, when shall these things be? And what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?

4 And Jesus answered and said unto them, Take heed that no man deceive you:

5 For many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ; and shall deceive many.

A double question is here propounded by the disciples to our Saviour. First, As to the time of the temple's destruction. Secondly, As to the signs of that destruction. As to the former, the time when the temple should be destroyed. See the curiosity of human nature, both in desiring to know what should be hereafter, and also when that hereafter should be. Thence learn, That there is found with all of us an itching curiosity and desire, rather to inquire and pry into the hidden counsels of God's secret will than to obey the manifest declarations of God's revealed will: Tell us when these things shall be. As to their second question, What shall be the sign of thy coming? Our Saviour acquaints them with this, among many others, That there should arise false Christs, false prophets, and seducers, a multitude of impostors, that would draw many after them; therefore he bids them, Take heed and beware. Where observe, That Christ doth not gratify his disciples' curiosity, but acquaints them with their present duty, to watch against deceivers and seducers, who should have the impudence to affirm themselves to be Christ. Some, Christ personal, or the Messiah: others, Christ doctrinal affirming their erroneous opinions to be Christ's mind and doctrine. From the whole, Note, 1. That there will be many seducers, many erroneous persons, and false opinion, before the end of the world; for Jerusalem's destruction was a type and emblem of the world's destruction. 2. That such seducers will come in Christ's name, and their errors and false opinions shall be given out to be the mind of Christ. 3. That many will be seduced and carried away with their fair pretences and plausible deceits. 4. That Christ's own disciples had need to take heed, lest they themselves, "being led away by the error of the wicked, do fall from their own steadfastness. Take heed that no man deceive you: for many will come in my name, saying, I am Christ, and shall deceive many."

6 And ye shall hear of wars, and rumors of wars; see that ye be not troubled; for all these things must come to pass, but the end is not yet.

7 For nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom: and there shall be famines, and pestilences, and earthquakes, in divers places.

8 All these are the beginning of sorrows.

The next sign which our Saviour gives his disciples of Jerusalem's destruction, is the many broils and commotions, civil discords and dissensions, that should be found amongst the Jews: "famines, pestilences, and earthquakes, fearful sights, and signs in the air." And Josephus declares, That there appeared in the air chariots and horses, men skirmishing in the clouds, and encompassing the city: and that a blazing star, in fashion of a sword, hung over the city for a year together. Learn, 1. That war, pestilence, and famine, are judgments and calamities inflicted by God upon a sinful people for their contempt of Christ and gospel grace. Ye shall hear of wars, famine, and pestilence. 2. That although these be mighty and terrible judgments, yet are they the forerunners of worse judgments. All these are the beginnings of sorrows.

9 Then shall they deliver you up to be afflicted, and shall kill you: and ye shall be hated of all nations for my name's sake.

10 And then shall many be offended, and shall betray one another, and shall hate one another.

11 And many false prophets shall rise, and shall deceive many.

12 And, because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold.

13 But he that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved.

Our Saviour here goes on in giving farther signs of the destruction of Jerusalem. 1. He declares the sharp persecutions which should fall upon the apostles themselves; They shall kill you. Thence learn, That the keenest and sharpest edge of persecution is usually turned against the ambassadors of Christ, and falls heaviest on the ministers of God. Ye shall be hated and killed. The next sign is, the apostacy of professors upon the account of these persecutions: "Then shall many be offended, and shall betray one another, and hate one another." Learn hence, That the times of persecution for christianity, are constantly times of apostacy from the christian profession. 2. That apostates are usually the bitterest persecutors: Omnis apostata est osor sui ordinis. They shall betray one another, and hate one another. A third sign is the abounding of false teachers: Many false prophets shall arise and shall deceive many. Where note, That the fair pretences and subtle practices of heretical teachers have drawn off many from the truth; whom open persecution could not drive from it. A fourth sign is, the decay and abatement of zeal for God, and love one to another; The love of many shall wax cold, that is, both towards God and towards man. When iniquity abounds, trouble waxes hot: and when trouble waxes hot, false love waxeth cold, and true love waxes colder than it was before: the cold blasts of persecution blow up the love of a few, but blow out the love of many more. These are the signs laid down by our Saviour, foretelling the destruction of Jerusalem: and forasmuch as Jerusalem's destruction was not only a forerunner, but a figure of Christ's coming to judgment, these are also the signs foretelling the approach of that dreadful day. Verse 13. He that endureth to the end, the same shall be saved. Our Saviour closes his discourse with an exhortation to constancy and perseverance: teaching us, that there is no such way to overcome temptation and persecution, as by keeping our integrity, and persevering in our fidelity to Christ. 2. That constancy and perseverance in our integrity and fidelity towards Christ, is sometimes attended with temporal salvation and deliverance in this life, but shall certainly be rewarded with eternal salvation in the next: He that endureth unto the end, the same shall be saved.

14 And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come.

Here our blessed Saviour comforts his disciples with a threefold consideration. 1. That his gospel, how hated and persecuted soever, shall be plainly and persuasively preached: This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached. Therefore called the gospel of the kingdom, because it discovers the way to the kingdom of heaven. Observe, 2. The extent of the gospel's publication, it shall be preached unto all nations, that is to the Gentile world; not only among the Jews, but among the chief and principal nations of the Gentiles. Observe, 3. The design and end of the gospel's publication, and that is, for a witness or testimony; namely, for a witness of God's grace and mercy offered to sinners, and of their obstinacy who reject it. Learn thence, That the preaching of the gospel, wherever it comes, proves a testimony to them to whom it comes. To the humble and teachable, it is a testimony for, to the scorers and despisers, it is a testimony against; or, in the words of the apostle, 2 Cor. ii. "To some it is the savor of death unto death, to others the savor of life unto life."

15 When ye, therefore, shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place, (whoso readeth, let him understand.)

The sense is, when ye shall see the armies of the Romans, who are an abomination unto you, and an occasion of great desolation where they go; when you shall see that abominable, dissolute army, begirting the holy city of Jerusalem, then call to mind the prophecy of Daniel, which primarily belonged to Antiochus, but secondarily to Titus, and shall now be fully completed: for the seed shall not be raised, till both city and temple be razed to the ground." Learn thence, That God has instruments ready at his call to lay waste the strongest cities, and to ruin the most flourishing kingdoms, which do oppose the tenders of his grace, and can make those whom most men abhor, to be the occasion of their destruction.

16 Then let them which be in Judea, flee into the mountains :

17 Let him which is on the house-top not come down to take any thing out of his house ;

18 Neither let him which is in the field return back to take his clothes.

The meaning is, "As soon as you shall see the Roman army appear before the city of Jerusalem, let every one that values his own safety, fly as far and as fast as he can, even as Lot fled out of Sodom ; and let such as fly be glad if by flight they can save their lives, though they lose their goods, their clothes, and all things beside." From hence, Learn, 1. That when Almighty God is pouring forth his fury upon a sinful people, it is lawful, yea, a necessary duty, by flight to endeavour the hiding and sheltering of themselves from the approaching calamity and desolation : "When ye shall see Jerusalem encompassed with armies, then flee to the mountains." 2. That in case of flight before a bloody enemy and army, if we lose all that we have, and our lives be given us, we fare well, and the Lord deals very mercifully with us.

19 And woe unto them that are with child, and to them that give suck, in those days !

20 But pray that your flight be not in the winter, neither on the sabbath-day :

Here our Saviour declares the doleful distress of those that could not flee from the siege of Jerusalem ; as women big with child, and such as give suck, who by that means are like to lose their lives. And he farther adds, that it should increase their calamity if their flight should happen to be in the winter, when none can fly either fast or far : or if they should be forced to flee on the sabbath-day, when the Jews scrupled travelling farther than a sabbath-day's journey, which was about two miles. From hence, Learn, That it is a great addition to the trouble and disquiet of a good man's spirit, when the day of his spiritual rest is interrupted : and instead of enjoying communion with God in his house, he is driven from house and home, and flees before the face of an enraged enemy, Pray ye, says our Saviour, that your flight be not on the sabbath-day ; that being a day of holy rest.

21 For then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be.

22 And except those days should be shortened there should no flesh be saved : but for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened.

The doleful miseries, and dreadful calamities which were coming upon the Jews in general, and upon Jerusalem in particular, are here foretold by our Saviour, partly from the Roman army without, and partly from the seditions and factions of the zealots within, who committed such outrages and slaughters, that there were no less than an hundred thousand slain, and ninety-seven thousand carried away captive and made prisoners. They that bought our Saviour for thirty pence, were now themselves sold thirty for a penny. Now did the temple itself become a sacrifice, a whole burnt-offering, and was consumed to ashes. Yet observe, Christ promises that these calamitous days shall be shortened, for the elect's sake. God had a remnant which he determined, should survive this destruction, to be an holy seed ; and accordingly the providence of God so ordered, that the city was taken in six months, and the whole country depopulated in eighteen. Whence observe, How the Lord intermixes some mercy with the extremest misery that doth befall a people for their sin. On this side hell, no sinner can say that they feel the strokes of justice to the uttermost, or that they have judgment without mercy.

23 Then if any man shall say unto you, Lo, here is Christ, or there ; believe it not.

24 For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders ; insomuch that if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect.

25 Behold, I have told you before.

26 Wherefore if they shall say unto you, Behold, he is in the desert ; go not forth : behold, he is in the secret chambers ; believe it not.

The Jews had all along cherished in themselves a vain expectation, that the promised Messiah should be a temporal deliverer, that should set them at liberty from the power and slavery of the Romans ; and accordingly Christ declares to his disciples here, that immediately before Jerusalem's destruction, several persons taking the advantage of this expectation, would make themselves heads of parties, and pretend that they were the true Messiah, who would save and deliver them from their enemies, if they would repair to them, and follow after them. Hereupon our Lord cautions his disciples against such false Christs, and prophets, and bids them believe them not, though they did ever so many great signs and wonders, and promised them never such glorious deliverances. Learn hence, That the church's greatest danger is from seducers that come in Christ's name, and pretend to work signs and wonders by his authority. 2. That such is the power of seduction and delusion, that many are carried away with seducers and false teachers. 3. That the elect themselves, if left unto themselves, might be seduced ; but Divine Power guards them against seduction and delusion : They shall deceive, if it were possible, the very elect. Which phrase imports not what the event would be upon the elect, but the vehemency of the endeavours of seducers ; namely, that they would do the utmost that they could, to shock the christian, and cause him to fall from his steadfastness.

27 For as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be.

There is a threefold coming of Christ spoken of in the New Testament. 1. His coming in his spiritual kingdom by the preaching of the gospel among the Gentiles. 2. His coming to destroy Jerusalem forty years after his ascension. 3. His final coming to judgment at the great day. All these comings of the Son of man, for their suddenness and unexpectedness, are compared unto lightning, which in a moment breaketh out of the east, and shineth unto the west. Learn hence, That the coming and appearance of the Lord Jesus Christ, to the judging of the wicked and impenitent sinners, will be a very certain, sudden, and unexpected appearance.

28 For wheresoever the carcass is, there will the eagles be gathered together.

If the coming of Christ be understood in the former verse of his coming to destroy Jerusalem, then by the carcass in this verse are to be understood the people of Jerusalem, and the body of the Jewish nation; and by eagles are to be understood the Roman armies, who carried an eagle in their standard. These were the instruments which Almighty God made use of as his rod and scourge to chastise and punish the people of Jerusalem. Learn thence, That the appointed messengers of God's wrath, and the instruments of his vengeance, will certainly gather together, certainly find out, and severely punish and plague, an impenitent people devoted to destruction. Where the carcass is (the body of the Jewish nation) there will the eagles (the Roman soldiers) be gathered together.

29 ¶ Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken:

30 And then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven:—

Our Saviour goes on in figurative expressions to set forth the calamities that should befall the Jewish nation, immediately after the destruction of Jerusalem: the sun shall be darkened: that is, all their glory and excellency shall be eclipsed, all their wealth and prosperity shall be laid waste, the whole government, civil and ecclesiastical, destroyed; and such marks of misery found upon them, as never were seen upon a people. By the sign of the Son of man, the papists will have it understood the sign of the cross. Others understand it of those prodigies which were seen a little before the destruction of Jerusalem, which Josephus mentions; as namely, a comet in the form of a sword hanging over the city for a year together: a light in the temple and about the altar, seen at midnight for half an hour: a cow led by the priest to be sacrificed, calved a lamb: a voice heard in the temple, saying, Abeamus hinc. "Let us go (No. 7.)

hence." Learn hence, God premonishes before he punishes; he warns a people of destruction often, before he destroys them once.

—And then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory.

31 And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, and from one end of heaven to the other.

Then shall the tribes mourn: that is, then shall the Jews be convinced that their destruction was the punishment of their sin, in rejecting and crucifying Christ; and accordingly they that pierced him, shall behold him, and mourn over him. Thus it was before the destruction of Jerusalem, and thus will it be before the final judgment. They that pierced him shall be brought before him. Lord, how will the sight of a pierced Christ pierce their souls with horror! they who have not seen a pierced Christ in the sorrows of repentance, shall hereafter see him in the sorrows of despair. To behold Christ with the eye of sense hereafter, will be very dreadful and terrible to all those that have not beheld him with an eye of faith here. "And he shall send his angels with the sound of a trumpet." Those that apply this to the destruction of Jerusalem, by the angels, understand the ministers of the gospel, who by the trumpet of the word did bring in believers throughout all Judea, who were saved from that destruction. Those who understand it of the general judgment, take it literally, that Christ at the great day will send forth his holy angels, and gather all his elect to himself with the sound of a trumpet. Probably, as there was an audible sound of a trumpet at the giving of the law, so there shall be the like sound of a trumpet, when Christ shall summon the world to judgment, for transgressing of the law. A joyful sound will this be to the friends of Christ; a doleful, dreadful sound in the ears of his enemies.

32 ¶ Now learn a parable of the fig-tree; When his branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh:

33 So likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, know that it is near, even at the doors.

34 Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass till these things be fulfilled.

35 Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away.

36 ¶ But of that day and hour knoweth.

no man, not the angels of heaven, but my Father only.

Here our blessed Saviour declares two things with reference to his coming. 1. The certainty of the thing itself. 2. The uncertainty of the time. The certainty of his coming he sets forth by the similitude of the fig-tree, who beginning to bud declares the summer at hand. Thus when they shall see the fore-mentioned signs, they might conclude the destruction of their city and temple to be nigh at hand, and that some then living should see all these predictions certainly fulfilled. What Christ foretels shall certainly be fulfilled, his word being more firm than the fabric of heaven and earth. Observe, 2. The uncertainty as to the precise time, when this judgment should come. No angel in heaven, nor creature on earth could determine the time, only the glorious persons in the Godhead: the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. Learn, 1. That all things are not revealed to the angels themselves, but such things only as concern them to know, and the wisdom of God thinks fit to reveal. 2. That the precise time of the day of judgment is kept by God as a secret to himself. He will not have us know that hour, to the intent that we may be upon the watch every hour.

37 But as the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be.

38 For as in the days that were before the flood, they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the ark, 39 And knew not until the flood came, and took them all away; so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be.

40 Then shall two be in the field; the one shall be taken, and the other left.

41 Two women shall be grinding at the mill; the one shall be taken and the other left.

In these verses our Saviour declares that Jerusalem's destruction, and the world's final desolation at the great day, would be much like the destruction of the old world; and that in two respects: 1. In regard of unexpectedness. 2. In regard of security and sensuality. How sensual and secure was the old world before the flood? "They were eating and drinking, and marrying and giving in marriage." That is, wholly given to sensuality and debauchery, and did not know of the flood's coming; that is, did not consider it, till the flood swept them away. Thus was it in the destruction of Jerusalem; and so it will be in the end of the world. Learn hence, 1. That as the old world perished by infidelity, security, and sensuality, so will the same sins be prevailing, before the destruction of the present world. "As it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be when the Son of man cometh." That the true reason why sinners are drowned in sensuality, and given over to security, is this, because they do not believe the certainty, or consider the proximity and nearness of an approaching judgment. The old world knew not of the flood's coming. Strange! When Noah had told them of it an hundred and twenty years together. The meaning is, they did not consider it, and prepare for it. To such as are unprepared for, and unapprehensive of death and judgment, those evils are always sudden, although men are so often warned of them. But to such as are prepared, death is never sudden, let them die ever so suddenly.

42 Watch, therefore; for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come.

43 But know this, that if the good man of the house had known in what watch the thief would come, he would have watched, and would not have suffered his house to be broken up.

44 Therefore be ye also ready: for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh.

Here we have the application made by our Saviour of the foregoing doctrine concerning the certainty and suddenness of a future judgment. Watch therefore always; not without intermission, but without giving over; that ye may be not only in an habitual, but actual readiness for my appearance. Learn thence, That it is the indispensable duty, and ought to be the indefatigable endeavour of every christian, to stand upon his watch in a prepared readiness for Christ's appearance, both for his coming to us, and for our going to him. Watch always, for ye know not the hour when your Lord cometh.

45 Who then is a faithful and wise servant, whom his lord hath made ruler over his household, to give them meat in due season?

46 Blessed is that servant whom his lord, when he cometh, shall find so doing.

47 Verily I say unto you, That he shall make him ruler over all his goods.

These words may be applied two ways, 1. To all the faithful servants of Christ in general. Thence Learn, That for a person to spend and end his days in the service of Christ, and doing his will, gives good assurance of a blessed condition. Blessed is that servant. 2. To the ministers of the gospel in special, may these words be applied. And here Observe, 1. The character and duty of a gospel minister: he is the steward of Christ's household, to give them their meat in due season. Observe, 2. The qualifications requisite in such stewards, faithfulness and prudence. Who then is that faithful and wise steward? Observe, 3. The reward insured to such stewards as answer these qualifications: Blessed is that servant. Learn hence, 1. That the ministers of the gospel are in a special sense the stewards of Christ's household. 2. That faithfulness and prudence are the necessary and indispensable qualifications of Christ's stewards. 3. That wherever these qualifications are found, Christ will graciously and abundantly reward them. Our faithfulness must respect God, ourselves, and our flock, and includes our integrity of heart, purity of intention, industry of endeavour, impartiality in our administration. Prudence appears in the choice of suitable subjects, in the choice of fit language, in exciting our own affections, in order to the moving of our people. Ministerial prudence will teach us, by the strictness and gravity of our deportment, to maintain our esteem in the consciences of our people. It will assist us to bear reproach, and direct us to give reproof: he that is silent cannot be innocent: reprove we must, or we cannot be faithful; but prudently, or we cannot be successful.

48 But and if that evil servant shall say in his heart, My lord delayeth his coming:

49 And shall begin to smite his fellow-servants, and to eat and drink with the drunken;

50 The lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of.

51 And shall cut him asunder, and appoint him his portion with the hypocrites: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

Our Lord in these verses describes an unfaithful and negligent steward, and denounces the dreadful sentence of wrath hanging over him. He is described. 1. By the character of infidelity, he believeth not Christ's coming to judgment, though he preaches it to others; he saith in his heart, My Lord delayeth his coming. 2. He is described by his hatred, envy, and malignity, against his fellow-servants, that were more painful and faithful than himself. He begins to smite, at least with the virulence of his tongue, if not with the violence of his hand. 3. By his associating with the wicked, and strengthening their hands by his ill example. He eateth and drinketh with the drunken; that is, as their associate and fellow companion. Thus the unfaithful servant is described; next his judgment and sentence is declared. Observe, 2. The tremendous judgment that shall come upon unfaithful stewards. 1. Christ will surprise them in their sin and security, by coming in an hour when they look not for him. 2. He will execute temporal vengeance upon them; he will cut them asunder; or hew them in pieces, as the Jews did their sacrifices; that is, separate their souls from their bodies by untimely death. Hence some observe, That God seldom suffers slothful, sensual, wicked, and debauched ministers, to live out half their days. 3. Christ will punish them with eternal destruction also: appointing them their portion with hypocrites; that is, with the worst of sinners, they shall have a double damnation. As the hypocrite has a double tongue, a double heart, and is a double sinner, so shall he undergo a double damnation. Learn hence, That such ministers as neglect the service of God, and the souls of their people; as they are ranked amongst the worst of sinners in this life, so shall they be punished with them in the severest manner in the next. When satan destroys the souls of men, he shall answer for it as a murderer only, not as an officer that was intrusted with the care of the soul. But if the steward doth not provide, if the shepherd doth not feed, if the watchman doth not warn, they shall answer not only for the souls that have miscarried, but for an office neglected, for a talent hidden, and for a stewardship unfaithfully administered. Woe unto us, if at the great day we hear distressed souls roaring out their complaints and howling forth that doleful accusation against us; "Lord! our stewards have defrauded us, our watchmen have betrayed us, our guides have misled us!"

CHAPTER XXV.

Our blessed Saviour, in the close of the foregoing chapter, had exhorted all Christians to the great duty of watchfulness, and to be in a posture of readiness against his coming. Which duty he is pleased to inculcate again in this chapter, and accordingly he urges the necessity of it from two eminent parables: the former, Of the ten virgins, ver. 1. and the latter, Of a man travelling into a far country, ver. 14.

THEN shall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins, which took their lamps, and went forth to meet the bridegroom.

2 And five of them were wise, and five were foolish.

By the kingdom of heaven here, is meant the state of the visible church on earth; it cannot be understood of the kingdom of glory, for there are no foolish virgins in that kingdom; nor yet of the invisible kingdom of grace, for therein are no foolish virgins neither. But in the visible church here on earth, there ever has been a mixture of wise and unwise, of saints and hypocrites. "Five of these virgins were wise, and five were foolish. Where observe, Our Lord's great charity, in supposing and hoping, that amongst the professors of the gospel, the number of sincere christians is equal with hypocritical professors. "Five were wise, and five were foolish." Teaching us, that we should not confine the church of Christ within a narrow compass, nor confine our charity to a few, and think none shall go to heaven but those of our own party and persuasion, but to extend our charity to all christians that hold the foundation with us, and to hope well of them. Lord! let me rather err on the charitable hand, than be found on the censorious and damning side! This is to imitate my Saviour, whose charity supposed as many wise as foolish virgins, as many saints as hypocrites, in the church. All these virgins are said to take their lamps, and go forth to meet the bridegroom. For understanding which, we must know that our Saviour alludes to the ancient custom of marriages, which were celebrated in the night; when usually ten young men attended the bridegroom, and as many virgins attended the bride, with lamps in their hands; the bridegroom leading home his bride by the light of those lamps. By these virgins are shadowed forth the professors of christianity. The foolish virgins are such as satisfy themselves with a bare profession, without bringing forth fruits answerable thereunto. The wise virgins are such as walked answerably to their profession, persevered and continued steadfast therein, and abounded in the graces and virtues of a good life. They are called wise virgins, for the purity of their faith, for the purity of their worship, and for the purity of their conversations.

3 They that were foolish took their lamps, and took no oil with them :

4 But the wise took oil in their vessels with their lamps.

By the lamps is meant an outward profession of faith and holiness. By the oil in their lamps is to be understood that solemn profession of repentance and faith, which all christians make in baptism. By oil in their vessels, are meant the sanctifying and saving graces of the Holy Spirit; the growth and improvement of them, with constancy and perseverance in them. Observe here, Wherein the wise and foolish virgins agreed, and wherein they differed; they agreed thus far, that both took their lamps, both lighted them, they both had oil in their lamps: the difference was not that the wise had oil and the foolish had none: but in this, that the wise took care for a future supply of oil to feed their lamps, when the first oil was spent. Some professors, like foolish virgins, content themselves with a blazing lamp, of an outward profession, without concerning themselves to secure an inward principle of grace and love, which should maintain that profession, as the oil maintains the lamp. As the lamp will not hold long burning without a stock of oil to feed it: so a profession of religion, though never so glorious, will not be lasting nor persevering, without a principle of faith and love in the heart, to support and maintain it. Learn hence, That the true wisdom of a christian consists in this, to take care that not only the lamp of his life may shine by outward profession, but that the vessel of his heart may be furnished with the graces of the Holy Spirit, as a prevailing and abiding principle.

5 While the bridegroom tarried they all slumbered and slept.

That is, while Christ delays his coming to persons by death and judgment, they are not so diligent as they ought, to prepare themselves for death and judgment. Instead of being upon their watch and guard, they slumbered and slept. Note, That not only visible professors, but the holiest, and best of christians, are very prone to spiritual slumber. "While the bridegroom tarried, they all slumbered and slept." Spiritual slumber consists in this: when graces are not lively, and kept in exercise, particularly faith, hope, and love; when there is an abatement of our love and zeal, an intermission of our care and watchfulness; this is a degree of spiritual slumber; yet the saints' slumber is not prevailing slumber: it is not an universal slumber; it is not in all the faculties of the soul; if there be deadness in the affections yet is there not a searedness in the conscience. I sleep, says the church, but my heart awaketh, Cant. v. 2. Still there is a principle in the soul which takes God's part, and the christian groans under the burden of his dull and drowsy state. But the greatest wisdom is, to maintain a constant watch, that we may at no time, be surprised by the bridegroom's coming, or be in a confusion when death and judgment shall overtake us. Blessed are those virgins whose lamps always burn bright!

6 And at midnight there was a cry made, Behold, the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him.

At midnight, that is, at the most dismal and unseasonable time, when all the virgins were fast asleep; and, when awakened in great affright, could not on a sudden consider what to do. Such is the case of those who put off their repentance, and preparation for another world, till they are surprised by death and judgment. Lord, how will the midnight cry of the bridegroom's coming terrify and amaze the unprepared souls! What a surprising word will this be, Behold the bridegroom cometh? Learn hence, That the bridegroom will certainly come, though at his own time; and then all shall be called upon, both prepared and unprepared, to go forth to meet him. Reason says he may come, because there is a just God that will render to every one according to his deeds, and reward both body and soul for all the services they have done for God. The body shall not always remain like a solitary widow in the dust, but shall meet its old companion, the soul, again. And as reason says he may come, faith says he will come, and argues from the promise of Christ, John xiv. 3. and from the purchase of Christ; from Christ's affections to us, and from our affection to him; faith hath seen him upon the cross, and determines she shall see him in the clouds. The bridegroom will certainly come at his own time: happy they that are ready to go forth to meet him.

7 Then all those virgins arose, and trimmed their lamps.

8 And the foolish said unto the wise, Give us of your oil; for our lamps are gone out.

The virgins arising and trimming their lamps, doth denote their actual preparation for Christ's coming and appearance, and their putting themselves into a posture of readiness to receive him. Thence learn, That a believing apprehension of the certainty and suddenness of our Lord's coming and approach, will rouse us out of our spiritual slumber, and prepare us to meet him with joy and assurance. "Then they arose and trimmed their lamps. And the foolish said unto the wise, Give us of your oil, for our lamps are gone out." Observe here, 1. A request made, Give us of your oil. There is a time when the neglectors of grace will be made sensible of the worth of grace by the want of it. Such as undervalue, yea, vilify the grace of God, will be heard to say, O give us of your oil. Observe, 2. The reason of the request, For our lamps are gone out. Thence learn, That the lamp of profession will certainly go out, which has not a stock of grace to feed and maintain it.

9 But the wise answered, saying, Not so; lest there be not enough for us and you; but go ye rather to them that sell, and buy for yourselves.

Observe here, 1. The wise virgins' denial, Not so; they will part with no oil. Learn thence, That it must be the care of every one to get grace of his own, otherwise the grace of others will do him no good. It is not what others have done, nay, what Christ himself has done, that will save us without our own endeavours. Observe, 2. The reason of their denial, Lest there be not enough for us and you. Thence note, That such christians as have most grace, have none to spare; none to spare in regard of their occasions for grace on earth, and in regard of their expectations of glory in heaven. Observe, 3. The advice and counsel given; Go to them that sell and buy for yourselves. Some take this for an exhortation, others for a mocking derision. Go to them that sell; that is, say some, to the shop of the ordinances, where it may be had. Thence note, That such as would have grace, must have timely recourse to the ordinances and means of grace; Go to them that sell. Others understand the words ironically, and as spoken by way of derision, Go to them that sell, if you know where to find them, and either buy or borrow for yourselves. Learn thence, That it is the greatest folly in the world to have oil to buy, when we should have oil to burn; to have our grace to seek, when we should have it to exert and exercise. It is no time to get grace when the bridegroom is come, and the day of grace is past and over.

10 And while they went to buy, the bridegroom came: and they that were ready went in with him to the marriage: and the door was shut.

Observe here, 1. Christ will come at the great day to his people as a bridegroom, and to the wicked as a judge. The relation now begun betwixt Christ and his church shall then be publicly solemnized. Observe, 2. The qualification of the persons who shall enter with the bridegroom into heaven, Such as were ready went in with him. This readiness is twofold, habitual and actual; habitual readiness consists in the state of the persons (justified and pardoned) in the frame of the heart (sanctified and renewed;) and in the course of life, universally and perseveringly holy and righteous; consists our actual preparation. Observe, 3. The doleful condition of such as were unready; the door is shut against them: the door of repentance, the door of hope, the door of salvation, all shut, eternally shut, "and by him that shutteth and none can open." Learn hence, (No. 7.)

The utter impossibility of ever getting our condition altered by us, when the day of grace and salvation is once over with us. Woe to such souls, who by the folly of their own delays, have caused the door of conversion and remission to be everlastingly shut against their own souls!

11 Afterward came also the other virgins, saying, Lord, Lord, open to us.

12 But he answered and said, Verily I say unto you, I know you not.

Observe here, The virgins' petition, and the bridegroom's reply: the petition, Lord, Lord, open to us. Learn hence, That how negligent soever men are of heaven and salvation here, there are none but will desire it earnestly and importunately hereafter: afterwards; that is when too late. Observe farther, the bridegroom's reply, I know you not; that is, I own and approve you not. There is a twofold knowledge that Christ has, a knowledge of simple intuition, and a knowledge of a special approbation; the former knowledge Christ has of all men, the latter only of good men. Learn hence, That it will be a dreadful misery for any person, but especially for such as have been eminent professors, to be disowned by Christ at his coming, to hear that dreadful word from the mouth of Christ, Verily, I know you not.

13 Watch, therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh.

Here we have our Lord's application of the foregoing parable, to be always upon our watch, continually upon our guard, to meet the bridegroom in death and judgment, because we know not the time of his coming and approach. Learn thence, That watchfulness and a prepared readiness is a great duty that lies upon all those who believe and look for Christ's coming and appearance. Happy souls; who are found in a posture of readiness at the bridegroom's approach, standing with lamps trimmed, loins girded, lights burning! that is, improving and exercising their graces, abounding in all the fruits of the spirit, and in all the substantial virtues of a good life; such, and only such shall have an entrance abundantly administered to them into the everlasting kingdom.

14 ¶ For the kingdom of heaven is as a man travelling into a far country, who called his own servants, and delivered unto them his goods.

15 And unto one he gave five talents, to another two, and to another one, to every man according to his several ability; and straightway took his journey,

Observe here, The person intrusting, Christ! the persons intrusted, all christians: the talents they are intrusted with, goods: that is, goods of providence, riches and honors; gifts of mind, wisdom, parts, and learning: gifts of grace, all these goods Christ dispenses variously: more to some, fewer to others, but with expectation of improvement from all. Learn, 1. That Christ is the great Lord of the universe, and owner of all his servants' goods and talents. 2. That every talent is given us by our Lord to improve and employ for our master's use and service. 3. That it pleases the Lord to dispense his gifts variously among his servants, to some he commits more, to others fewer talents. 4. That to this Lord of ours every one of us must be accountable and responsible for every talent committed to us and intrusted with us.

16 Then he that had received the five talents, went and traded with the same, and made them other five talents.

17 And likewise he that had received two, he also gained other two.

18 But he that received one, went and digged in the earth, and hid his lord's money.

The former verses gave an account of the Lord's distribution: these acquaint us with the servants' negotiations. Some traded with, and made improvement of their talents, others traded not at all: yet it is not said, they did embezzle their talent, but not improve it. Learn, It is not sufficient to justify us, that we do not abuse our talents; it is fault enough to hide them, and not improve them; the slothful servant shall no more escape punishment, than the wasteful servant.

19 After a long time the Lord of those servants cometh, and reckoneth with them.

20 And so he that had received five talents came, and brought other five talents, saying, Lord, thou deliveredst unto me five talents: behold, I have gained besides them five talents more.

21 His lord said unto him, Well done, thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy lord.

22 He also that had received two talents came, and said, Lord, thou deliveredst unto me two talents: behold, I have gained two other talents besides them.

23 His lord said unto him, Well done, good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy lord.

Note here, 1. That the wisdom of God dispenses his gifts and graces variously, as so many talents to his servants, to be employed for his own glory, and his church's good. 2. That all such servants as have been faithful in improving their talents, at Christ's coming, shall be both commended and rewarded also. "Well done good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." Where observe, 1. That the state of the blessed is a state of joy. 2. That the joy which the blessed partake of, is the joy of their Lord: that is, the joy which he provides, and which he possesses. 3. That the way after which the saints partake of this joy, is by entering into it, which denotes the highest and fullest participation of it. The joy is too great to enter into them, they must enter into that; Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord.

24 Then he which had received the one talent came, and said, Lord I knew thee that thou art an hard man, reaping where thou hast not sown, and gathering where thou hast not strawed;

25 And I was afraid, and went and hid thy talent in the earth: lo, there thou hast that is thine.

26 His lord answered and said unto him, Thou wicked and slothful servant, thou knewest that I reap where I sowed not, and gather where I have not strawed.

27 Thou oughtest, therefore, to have put my money to the exchangers, and then at my coming I should have received mine own with usury.

Observe here, 1. That he that received but one talent, is called to an account as well as he that received five. Heathens that have but one talent, namely, the light of nature, must give an account for that one talent, as well as christians that have five must account for five. Observe, 2. The slothful servant's allegation; "I knew thee to be a hard man and I was afraid." Where note, His prejudice against his master, and the effect of that prejudice, he was afraid: and the fruit of his fear, he hid his talent in the earth. Learn hence, That sinners entertain in their mind, very hard and unkind thoughts of God: they look upon him as a hard master, rigorous in his commands, and difficult to be pleased. Learn, 2. That such hard thoughts of God do naturally occasion slavish fear, which is a great hindrance to the faithful discharge of our duty to God. Observe, 3. The master's reply to the slothful servant's allegation, which contains an exprobatation, or upbraiding of him for his sloth and negligence; Thou wicked and slothful servant. Where note, 1. That the slothful servant is a wicked servant, as well as the unfaithful servant. 2. That wicked and slothful servants, to excuse themselves, will not stick to charge their miscarriages upon God himself: Thou wert a hard man. 3. That no excuse whatsoever shall serve either the slothful or unfaithful servant at the bar of Christ.

28 Take, therefore, the talent from him, and give it unto him which hath ten talents.

29 For unto every one that hath shall be given, and he shall have abundance: but from him that hath not, shall be taken away even that which he hath.

30 And cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer darkness: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

These words contain the sentence denounced by Christ upon the slothful servants; his punishment is, first, a punishment of loss; take, therefore, the talent from him. Learn hence, That not improving the gifts of God given as talents to us, provokes God to take them from us, as well as misimproving. From him that hath not; that is, from him that improveth not, shall be taken that which he hath. 2. Follows the punishment of sense; "Cast him into outer darkness, where is weeping and gnashing of teeth." Learn thence, That hell is a place and state of inexpressible misery and torment; a dismal place as being deprived of the sight and enjoyment of God, of Christ, of saints, and of angels; a doleful place, full of overwhelming sorrow and despairing grief. The gnashing of their teeth, signifies their being full of rage and indignation against God, against the saints, and against themselves.

31 ¶ When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory:

32 And before him shall be gathered all nations: and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats:

33 And he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left.

From hence to the end of the chapter, we have a draught and scheme of the general judgment. Where observe, The person judging, the Son of man; the persons judged, good and bad; the one called sheep, for their innocency and meekness; the other goats, for their unruliness and uncleanness. Observe also, The manner of his coming to judgment, most august and glorious; glorious in his person, glorious in his attendance. Learn, That Christ's appearance at the great day to the judging of the world, will be a splendid and a glorious appearance: "He will come with power and in great glory," in regard of the dignity of his person, and the quality of his office, and the greatness of his work. He will appear as a king in the midst of his nobles, to take off the scandal and ignominy of the cross, and as a recompence for his abasement and humiliation; to strike the hearts of his enemies with dread and fear, and to fill the souls of his people with joy and confidence. Let us therefore propound it to our faith to believe it; to our fear, to tremble at the thoughts of it. Observe farther, The work of this judge: he shall first gather all nations. Learn, That at the general judgment, all that have lived shall be summoned to the bar of Christ; persons of all sexes, of all ages, of all nations, of all conditions; having gathered them together, he shall next separate them, as a shepherd his sheep. Thence learn, That though there be a mixture and confusion of the godly and the wicked here, yet at the day of judgment there will be a separation made betwixt them, and they shall never come together more.

34 Then shall the King say unto them on his right-hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world:

Here follows the sentence which Christ will pronounce upon the righteous and the wicked at the great day; first, the sentence of ab-solution upon the righteous; then the sentence of condemnation upon the wicked. Learn thence, That at the day of judgment the godly shall be absolved before the wicked are condemned. The reasons are, because it is more delightful to God to reward than to punish; to save than to destroy: because it is suitable to Christ's love to begin with his saints, and to be admired by them; also to put his saints out of fear as to their eternal condition, and to bring them near to himself, and to set them upon the throne with himself, assessors and judges of the wicked world: 1 Cor. vi. 3. "Know ye not that the saints shall judge the world?" Lastly, With respect to the wicked, that they may be the more affected with their loss, and have a vexatious and tormenting sense of that happiness which they have refused. Observe next, The joyful sentence pronounced; "Come, ye blessed of my Father." Where note, 1. The joyful compellation; Ye blessed! Which term is opposed to these two things: 1. To the world's judgment of them, which accounts them vile and accursed. Here is an absolution from their unjust censures. 2. To the sentence of the law, which pronounces all its transgressors accursed, Gal. iii. 10. but says Christ I that have redeemed you from the curse of the law, pronounce you blessed. "But why blessed of my Father?" 1. To point out the fountal cause of all our happiness, the love of the Father: this prepared the kingdom. 2. This expression shows how the divine persons glorify one another. As the Spirit glorifies the Son, so the Son glorifies the Father, and refers all to him. Therefore Christ says not, "Come, my redeemed ones;" but, "Come, ye blessed ones;" not, "Come, ye that were redeemed by me;" but, "Come, ye blessed of my Father: it is his good pleasure to give you the kingdom." Learn hence, That the Lord Jesus Christ, at this second coming, will adjudge all his people unto a state of glorious and everlasting happiness, which his Father has prepared, and himself has purchased for them. "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you."

35 For I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink: I was a stranger, and ye took me in:

36 Naked, and ye clothed me: I was sick, and ye visited me: I was in prison, and ye came unto me.

Here our Saviour sets forth, not the meritorious cause of his saints' happiness, but the infallible signs of such as should inherit that happiness, the character of the persons that might expect it. Such as fed him, clothed, and visited him in his members. Where note, 1. That the godly having their sins forgiven in this world, some would gather, that there should no mention be made of them in the day of judgment. For they observe that Christ here only mentions the good works of his saints; ye fed me, ye clothed me, not a word of their failings. Observe, 2. That they are not duties of the first, but of the second table, which here Christ mentions, because works of charity are more visible to the world than works of piety. Learn hence, 1. That at the great day, every man's sentence shall be pronounced according to his works. 2. That works of charity done out of love to Christ, shall be particularly observed, and beautifully rewarded by Christ at the great day. The question then will be, not only how have you heard, prayed, or preached, but whom have you fed, clothed, and visited? 3. That whatever good or evil is done to the poor members of Christ, Christ reckons it as done unto himself, I was an hungred and ye gave me meat. Christ personal is not the object of our pity and charity, but Christ mystical is exposed to want and necessity: he feels hunger and thirst, cold and nakedness in his members, and is refreshed and comforted in their refreshments and comforts. He takes it as a courtesy, who might demand it by authority. How can we be close-handed or hard-hearted to the necessitous christians, did we steadily believe that in administering to them, we minister refreshments to Christ himself, who parted with the glory of heaven, yea with his heart's blood for us.

37 Then shall the righteous answer him, saying, Lord, when saw we thee an hungred, and fed thee? or thirsty, and gave thee drink?

38 When saw we thee a stranger, and took thee in? or naked, and clothed thee?

39 Or when saw we thee sick, or in prison, and came unto thee?

40 And the King shall answer, and say unto them, Verily, I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me.

Here we have a dialogue, or interchangeable discourse betwixt Christ and his faithful servants, at the great day. Where observe, Their question and his reply. Their question, Lord when did we feed thee, clothe thee, or visit thee? We have forgot the time, though such is thy goodness to remember it. Learn thence, That Christ keeps a faithful record of all our acts of pious charity, when we have forgotten them. If we remember to do good, Christ will be sure to remember the good we have done; aye, and reward it as well as remember it. Again, this question of theirs may proceed from admiration and wonder, and from an humble sense of their own nothingness, and from the greatness of Christ's condescension, in taking notice of such mean services, and requiting them with such a transcendent reward. Learn hence, That when Christ comes to reward his children and people, they will wonder and be astonished at the poverty and meanness of their own services, and at the transcendency and greatness of his rewards. Observe next, our Lord's reply, "Inasmuch as ye did it to the least of these my brethren, ye did it unto me." Whence observe, 1. The title put by Jesus Christ upon his poorest and meanest members; My brethren. 2. The resentment of the kindness showed to his brethren, "as shown unto himself; inasmuch as ye did it to them, ye have done it to me." Learn thence, That such is the endearing intimacy between Christ and his members, that whatsoever is done to any of them, is esteemed by him as done unto himself.

41 Then shall he say also unto them on the left hand, Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels.

Here we have the sentence of condemnation denounced against the wicked. Where observe, 1. The posture in which they are found; At Christ's left hand. This does not so much denote the ignominy of the place (though placing on the left hand is less honorable) as the impiety of their choice, they took up with the left-hand mercies, the mercies of the footstool, wealth and riches, dignity and honor. As for the good things, "which are at God's right-hand for evermore," they never sought after these. Verily a man may know his future state by his present choice. Observe, 2. The title given to wicked men, Ye cursed. Not cursed of my Father, because cursing is God's strange work; we force him to it, he delights not in it. Observe, 3. The sentence itself. Where note, 1. The punishment of loss, Depart from me. Learn thence, 1. That it is the hell of hell to the damned, that they must everlastingly depart from, and lose the comfortable fruition and enjoyment of God in Christ: it is to be deprived of an infinite good. Hell is a deep dungeon, where the sunshine of God's presence never cometh. 2. The punishment of sense, Depart into everlasting fire. Where note, Its severity, it is fire; it is eternity, it is everlasting fire. Learn thence, That there are everlasting torments in hell prepared for the wicked; there is a state of torment, and a place of torment provided by God. All princes have not only their palace, but their prison. God has the palace of heaven, for the enjoyment of himself and his friends; and the prison of hell for punishing his enemies. The nature of the damned's misery is set out by fire; the whole man, body and soul shall be tormented in it. 1. The body in all its members; their eyes with affrighting spectacles, the devil and his angels, and their old companions in sin; every time they behold these, it revives their guilt, and enrages their despair, their ears are filled with yellings and howlings, and hideous cries. 2. The soul shall suffer in hell by reflecting upon its own choice, by remembering time sinfully wasted, seasons of grace sadly slighted, the mercies of God unworthily abused. Lord! how will the remembrance of past mercies aggravate present miseries! Note farther, 1. That Christ saith not of the punishment, as he doth of the blessing, but that it was prepared from the beginning of the world, lest it should be thought that God designed men's punishment before they sinned. Note, 2. That although Christ saith, Come ye blessed of my Father: he saith not, Go ye cursed of my Father: because God is the author and procurer of men's happiness, but man only is the author and procurer of his own misery. Note, 3. That Christ speaks of this eternal misery by fire, as designed originally not for men, but for the devil, and his angels; but man, by giving up himself to the power and thralldom of sin and satan, and working himself down to the infernal regions, becomes like unto him in torments whom he so much resembled in manners and qualities.

42 For I was an hungered, and ye gave me no meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me no drink:

43 I was a stranger and ye took me not in: naked, and ye clothed me not: sick, and in prison, and ye visited me not.

44 Then shall they also answer him saying, Lord, when saw we thee an hungered, or athirst, or a stranger, or naked, or sick, or in prison, and did not minister unto thee?

45 Then shall he answer them, saying, Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me.

Observe here, 1. How Christ lays the charge of the wicked's damnation upon themselves alone. Ye gave me no meat, ye took me not in: man, and man alone, is the cause of his own destruction and damnation. 2. The kind of sin charged on the wicked at the great day. Consider it first, in general it is a sin of omission. Whence learn, That sins of omission are certainly damning, as well as sins of commission. Consider it, 2. In particular, it is a sin of unmercifulness, or want of love to Christ and his members. Learn thence, that one reigning sin, one prevailing corruption, is enough to damn a person, because it deprives a man of the grace of the gospel, and excludes him from all the benefit of the promises. Note lastly, if such as do not give to Christ in his members, shall be miserable at the great day, what will the condition of them be that take from them, who strip and starve them, who persecute and hate them, who imprison or banish them! If the uncharitable shall scarcely be saved, yea, shall certainly be damned, where shall the unmerciful and cruel appear?

46 And these shall go away into everlasting punishment: but the righteous into life eternal.
(No. 8)

Observe here, 1. That though the righteous are first judged, yet the sentence is first executed on the wicked. These shall go into everlasting punishment. 2. That men's states and conditions in another world will be different, as their ways and doings have been in this world. 3. That everlasting life shall be the portion of the godly, and everlasting punishment the portion of the wicked. God grant that the horrors of eternal darkness, and the dismal thoughts of a miserable eternity, may effectually discourage every one of us from a wicked and impenitent course of life! "For who can dwell with devouring fire? who can dwell with everlasting burnings?"

CHAPTER XXVI.

AND it came to pass, when Jesus had finished all these sayings, he said unto his disciples,

2 Ye know that after two days is the feast of the passover, and the Son of man is betrayed to be crucified.

3 Then assembled together the chief priests, and the scribes, and the elders of the people, unto the palace of the high priest, who was called Caiaphas.

4 And consulted that they might take Jesus by subtilty, and kill him.

5 But they said, Not on the feast-day, lest there be an uproar among the people.

Several things are here observable; as, 1. The persons conspiring against our blessed Redeemer's life, namely, the chief priests, and scribes, and elders, that is, the whole sanhedrim, or general council of the Jewish church; these lay their malicious heads together, to contrive the destruction of the innocent Jesus. Here was a general council of them, consisting of priests, doctors, and elders, with the highpriest their president, yet erring in a point of doctrine concerning the Messiah, not believing Jesus to be the Son of God, notwithstanding all the convincing miracles which he had wrought before them. Observe, 2. The manner of this conspiracy against our Saviour's life; it was clandestine, secret, and subtle: "They consulted how they might take him by subtilty, and kill him." Learn hence, That satan makes use of the subtilty of crafty men, and abuseth their parts as well as their power, for his own purposes. Satan never sends a fool on his errand. Observe, 3. The time when this conspiracy was managed; at the time of the passover. Indeed at first the chief priests did not incline to that time, fearing a tumult and uproar among the people; but Judas presenting them with a fair opportunity, to apprehend him, they changed their purpose and accordingly at the feast of the passover our Saviour suffered. This was not without a mystery, that Christ the true Lamb of God, whom the paschal Lamb typified and represented, should be offered up at the feast of the passover; signifying thereby, that he was the true paschal Lamb, and that the legal shadow ought to cease in the exhibition of him. Learn hence, That not only the death of Christ in general, but all circumstances relating to it, were foreordained by God himself; as the place where, at Jerusalem; the time when, at the feast of the passover; that time did God devise best for this Lamb to be a sacrifice.

6 ¶ Now, when Jesus was in Bethany, in the house of Simon the leper, 7 There came unto him a woman having an alabaster-box of very precious ointment, and poured it on his head as he sat at meat.

This woman, St. John says, was Mary, the sister of Lazarus, who, to show her love to Christ, and put honor upon him, took a precious box of ointment, and poured it upon our Saviour's head, according to the custom of the eastern countries, who used so to do at their feasts and banquets; to which David alludes, Psal. xxiii. 5. Learn hence, 1. That where true love to Christ prevails in the heart, nothing is adjudged too dear for Christ. This box of ointment murmuring Judas valued at three hundred pence; which, reckoning the Roman penny at seven pence halfpenny, makes of our money nine pounds seven shillings and sixpence. Love (we see) spares for no cost, but where the esteem of Christ is high, the affection will be strong. Note, 2. That where strong love prevails towards Jesus Christ, it suffers not itself to be outshined by any examples. The weakest woman that strongly loves Jesus Christ, will piously strive with the greatest apostle to express the fervor of her love unto him. I do not find any of the apostles at so much cost to put honor upon Christ, as this woman was at. Love knows no bounds, no measures.

8 But when his disciples saw it, they had indignation, saying, To what purpose is this waste?

9 For this ointment might have been sold for much, and given to the poor.

That is, when Judas, and some other disciples whom he had influenced, saw this action, they murmured; particularly Judas blamed this holy woman, for needless prodigality, and did tacitly reflect upon Christ himself, for suffering that wasteful expence. O! how doth a covetous heart think every thing too good for Christ: he that sees a pious action well done, and seeks to undervalue it, shows himself possessed with a spirit of envy. Judas' invidious spirit makes him censure an action which Christ highly approved. Learn thence, That men who know not our hearts, may through ignorance or prejudice, censure and condemn those actions which God doth commend and will graciously reward. Happy for this poor woman that she had a more righteous judge to pass sentence upon her action than wicked Judas!

10 When Jesus understood it, he said unto them, Why trouble ye the woman? for she hath wrought a good work upon me.

11 For ye have the poor always with you; but me ye have not always.

12 For in that she hath poured this ointment on my body, she did it for my burial.

Observe here, How readily our Lord vindicates this good woman: she says nothing for herself, nor need she, having such an advocate. 1. Christ rebukes Judas, Why trouble ye the woman? plainly intimating, that it is no small trouble to a gracious spirit, to find their good works misinterpreted and misrepresented. Next he defends the action, calling it a good work: because done out of a principle of love to Christ: she hath wrought a good work upon me. And lastly, He gives the reason of her actions; she did it for my burial. As kings and great persons were wont, in those eastern countries, at their funerals to be embalmed with odors and sweet perfumes; so says our Saviour, this woman, to declare her faith in me as her King and Lord, doth, with this box of ointment, as it were before-hand, embalm my body for its burial. True faith puts honor upon a crucified as well as a glorified Saviour. This holy woman accounts Christ worthy of all honor in his death, believing it would be a sweet smelling sacrifice unto God, and the savor of life unto his people. Observe farther, From these words, But me ye have not always, the doctrine of transubstantiation is overthrown: for if Christ be, as to soul, body and divinity, perpetually present in the host among those of the church of Rome, then have they Christ always with them; contrary to what our Saviour here declares: though his poor members would be always present with them, yet he himself should not be so. The poor ye have always, but me ye have not always.

13 Verily I say unto you, Whosoever this gospel shall be preached in the whole world, there shall also this, that this woman hath done, be told for a memorial of her.

Our Saviour having defended this holy woman from the calumny of Judas in the foregoing verses, in this he declares, that she should be rewarded with an honorable memorial in all ages of the church; "Whosoever the gospel is preached, this shall be spoken of her." O what care doth Christ take to have the good deeds of his children not buried in the dust with them, but be held in everlasting remembrance! Though sin causes men to rot above ground, to stink alive, and when they are dead, leaves an inglorious memory upon their graves, yet will the actions of the just smell sweet, and blossom in the dust. Learn hence, That we may laudably prosecute that which will procure us a good name, and spread our reputation to future ages.

14 ¶ Then one of the twelve, called Judas Iscariot, went unto the chief priests, 15 And said unto them, What will ye give me, and I will deliver him unto you? And they covenanted with him for thirty pieces of silver.

16 And from that time he sought opportunity to betray him.

Observe here, 1. The person betraying our blessed Redeemer; Judas; Judas, a professor; Judas a preacher; Judas, an apostle, and one of the twelve, whom Christ had chosen out of all the world to be his dearest friends, and his own family and household. Shall we wonder to find friends unfriendly and unfaithful towards us, when our Saviour had a traitor in his own house? Observe, 2. The heinousness of his sin in betraying Christ: he betrayed Christ Jesus, a man; Christ Jesus, his master; Christ Jesus, his maker; the first was murder, the second treason. Learn thence, That it is no strange or uncommon thing for the vilest of sins, and most horrid impieties, to be acted by such persons as make the most eminent profession of holiness and religion. Observe, 3. What was the sin occasioning and leading Judas to the committing of this horrid sin; it was covetousness. I do not find that Judas had any particular malice against Christ's person, but a base and unworthy spirit of covetousness possessed him; this made him sell his Master. Covetousness is the root-sin, an inordinate desire and love of riches, an eager and insatiable thirst after the world, is the parent of the most monstrous and unnatural sins; therefore remember we our Saviour's caution. Luke xii. 15. "Take heed and beware of covetousness;" he doubles the caution, to show us both the great danger of the sin, and the great care we ought to take to preserve ourselves from it. Observe, 4. How small a sum tempted the covetous mind of Judas to betray his Master, Thirty pieces of silver; which amounted but to three pounds fifteen shillings of our money. This was the price of a slave or common servant, Exod xxi. As Christ took upon him the form of a servant, so his life was valued at the rate of an ordinary servant's life.

It may seem a wonder, that the highpriests should offer no more for the life of our Saviour, and that Judas should accept so little; seeing that his covetousness was so great, and their rage so grievous, how comes it to pass that he demands so little, and that they offer no more? Had the reward been proportioned to the greatness of their malice, it had been thirty thousand rather than thirty pieces of silver. But the scripture must be fulfilled, accordingly the wisdom of God over-ruled this matter, for fulfilling that prophecy, Zech. xi. 12. they weighed for my price thirty pieces of silver. Let not any christian be concerned that he is despised and undervalued; he can never meet with so great a reproach, so low an abasement for Christ, as Christ underwent for him. Observe lastly, Judas' folly, as well as treachery; he that might have demanded what he pleased for this purchase, He says unto the chief priests, What will ye give me? As if he had said, "I am resolved to sell him at any rate, give me what you will for him." Nay, farther, Judas covenanted, and they promised, but whether it was now paid, appeareth not. Learn, That such a person as has a vile and base esteem of Jesus Christ, will part with him upon any terms. The bare expectation of a few shekels of silver, will make such a one willing to part with the pearl of great price. Wonder not then to see some persons selling their country, their friends, their God, and their religion for money. Judas did so before them.

17 ¶ Now the first day of the feast of unleavened bread, the disciples came to Jesus, saying unto him, Where wilt thou that we prepare for thee to eat the passover?

18 And he said, Go into the city to such a man, and say unto him, The Master saith, My time is at hand; I will keep the passover at thy house with my disciples.

19 And the disciples did as Jesus had appointed them, and they made ready the passover.

The time for the celebration of the passover being now at hand, Christ sends two of his disciples to Jerusalem, to prepare things necessary, in order thereunto: accordingly, they enter the city, and find the master of an house, whose heart Christ, by his divine power, had so inclined, that he willingly accommodated them upon this occasion. Our blessed Saviour had not a lamb of his own, and possibly no money in his purse to buy one, but he finds as excellent accommodations in this poor man's house, as if he had dwelt in Ahab's ivory palace, and had had the provisions of Solomon's table. Learn hence, That Christ has such an influence upon, and command over the spirits of men, that he can incline them to do what service soever he pleaseth for him. When Christ has a passover to celebrate, he will prepare an house, and dispose the heart to a free reception of himself. Learn, 2. That Christ being under the law, observes and keeps the law of the passover. Thus he fulfilled all righteousness; and although the ceremonial law was to receive its abolishment in the death of Christ, yet all the time of his life he punctually observes it.

20 Now, when the even was come, he sat down with the twelve.

Observe here, The impudent forehead of this bold traitor Judas, who presumed, as soon as he had sold his master, to sit down at the table with him, and partake with the other disciples of the solemn ordinance of the passover; had the presence of Judas polluted the ordinance to any beside himself, doubtless our Saviour would never have permitted this bold intrusion. Learn hence, 1. That nothing is more ordinary than for unholy persons presumptuously to rush in upon the solemn ordinances of God, which they have no right, whilst such, to partake of. 2. That the presence of such persons pollutes the ordinances only to themselves: holy persons are not polluted by the sins of such; For to the pure all things are pure.

21 And as they did eat, he said, Verily I say unto you, that one of you shall betray me.

What an astonishing word was this: "One of you my disciples shall betray me." Can any church on earth expect purity in all its members, when Christ's own family of twelve had a traitor and a devil in it? Yet though it was very sad to hear that one should betray him, it was a matter of joy that it was but one: one hypocrite in a congregation was too much, but there is cause of rejoicing if there be no more. But why did not Christ name Judas, and say, "Thou art he that shall betray me!" Doubtless to draw him to repentance, and to prevent giving Judas any provocation. Lord, how sad is it for such as pretend friendship to Christ, and call themselves of his family and acquaintance, who eat of his bread, and yet lift up the heel against him!

22 And they were exceeding sorrowful, and began every one of them to say unto him, Lord is it I?

Observe here, 1. The disciples' sorrow, and next the effect of that sorrow. Their sorrow was (as well it might be) exceeding great. Well might innocent disciples be overwhelmed with sorrow, to hear that their Master should die; that he should die by treason, that the traitor should be one of themselves. But though their sorrow was great, yet was the effect of their sorrow very good; it wrought in them a holy suspicion of themselves, and caused every one to search himself, and say, Master is it I? Thence learn, That it is possible for such secret wickedness to lurk in our hearts as we never suspected, which time and temptation may draw forth in such a manner as we could not believe, and therefore it is both wise and holy to suspect ourselves and to be often saying, Lord is it I? There is no better preservative from sin, than to be jealous over ourselves with a godly jealousy. Observe farther, That though the disciples' fear and sorrow made them jealous and suspicious, yet it was of themselves, not of one another, nay of Judas himself: every one said, Master, is it I? Not Master, is it Judas? Learn hence, that true sincerity and christian charity will make us more suspicious of ourselves than of any other person whatsoever; it always hopes the best of others, and fears the worst concerning ourselves.

23 And he answered and said, He that dippeth his hand with me in the dish, the same shall betray me.

24 The Son of man goeth, as it is written of him; but woe unto that man by whom the Son of man is betrayed! it had been good for that man if he had not been born.

25 Then Judas, which betrayed him, answered, and said, Master, is it I? He said unto him, Thou hast said.

Here our Saviour acquaints his disciples who it was that had designed his death, even he that dipped with him in the dish, or he to whom he gave the sop. Observe, The traitor, whom Christ less loved, he has the sop given to him, the other disciples whom Christ loved better, had no such particular doom.——Outward good things are not always given to the children of men in love, but are sometimes bestowed in displeasure; there is no measuring Christ's affection by temporal blessings, no concluding either love or hatred by these things. Observe farther, How Judas could sit still, and hear the threats of judgment denounced against himself without concern; he hears Christ say, Woe to the man, by whom the Son of man is betrayed, and is no more blanked than innocence itself; resolved sinners run on desperately in their wicked courses, and with open eyes see and meet their own destruction; and are neither dismayed at it, nor concerned about it. Observe farther, That this shameless man had the impudence to say to Christ, Master is it I? Our Saviour gives him a direct affirmation. Thou hast said. Did not Judas, think ye, blush, and cast down his guilty eyes, and let fall his drooping head at so galling an intimation? nothing less. Lord how does obduracy in sin steel the brow, and make it incapable of all relenting impressions! Observe lastly, How Christ prefers non-entity before damnation. It had been better for that man if he had never been born. A temporal miserable being is not worse than no being, but an eternal miserable being is worse than no being at all: eternal misery is much worse than non-entity. It had been better for Judas if he had never been born, than to commit such a sin, and lie under such wrath, and that everlasting. O better to have no being, than not to have a being in Christ!

26 ¶ And, as they were eating, Jesus took bread, and blessed it, and brake it, and gave it to the disciples, and said, Take, eat: this is my body.

27 And he took the cup, and gave thanks, and gave it to them, saying, Drink ye all of it:

28 For this is my blood of the New Testament, which is shed for many, for the remission of sins.

29 But I say unto you, I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine, until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom.

30 And when they had sung an hymn, they went out into the mount of Olives.

Immediately after the celebration of the passover, follows the institution of the Lord's Supper, in which observe, 1. The author of this new sacrament, Jesus took bread. Note thence, That to institute a sacrament is Christ's sole prerogative; it is the church's duty to celebrate the sacraments, but she has power to make none. This belongs only to Christ. Observe, 2. The time of the institution, the night before his passion. The night before he was betrayed, Jesus took bread. Learn thence,

That it is very necessary, when sufferings are approaching, to have recourse to the table of the Lord, which affords both an antidote against fear, and is a restorative to faith. Observe here, 3. The sacramental elements, Bread and wine: bread representing his body, and wine his blood. Observe, 4. The ministerial actions, the breaking of the bread, and the blessing of the cup. As to the bread, Jesus took it: that is, set it apart from common use, and separated it for holy ends and purposes. He blessed it: that is, prayed for a blessing upon it; and brake it, thereby shadowing forth his body broken upon the cross. And he gave it to his disciples, saying, "This broken bread signifies my body suddenly to be broken upon the cross for your redemption and salvation. Do this in remembrance of me, and of my death." Thus the scriptures constantly speak in sacramental matters. So circumcision is called the covenant, and the lamb the passover. In like manner here, the bread is called Christ's body, because instituted to represent to all future ages his body broken. Moreover how could the disciples think they had eaten Christ's body, when they saw his body whole before them? And besides, to eat human flesh and drink blood, was not only against the express letter of the law, but abhorred by all mankind. True it is, that the heathens laid it to the christians' charge, that they eat human flesh; but falsely, as it appears by the apology made for the primitive christians; which apology had been false, had they daily eaten the flesh of Christ, in the sacrament. The very heathens owned it a thing more detestable than death, to eat human flesh, and more to eat the God they worship, and to devour him whom they pretended to adore. Again, as to the cup, Christ having set it apart by prayer and thanksgiving, he commands his disciples to drink all of it, and subjoins a reason for it: For this is my blood of the New Testament, which is shed for the remission of sins: that is the wine in this cup represents the shedding of my blood, by which the new covenant betwixt God and man was ratified and confirmed. Whence we learn, That every communicant has as undoubted a right to the cup as to the bread, in the Lord's Supper: Drink ye all of it, says Christ, therefore to deny the cup to the laity is contrary to the institution of Christ. After the celebration was over, our Saviour and his disciples sang an hymn, as the Jews were wont to do at the passover, the six eucharistical psalms, from the 113th to the 119th psalm. Learn hence, How fit it is that God be glorified in his church, by singing of psalms, and in particular when the sacrament of the Lord's Supper is celebrated. When they had sung an hymn, they went out into the mount of Olives.

31 Then saith Jesus unto them, All ye shall be offended because of me this night; for it is written, I will smite the Shepherd, and the sheep of the flock shall be scattered abroad.

Here our Saviour acquaints his disciples, that by reason of his approaching sufferings, they should all of them be so exceedingly offended, that they would certainly forsake and leave him: which accordingly came to pass. Learn thence, That Christ's dearest friends forsook him, and left him alone in the midst of his greatest distress and danger. Observe, 2. What was the cause of this their flight, it was the prevalency of their fear. Thence note, How sad it is for the holiest and best of men to be left under the power of their own fears in a day of temptation.

(No. 8.)

32 But after I am risen again, I will go before you into Galilee.

Observe here, The wonderful lenity of Christ towards his timorous and fearful disciples; notwithstanding their cowardly flight from him, he tells them he would not forsake them, but love them still; and as an evidence of it, would meet them in Galilee. I will go before you into Galilee; there shall you see me. And when they did see him, he never upbraided them with their timorousness, but was friends with them, notwithstanding their late cowardice. Christ's love to his disciples is like himself, unchangeable and everlasting. Having loved his own, he loved them to the end.

33 Peter answered and said unto him, Though all men shall be offended because of thee, yet will I never be offended.

34 Jesus said unto him, Verily I say unto thee, that this night, before the cock crow, thou shalt deny me thrice.

35 Peter said unto him, Though I should die with thee, yet will I not deny thee. Likewise also said all the disciples, See here what strong purposes and settled resolutions both Peter and all the apostles had to keep close to Christ; but how did their self confidence fail them! Learn hence, That self confidence is a sin, too, too incident to the holiest and best of men. Though all men forsake thee, yet will not I.

Good man, he resolved honestly; but too, too much in his own strength. Little, little did he think what a feather he should be in the wind of temptation, if once God left him to the power and prevalency of his own fears. Observe farther. That the rest of the apostles had the like confident opinion of their own strength with St. Peter. Likewise also said they all. Note hence, that the holiest of men know not their own strength till it comes to a trial. Little did these good men imagine what a cowardly spirit they had in them, till temptation put it to the proof.

36 ¶ Then cometh Jesus with them unto a place called Gethsemane, and saith unto the disciples, Sit ye here, while I go and pray yonder.

37 And he took with him Peter and the two sons of Zebedee, and began to be sorrowful and very heavy.

G G

38 Then saith he unto them, My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death: tarry ye here, and watch with me.

39 And he went a little farther, and fell on his face, and prayed, saying, O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me: nevertheless, not as I will, but as thou wilt.

40 And he cometh unto the disciples, and findeth them asleep, and saith unto Peter, What! could ye not watch with me one hour?

41 Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation: the spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak.

42 He went away again the second time, and prayed, saying, O my Father, if this cup may not pass away from me, except I drink it, thy will be done.

43 And he came and found them asleep again: for their eyes were heavy.

44 And he left them, and went away again, and prayed the third time, saying the same words.

Our blessed Saviour, being now come with his disciples into the garden, he falls there into a bitter and bloody agony, in which he prayed with wonderful fervency and importunity to his heavenly Father. His sufferings were now coming on a great pace, and he meets them upon his knees, and would be found in a praying posture. Learn thence, That prayer is the best preparative for, as well as the most powerful support under, the heaviest sufferings that can befall us. As to this prayer of our Saviour's in the garden, many things are very observable, As, 1. The place where he prayed, in the garden; but why went Christ thither? was it to hide or shelter himself from his enemies? Nothing less; for, if so, it had been the most improper place, because he was wont to retire thither to pray, John xviii. 2. Judas knew the place, for Jesus oftentimes resorted thither; so that Christ went thither not to shun, but to prepare himself, by prayer to meet his enemies. Observe, 2. The time when he entered the garden for prayer, it was the evening; here he spent some hours in pouring out his soul to God; for about midnight Judas and the soldiers came, and apprehended him in a praying posture. Teaching us by his example, That when imminent dangers are before us, especially when death is apprehended by us, to be very much in prayer to God, and very fervent in our wrestling with him. Observe, 3. The matter of our Lord's prayer, that if possible the cup might pass from him; that is, those bitter sufferings which were then before him; particularly the insupportable burden of his Father's wrath. He prays

if possible, that his Father would excuse him from this dreadful wrath, his soul being amazed at it. But what! Did Christ then begin to repent of his undertaking for sinners? Did he shrink and give back when it came to the pinch? No, no; as Christ had two natures, being God and man, so he had two distinct wills, as man, he feared and shunned death; as God-man, he willingly submitted to it: the divine Spirit and human nature of Christ now assault each other with disagreeing interests till at last victory was got on the Spirit's side. Again, this prayer was not absolute but conditional, If it be possible, Father, if it may be, if thou art willing, if it please thee, let it pass; if not, I will drink it. Learn hence, 1. That the cup of sufferings is in itself considered a very bitter and distasteful cup, which human nature abhors, and cannot but desire and pray it may pass from it. 2. That yet oftentimes the wisdom of God is pleased to put this bitter cup of affliction into the hands of those whom he doth most sincerely love. 3. That when God doth so, it is their duty to drink it with humble submission, and cheerful resignation. Not my will but thine be done. Observe here, 4. The manner how our Lord prayed; and here we shall find it, 1. A solitary prayer; he went by himself alone, out of the hearing of his disciples; he saith unto them, Tarry ye here, while I go and pray yonder. Mark, Christ did neither desire his disciples to pray with him, nor to pray for him. No he must tread the wine press alone; not but that Christ loved and delighted in his disciples' company; but there were occasions when he thought fit to leave them and go alone to God in prayer. Thence learn, That the company of our best friends is not always seasonable. Peter, James, and John, were three good men; but Christ bids them tarry, while he went aside for private prayer. There are times and cases when a christian would not be willing that the dearest friend he has in the world should be with him, or understand and hear what passes betwixt him and his God.

2. This prayer of Christ was humble prayer; that is evident by the postures into which he cast himself; sometimes kneeling, sometimes lying prostrate upon his face. He lies in the very dust; lower he cannot fall; and his heart was as low as his body. And such was the fervor of his spirit, that he prayed himself into an agony. O let us blush to think how unlike we are to Christ in prayer, as to our praying frame of spirit! Lord, what drowsiness and deadness! What laziness and dullness! What stupidity and formality is found in our prayers! How often do our lips move, and our hearts stand still! 3. It was a repeated and reiterated prayer, He prayed the first, second, and third time. He returns upon God over and over, plies him again and again, resolving to take no denial. Learn thence, That christians ought not to be discouraged, though they have besought God again and again for a particular mercy, and no answer of prayer has come unto them. Observe also, How our Lord used the same prayer three times over, Saying the same words. A person then may pray with and by a form of prayer, and yet not pray formally, but in a very acceptable manner unto God. Christ both gave a form of prayer unto his disciples, and also used one himself. Observe next the posture in which our holy Lord found his own disciples, when he was in his agony: they were sleeping, when he was praying. O wonderful! that they could sleep at such a time. Hence we gather,

That the best of Christ's disciples may be sometimes overtaken with infirmities, with great infirmities, when the most important duties are performing. He cometh to his disciples and findeth them sleeping. Observe farther, The gentle reproof he gave his disciples for sleeping. What! could ye not watch with me, one hour? Could not you watch when your Master is in such danger? Could not you watch with me, when I am going to deliver up my life for you? What, not one hour, and that the parting hour too? After this reprehension, he subjoins an exhortation: Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation, and superadds a forcible reason, For though the spirit is willing yet the flesh is weak. Thence learn, That the holiest and best resolved christians, who have willing spirits for Christ and his service, yet in regard of the weakness of the flesh, or the frailty of human nature, it is their duty to watch and pray, and thereby guard themselves against temptations. Watch and pray, for though the spirit is willing, yet the flesh is weak: though you have sincerely resolved rather to die with me than deny me, yet be assured, that when temptation actually assaults you, when fear and shame, pain and suffering, death and danger, are before you, and present to your sense, the weakness of your flesh will prevail over these resolutions, if you do not watch diligently and pray fervently for divine assistance.

45 Then cometh he to his disciples, and saith unto them, Sleep on now, and take your rest: behold, the hour is at hand, and the Son of man is betrayed into the hands of sinners.

46 Rise, let us be going: behold, he is at hand, that doth betray me, 47 ¶ And while he yet spake, lo, Judas, one of the twelve, came, and with him a great multitude with swords and staves, from the chief priests and elders of the people.

48 Now, he that betrayed him gave them a sign, saying, Whomsoever I shall kiss, that same is he; hold him fast.

49 And forthwith he came to Jesus, and said, Hail, Master; and kissed him.

50 And Jesus said unto him, Friend, wherefore art thou come? Then came they and laid hands on Jesus, and took him.

Our Saviour having poured out his soul in prayer to God in the garden, he is now ready, and waits for the coming of his enemies; being first in the field: accordingly, while he yet spake, came Judas one of the twelve, and under his conduct a band of soldiers to apprehend him.

It was the lot and portion of our blessed Redeemer to be betrayed into the hands of his mortal enemies, by the treachery of a false and dissembling friend. Observe here, The traitor, treason, the manner how, and the time when, this treasonable design was executed. Observe, 1. The betrayer, Judas; all the evangelists carefully describe him by his name Judas, by his surname Iscariot; lest he should be mistaken for Jude the brother of James. God is tender and careful of the names and reputations of his upright-hearted servants. He is also described by his office, one of the twelve. The eminence of his place and station was an high aggravation of his transgression. Nay, in some respect he was preferred above the rest, having a peculiar trust reposed in him, he bare the bag: that is, he was almoner and steward of Christ's family, to take care for the necessary accommodations of Christ and his apostles; and yet this man, thus called, thus honored, thus respectfully treated by Christ, for the lucre of a little money, perfidiously betrays him. O, whither will not a bad heart and a busy devil carry a man? Learn hence, 1. That the greatest professors had need be jealous of their own hearts, and look well to the grounds and principles of their profession. A profession begun in hypocrisy, will certainly end in apostacy. Learn, 2. That persons are never in such imminent danger, as when they meet with temptations exactly suited to their master-lust.

Covetousness was Judas' master-sin: the love of the world made him a slave to satan, and the devil lays a temptation before him which suits his temper, hits his humor, and it prevails immediately. O pray, pray, that ye may be kept from a strong and suitable temptation, a temptation suited to your predominant lust and inclination. Observe, 2. As the betrayer Judas, so the treason itself, with its aggravating circumstances; he led an armed multitude to the place where Christ was, gave them a signal to discover him, and encouraged them to lay hands upon him, and hold him fast. This was the hellish design satan had put into his heart, and it has these aggravating circumstances attending it. He had seen the miracles which Christ wrought by the power of God, and could not but know him to be a divine person. He could not sin out of ignorance or blind zeal, but the love of money made him do what he did. Father, what he did was not done by the persuasion of any, but he was a volunteer in this service. The high priests neither sent to him, nor sent for him, but he offers his service, and no doubt they were very much surprised to find one of Christ's own disciples at the head of a conspiracy against him. Learn hence, That no man knows where he shall stop or stand when he first enters the ways of sin; should any one have told Judas, that his love of money would at last so far prevail upon him as to make him sell the blood of Jesus Christ, he would have answered as Hazael did Elisha, Is thy servant a dog, that I should do this thing? Wickedness like holiness, doth not presently come to its full strength in the soul, but grows up by insensible degrees. Men do not commence masters in the art of villany in an instant: they begin first with lesser, then with greater sins; first with secret, then with open sins. Doubtless Judas was an old, though secret sinner; surely he could not immediately attain to such an height of impudence, and so great a degree of stupidity. Hear, ye professors of religion, ye that partake of ordinances, frequent sacraments, take heed of living as Judas did, in the allowed commission of any secret sin, to the wasting of your consciences, and the destroying of your souls. Observe, 3. The manner how this hellish plot was executed; partly by force and partly by fraud: by force, in that he came, with a multitude armed with swords and staves; and by fraud, he gives him a kiss, and says, Hail, Master. Here was honey in the tongue, and poison in the heart. This treacherous kiss enhanced his crime beyond expression. O vilest of hypocrites, how durst thou approach so near thy Lord in the exercises of so much baseness and ingratitude! But none sin with so much impudence and obstinacy as apostates. Learn we hence, To beware of men; when we see too, too glittering appearances, we may suspect the inside. Charity for others is our duty, but too great confidence may be our snare. There is much hypocrisy in many, and so much corruption in all, that we must not be too confident. Observe, 4. The time when this treasonable design was executed upon Christ, when he was in the garden with his disciples, exhorting them to prayer and watchfulness, dropping heavenly and most seasonable counsels upon them. "While he yet spake, lo, Judas came, and the multitude with him." Judas found Christ, in the most heavenly and excellent employment, when he came to apprehend him. O how happy is it, when our sufferings find us in God's way, engaged in his service, and engaging his assistance by fervent supplication! Thus did our Lord's sufferings meet him, may they so meet us.

51 And, behold, one of them which were with Jesus stretched out his hand, and drew his sword, and struck a servant of the high priest's, and smote off his ear.

52 Then said Jesus unto him, Put up again thy sword into his place; for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword.

53 Thinkest thou that I cannot now pray to my Father, and he shall presently give me more than twelve legions of angels?

54 But how then shall the scriptures be fulfilled, that thus it must be?

The rude multitude laying hands upon Christ, the disciples who had remitted their watch, do resume their courage, and are willing to rescue their Master, if they can; particularly Peter draws his sword, and cuts off the ear of Malchus one of the forwardest to lay hold on Jesus. Observe here, St. Peter's zeal and sincere love for his Lord and Master; it was in great sincerity spoken, Though I die with thee, yet will I not deny thee. But why did not Peter draw his sword upon Judas, rather than Malchus? Perhaps because though Judas was more faulty, yet Malchus was more forward to arrest and carry off our Saviour. How doth a pious breast swell with indignation at the sight of an open affront offered unto Christ? Observe here, That though St. Peter's heart was sincere, yet his hand was rash: good intentions are no warrant for irregular actions: and accordingly Christ, who accepted his affection, reproves him for the action; "Put up thy sword; for they that take the sword shall perish by the sword." Learn hence, that Christ will thank no man to fight for him without a warrant and commission from him. To resist a lawful magistrate, even in Christ's own defence is rash zeal, and discountenanced by the gospel. To a lawful power lawfully executed there must be yielded due obedience. Observe lastly, Our Lord's absolute refusal to be rescued out of his enemies' hands, with the reason of it; "Did I incline to be rescued by force (as if our Lord had said) I could demand all the troops of angels in heaven to show themselves upon that occasion; but how can this stand with the decrees of my Father, with the declarations of the scripture, with the demonstration of mercy, and the salvation of miserable mankind." Learn thence, That Christ was infinitely more concerned for the salvation of lost sinners, than for his own death and sufferings; more concerned for our eternal salvation, than for his own temporal preservation. Had he been rescued by the power of angels, we had fallen a prey into the paws of devils.

55 In that same hour said Jesus to the multitudes, Are ye come out, as against a thief, with swords and staves for to take me? I sat daily with you teaching in the temple, and ye laid no hold on me.

56 But all this was done, that the scriptures of the prophets might be fulfilled. Then all his disciples forsook him, and fled.

We had an account of our Lord's apprehension in the former verses, here the sad effect of it upon his disciples; They all forsook him, and fled. Had this been done by the giddy multitude who followed him for the loaves, it had been no cause of wonder; but for those who had already forsaken all to follow him who were faithful, though fearful friends; what an addition to his sufferings must this be! No doubt but the ingratitude of his friends made deeper wounds into his soul than the malice of enemies could make in his body. They that said all to Christ, ver. 35. "Though we should die with thee, yet we will not deny thee," do here all of them desert and forsake him; when it came to the push, not a man of them stands by him. Learn hence, That the holiest of men know not their own hearts when great temptations and trials are before them, till they come to grapple with them, and to be engaged in them. We know not our own strength, till temptation puts us to the proof.

57 ¶ And they that had laid hold on Jesus led him away to Caiaphas the high priest, where the scribes and the elders were assembled.

58 But Peter followed him afar off, unto the high priest's palace, and went in, and sat with the servants to see the end.

59 Now, the chief priests, and elders, and all the council, sought false witness against Jesus, to put him to death;

60 But found none: yea, though many false-witnesses came, yet found they none. At the last came two false witnesses, 61 And said, This fellow said, I am able to destroy the temple of God and to build it in three days.

62 And the highpriest arose, and said unto him, Answerest thou nothing? what is it which these witness against thee?

63 But Jesus held his peace.

Judas having made good his promise to the highpriest and delivered Jesus a prisoner into their hands, these wolves of the evening no sooner seize the Lamb of God, but they thirst and long to suck his innocent blood. Yet lest it should look like a downright murder, they will allow him a mock trial, and abuse the law by perverting it to justice and bloodshed: accordingly they industriously suborn false witnesses to take away his life, not sticking at the grossest perjury, so they might destroy him. "The chief priests and elders, and all the council sought false witness against Jesus to put him to death." Abominable wickedness! Innocency itself cannot protect from slander and false accusations. No man is so innocent or good, whom false witnesses may not condemn. Yet observe farther, Our Lord's meekness and patience, his submissive silence, under all these wicked suggestions and false accusations. Jesus held his peace, ver. 63. Guilt is clamorous and impatient; innocency is silent, and careless of mis-reports. Learn hence, That to bear the revilings, contradictions, and false accusations of men, with a silent and submissive spirit, is an excellent and Christ-like temper. Our Lord stood before his unjust judges, and false accusers, as a sheep before his shearers, dumb, and not opening his mouth. Although a trial for his life was managed most maliciously and illegally against him, "when he was reviled, he reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not, but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously." O let the same humble mind be in us, which was also in Christ Jesus!

— And the highpriest answered and said unto him, I adjure thee, by the living God, that thou tell us whether thou be the Christ, the Son of God.

64 Jesus saith unto him, Thou hast said: Nevertheless, I say unto you, Hereafter shall ye see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven.

65 Then the highpriest rent his clothes, saying, He hath spoken blasphemy: what further need have we of witness? behold' now ye have heard his blasphemy.

(No. 8)

66 What think ye? They answered and said, he is guilty of death.

67 Then did they spit in his face, and buffeted him, and others smote him with the palms of their hands, 68 Saying, Prophecy unto us, Thou Christ: Who is he that smote thee?

We observed even now, that our Lord was silent, and did make no reply to the false witnesses that evidenced against him at his trial: because being so manifestly contradicting; they did fall to the ground of themselves. But now when the question was solemnly put by the highpriest, Art thou the Christ? He said, I am. Thence learn, That although we are not obliged to answer every cavilling or ensnaring question, yet we are bound faithfully to own, and freely to confess, the truth, when we are solemnly called thereunto. Christ, who in the former verses was silent, and as a deaf man that heard not, now witnesses a good confession: teaching us, both by his example and command, to confess and own both him and his truth, when lawfully required; when our silence will be a denying of the truth, a dishonor to God, and a scandal to our brethren; Christ knew that his answer would cost him his life, and yet he durst not but give it. Art thou the Son of the Blessed? Jesus said, I am. Yea farther observe, That as Christ answered directly and plainly at his trial, so he did not refuse to answer upon oath, I adjure thee by the living God, says the judge of the court, that thou tell us whether thou art the Christ: that is, I require thee to answer this question upon oath, for adjuring a person, or requiring him to answer upon oath, was the manner of swearing among the Jews. Now to this adjuration our Saviour answered plainly and directly, I am, Mark xiv. 61. Hence learn, That swearing before a magistrate upon a just and great occasion, is lawful: if Christ in the fifth of St. Matthew forbids all oaths, then here his practice was contrary to his own doctrine: but it is evident that Christ answered the magistrate upon oath, and so may we. Observe lastly, The sentence of condemnation which the council passed upon him for owning himself to be the Son of God. He hath spoken blasphemy, and is worthy to die. Hereupon the unruly rabble affront him with the vilest abuses, and most horrid indignities: They spit in his face; they blindfolded him, they smote him with their fists and palms of their hands; and in the way of contempt and mockery, they bid him divine or prophesy, who it was that smote him. Learn hence, That there is no degree of contempt, no mark of shame, no kind of suffering, which we ought to decline or stick at for Christ's sake, who hid not his face from shame and spitting upon our account. O monstrous impiety! How do they spit on that awful lovely face? How do they revile and blaspheme his noble office of a prophet of the most high God? prophesy, say they in a mocking derision, who was it that smote thee? To such acts of inhumanity did the barbarous rage of the bloody Jews carry them.

69 ¶ Now Peter sat without in the palace; and a damsel came unto him, saying, Thou wast with Jesus of Galilee.

70 But he denied before them all, saying, I know not what thou sayest.

71 And when he was gone out into the porch, another maid saw him, and said unto them that were there, This fellow was also with Jesus of Nazareth.

72 And again he denied with an oath, I do not know the man.

73 And after a while came unto him they that stood by, and said to Peter, Surely thou also art one of them; for thy speech bewrayeth thee.

74 Then began he to curse and to swear, saying, I know not the man. And immediately the cock crew.

75 And Peter remembered the words of Jesus, which said unto him, Before the cock crow thou shalt deny me thrice. And he went out and wept bitterly.

This last paragraph of the chapter gives an account of the fall and rising of Peter, of his sin in denying Christ, and of his recovery by a speedy and severe repentance. Both must be considered distinctly. First, as touching his sin and fall, there are four particulars observable, namely, the sin itself, the occasion of that sin, the reiteration and repetition of it, and the aggravating circumstances attending it. Observe, 1. The sin itself, the denial of Christ, I know not the man, a manifest untruth: next, he adds an oath, to confirm that untruth: he swore that he knew not the man. And last of all, he wished an horrid curse and imprecation upon himself: that is, he wished himself excommunicated and cast out of the church, say some: he wished himself eternally separated from the presence of God, say others: he wished, in effect, that the devil might take him if he were acquainted with Jesus. The inordinate love of life, and slavish fear of sufferings and death, may draw the best of men to commit the worst of sins. Observe, 2. The occasions of this sin, and they were three; his following Christ afar off; his being in bad company, amongst Christ's enemies; and his presumptuous confidence of his own strength and standing. 1. His following of Christ afar off. To follow Christ is the work of faith, and fruit of love: but to follow him afar off, was the effect of fear and frailty. Woe unto us when a temptation comes, if we be far off from Christ's presence and assistance. 2. His being in wicked company, amongst Christ's enemies. O Peter, thou hadst better been cold by thyself alone, than sitting by a fire encompassed with the blasphemies of the wicked; where thy conscience, though not seared, was yet made hard. The way to escape prevailing temptations to sin, is to shun such places, and to avoid such companions, as in all probability will invite and draw us into sin. 3. Confidence of his own strength and standing was another occasion of Peter's falling. Pride and presumptuous confidence have been ever the forerunners and occasions of a fall. O Lord! to presume upon ourselves is the ready way to provoke thee to leave us to ourselves if ever we stand in the day of trial, it is the fear of falling must enable us to stand. Not only they who go forth in the strength of nature, but also they who go forth in the strength of inherent grace, may quickly fall from their own steadfastness. Observe, 3. The reiteration and repetition of this sin. He denies him a first, a second, and a third time. He denies him first with a lie, then with an oath, and after all, with an anathema and curse. O how dangerous is it not to resist the first beginnings of sin! If we yield to one temptation, satan will assault us with more, and stronger. Peter proceeded from a bare denial, first to perjury, then to cursing and imprecation. Observe, 4. The aggravating circumstances attending this sin of Peter, and they are these: 1. The character of the person thus falling; a disciple, an apostle, a chief apostle, a special favorite; who with James and John, had the special honor to be with Christ upon mount Tabor; Peter who had preached and prophesied in Christ's name, cast out devils, and wrought miracles by Christ's power, yet he denies him. 2. Consider the person whom he denies; his Master, his Saviour and Redeemer; he that had washed Peter's feet but a little before; that eat the passover with Peter, and gave the sacrament to Peter; yet this kind and condescending Saviour was denied by Peter. 3. Consider before whom he denies him, in the company and presence of the chief priests, scribes, and elders, and their servants, who rejoiced at it, and were hardened by it; that one disciple should sell him for money, and another disciple deny him through fear. 4. Consider the time when he denied him: verily it was but a few hours after he had received the sacrament of the Lord's Supper from Christ's own hand. How unreasonable then is their objection against coming to the Lord's table, because some that go do dishonor Christ as soon as they come from it: such examples most not discourage us from coming to the ordinance, but excite and increase our watchfulness after we have been there, to take heed that the future conduct of our lives be suited to the solemnity of a sacramental table. 5. Consider the smallness of his temptation to deny Christ; a damsel only put the question to him, Art thou one of his disciples? If a band of armed soldiers had appeared to him, and affrighted him; had he been terrified by the highpriest's threatenings, bound and led away to judgment, sentenced to an ignominious, painful death, some excuse might have been made for him: but to disown his relation to Christ at the question of a maid-servant that kept the door only! the smallness of the temptation was an aggravation of the crime. "Ah, Peter, how unlike thyself art thou at this time. Not a rock but a reed; a pillar blown down by a woman's breath. O frail humanity, whose strength is weakness and infirmity!" Observe here, that in most of the saints' falls recorded in scripture, either the first enticers, or the accidental occasions, were women. Thus in Adam, Lot, Samson, David, Solomon, and Peter's. A weak creature may be a strong tempter; nothing is too impotent or useless for the devil's service. It was a great aggravation of Peter's sin, that the voice of a maid, a door-keeper only, should be stronger to overcome him than his faith in Jesus to sustain him. But what shall we say? Small things are sufficient to cast us down, if God doth not hold us up: we sink under any burden, if he sustain us not, and yield to every temptation, if he leaves us to ourselves. A damsel shall then make a disciple shrink, and a door-keeper is enough to drive an apostle before her. "And immediately the cock crew. And Peter remembered the words of Jesus, which said unto him, Before the cock crow, thou shalt deny me thrice: And he went out and wept bitterly. Here we have an account of St. Peter's rising and recovery after his shameful fall, by a renewed act and exercise of repentance, the means of his repentance, and the manner of it. Observe, 1. The suddenness of his repentance: although his sin was great, yet his repentance was speedy and without delay. From whence note, That sins committed by the surprisal of a sudden temptation, are much sooner repented of than where the sin is presumptuous and deliberate. David's sins of murder and adultery were presumptuous and deliberate sins; he continued a long time in them, and lived almost a twelve-month without any solemn repentance of them. St. Peter's sin was hasty and sudden, under a violent passion of fear, contrary to his settled purpose and resolution of constancy; and he takes the warning of the second crowing of the cock, and goes forth to express his repentance. Observe, 2. The means of his repentance, which was twofold. Less principal, the crowing of the cock; more principal, Christ looking upon Peter, and Peter remembering the words of Christ. 1. The less principal means of St. Peter's repentance was the crowing of the cock (Bishop Reynolds on St. Peter's fall :) as the voice of the maid occasioned him to sin, so the voice of a cock occasioned him to repent. That God who can work without means, does sometimes work by weak and contemptible means, and when he pleases, can open the mouth of a bird or beast for the conversion of man. But why should our Saviour choose the crowing of the cock as a means to bring St. Peter to repentance, there being something of emblem between the cock and a preacher. A true minister must have the wings of a cock to rouse up himself from security, and to awaken others to a sense of their duty. He must have the watchfulness of a cock, to be ever ready to discover and forewarn danger. He must have the voice of a cock, to crow aloud and tell Israel of their sin, and terrify the roaring lion, and make him tremble. In a word, he must observe the hours of the cock, to crow at all seasons of the night, to preach in season and out of season, the glad tidings of salvation. But, 2. The more principal means of St. Peter's recovery, was, 1. Christ's looking upon Peter. Christ first looks upon Peter with an eye of mercy, grace and pity, before Peter looks upon his sin in order to repentance. Here take notice of the greatness of Christ's grace, of his wonderful love and mercy to this poor disciple. When our Saviour was upon his trial for his life, a time when our thoughts are wholly taken up about ourselves; even then did Christ find leisure to think upon Peter, remember to turn about, and give him a pitiful, but piercing look; a look that melted his heart and dissolved it into tears. We never begin to lament for sin, till we are first lamented by our Saviour. Jesus looked upon Peter. This is the first more principal means of Peter's repentance. The second is, Peter's remembering the words of Christ, Before the cock crow twice thou shalt deny me thrice. This remembrance of Christ's words was an applicative and feeling remembrance of them. He remembered the prediction of Christ, and applies it sensibly to himself. Teaching us, that the efficacy of Christ's word, in order to the bringing of a soul unto repentance, depends not upon the historical remembrance of it, but upon the close application of it to every man's conscience. A sanctified remembrance of Christ's words, and our own sins, is an excellent preparative to repentance. Observe lastly, The manner of Peter's repentance; it was secret; he went out; it was sincere, he wept bitterly; it was lasting and abiding all the days of his life, and attended with an extraordinary zeal and forwardness for the service of Christ to the end of his life. 1. It was secret, he went out; vere dolet, qui sine teste dolet. He sought a place of retirement where he might moan in secret: he cannot well be thought to dissemble his grief, who chooses no witness but the omnipresent God. Solitariness is most agreeable to an afflicted spirit; and as St. Peter's sorrow caused him to go forth, so might also shame. Christ looked upon Peter, but how ashamed must Peter be to look upon Christ, considering he had so lately denied to have ever seen him? 2. His repentance was sincere, he wept bitterly; his grief was extraordinary, and his tears abundant. There is ever a weeping that follows sin; sin must cost the soul sorrow, either here or in hell; we must mourn awhile, or lament for ever. Doubtless with Peter's tears there were joined hearty confession of sin to God, and smart reflections upon himself, after this manner: "Lord! what have I done? I that did once acknowledge my Master to be Christ the Son of the living God, have since disowned him with oaths, curses, and imprecations: I, that promised to lay down my life for his sake, yet have denied him at the voice of a damsel. O what unfaithfulness, what weakness, what wickedness! O that my head were waters and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep all my days for the fault of this one night!" Blessed, indeed, are the tears of a converted revolter, and happy is the very misery of a mournful offender. 3. This holy man's repentance was lasting and abiding; he had a lively sense and remembrance of his sin upon his soul all his life. Ecclesiastical history reports, that ever after when St. Peter heard the crowing of a cock, he fell upon his knees and mourned; others say, that he was wont to rise at midnight, and spend the time in penitent devotion, between cock crowing and day-light. And the papists, who love to turn every thing into superstition, began that practice of setting a cock upon the top of towers, steeples, and chimneys, to put the people in mind of this sin of Peter, and his repentance by that signal. Lastly, St. Peter's repentance was attended with an extraordinary zeal and forwardness for the service of Christ to the end of his life. He had an earnest love towards Christ, "Thou that knowest all things, knowest that I love thee:" and as an evidence of it, he fed Christ's sheep; for in the Acts of the Apostles, we read of his extraordinary diligence to spread the gospel, and his travels in order thereunto are computed to be nine hundred and fifty miles: and the wisdom of God thought fit that this apostle should preach the gospel to the Jews, as St. Paul did to the Gentiles; that as he had joined with the Jews in denying and disowning Christ, so he should endeavour to persuade them to join with him in repentance, as he had joined with them in their sin. His sin was in some respects like theirs, therefore he is sent to preach the gospel to them, and his diligence therein is an undoubted proof and evidence of his repentance. Have any of us fallen with Peter? though not with a formal abjuring, yet by a particular denial of him, let us go forth and weep with him; let us be more vigilant and watchful over ourselves for the time to come, let us express more extraordinary love unto, and zeal for Christ, more diligence in his service, and more concernedness for his honor and glory. This would be an happy improvement of this example. The Lord grant it may have that blessed effect. Amen.

CHAPTER XXVII.

WHEN the morning was come, all the chief priests and elders of the people took counsel against Jesus to put him to death.

2 And when they had bound him, they led him away, and delivered him to Pontius Pilate, the governor.

The foregoing chapter gave us an account of Judas' treason, in delivering our Saviour into the hands of the chief priests. In this chapter we find our holy Lord brought by the chief priests unto Pontius Pilate, the Roman governor, in order to his arraignment and condemnation. Whence observe, That it has been the old policy of corrupt church-governors to abuse the power of the civil magistrate, in executing their cruel and unjust censures upon holy and innocent persons. The chief priests and elders do not kill our Saviour themselves, but they deliver him over to the secular power, and desire Pilate, the civil magistrate, to sentence and condemn him, which soon after we shall find he did. They bound him and led him away; but what need was there of binding him, that never made any resistance? And O, what ingratitude was it to bind him with cords, who came to unloose those bands of sin wherewith we were bound.

3 ¶ Then Judas, which had betrayed him, when he saw that he was condemned, repented himself, and brought again the thirty pieces of silver to the chief priests and elders,

4 Saying, I have sinned, in that I have betrayed the innocent blood. And they said, What is that to us? see thou to that.

5 And he cast down the pieces of silver in the temple and departed, and went and hanged himself.

Here we have a sad relation of Judas' desperate death, after an hypocritical life, as also the horror of his mind and conscience before his death. Observe here, 1. The time when Judas repented; after it was too late. "When he saw that he was condemned, he repented." Learn thence, That they who will not see their sin timely to their conversion, shall see them sooner or later to their confusion. Observe, 2. The repentance itself in the several parts and branches of it; he was sorrowful for the fact, he made confession of his sin, and made restitution for the wrong done. "He repented saying, I have sinned; and cast down the thirty pieces of silver." Learn thence, That a wicked man, when conscience is thoroughly awakened, may make confession of his sin, express some sorrow for it, and endeavour also the making of some satisfaction and restitution for the wrong and injury done by it. They that mourn for sin as sin; they that mourn more for the intrinsic evil that is in sin, than for the penal or consequential evils that follow sin; they that confess sin voluntarily and freely, particularly, penitentially, believingly, with an eye of sorrow upon their sin, and an eye of faith fixed upon their Saviour; they that make restitution as an act of obedience to the command of God, and as an act of justice and righteousness to their neighbour; such persons' repentance shall find acceptance with God. Observe, 3. The answer and reply which the wicked highpriests and elders make to despairing Judas; 1. They excuse themselves. What is that to us? It is natural to all sinners to shift sin from themselves, and to lay it at any door rather than their own. Those that have had a share in the pleasure and profit of sin, are yet very desirous to throw the odium and guilt of it upon others. What is that to us? say these monsters in sin. O wonderful stupidity! could they think it nothing to them to hire a man to betray innocent blood! Was not the money given, the price of blood, and the field they bought called the field of blood? yet they do impudently say, What is that to us? 2. As they excuse and acquit themselves, so they load and burden him: Look thou to that, Lord! What miserable comforters are companions in sin to one another, when distress and sorrow comes upon them. When sin comes to be questioned, in order to its being punished, every sinner is for shifting for himself, and leaves his fellow in the lurch. Let us then remember the words of the Holy Ghost, "He that walketh with wise men, shall be wise, but a companion of fools shall be destroyed." How jolly soever sinners are together, when in the height of their lusts, they are but miserable comforters to one another upon a sick bed, or under the lashes of an awakened conscience. But though they may avoid each other now, there is a time coming when it will be impossible; at the great day the sinner shall see both his companions in sin, and his sins themselves, to be what he never would believe them here the vilest of monsters. Observe, 4. The sad and fatal end of Judas. He went forth and hanged himself. Horror and despair took hold upon him, and seized his conscience; which was so intolerable, that he ran to the halter for a remedy. Learn thence, 1. That conscience is a powerful, though invisible executioner: the wrath of man may be endured, but the wrath of God is insupportable, and the irruptions of conscience are irresistible. O how intolerable are those scourges that lash us in this tender and vital part! Judas, awakened with the horror of his fact, conscience begins to rouse, and the man is unable to bear up under the furious revenge of his own mind. There is an active principle in men's breasts and bosoms, which seldom suffers daring sinners to pass in quiet to their graves. Guilt is naturally troublesome and uneasy; it disturbs the peace and serenity of the mind, and fills the soul with storms and thunder, both in life and death. How vainly did Judas hope to take sanctuary in a grave, and to meet with that ease in another world which he could not find in this. Thus ended this miserable man, Judas. Behold! ye professors of religion, the terrible example of God's justice on a deceitful hypocrite. Behold! a disciple, an apostle, first a traitor, and then a self-murderer. Behold! all ye covetous worldlings, to what the love of that accursed idol has brought this wretched apostle. Behold! Judas, once shining in the robes of a glorious profession, now shining in the flames of God's eternal wrath and vengeance. Lord! how earnest ought we to be for thy preserving grace, when neither the presence, the miracles, the sermons, the sacraments of Christ, could preserve and secure a professor, a disciple, and apostle, from the fatal mischief of a ruinous apostasy. "Let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall."

6 And the chief priests took the silver pieces, and said, It is not lawful for to put them into the treasury, because it is the price of blood.

7 And they took counsel, and bought with them the potter's field, to bury strangers in.

8 Wherefore that field was called, The field of blood unto this day.

9 (Then was fulfilled that which was spoken by Jeremy the prophet, saying, And they took the thirty pieces of silver, the price of him that was valued, whom they of the children of Israel did value;

10 And gave them for the potter's field, as the Lord appointed me.)

Observe here, 1. The niceness and scrupulosity of these hypocrites; they made no scruple to give money to shed blood, but they scruple the putting that money into the treasury which was the price of blood. They are afraid to defile their treasury, but are not afraid to pollute their souls. Thus hypocrites strain at a gnat, and swallow a camel; scruple at ceremony, but make no conscience of murder and perjury. Observe, 2. The use which they put this money to, which Judas brought them; they bought with it a field to bury strangers in. Thus Christ who was himself a stranger in a borrowed grave, by the price of his blood (being thirty pieces of silver) conferred graves upon many strangers. Observe lastly, How the wisdom of God ordered it, that hereby a scripture prophecy might be fulfilled, Zech. xi. 13. "They weighed for my price thirty pieces of silver, and I took and cast them unto the potter." Whence learn, that all the indignities and abasing sufferings which the Lord Jesus underwent, were not only fore-ordained by God, but also foretold by the holy prophets; his being scourged, buffeted, spit upon, and here his being sold for thirty pieces of silver.

(No. 8)

11 ¶ And Jesus stood before the governor; and the governor asked him, saying, Art thou the King of the Jews? And Jesus said unto him, Thou sayest.

12 And when he was accused of the chief priests and elders, he answered nothing.

13 Then saith Pilate unto him, Hearest thou not how many things they witness against thee?

14 And he answered him to never a word: insomuch that the governor marvelled greatly.

Observe here, 1. That our Saviour readily answers Pilate, but refuses to answer the chief priests before Pilate. Pilate asks him, Art thou the king of the Jews? Jesus readily answers, Thou sayest; or, it is as thou sayest. But to all the accusations of the chief priests, and to all that they laid to his charge before Pilate, our Saviour answered never a word: probably for these reasons; because his innocence was such as needed no apology; because their calumnies and accusations were so notoriously false, that they needed no confutation; to show his contempt of death, and to teach us, by his own example, patience and silence, when for his sake we are slandered and traduced. Learn thence, that although we are not obliged to answer every captious and ensnaring question, nor to refute every slander and false accusation, yet are we bound faithfully to own and confess the truth, when we are solemnly called thereunto. Our Saviour, as a deaf man hears not, answers not the calumnies of the chief priests; but when Pilate asks him, Art thou the king of the Jews? or as St. Mark has it, Art thou the Son of the Blessed? Jesus said, I am: though he knew that answer would cost him his life. Hence the apostle, 1 Tim. iv. 13, says, "That Christ before Pontius Pilate witnessed a good confession." Teaching us sometimes to hold our peace when our reputation is concerned; but never to be silent when the honor of God, the glory of his truth, the edification and confirmation of others, may effectually be promoted by our open confession: then must we with Christ give a direct, plain, and sincere answer. For whoever denies him, or any truth of his, knowingly and willingly, "him will Christ deny in the presence of his Father, and before all his holy angels."

15 Now, at that feast the governor was wont to release unto the people a prisoner, whom they would.

16 And they had then a notable prisoner, called Barabbas.

17 Therefore when they were gathered together, Pilate said unto them, Whom will ye that I release unto you? Barabbas, or Jesus, which is called Christ?

18 For he knew that for envy they had delivered him.

Now at the feast, that is, the feast of the passover, which by way of eminency is called the feast, the governor used to release a prisoner (possibly by way of memorial of their deliverance out of Egypt;) accordingly Pilate makes a motion to them, that Christ may be the prisoner set at liberty in honor of their feast; for he was sensible that what they did was out of envy and malice. As covetousness sold Christ, so envy delivered him. Envy is a killing and murdering passion: Envy slayeth the silly one, Job v. 2. that is, It slays the silly person who harbours this pestilent lust in his bosom, and is like a fire in his bones, continually preying upon him, causing him to pine away, and die miserably, because another lives happily. To envy another man's prosperity, is an argument of the worst simplicity: yea, farther, as envy slayeth the silly one, so it prompts and provokes the sinner to seek the slaying of simple and innocent ones. Envy wishes the envied person out of the way, yea, out of the world; and if need be, will not only wish it, but lend a lift towards it too; witness the chief priests here, whose envy was so conspicuous, that Pilate himself takes notice of it, and says, "He knew that for envy they had delivered him."

19 When he was set down on the judgment-seat, his wife sent unto him, saying, Have thou nothing to do with that just man: for I have suffered many things this day in a dream because of him.

There are several sorts or kinds of dreams, natural, moral, diabolical, and divine. The question is, what kind of dream this was? Nothing natural, all agree; some think it was diabolical, and that satan hoped thereby to prevent the work of man's redemption by the death of Christ. But if so, why had not Pilate the dream rather than his wife? Probably this dream was from God, for even our very dreams are ordered by God; our sleeping, as well as our waking times, are in God's hand. Learn hence, How wonderfully the wisdom and power of God is seen in this woman's testimony, which she gave to the innocence of our Saviour. When all his disciples were fled from him, when none of his friends durst speak a word for him, God raises up a woman, a stranger, a pagan, to give evidence of his innocence. And it is observable, That at our Saviour's trial, not one mouth was opened to plead or speak a word for him, in defence of innocence itself, but only Pilate and his wife's; they both pronounce him righteous, though they were Gentiles and Pagans, whilst his own kindred and countrymen, the Jews, thirst after his righteous and innocent blood.

20 But the chief priests and elders persuaded the multitude, that they should ask Barabbas, and destroy Jesus.

21 The governor answered and said unto them, Whether of the twain will ye that I release unto you? They said, Barabbas.

22 Pilate saith unto them, What shall I do then with Jesus, which is called Christ? They all say unto him, Let him be crucified.

23 And the governor said, Why? what evil hath he done? But they cried out the more, saying, Let him be crucified.

Observe here, 1. How exceedingly unwilling and averse Pilate was to be the instrument of our Saviour's death; one while he bids the Jews take him themselves, and judge him according to their law! another while he offers to save Christ in honor of their feast, when by custom he was to release a prisoner, and this prisoner he desired might be Jesus. When this would not satisfy, he expostulates with them about our Saviour's innocence, What evil hath he done? Nay, St. Luke says, chap. xxiii. "That Pilate came forth three times, and professed that he found no fault in him." Yet though Pilate was satisfied, the Jews would not be denied. Thence learn, That wicked men and hypocrites within the visible church, may be guilty of such tremendous acts of wickedness, as the conscience of infidels and pagans without the church may boggle at, and protest against. Pilate, a pagan, absolves Christ, whilst the hypocritical Jews which had heard his doctrine, and seen his miracles, condemn him. But observe, 2. Who influenced the main body of the Jews to desire Barabbas, and to destroy Jesus? It was the chief priests and elders, "they persuaded the multitude." Woe to the people when their guides and leaders are corrupt; for then they shall be tempted by wicked counsel; and woe unto them, much more, if they follow their wicked and pernicious counsels. Thus did the Jews follow their guides, the chief priests, till they had preserved Barabbas, and destroyed Jesus.

24 When Pilate saw that he could prevail nothing, but that rather a tumult was made, he took water, and washed his hands before the multitude, saying, I am innocent of the blood of this just person; see ye to it.

Two things are here observable in Pilate's washing of his hands. 1. By this action he pronounces our Saviour's innocence, and was willing thereby to testify his own, that he did not consent to our Saviour's death; washing the hands being an usual ceremony, in protestation of a person's innocence. But, 2. It was great folly and madness in Pilate, to think that washing of his hands did or could free him from the guilt of innocent blood. "O Pilate! thou hadst need rub hard, if thou meanest to scour from thy soul the guilt of that crimson sin which thou hast committed;

hy guilt cleaves so close unto thee that nothing can expiate it but the blood which thou has spilt." Neither was it any excuse of Pilate's sin, that what he did was to please the people and to gratify their importunity. It is a fond apology for sins, when persons pretend they were not committed with their own consent, but at others' instigation and importunity.

25 Then answered all the people, and said, His blood be on us and on our children.

That is, "Let the guilt and punishment of his blood rest upon us, and our posterity." A most horrid and impious imprecation; the dreadful effects of it began to come upon them forty years after in the destruction of Jerusalem, and has rested and remained upon our posterity to this day, near eighteen hundred years: the Jews being vagabonds over the earth, abhorred by all nations wheresoever they come. The just God has heard their wicked wish, and caused that blood to fall upon them in so severe and righteous a manner, as must pierce the heart of those that read and observe it. God has given them blood to drink, as indeed they were worthy. This ought to be a terror and a warning to all persons, that they avoid all cursed imprecations, and wicked wishes upon themselves or others. Woe to such as wish damnation to themselves, and plague upon others; how if God says Amen, and ratifies in heaven the cursed imprecations made on earth, as he did this of the wicked Jews: His blood be on us, and on our children! Yet what they with a wicked mind put up as a direful imprecation, we may with a pious mind offer up to God as an humble petition: Lord let thy Son's blood, not in the guilt and punishment, but in the efficacy and merit of it, be upon us, and upon our posterity after us, for evermore.

26 Then released he Barabbas unto them: and when he had scourged Jesus, he delivered him to be crucified.

As the death of the cross was a Roman punishment, so it was the manner of the Romans first to scourge and whip their malefactors, and then deliver them to be crucified. Now the manner of the Romans' scourging is said to be thus: they stripped the condemned person, and bound him to a post: two strong men first scourged him with rods of thorns, then two others scourged him with whips of cords full of knots; and lastly, two more with whips of wire, and therewith tore off the very flesh and skin from the person's back and sides: That our Saviour was thus cruelly scourged, seems to some not improbable, from that of the psalmist, Ps. cxxix. 3. The ploughers ploughed upon my back, and made long furrows." Which, if spoken prophetically of Christ was literally fulfilled in the day of his scourging. But why was the precious body of our blessed Lord thus galled and torn with scourgings? Doubtless to fulfil that prophecy: "I gave my back to the smiters, and my cheeks to them that plucked off the hair.—That by his stripes we might be healed." And to learn us patience from his example: why should we think it strange to be scourged either with the tongue or the hand, or with both, when we see our dear Redeemer bleeding by stripes and scourges before our eyes.

27 Then the soldiers of the governor took Jesus into the common-hall, and gathered unto him the whole band of soldiers.

28 And they stripped him, and put on him a scarlet robe.

29 And when they had platted a crown of thorns, they put it upon his head, and a reed in his right hand: and they bowed the knee before him, and mocked him, saying, Hail! King of the Jews.

30 And they spit upon him, and took the reed, and smote him on the head.

31 ¶ And after that they had mocked him, they took the robe off from him, and put his own raiment on him, and led him away to crucify him.

The next part of our Lord's sufferings consisted of cruel mockings. Our blessed Saviour had said, that he was the King of the Jews; not a temporal king to reign over them with pomp and power, but a spiritual king, to rule in the hearts of his people; but the Jews, missing of their expectations of a temporal king in Christ, look upon him as an impostor: and accordingly they treat him as a mock king, putting a crown upon his head, but a very ignominious and painful one, a crown of thorns: a sceptre in his hand, but it was of a reed: and a robe of purple or scarlet, both of which were used by princes, and bowed the knee before him, as they were wont to do to princes. Thus all the marks of scorn imaginable are put upon our blessed Redeemer: yet that which they did in jest, God did in earnest, for all these things were ensigns and marks of sovereignty; and Almighty God caused the regal dignity of his Son to appear and shine forth even in the midst of his abasement. Whence was all the jeering and sport, but to flout majesty? And why did Christ undergo all this ignominy, disgrace and shame, but to show us what was due to us for our sins, and to give us an example to bear all the scorn, reproach and shame imaginable for his sake, "Who, for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross, and despised the shame."

32 And as they came out, they found a man of Cyrene, Simon by name: him they compelled to bear his cross, 33 And when they were come unto a place called Golgotha, that is to say, A place of a skull.

34 They gave him vinegar to drink mingled with gall: and when he had tasted thereof he would not drink.

35 And they crucified him, and parted;

his garments, casting lots ; that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet. They parted my garments among them, and upon my vesture did they cast lots, 36 And sitting down, they watched him there;

The sentence of death being passed by Pilate, who can with dry eyes behold the sad pomp of our Saviour's bloody execution? Forth comes the blessed Jesus out of Pilate's gates, bearing that cross which was soon after to bear him. With his cross on his shoulder, he marches towards Golgotha ; and when they see he can go no faster, they force Simon the Cyrenian, not out of compassion, but from indignation, to be the porter of his cross. This Cyrenian being a Gentile, not a Jew, who bare our Saviour's cross, might signify and show, that the Gentiles should have a part in Christ, and be sharers with the Jews in the benefits of his cross. At length Christ comes to the place of execution, Golgotha or mount Calvary. Here, in a public place, with infamous company, betwixt two thieves, he is crucified ; that is fastened to a great cross of wood, his hands stretched forth abroad, and his feet close together ! and both hands and feet fastened with nails !! his naked body was lifted up in the open air, hanging between heaven and earth ; thereby intimating, that the crucified person was unfit to live in either. This shameful, painful, and accursed death, did the holy and innocent Jesus undergo for sinners. Some observe all the dimensions of length, breadth, depth, and height, in our Saviour's sufferings. For length, his passion was several hours long, from twelve to three, exposed all that time to hunger and cold : the thieves crucified with him were not dead so soon : they endured but personal pain, he undergoing the miseries of all mankind. But what his passion wanted in length, it had in breadth, extending over all the parts and powers of his soul and body ; no part free but his tongue, which was at liberty to pray for enemies. His sight was tormented with the scornful gestures of such, as passed by wagging their heads ; his hearing grieved with the taunts and jeers of the priests and people ; his smelling offended with noisome savors in the place of sculls : his taste with the gall and vinegar given him to drink. His feeling was wonderfully affected by the nails, which pierced his hands and feet, and the crown of thorns, which pierced his tender temples with a multiplicity of wounds. And for the depth of his passion, it was as deep as hell itself ; enduring tortures in his soul, as well as torments in his body ; groaning under the burden of desertion, and crying out, My God, My God, why hast thou forsaken me ? Lastly, for the height of his sufferings, they were as high as heaven ; his person being innocent and infinite, no less than the Son of God, which adds an infinite worth and value to his sufferings, " Lord let us be able to comprehend with all saints, what is the breadth and length, depth and height, and let us know the love of Christ, which in suffering for us passeth knowledge." So infinite every way were the dimensions of it.

37 And set up over his head his accusation written, THIS IS JESUS, THE KING OF THE JEWS.

It was the manner of the Romans, when they crucified any man, to publish the cause of his death in capital letters, placed over the head of the person. Now see how the wisdom and providence of God powerfully over-ruled the heart and pen of Pilate to draw his title, which was truly honorable, and fix it to his cross : Pilate is Christ's herald, and proclaims him, King of the Jews. Learn hence, That the regal dignity of Christ was proclaimed by an enemy, and that in a time of his greatest sufferings and reproaches. Pilate did Christ a special honor, and an eminent piece of service. He did that for Christ, which none of his own disciples durst do ; but he did it not designedly for his glory, but from the special overruling power of Divine Providence ; but the highest services performed to Christ undesignedly, shall never be accepted or rewarded by God.

38 Then were there two thieves crucified with him ; one on the right hand, and another on the left.

39 ¶ And they that passed by reviled him, wagging their heads, 40 And saying, Thou that destroyest the temple, and buildest it in three days, save thyself. If thou be the Son of God, come down from the cross.

41 Likewise also the other priests, mocking him, with the scribes and elders, said, 42 He saved others ; himself he cannot save. If he be the king of Israel, let him now come down from the cross, and we will believe him.

43 He trusted in God ; let him deliver him now, if he will have him ; for he said, I am the Son of God.

44 The thieves also, which were crucified with him, cast the same in his teeth.

Here we have several aggravations of our Lord's sufferings upon the cross. 1. From the company he suffered with, two thieves. It had been disparagement enough to our blessed Saviour to have been sorted with the best of men ; but to be numbered with the scum of mankind, is such an indignity as confounds our thoughts. This was intended by the Jews to dishonor him the more, and to persuade the world that he was the greatest of offenders ; but God overruled this that the scripture might be fulfilled. He was numbered among the transgressors. 2. Another aggravation of our Lord's sufferings on the cross, was the scorn and mocking derision which he met with in his dying moments from the common people, from the chief priests, and from the thieves that sufferred with him. The common people, both in words and actions, expressed scorn and detestation against him. "They reviled him, wagging their heads." The chief priests, though men of age and gravity, not only barbarously mock him, in his extremest misery, whom humanity obliged them to pity; but they scoff atheistically and profanely, jeering at his faith and affiance in God; tauntingly saying, "He trusted in God that he would deliver him; let him deliver him now if he will have him." Where observe, That persecutors are generally atheists, though they make a profession of religion. The chief priests and elders here, though learned and knowing men, yet they blaspheme God, mock at his power, and deride his providence, which was as bad as to deny his being. Hence we may gather, That those who administer to God in holy things—by way of office, if they be not the best, they are the worst of men. No such bitter enemies to the power of godliness, as the ministers of religion who were never acquainted with the efficacy and power of it in their own hearts and lives. Nothing on this side hell is worse than a wicked priest, a minister of God devoted to the service of the devil. A third aggravation of our Lord's sufferings on the cross, was, that the thieves that were crucified with him reviled him with the rest; that is, one of them as St. Luke has it, or perhaps both of them might do it at first. Which, if so, increases the wonder of the penitent thief's conversion. From the thief's impenitency we learn, That neither shame nor pain will change the mind of a resolute sinner; but even then when he is in the very suburbs of hell, will he blaspheme.

45 Now, from the sixth hour there was darkness over all the land unto the ninth hour.

46 And, about the ninth hour, Jesus cried with a loud voice, saying, Eli, Eli, lama sabachthani? that is to say, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?

47 Some of them that stood there, when they heard that, said, This man calleth for Elias.

48 And straightway one of them ran, and took a sponge, and filled it with vinegar, and put it on a reed, and gave him to drink.

49 The rest said, Let be, let us see whether Elias will come to save him.

50 ¶ Jesus, when he had cried again with a loud voice, yielded up the ghost.

Observe here, 1. How the rays of Christ's divinity, and the glory of his godhead, break out and shine forth in the midst of that infirmity which his human nature labored under. He shows himself to be the God of nature, by altering the course of nature. The sun is eclipsed, and darkness overspreads the earth, for three hours: namely, from twelve o'clock to three. Thus the sun in the firmament becomes close mourner at our Lord's death, and the whole frame of nature puts itself into a funeral habit; Observe, 2. That the chief of Christ's sufferings consisted in the suffering of his soul; the distressed of the Spirit were more intolerable than the torments of his body, as appears by His mournful complaint, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? Being the first words of the 22d psalm; and some conceive that he repeated that whole psalm, 't being an admirable narrative of the colors of his passion. Learn hence, That the Lord Jesus Christ, when suffering for our sins, was really deserted for a time, and left destitute of all sensible consolation. Why hast thou forsaken me? Learn farther, That under this desertion Christ despaired not, but still retained a firm persuasion of God's love unto him, and experienced necessary supports from him. My God, My, God, These are words of faith and affiance, striving under temptation. Christ was thus forsaken for us, that we might never be forsaken by God; yet by God's forsaking of Christ, is not to be understood any abatement of divine love, but only a withdrawing from the human nature the sense of his love, and a letting out upon his soul a deep afflicting sense of his displeasure against sin. There is a total and eternal desertion, by which God utterly forsakes a man, both as to grace and glory, being wholly cast out of our God's presence, and adjudged to eternal torments; this was not compatible to Christ, nor agreeable to the dignity of his person. But there is a partial and temporary desertion, when God for a little moment hides his face from his children; now this was both agreeable to the dignity of Christ's nature, and also suitable to his office, who was to satisfy the justice of God for our forsaking of him, and to bring us near to him, that we might be received for ever. Observe lastly, What a miraculous evidence Christ gave of his divinity instantly before he gave up the ghost. He cried with a loud voice. This showed that he did not die according to the ordinary course of nature, gradually departing and drawing on, as we express it. No, his life was whole in him, and nature as strong at last as at first. Other men die gradually, and towards their end their sense of pain is much blunted; they fumble, fumble, and die by degrees: but Christ stood under the pains of death in his full strength; his life was whole in him. This was evident by the mighty outcry he made when he gave up the ghost, contrary to the sense and experience of all other persons; this argued him to be full of strength. And he that could cry with such a loud voice (in articulo mortis) as he did, could have kept himself from dying, if he would. Hence we learn, That when Christ died, he rather conquered death, than was conquered by death. He must voluntarily and freely lay down his life, before death could come at him, He yielded up the ghost. O! wonderful sight; the Lord of life hangs dead, dead on the accursed tree! O! severe and inexorable justice of God! O! amazing and astonishing love in Christ! love beyond expression, beyond conception, beyond all comprehension: with what comparison shall we compare it? Verily, with nothing but itself; never was love like thine.

51 And, behold, the veil of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom: and the earth did quake, and the rocks rent:

K K

52 And the graves were opened; and many bodies of the saints which slept arose, 53 And came out of the graves after his resurrection, and went into the holy city, and appeared unto many.

54 Now, when the centurion, and they that were with him, watching Jesus, saw the earthquake, and those things that were done, they feared greatly, saying, Truly this was the Son of God.

55 And many women were there, beholding afar off, which followed Jesus from Galilee, ministering unto him;

56 Among which was Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James and Joses, and the mother of Zebedee's children.

Here we have an account of several extraordinary and wonderful things which occurred, and fell out about the time that our Saviour died, 1. The veil of the temple rent asunder, that is, the hanging which parted the holy from the most holy place, to hide the mysteries therein, namely, the ark of the covenant and mercy-seat, from the view of the ordinary priests. This veil was now rent from the top to the bottom, and the rending of it did impart these great mysteries: 1. That now our great High Priest was entering into the most holy place with his own blood, having made the atonement for us. Heb. ix. 12. "By his own blood he entered once into the most holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us." 2. That the means whereby he entered into the most holy place, was by the rending of his humanity, his soul from his body, typified by rending of this veil; accordingly his body is called a veil, Heb. x. 20. Consecrated through the veil of his flesh. 3. That now by the death of Christ all those dark mysteries veiled up formally in the most holy place, as the ark of the covenant and mercy-seat, are now unfolded and laid open, and the use of the whole ceremonial law at an end, and the Jewish temple-service ceased. 4. That now the kingdom of heaven, the most holy place, is open to all believers. Christ, our great High Priest, is entered in with his own blood, and hath not closed the veil after him, but rent it asunder, and made, and left a passage for all believers to follow him, first in their prayers and next in their persons. See Heb. x. 19, 20. "Having therefore boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way which he hath consecrated for us though the veil, that is to say, his flesh; let us draw near with a true heart, &c." Observe, 2. The earth quaked. As there was an universal eclipse, so likewise an universal earthquake, at our Lord's crucifixion, which did awaken many of the saints (that died before our Saviour's incarnation) out of their dead sleep. These arose both as witnesses of Christ's resurrection, and also as sharers in it. But none of them arose till Christ was risen, he being the first fruits of them that slept. And those holy persons that arose with him, possibly attended him to heaven at his ascension. From hence we learn, That Christ was the Saviour of those who believed in him before his incarnation, as well as those that believed in him since his incarnation: and that the former are partakers of the fruit and benefit of his death and resurrection, no less than the latter. Others conjecture that those who rose out of their graves, were such as believed in Christ, and died before him, as old Simeon, &c. Accordingly they understand, St. John v. 25. "The hour is coming, and now is, that the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of man," of this resurrection here mentioned. And whereas it is said they went into the holy city, and appeared to many: it is probable they were known to them unto whom they did appear; and if so, they must have lived in the time of their knowledge. Observe, next, What influence and effect the sight of those prodigious things had upon the centurion and the soldiers: it convinced them, that verily this was the Son of God. Here we see the Heathen soldiers are sooner convinced of the divinity of Christ, than the unbelieving Jewish doctors. Obstinacy and unbelief filled their minds with an invincible prejudice against Christ; so that neither the miracles done by him in his life, nor wrought at his death, could convince the high priests, that Christ was any other than an impostor and deceiver. Observe lastly, Who of Christ's friends were witnesses of his death: "They are women who followed him from Galilee, and ministered unto him:" not one of his dear disciples, except St. John, who stood by the cross with the Virgin Mary. What a shame was this for the apostles, to be absent from a spectacle upon which the salvation of the whole world did depend! and what an honor was this to the female sex in general, and to these women in particular, that they had the courage to follow Christ to the cross, when all the disciples forsook him and fled! God can make women glorious professors of his truth, and arm them against the fears of sufferings, contrary to the natural timorousness of their tempers. These women wait upon Christ's cross, when apostles fly, and durst not come near it.

57 When the even was come, there came a rich man of Arimathea, named Joseph, who also himself was Jesus' disciple:

58 He went to Pilate and begged the body of Jesus: Then Pilate commanded the body to be delivered.

59 And when Joseph had taken the body, he wrapped it in a clean linen cloth, 60 And laid it in his own new tomb, which he had hewn out in the rock: and he rolled a great stone to the door of the sepulchre and departed.

61 And there was Mary Magdalene, and the other Mary, sitting over against the sepulchre.

Here we have an account given of our Lord's funeral, and interment in the grave; such a funeral as never was since graves were first digged. Concerning which, we have these particulars observable; Observe, 1. The preparatives that were made for our Lord's funeral; namely, the begging and perfuming of his dead body; his body could not be buried, till by begging it was obtained of Pilate; the dead bodies of malefactors being in the power and disposal of the judge. Pilate grants it; and to manifest their dear affection to their dear Lord, they wrapt the body in fine linen, with spices to perfume it. But what need of odors for that body which could not see corruption? Though his holy body did not want them, yet the affections of his friends could not withhold them. Observe, The bearers that carried his body to the grave, or the persons concerned in solemnizing his funeral, Joseph of Arimathea, and Nicodemus, two rich men, and two secret disciples. 1. They were rich men, senators, honorable counsellors; and so that prophecy was fulfilled, Isa. liii. 9. "He made his grave with the wicked, and with the rich in his death." 2. They were good men as well as rich men, disciples, though secretly, for fear of the Jews. Grace doth not always make a public and open show where it is. As there is much secret riches in the bowels of the earth which no eye ever saw, so there may be grace in the heart of a christian, which the world takes no notice of. We never heard any news of Joseph of Arimathea till now; yet was he eminently rich, wise, and good; a worthy though a close disciple. Much grace may be where little is seen. Some gracious persons cannot put forward, and discover themselves, like others; and yet such weak christians, perhaps, when a trial comes, shall stand their ground, when stronger run away. We read of none of the apostles at Christ's funeral; fear had chased them away, though they professed a readiness to die with Christ; but Joseph and Nicodemus appear boldly for him. Let it be a caution to strong christians, neither to glory in themselves, nor to glory over the weak. If God deserts the strong, and assists the weak, the feeble shall be as David, and the strong as tow. Observe, 3. The mourners that followed the bier; namely, the women that followed him out of Galilee, and particularly the two Marys; a very poor train of mourners, a few sorrowful women. Others are attended to their graves by their relations and friends; but Christ's disciples were all scattered, and afraid to own him either dying or dead. Our blessed Lord affected no pomp or gallantry in his life, and it was no way suitable either to the end or manner of his death. Humiliation was designed in his death, and his burial was the lowest degree of his humiliation. Observe, 4. The grave or sepulchre in which they buried him; it was in a garden. As by the sin of the first Adam we were driven out of the garden of pleasure, the earthly paradise; so by the sufferings of the second Adam, who lay buried in a garden, we may hope for an entrance into the heavenly paradise. It was in a sepulchre hewn out of a rock; that so his enemies might have no occasion to cavil, and say, that his disciples stole him away by secret holes, or unseen passages under ground. And it was in a new sepulchre, in which never any man was laid, lest his adversaries should say, it was some other that was risen, or that he rose from the dead by touching some other corpse. Observe, 5. The manner of our Lord's funeral, hastily, openly, decently celebrated. It was done in haste, by reason of the straits of time, the preparation for the passover caused them to be very expeditious; the sabbath was approaching, and they lay all business aside to prepare for that. Learn hence, How much it is our duty to dispatch our worldly business as early as we can towards the end of the week, that we may be the better prepared to sanctify the Lord's day, if we live to enjoy it. We ought to remember that day before it comes, and to sanctify it when it is come. Again, Our Lord was buried openly, as well as hastily; all persons had liberty to be spectators, that none might object there was any fraud or deceit used in or about his burial. He was also interred decently, his body wrapt in fine linen, and perfumed with odors according to the Jewish custom, which used not to unbowel, but enbalm their dead. Observe, 6. The reason why our Lord was buried, seeing he was to rise again, in as short a time as other men lie by the walls; and had his dead body remained a thousand years unburied, it could have seen no corruption, having never been tainted with sin. Sin is the cause of the body's corruption; it is sin that makes our bodies stink worse than carrion when they are dead. A funeral then was not necessary for Christ's body, upon the same account that it is necessary for ours. But, 1. He was buried to declare the certainty of his death, and the reality of his resurrection; and for this reason did God's providence order it that he should be embalmed, to cut off all pretensions. For in this kind of embalming, his mouth, his ears, and his nostrils were all filled with spices and odors, so that there could be no latent principle of life in him; being thus buried then, declares him to be certainly dead. 2. He was buried to fulfil the types and prophecies that went before concerning him. Jonas' being three days and three nights in the belly of the whale, was a type of Christ's being three days and three nights in the heart of the earth; and the prophet Isa. liii. 9. "He made his grave with the wicked, and with the rich in his death." Pointing by that expression, at this tomb of Joseph's who was a rich man; and the scriptures cannot be broken. 3. He was buried to complete his humiliation; "They have brought me to the dust of death," says David, a type of Christ. This was the lowest step he could possibly descend in his abased state: lower he could not be laid, and so low his blessed head must be laid, else he had not been humbled to the lowest. 4. He went into the grave, that he might conquer death in its own territories and dominions. Christ's victory over the graves causes his saints to triumph and sing; O grave where is thy destruction?" Our blessed Lord has perfumed the bed of the grave by his own lying in it: so that the pillow of down is not so soft to a believer's head, as a pillow of dust. Observe, lastly, Of what use the doctrine of our Lord's burial may be unto us.

1. For instruction: here we see the amazing depths of our Lord's humiliation. From what, to what his love brought him; even from the bosom of his Father, to the bosom of a grave. Now the depth of his humiliation shows us the fulness and sufficiency of his satisfaction as well as the heinousness of our transgression. 2. For consolation against the fears of death and the grave. The grave received Christ, but could not retain him. Death swallowed him up as the fish did Jonas, but quickly vomited him up again; so shall it fare with Christ mystical as it did with Christ personal; the grave could not long keep him, it shall not for ever keep us, as his body rested in hope, so shall ours also; and though they see corruption, which he did not, yet shall they not always lie under the power of corruption. In a word, Christ's lying in the grave has changed and altered the nature of the grave; it was a prison before, a bed of rest now; a loathsome grave before, a perfumed bed now. He whose head is in heaven, need not fear to put his foot into the grave.—"Awake and sing, thou that dwellest in dust," for the enmity of the grave is slain by Christ. 3. For imitation; let us study and endeavour to be buried with Christ, in respect of our sins: I mean, Rom. vi. 4. Buried with him into death. Our sins should be as a dead body, in several respects. Are dead bodies removed far from the society of men? So should our sins be removed far from us. Dead bodies in the grave spend and consume away by little and little; so should our sins daily. Will dead bodies grow every day more and more loathsome to others? So should our sins be to ourselves. Do dead bodies wax out of memory, and are quite forgotten? So should our sins, in respect of any delight that we take in remembering of them. We should always remember our sins to our humiliation; but never think or speak of them with the least delight or satisfaction; for this, in God's account, is a new commission of them, and lays us under an additional guilt.

62 Now, the next day, that followed the day of the preparation, the chief priests and pharisees came together unto Pilate, 63 Saying, Sir, we remember that that deceiver said, while he was yet alive, After three days I will rise again.

64 Command, therefore, that the sepulchre be made sure, until the third day, lest his disciples come by night and steal him away, and say unto the people, He is risen from the dead: So the last error shall be worse than the first.

65 Pilate said unto them, Ye have a watch: go your way, make it as sure as you can.

66 So they went and made the sepulchre sure, sealing the stone, and setting a watch.

This last paragraph of the chapter acquaints us with the endeavours that the murderers of Christ used to prevent his foretold resurrection: they ask and obtain of Pilate, that his sepulchre might be strongly guarded till the third day was past and over, when probably they intended to have exposed his dead body to the view of the people; and accordingly a threefold guard is set about the grave; the stone, the seal, and the watch; concluding that Christ was safe enough either from rising or stealing: the stone making the grave sure, the seal making the stone sure, and the watch or band of soldiers making all sure. The stone being sealed with the public seal, no person might meddle with it upon pain of death.

Where note, 1. The wonderful wisdom, the over-ruling power and providence of God; by this excessive care and extraordinary diligence, the high priests hoped to prevent our Saviour's resurrection, but the truth and belief of it was hereby confirmed to all the world. How much evidence had Christ's resurrection wanted, if the high priests and elders had not been thus maliciously industrious to prevent his rising? Learn, 2. That the endeavours used to obstruct our Lord's resurrection, have rendered it more certain and undoubted; had not all this care and caution been used by his enemies, the grounds of our faith had not been so strong, so evident, and so clear. It was very happy, that the Jews were thus jealous and suspicious, thus carnal and distrustful: for otherwise the world had never received so full and perfect an evidence of Christ's resurrection as now, whereon all our comfort and salvation doth depend. Verily, their solicitous care to suppress our Redeemer's resurrection, has rendered it more conspicuous, and freed it from all suspicion of forgery.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

This last chapter of St. Matthew contains the history of our Saviour's resurrection, and gives us an account of what he did on earth, between the time of his triumphant resurrection and his glorious ascension.

IN the end of the sabbath, as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week, came Mary Magdalene, and the other Mary, to see the sepulchre.

The Lord of Life was buried upon the Friday, in the evening of that day on which he was crucified: and his body rested in the silent grave the next day, and a part of the morning of the day following. Thus he arose again the third day, neither sooner nor later: not sooner, lest the truth of his death should have been questioned, that he did not die at all: and not later, lest the faith of his disciples should have failed. And accordingly, when the sabbath was past, "and it dawned towards the first day of the week, in the morning very early," before day, Mary Magdalene, and other devout women, go to visit the sepulchre, intending with their spices and odors farther to embalm our Lord's body. But observe, Although the hearts of these good women did burn with an ardent love and zeal to their crucified Lord, yet the commanded duties of the sabbath are not omitted by them; they stay till the sabbath is ended, and then early in the morning they go with odors in their hands to perfume his sacred corpse; fearing neither the darkness of the night, nor the presence of the watchmen: how great a tribute of respect and honour is due and payable to these women for their magnanimity and courage! They followed Christ, when his disciples left him; they accompanied him to his cross, and followed his hearse to the grave, when none of his disciples durst appear. Learn hence, That courage is the special and peculiar gift of God; and where God gives courage, it is not in man to make afraid.

2 And, behold, there was a great earthquake: for the angel of the Lord descended from heaven, and came and rolled back the stone from the door, and sat upon it.

3 His countenance was like lightning, and his raiment white as snow:

4 And for fear of him the keepers did shake, and became as dead men.

Observe here, 1. With what pomp and triumph doth our Lord arise. The earth that quaked before at his crucifixion, quakes now again at his resurrection: it quaked then at the dissolution, now at the re-union of his human nature, to tell the world that the God of nature then suffered, and now conquered. Observe, 2. How an angel is employed in Christ's resurrection; He rolls away the stone. But could not Christ have risen then without the angel's help? Yes sure, he that raised himself, surely could have removed the stone: but God thinks fit to send an officer from heaven to open the prison door of the grave; and by setting our surety at liberty, proclaims our debt to the divine justice fully satisfied. Besides, it was fit that the angels who had been witnesses of our Saviour's passion, should also be witnesses of his resurrection. Observe, 3. How unable the keepers of the graves were to bear the sight and presence of the angel; they shook for fear and became as dead men. Angels being pure and perfect spirits, man is not able to bear the sight of an angel, no not in human shape, without terror and affrightment; and if the sight of an angel be so dreadful, what is the sight of God himself?

5 And the angel answered and said unto the women, Fear not ye: for I know that ye seek Jesus, which was crucified.

6 He is not here; for he is risen, as he said, Come, see the place where the Lord lay:

7 And go quickly, and tell his disciples that he is risen from the dead; and, behold he goeth before you into Galilee; there shall ye see him. Lo, I have told you.

Observe here, 1. Our Lord's resurrection asserted and declared, He is risen. God never intended that the darling of his soul should be lost in an obscure sepulchre. He is not here, says the angel; that is, in the grave, where you laid him, where you left him. Death hath lost its prey, and the grave has lost her guest. Observe, 2. It is not said, he is not here, for he is raised; but, He is risen. The word imports the active power of Christ, or the self-quickening principle by which Christ raised himself from the dead, Acts i. 3. He showed himself alive after his passion. Learn hence, That it was the divine nature or Godhead of Christ, which raised his human nature from death to life. Others were raised from the grave by Christ's power, he raised himself by his own power. Observe, 3. The testimony or witness given to our Lord's resurrection; that of an angel; The angel said he is not here, but risen. But why is an angel the first publisher of our Lord's resurrection? Surely the dignity of our Lord's person, and the excellency of his resurrection, required that it should be first published by an angel; and accordingly it is worthy our observation, how very serviceable and officious the holy angels were in attending upon our Saviour in the days of his flesh; an angel foretels his conception to the blessed Virgin; an angel proclaims his birth to the shepherds; an angel succours him in his temptation in the wilderness: an angel comforts him in his agony in the garden; and at his resurrection the angel rolls away the stone from the sepulchre, and brings the first tidings of it to the women. In his ascension the angels bore him company to heaven: and when he comes again to judgment, he shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels. Observe, 4. The persons to whom our Lord's resurrection was first made known, to women, to the two Mary's. But why to women? God will make choice of weak means for producing great effects, knowing that the weakness of the instrument redounds to the greater honor of the agent. In the whole dispensation of the gospel, Almighty God intermixes divine power with human weakness. Thus the conception of Christ was by the power of the Holy Ghost; but his mother, a poor woman, a carpenter's spouse: so the crucifixion of Christ was in much meanness and outward baseness, being crucified between two thieves; but the powers of heaven and earth trembling, the rocks rending, and the graves opening, showed a mixture of divine power. God will honor what instruments he pleases, for the accomplishment of his own purposes. But why to these women, the two Marys, is the discovery of Christ's resurrection first made? Possibly it was a reward for their magnanimity and masculine courage. These women cleaved to Christ when the apostles fled from him and forsook him; they assisted at his cross, they attended at his funeral, they watched his sepulchre. These women had more courage than the apostles, therefore God makes the women apostles to the apostles; he sends them to tell the apostles of the resurrection, and they must have the news at the second hand. O what a tacit rebuke was thereby given to the apostles! A secret check, that they should be thus out-done by poor women. These holy women went before the apostles in the last services that were done for Christ, and therefore the apostles here come after them in their rewards and comforts. Observe, 5. The evidence which the angel offers to the woman, to evince and prove the verity and certainty of our Saviour's resurrection; namely, by an appeal to their senses; Come, see the place where the Lord lay. The senses, when rightly disposed, are the proper judges of all sensible objects; Christ himself did appeal to his disciples' senses concerning the truth of his own resurrection: "Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I myself;" and indeed, if we must not believe our senses, we shall want the best external evidence for the proof of the truth of the christian religion; namely, the miracles wrought by Christ and his apostles: for what assurance can we have of the reality of those miracles, but from our senses? therefore, says our Saviour, "If ye believe not me, yet believe the works that I do;" that is, the miracles which I have wrought before your eyes. Now as my senses tell me that Christ's miracles were true, so they assure me that the doctrine of transubstantiation is false. From the whole note, That the Lord Jesus Christ, by the omnipotency of his godhead, revived and rose again from the dead, to the terror and consternation of his enemies, and the unspeakable joy and consolation of believers.

8 And they departed quickly from the sepulchre with fear and great joy, and did run to bring his disciples word.

9 ¶ And as they went to tell his disciples, behold Jesus met them, saying, All hail. And they came and held him by the feet, and worshipped him.

10 Then said Jesus unto them, Be not afraid: go tell my brethren, that they go into Galilee, and there shall they see me.

Observe here, What haste and speed these holy women make to carry the news of Christ's resurrection to the apostles; such as find and feel their hearts grieved for the absence and want of Christ, will be very ready to comfort such as are in the same condition. O how glad are these holy women to carry the good news of their Lord's resurrection to the heart-broken disciples! Observe, 2. How these holy women hastened, in obedience to the angel's command, to tell the disciples to meet with Christ in the way. Such as obey the directions of God's ministers, seeking Christ in his own way and means, shall find him to their comfort sooner than they expected. These holy women find Christ before they looked for him: As they went to tell his disciples, Jesus met them. O! happy women, while they were weeping for a dead Christ, they find a living Jesus. Observe, 3. The affectionate and loving title which Christ puts upon his disciples: Tell my brethren. He might have said, "Go tell those apostate apostles, that cowardly left me in my danger, that durst not own me in the high-priest's hall, that durst not come within the shadow of my cross, nor within the sight of my sepulchre." Not a word of this, by way of upbraiding them for their late shameful cowardice, but all words of kindness: Go tell my brethren. Where note, That Christ calls his disciples brethren, after his resurrection and exaltation, as he had done before in his state of humiliation, to show the continuance of his former affection to them, and that the change of his condition had wrought no change in his affection to his despised members: but those that were his brethren before, in the time of his abasement, are so still after his exaltation and advancement. Observe lastly, The place where Christ chooses to meet with and speak to his disciples, not in Jerusalem but in Galilee; "I go before them into Galilee, there they shall see me." Jerusalem was now a forsaken place, a people abandoned to destruction; Christ would not show himself openly to them, but Galilee was a place where Christ's ministry was more acceptable. Such places wherein Christ is most welcome to preach shall be most honored with his presence. In Galilee they shall see me.

11 Now, when they were going, behold, some of the watch came into the city, and showed unto the chief priests all the things that were done.

12 And when they were assembled with the elders, and had taken counsel, they gave large money unto the soldiers.

13 Saying, Say ye, His disciples came by night, and stole him away while we slept.

14 And if this come to the governor's ears, we will persuade him, and secure you.

15 So they took the money, and did as they were taught: and this saying is commonly reported among the Jews until this day.

Observe here, 1. How the priests and elders endeavour by a notorious lie to hinder the belief of our Lord's resurrection, they suborn and bribe the soldiers to say that his corpse was stolen out of the grave: lies have been an old refuge which the enemies of Christ have all along had recourse unto; lying is an ancient device of satan. But observe, 2. What an improbable and unlikely lie this was, which they put into the soldiers' mouths to vouch; "Say, his disciples came and stole him away, while we slept." Frivolous excuse! carrying with it a most self-evident contradiction. If the soldiers were asleep, how could they discover the disciples stealing away the body? if awake, why did they not prevent their stealing it? besides, how improbable was it that Christ's few and fearful disciples should attempt to open the sepulchre guarded by soldiers; and as unlikely was it that the soldiers should be all asleep together, and so fast asleep too, that the great stone at the mouth of the sepulchre should be rolled away, and not one of the soldiers awakened with the noise. Infatuation is the certain consequence of desertion of God. Yet observe farther, That this incredible falsehood finds a fast and firm rooting in the belief of the Jews to this day. Note thence, That it is a righteous thing with God to deliver up those to strong delusions, even to the believing of notorious lies, who will not yield their assent to divine truths upon the clearest evidence, and most convincing demonstration. How strange is it, that such falsehood as this should find belief among the Jews to this day? but where truth is obstinately rejected, a lie though ever so improbable, is received.

16 ¶ Then the eleven disciples went away into Galilee, into a mountain where Jesus had appointed them.

17 And when they saw him they worshipped him : but some doubted.

The meeting of our Saviour and his apostles upon a mountain in Galilee, was an appointed and general meeting. The mountain is supposed to be that near Capernaum, where he made that famous sermon, called, The sermon on the mount ; and the meeting is supposed to be appointed as a general rendezvous for confirming the faith of all his disciples in the certainty of his resurrection. Possibly our Lord appointed this place in Galilee, so far from Jerusalem, that his disciples might without danger come thither to see their Saviour alive again, after his crucifixion. This is judged to be that famous appearance of which St. Paul speaks, 1. Cor. xv. 6. "When he was seen of above five hundred brethren at once." And those who saw him worshipped him, who before had doubted. Learn hence, That when faith is once satisfied, and sees Christ to be God, it engages the soul to worship him. Divine worship is due to Christ upon account of his divine nature. No creature can be the object of divine worship, therefore they who worship Christ by praying to him, and yet deny him to be God, are certainly idolaters. If Christ had an angelic nature, that had not made him capable of divine worship : for adoration is founded only on divinity, and what is but human or angelical, is not adorable.

18 And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth.

19 ¶ Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost ;

20 Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you, And lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen.

Observe here, 1. A power asserted. 2. An authority delegated. 3. A command enjoined. 4. A promise subjoined. Observe, 1. A power and authority asserted by our Saviour, as belonging to himself ; "All power is given unto me both in heaven and in earth." 1. In heaven ; which comprehends a power in sending the Holy Ghost ; a power over angels, and all the hosts of heaven, and a power to dispose of heaven to all that shall believe in him. 2. In earth : which comprehends a power to gather a church out of all nations, and authority to rule, govern, and defend the same against all its enemies. Learn hence, That all power and authority concerning the church of God, was given unto Christ, and conferred upon him, upon the account of his meritorious death and triumphant resurrection. All power is given unto me : that is, as Mediator ; but this power was inherent in him as God from all eternity. Observe, 2. This power delegated by Christ to his apostles ; "Go ye, therefore, and teach and baptize all nations ; instructing them to observe all things whatsoever I command you." Here is a threefold power delegated by Christ to his apostles ; 1. To congregate and gather a church, a christian church, out of all the heathen nations throughout the world. Before, he had confined them only to Israel ; now, they must travel from country to country, and proselyte the heathen nations, which before had been taught of the devil, and were led away by his oracles and delusions. Go, and disciple all nations, without any distinction of country, sex, or age whatsoever, and make the gospel church as large as you can. Thence note, That the apostles and first planters of the gospel, had a commission from Christ to go amongst the pagan Gentiles, without limitation ; and were not to take up their settled residence in any one nation, but to travel from country to country, instructing them in the mysteries of the gospel. The second branch of their power was to baptize in the name of the whole Trinity ; "Baptizing in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." Where observe, That all adult and grown persons are to be first taught and instructed, before they be baptized. But it follows not from hence, that the children of such parents may not be baptized before they are taught : for the apostles were to baptize all nations, of which children are a chief, if not the chiefest part. Besides, those that were proselyted to the Jewish religion, though before they were circumcised themselves, they were instructed in the law of God ; yet when they were circumcised themselves, their children were not denied circumcision at eight days old. In like manner we have no reason to deny the children of baptized parents who are in a covenant themselves, the sign an seal of the covenant, which is baptism. God having assured his people, "that he will be the God of them, and of their seed." If this privilege be denied, the children of christian parents are in a worse condition than the children of the Jews : and consequently infants are in a worse condition since Christ's coming, than they were before, and the privileges of those that live under the gospel are straiter and narrower than those that lived under the law. Observe farther, In whose name persons are to be baptized ; "In the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost." Where we have a profession of our belief in the Holy Trinity, a dedication of the person to the worship and service of the Holy Trinity, and a stipulation or covenant promise that we will continue faithful in the service of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, to our lives' end. The third branch of the power which Christ delegated to his apostles, was, by their ministry, to press upon all his converts an universal observance of and obedience to all their commands ; "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I command you." Where note, 1. That preaching is the ordinary and instituted means to convert nations unto God. 2. That preaching must not only go before baptism, but follow after it. Obedience must be pressed upon, and practised by all those that enter into covenant with God, otherwise they lie under a great condemnation. 3. That preaching of the gospel is a chief part of the minister's work, and no apostle thought himself above that duty. 4. As the apostles did not, so the ministers of Christ ought not to teach any thing but what Christ commands them. 5. As they are to teach what Christ commands them, so they are to teach all things whatsoever Christ commands them : "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I command you." Lastly, Observe the promise enjoined: "Lo, I am with you always, to the end of the world." That is, I am, and will be, with you and your successors, lawfully called by my power and authority, by the blessing and assistance of my Holy Spirit. I will be with you, to uphold my own ordinance, to protect, encourage, and reward you, and all your successors in the faithful discharge of your trust; and this is not for a day, a year, or an age, but to the end and consummation of all ages. Learn hence, That the ministry of the word, and administration of the sacraments, are a standing and perpetual ordinance, to continue in the christian church throughout all ages. Learn, 2. That all the faithful ministers of Christ, in what part of the world soever

God shall cast their lot, and in what time soever they shall happen to live, may comfortably expect Christ's gracious presence with their persons, and his blessings upon their endeavours. "Lo I am with you I am always with you, and to the end of the world I will be with you." Thanks be to Christ, for the gracious promise of his spiritual and perpetual presence with his ministers to the end of the world. May this promise cause us to gird up the lions of our minds, increase our diligence, zeal, and fervor, accounting no labor too great, no service too much, no sufferings too severe, so that we may but finish our course with joy, and fulfil the ministry we are engaged in. Amen.

THE END OF ST. MATTHEW'S GOSPEL

THE
SAINT MARK.

Saint Mark, the writer of this compendious History of our blessed Saviour's Life and Death, was the disciple and companion of St. Peter; and some affirm, that he wrote his Gospel from St. Peter's mouth; it being dictated by St. Peter, and indited by the Holy Ghost. But since we are assured that the Spirit of God indited the book, we need not trouble ourselves to find out whose hand it was that held the pen.

CHAPTER I.

THE beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ the Son of God;

The word gospel signifies a message of glad tidings, and intimates to us, that the doctrine of the gospel contains the most gladsome tidings, the most joyful message, that ever was sent from God to mankind: happy tidings concerning our reconciliation with God, and salvation by Jesus Christ. O how highly should we prize, how steadfastly believe, how cordially embrace these good tidings of great joy! Observe, 1. This gospel is called, The Gospel of Jesus Christ, because Christ, as God, is the author of this gospel, and also the principal subject and matter of it: indeed St. John the Baptist was the first publisher and preacher of the gospel doctrine, but Christ himself was the first principal author, and likewise the chief subject-matter of it: for whatever is taught in the gospel, relates either to the person and offices of Christ, or the benefits received by him, or the means of enjoying those benefits from him. Observe, 2. How St. Mark styles Christ the Son of God, as St. Matthew had styled him before the Son of David; the one sets forth the verity of his human nature, the other the reality of his divine nature; signifying to us, that the true and promised Messiah was both God and man in two distinct natures, and one person for ever. He is true and real God, as well as the Father and the Holy Ghost: not a mere man, but God as well as man.

hold I send my messenger before thy face which shall prepare thy way before thee.

St. Mark begins his gospel with an account of St. John the Baptist's preaching and ministry, and declares, 1. That the prophets of old, particularly Isaiah and Malachi, did long before foretel the Baptist's message and ministry; that he should go before Christ as his harbinger, to prepare the way for him; "Behold, I send my messenger to prepare thy way." Where note, 1. The dignity and authority of the ministers of Christ: they are his messengers, sent by him to deliver his mind and will unto his people. This ministerial mission is twofold, extraordinary and ordinary; the former when God immediately by himself calls men to the holy function; the latter when he uses the ministry of man in order thereunto. Observe, 2. The work and office of the ministers of Christ declared, and that is, to prepare people to receive Jesus Christ, offered and rendered to them in the gospel. "Behold, I send my messenger to prepare thy way before thee." Learn thence, That the great design and end of the ministry of the word, is to prepare and fit men for entertaining the holy religion of Christ in their hearts, and to oblige them to walk according to the rules and directions of it in their lives.

3 The voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight.

2 As it is written in the prophets, Behold I send my messenger before thee, who shall prepare thy way: every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill shall be made low: the rough places shall be smoothed out, and the crooked places shall be made straight: and the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together.

M M

Here note, 1. The title given to John the Baptist; he is called a voice, in respect to his ministerial office, which was to speak forth, to promulge and publish the doctrine of salvation. 2. The quality or kind of this voice, a crying voice, the voice of one crying. This implies, 1. His earnestness and vehemency, his zeal, and fervency, in preaching. When we lift up our voice, and cry aloud, we speak with earnestness and fervor. When our hearts are warmly affected with what we preach, we may hope to affect the hearts of our hearers. Why has God commissioned men rather than angels, to be the preachers and dispensers of his word, but because we can speak to, and treat with, sinners more feelingly and more affectionately than the angels can? 2. This crying of the holy Baptist in his preaching, implies his liberty and boldness, as well as his vehemency and earnestness, in delivering of his message. The lifting up of the voice in speaking, argues boldness and courage in the speaker; as, on the contrary, the depressing of the voice sheweth timorousness. Learn hence, That the ministers of the word are to use both zeal and earnestness, and also courage and boldness of spirit, in delivering the word and message of God; not forbearing to reprove sin, nor concealing any part of God's truth, for fear of men's displeasure. Observe, 3. The sum and substance of what he cried, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight;" that is, "Make ready yourselves, prepare your own hearts, to entertain the doctrine and glad tidings of the gospel." It is a metaphorical speech, taken from the custom of loyal and dutiful subjects, who when their prince is coming to lodge in their city, they prepare and make ready the way for his coming, by removing every thing that may obstruct or hinder his progress. Learn hence, That man's heart by nature is very unfit to embrace and entertain the Lord Jesus Christ, we have naturally no fitness, no disposition, no inclination, to believe in him, or submit unto him. 2. If ever we desire to entertain Christ in our hearts, we must first prepare and make fit our hearts for the receiving and embracing of him. For though "the preparation of the heart be from the Lord," yet he requires the exercise of our faculties, and the use of our endeavours. He prepares our hearts by enabling us to the preparation of our own hearts. This is done by getting a sight of the evil of sin, a sense of our misery without Christ, an hungering and thirsting desire after him, a true faith in him. Christ will lodge in no heart that is not thus made ready to receive him.

4 John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins.

A twofold account is here given of St. John's execution of his ministry and office: first, his baptizing; secondly, his preaching. John did baptize; that is, admit persons into the church, by washing them with water. John baptized in the name of Christ, who was to come; the apostle baptized in the name of Christ, already come. The second part of this office was preaching. Where note, That preaching of the word, and administration of the sacraments, are to go together, and belong only to the ministers of the word, lawfully called. John did baptize and preach; but where and what did he preach? The place where, was the wilderness; a place not much frequented, though not altogether uninhabited; a solitary, mean, and obscure place. Thither God had called him, and there he contents himself. Learn hence, That the ministers of God must be content to execute their ministry where God calls them, be the place ever so mean and obscure, and the people ever so rude and barbarous; John was a preacher of great note and fame; Jerusalem, the chief city, might seem more fit for him; but God had called him to preach in the wilderness, and he would not leave it. We must not leave our place because it is mean and obscure, nor desert our people thinking them too base to instruct; but where God has called us, we must there abide, till he that called us thither, remove us thence. Observe farther, As the place where the Baptist preached, in the wilderness, so the doctrine which he preached, namely, the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins; that is the doctrine of baptism, which sealeth the remission of sins to the party baptized. Learn hence, That the preaching of the doctrine of repentance is absolutely necessary, and the indispensable duty of every gospel minister. John Baptist preached it, our Saviour preached it, his apostles preached it: "They went out preaching every where, that men should repent." "The baptism of repentance (says the learned Lightfoot) belongs to children, though they know not what repentance means, because it engages them to repentance when they come to years to understand that engagement. For thus it was with the children circumcised, they became debtors to observe the whole law, though they knew not what the law meant, yet circumcision bound them to it, when they came to years of discretion.

5 And there went out unto him all the land of Judea, and they of Jerusalem, and were all baptized of him in the river of Jordan, confessing their sins.

Here we have an account of the success of St. John's ministry: 1. In the general concourse and resort of the people to it, All Judea and Jerusalem; that is, a great many of all degrees and ranks, of all ages and sexes. John was framed for a prophet, and a prophet was now a great rarity. Malachi was the last prophet before John, and he lived about five hundred years before John. Now the excellency of his person, the earnestness of his preaching, the acceptableness of his doctrine, that the Messiah was come, and the austerity of his life and conversation, all these caused the people to flock unto him. Learn hence, That it is a great encouragement to the ministers of Christ, when people show themselves ready and forward to repair unto the places where the word and sacraments are dispensed to them: all Judea and Jerusalem attended upon John's ministry. The second fruit of John's ministry was, that the people were ready to receive at his hand the sacrament of baptism; They were all baptized of him in Jordan. Learn hence, That the ministers of Christ ought not only to preach the word, but also to dispense the sacraments to their people, even to all that do desire them, and are fit to be partakers of them. A third fruit of John's ministry was, his hearers' profession of their true repentance, by the confession of their sins. As the profession of repentance is requisite in all that are baptized, so a free and vo-

January, an ingenuous and impartial confession of sin, is a good evidence and testimony of the truth and sincerity of our repentance.

6 And John was clothed with camels' hair, and with a girdle of skin about his loins; and he did eat locusts and wild honey;

This verse acquaints us with the strictness and austerity of St. John's life in the wilderness; which is laid down in two things, in his mean and frugal apparel, and his sober and temperate diet. His apparel was rough and hairy, and his girdle of leather; as Elijah, his forerunner, was clad before him, 2 Kings i. 8. His diet was coarse and ordinary, locusts and wild honey: that is, such plain and ordinary food as the wilderness afforded. His example teaches us, That the ministers of the gospel are not to affect either bravery in apparel or delicacy in diet; but both by their habit and diet, set an example of gravity and sobriety before their people; being in these, as well as in other things, an example unto their flocks.

7 And preached, saying, There cometh one mightier than I after me, the latchet of whose shoes I am not worthy to stoop down and unloose.

Observe here, 1. The high opinion that the Baptist had of Christ. He is mightier than I; that is, a person of greater dignity and excellency by far than myself; whence may be gathered, that though Christ was man, he was not mere man, but more than man; even very God, equal with his Father; for "John Baptist was the greatest of them that were born of woman." Mat. xi. 11. Yet says he, Christ is mightier and greater than I. How so? but in regard to the dignity of his person, being both God and man in two distinct natures and one person. Observe, 2. The humble and low estimation that the Baptist had of himself; His shoe latchet I am not worthy to unloose; a proverbial speech, implying that he was unworthy to do the basest and meanest service for Christ. O! how well doth humility of mind, an humble apprehension, a low esteem and opinion of themselves, and their own gifts and abilities, become the messengers and ministers of Christ! John was a man of eminent abilities, yet of exemplary humility; he thought himself unworthy to unloose Christ's shoe, or do the meanest office for him.

8 I indeed have baptized you with water: but he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost.

John showed the dignity of Christ's person above his own, in the former verse; in this, he declares the excellency of Christ's office, and the meanness of his own! I wash the body with water, but Christ cleanses the soul by the operation of his Holy Spirit. Thence learn, That though the ministers of Christ do, by Christ's command, dispense the outward ordinance of baptism, yet it is Christ himself, that, by the inward work of his Spirit, doth make it effectual to such as receive it.—I baptize with water, but he with the Holy Ghost.

9 ¶ And it came to pass in those days, that Jesus came from Nazareth of Galilee, and was baptized of John in Jordan.

10 And straightway, coming up out of the water, he saw the Heavens opened, and the Spirit, like a dove, descending upon him:

11 And there came a voice from heaven, saying, Thou art my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased.

See the note on Mat. iii. 13. Observe here, 1. The great condescension of Christ, in seeking and submitting to the baptism of John; Christ, though he was John's Lord and Master, yea, Lord of heaven and earth, yet cometh to hear John preach, and will be baptized of his messenger. Thence learn, That the greatest persons should neither think themselves too great nor too good, to come unto the ministers of God, to hear the word from their mouth, or to receive the sacrament at their hand. Christ the Son of God, was content to be baptized of John, a mean person in comparison with himself. How dare then the greatest upon earth despise the ministry of man, being appointed by God? Observe, 2. The solemn investing of Christ into the office of Mediator, by a threefold miracle: namely the opening of the heavens, the descent of the Holy Ghost, and God the Father's voice or testimony concerning his Son: The heavens were opened, to show that heaven, which was closed and shut against us for our sins, is now opened to us by Christ's undertaking for us. As Christ opened heaven by his meritorious passion, so he keeps it open by his prevailing intercession. Next, the Holy Ghost descends like a dove upon our Saviour. Here we have a proof and evidence of the blessed Trinity. The Father speaks from heaven, the Son comes out of the water, and the Holy Ghost descends in the likeness of a dove. But why did the Holy Ghost now descend upon Christ? First, For the designation of his person, to show that he was the person set apart for the work and office of a Mediator. Secondly, for the sanctification of his person for the performance of that office. This was Christ's unction, the day in which he was anointed above his fellows to be the king, priest, and prophet of his church: Isa. lxi. 1, "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, he hath anointed me, &c." Observe, 3. The voice of God the Father pronounced, 1. The nearness of Christ's relation to himself: This is my Son. 2. The endearedness of his person: This is my beloved Son. The fruit and benefit of this near and dear relation unto us; In whom I am well pleased. Hence learn, 1. That there is no possibility for a person to please God out of Christ; neither our persons nor performances can find acceptance but through him, and for his sake. 2. That the Lord Jesus Christ is the ground and cause of all that love which God the Father sheweth to the sons of men. In Christ, God is well pleased with us, as a reconciled father: out of him a consuming fire 12 And immediately the spirit driveth him into the wilderness.

13 And he was there in the wilderness forty days, tempted of satan, and was with the wild beasts; and the angels ministered unto him.

Immediately; That is, 1. After his baptism. Christ is no sooner out of the water of baptism, but he is in the fire of temptation; such as are baptized with Christ, and entered into the profession of christianity, must look to be assaulted with satan's temptations. Again, immediately, that is, 2. After the Father had declared his complacency in him, and being well pleased with him. Learn thence, That great manifestations of love from God are usually followed with great temptations from God. The Spirit driveth him, that is, the Holy Spirit of God. For the devil is seldom, if ever called the Spirit, but usually some brand of reproach is annexed, as evil spirit, or the unclean spirit and the like; Christ was led by the Spirit, says St. Matthew, chapter iv. 1. He was driven by the Spirit, says St. Mark; that is, he was carried by a strong impulse of the Spirit of God to be tempted by satan, and did not go of his own private motion to enter the lists with satan. Teaching us our duty, not to run into or rush upon temptation, without a warrant and call from God. Observe next, The place where satan assaulted Christ with his temptation: it was a solitary wilderness. No place can privilege us from temptations, or be a sanctuary from satan's assaults. The solitary wilderness has a tempter in it; yea, satan often makes use of men's solitariness to further his temptations; and such as separate themselves from human society, and give themselves up to solitude and retirement, give great advantages to the tempter to tempt them. Observe next, The time and continuance of our Holy Lord's temptations: not for an hour, a day, a week, or a month, but for forty days, and forty nights; not all the time, but very often in that time. Teaching us what we are to expect from satan; temptations not a few: he will not solicit us once, but often, and follow us with fresh assaults: but the only way to overcome him is, as often to resist him. Observe farther, A special aggravation of our Lord's temptations in the wilderness, He was with the wild beasts, having no comfort from man, but only wild beasts for his companions, which were more likely to annoy and hurt him, than any way to help and comfort him. Here we have an evidence of the divine power of Christ, who, as, Lord of the creatures, can alter and change the nature of the creatures at his pleasure: restraining the most savage and hurtful beasts from hurting either himself or any of his people. Observe lastly, The supply sent in to Christ in the hour of temptation: The angels came and ministered unto him; food to his hungry body, and comfort to his tempted soul. Learn thence, That those who in the hour of temptation do hold out in resisting satan, shall find that the power and faithfulness of God will not be wanting to them to send in succour and relief at last. "Then the devil leaveth him, and behold, angels came and ministered unto him."

14 ¶ Now, after that John was put in prison, Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God.

15 And saying, The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand; repent ye, and believe the gospel.

In this our Saviour's first beginning to preach the gospel, we have an account of the time when, and the place where, and the sum of what he preached. Observe, 1. The time when our Lord began to preach, and that was after John the Baptist was cast into prison. Where note, 1. The undue reward which the ministers of God do sometimes meet with from a wicked world: they are hated, persecuted, and imprisoned, for their courage in reproving sin: John for reproving Herod's incest was put in prison. Note, 2. John was no sooner in prison, and stopped and hindered from preaching, but Christ began to preach. See the care and kindness of God towards his church, in that he never leaves it wholly destitute of the means of instruction; when some of his faithful ministers are restrained from preaching, he stirreth up others in their room, not suffering all their mouths to be stopped at once. Observe, 2. The place where our Lord first preached in Galilee. The land of Canaan in our Saviour's time, was divided into three principal provinces: on the south Judea; on the north Galilee; in the midst of Samaria. Galilee was divided into Upper and Lower Galilee; the Higher was called Galilee of the Gentiles, because it was the outmost part of the land, and so next unto the Gentiles. In this Upper Galilee Capernaum was the metropolis or chief; and Chorazin a lesser city. Now much of our Saviour's time was spent in Galilee; he was conceived and brought up at Nazareth, a city of Galilee; he first preached at Capernaum in Galilee; he wrought his first miracle at Capa in Galilee; his transfiguration was upon mount Tabor in Galilee; and our Saviour's ordinary residence was in Galilee. He came into Judea, and up to Jerusalem only at the feasts; and after his resurrection he appoints his disciples to meet him in Galilee. Only his nativity, his passion, and ascension were proper to Judea. His nativity at Beth-lehem, his passion at Jerusalem, and his ascension upon mount Olivet, hard by Jerusalem. Now all this demonstrates Christ to be the true and promised Messiah: for, according to prophecy, the Messiah was to have his presence and principal abode in the province of Galilee, Isaiah ix. 1, 2, 3, &c. Yet because he was of Galilee the Jews would not believe him to be the Messiah, saying in scorn, Can any good thing come out of Galilee; Whereas our Saviour's habitation and free conversation there was proof unto them, and ought to have persuaded them that according to prophecy he was the very Christ. Observe, 3. The sum of what our Lord preached, namely, a doctrine, and an exhortation. His doctrine is, That the time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: that is, that the time foretold by the prophets, when the kingdom of the Messiah should begin was now come. The exhortation is, Therefore repent, and believe the gospel. From the former, note, That the Messiah's coming, or our Saviour's appearing in the flesh, was exactly at the time foretold by the holy prophets: "The time is fulfilled, the kingdom of the Messiah is at hand." Note, 2. That the great doctrines of repentance and faith are taught only in and by the gospel, and accordingly ought in a special manner to be preached and insisted upon by the ministers of the gospel. The doctrine of Christ and his ambassadors, is and ought to be the same; they both teach the great doctrines of faith and repentance to a lost world; Repent, and believe the gospel.

16 ¶ Now, as he walked by the sea of Galilee, he saw Simon, and Andrew his brother, casting a net into the sea: (for they were fishers:)

17 And Jesus said unto them, Come ye after me, and I will make you to become fishers of men.

18 And straightway they forsook their nets, and followed him.

19 And when he had gone a little farther thence, he saw James, the son of Zebedee, and John his brother, who also were in the ship, mending their nets.

20 And straightway he called them: and they left their father Zebedee in the ship with the hired servants, and went after him.

In this history of our Saviour's calling the four disciples, Peter and Andrew, James and John, observe these particulars, 1. The meanness of the persons whom he calls, illiterate fishermen: Christ took thereby effectual care that his gospel should be known to be the power of God, not the wisdom and device of man; and that the instruments should not carry away the glory of the work. Observe, 2. Christ called his apostles by couples, two and two; first Peter and Andrew, then James and John; thereby signifying to us, that the work of the ministry requires the concurrence of all hands that are called to it. All the ministers of God should join their hearts and hands, and set their shoulders as one man to this great work; and all little enough, God knows, to carry it on with advantage and success. Observe, 3. The work which they are called to, from being fishermen, to be fishers of men, from catching fish with the labor of their hands, to catch men with the labor of their tongues. Observe, 4. Our Saviour's command; first to follow him, before they be sent out by him; Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men. We must be Christ's disciples before we are his ministers; his followers before we are his ambassadors; we must learn Christ before we preach him, otherwise we may fish for a livelihood, but not for souls. Observe, 5. The gracious promise which Christ gives his apostles for their encouragement; namely, to qualify them for, and to succeed them in their office; I will make you fishers of men. Faithfulness and care, diligence and endeavour, is our part; but the blessing and success is Christ's; our labor is only in the cast; Christ's power is wholly in the draught. Some fish cleave to the rocks, others play upon the sands, more wallow in the mud; (No. 9.)

and verily we shall labor all our days and catch nothing, if Christ do not bring our fish to net, and inclose them in it, as well as assist us in the throwing and casting of it. Observe, 6. The apostles' ready compliance with our Saviour's call. Straightway they forsook their father and friends, ship and nets, and followed Jesus. Whom Christ calls, he calls effectually; and draws whom he calls, and works their hearts to a ready compliance with their duty. Observe, 7. That upon their call to the ministry, they leave off their trade, they forsake their ship and gets, and lie close to their ministerial employment. Teaching us, That the ministers of the gospel should wholly give themselves up to their great work, and not encumber themselves with secular affairs, and worldly business. Nothing but an indispensable necessity, in providing for a family can excuse a minister's encumbering himself with worldly concerns and business.

21 And they went into Capernaum: and straightway on the sabbath-day he entered into the synagogue and taught.

22 And they were astonished at his doctrine: for he taught them as one that had authority, and not as the scribes.

Our Saviour having called his disciples, Peter, and Andrew, James and John, to follow him in order to their preaching of the gospel; here we may observe how he went himself along with them, teaching personally in the synagogues wherever he came; he did not send his apostles forth as his curates, and lay at home himself upon his couch at ease. What shall we say to those lazy fishermen, that set others to the drag, but care only to feed themselves with the fish? not willing to wet their hands with the net, or take any pains themselves! Our Saviour did not thus; but when he sent forth his apostles, he still preached himself: he went into their synagogues and taught. Observe farther, the success of his preaching; the people were astonished at his doctrine, struck with admiration, apprehending and believing him to be an extraordinary prophet, sent from God. Learn thence, That such is the efficacy of Christ's doctrine, especially when accompanied with the energy and operations of his Holy Spirit, that it makes all his auditors admirers; causing astonishment in their minds, and reformation in their manners. Observe lastly, The reason of our Lord's success in preaching; He taught as one having authority. He taught in his own name, as being Lord of his doctrine; not saying with the prophets, Thus saith the Lord; but I say unto you. And he wrought powerful miracles, which accompanied his doctrine. As Christ was careful to preserve the authority of his person and doctrine with the people; so it is the duty of his ministers to demean themselves amongst their people, that neither their authority may be contemned, nor their persons despised, but their doctrine and themselves revered and obeyed.

23 And there was in their synagogue a man with an unclean spirit: and he cried out.

24 Saying, Let us alone; what have we to do with thee, thou, Jesus of Nazareth? Art thou come to destroy us? I know thee who thou art, the Holy One of God.

25 And Jesus rebuked him, saying, Hold thy peace, and come out of him.

26 And when the unclean spirit had torn him, and cried with a loud voice, he came out of him.

27 And they were all amazed, inasmuch that they questioned among themselves, saying, What thing is this? what new doctrine is this? for with authority commandeth he even the unclean spirits, and they do obey him.

St. Mark having given an account of our Saviour's doctrine which he preached, verse 15, namely, the doctrine of faith and repentance, he now acquaints us, in the remaining part of this chapter, with the miracles which he wrought for the confirmation of his doctrine, and they are three; First, The casting of a devil out of one possessed, verse 23. Secondly, The curing of Peter's wife's mother of a fever, verse 29. Thirdly, The cleansing of a leper, from verse 10, to the end of the chapter. His first miracle was the casting of a devil out of one possessed. There was a man with an unclean spirit: that is, an unclean spirit did enter into him, and bodily possess him. Among the many calamities which sin has brought upon our bodies, this is one, that we are liable to be bodily possessed by satan. The devil has an inveterate malice against mankind, seeking to ruin our souls by his suggestions and temptations, and to destroy our bodies by some means or other; but blessed be God, though his malice be infinite, yet his power is limited and bounded; as he cannot do all the mischief he would, so he shall not do all he can. O, how much is it our interest as well as our duty, by prayer to put ourselves morning and evening under the divine protection, that we may be preserved from the power and malice of evil spirits! Observe, 2. The attribute or title given to the devil, he is called an unclean spirit. The devils, those wicked spirits of hell, are most impure and filthy creatures; impure by means of their original apostacy, impure by means of their actual and daily sins, such as murder, malice, lying, and the like, by which they continually pollute themselves; impure by means of their continual desire and endeavour to pollute mankind with the contagion of their own sin. Lord, how foul is the nature of sin, which makes the devil such a foul and unclean creature? Observe, 3. This unclean spirit no sooner saw Christ, but he cried out. Whence note, That the greatness of Christ's power (being the Son of God) over devils and wicked spirits is such, that it is very terrible and tormenting to them; it was terrible to them in a state of humiliation on earth, and made them cry out; but O, how terrible will his power be to them at the great day, when "Christ shall come in the flaming fire to render vengeance both on men and devils!" Observe, 4. The substance of the devils' outcry: "Let us alone, what have we to do with thee? Art thou come to destroy us?" Where note, 1. That though the devils are now full of sin and discontent as they can be, yet are they not so full of misery and torment as they shall be, "Art thou come to torment us before the time?" says St. Matthew, chap. viii. 29. "Art thou come to destroy us?" says St. Mark; that is, to bring upon us our full and final destruction. Implying, That the devil has not yet his full judgment and complete damnation. Therefore there is certainly a day of judgment to come, and the devils are in chains of darkness, reserved to the judgment of that great day. But some, by these words, Art thou come to destroy us? understand as much as, "Art thou come to restrain us from the exercise of our power?" Learn we thence, That the devil thinks himself destroyed when he is restrained from doing mischief. Observe, 5. The title which the devil puts upon our Saviour; "Jesus of Nazareth the Holy One of God." Although there was ground for the common people's calling Christ, Jesus of Nazareth, because he was bred and brought up there, and lived there during his private life, till about thirty years of age; though he was not born there, but at Bethlehem; yet it is conceived that the devil gave this title to our Saviour in policy, to disguise the place of Christ's nativity, that so the Jews might not believe him to be the true Messiah, because he was of Nazareth; whereas the Messiah was to come out of Bethlehem. Therefore to the intent that the Jews might be at the greater loss, concerning Christ, and in doubt of his being the true Messiah, the devil here calls him not Jesus of Bethlehem, but Jesus of Nazareth. But how comes the next title out of the devil's mouth; The Holy One of God? Could an apostle, could Peter himself make a profession beyond this? But how comes the devil to make it? For no good end or purpose we may be sure: for he never speaks the truth for truth's sake, but for advantage. Probably, 1. He made this profession, that so he might bring the truth professed into suspicion, hoping that a truth which received testimony from the father of lies would be suspected. 2. It might perhaps be done that the people might believe that our Saviour had some familiarity with satan, and did work miracles by his help, because he did confess him, and seem so much to honor him. From this instance and example, learn, That it is possible for a person to own and acknowledge Christ to be the true and only Saviour, and yet to miss of salvation by him. If a speculative knowledge, and a verbal profession of Christ, were sufficient to salvation, the devil himself would not miss of happiness. Observe, 6. How our Saviour rebukes the devil for his confession, and commands him silence; "and Jesus rebuked him, saying, Hold thy peace." But why was this rebuke given the devil when he spake the truth? Answer, 1. Because Christ knew that the devil confessed this truth on purpose to disgrace the truth. 2. Because the devil was no fit person to make this profession. A testimony of truth from the father of lies, is enough to render truth itself suspected. Yet the devil's evidence, that Christ was the Holy one of God, will rise up in judgment against the wicked pharisees, who shut their eyes against the miracles, and stopt their ears against the doctrine of the Holy One of God. Observe lastly, How the unclean spirit obeys the voice of Christ, though with great reluctance and regret! "When the unclean spirit had torn him, and cried with a loud voice he came out." Christ is Lord over the wicked angels, and has an absolute power and authority to over-rule them, and command them at his pleasure: if Christ says to the evil spirit, Come out, he must come. Yet observe the devil's spite at parting, he tears the man, tortures his body, throws him violently from place to place, showing how loth he was to be dispossessed. Where satan has once gotten an hold, and settled himself for a time, how unwilling is he to be cast out of possession! yea, it is a torture and vexation to him to be cast out: it is much easier to keep him out than to cast him out. Satan may possess the body by God's permission, but he cannot possess our hearts without our own consent and approbation; it will be our wisdom to deny him entrance into our souls at first, by rejecting his wicked monitions and suggestions; for when once entered, he will, like the "strong man armed, keep the house, till a stronger than he casts him out."

28 And immediately his fame spread abroad throughout all the region round about Galilee.

29 And forthwith when they were come out of the synagogue, they entered into the house of Simon and Andrew, with James and John.

30 But Simon's wife's mother lay sick of a fever; and anon they tell him of her.

31 And he came and took her by the hand, and lifted her up; and immediately the fever left her, and she ministered unto them.

The second miracle which our Saviour wrought in this chapter to confirm the truth and authority of his doctrine, was his raising up of Peter's wife's mother from her bed of sickness. Where note, 1. That St. Peter, now a disciple, and afterwards an apostle, was a married person. Neither the prophets of the Old Testament, nor the ministers of the New, did abhor the marriage-bed, nor think themselves too pure for an institution of their Maker. The church of Rome by denying the lawfulness of priests' marriage, makes herself wiser than God, who says, Heb. xiii. 4. "Marriage is honorable amongst all men" Observe, 2. Peter, though a good man, and his wife's mother probably a gracious woman, yet is his family visited with sickness: strength of grace, and dearth of respect even from Christ himself, cannot prevail against diseases. God's own children are visited with bodily sicknesses as well as others. Observe, 3. The charitable care of St. Peter, and the other disciples, forthwith to acquaint Christ with the condition of this sick person: Anon they tell him of her. The care of our fellow christians, especially when the number of our near and dear relations, in a time of sickness is not to be deferred or delayed. Outward help for their bodies, and the spiritual help of our prayers for their souls, are both straightway to be afforded them. Observe, 4. Christ's divine power manifested in this miraculous cure: "He no sooner took her by the hand, but the fever left her." The miracle was not in curing an incurable distemper, but in curing an ordinary distemper after a miraculous manner, namely, 1. By a touch of the hand. 2. The recovery was instantaneous and sudden: Immediately the fever left her. 3. The visible effects of her recovery instantly appeared; She arose and ministered unto Christ and his disciples. That she could arise argued her cure miraculous; that she did arise and did administer unto Christ, argued her thankfulness. Learn thence, That after Christ hath graciously healed any of us, it ought to be our first work and care to administer unto Christ: that is to employ our recovered health in the service of Christ, and to improve our renewed strength to the honor and glory of Christ.

32 ¶ And at even, when the sun did set, they brought unto him all that were diseased, and them that were possessed with devils.

33 And all the city was gathered together at the door.

34 And he healed many that were sick of diverse diseases, and cast out many devils; and suffered not the devils to speak, because they knew him.

The Evangelist here declares sundry other miracles wrought by our Saviour before the door of St. Peter's house where he now was; he healed all the diseased that were brought unto him, and cast devils out of them that were possessed with them. But how comes it to pass, that we read of so many possessed with devils in our Saviour's time, and so few either before or since? Answer, 1. Probably satan perceiving that the Messiah was come in the flesh to destroy his kingdom, did rage the more, and discover greater malice and enmity against mankind. 2. Perhaps Almighty God permitted satan at that time to possess so many, that Christ might have occasion to manifest his divine power by casting satan out; and accordingly we find our Saviour dispossessing all that were possessed by satan. It is added, "that he suffered not the devils to speak, because they knew him." That is, Christ would not be made known to be the Son of God by the preaching of the devil, to whom it belonged not to publish the gospel, lest the world should take from thence an occasion to think that our Saviour held a correspondence with those wicked spirits, and that the miracles he wrought were performed by the devil's assistance, as being one in combination with him. Possibly from the devil's owning Christ to be the holy one of God, the pharisees concluded, that there was a compact and agreement betwixt them, and thereupon their affirmation was grounded, "He casteth out devils by Beelzebub, &c."

35 And in the morning, rising up a great while before day, he went out, and departed into a solitary place, and there prayed.

Observe here, 1. The duty performed by our Saviour, namely, prayer, solitary and private prayer. He went by himself alone, out of the hearing of his disciples. The company of our best friends is not always seasonable, nor acceptable: there are times and cases when a christian would not be willing that his dearest relations upon earth should hear that intercourse which passes between him and his God. Observe, 2. Christ chooses the opportunity of the morning for prayer. He rises a great while before day to set about this work. Teaching us, That the morning is a fit season, yea, the best season, for private duties; now our spirits are freshest and our minds freest, before the distractions of the day break in upon us. It is better to go from prayer to business, than from business to prayer.

36 And Simon, and they that were with him, followed after him.

37 And when they had found him, they said unto him, All men seek for thee.

38 And he said unto them, Let us go into the next towns, that I may preach there also: for therefore came I forth.

39 And he preached in their synagogues throughout all Galilee, and cast out devils.

Observe here two things: First, The great end of Christ in his incarnation, and coming into the world, namely, as a prophet sent from God to reveal his will, and to publish the doctrine of the gospel. Therefore came I forth: that is, to preach and plant the gospel. Secondly, It being Christ's design not only to plant, but to propagate, the gospel, he would not confine his ministry to any particular place, no, not to the great city of Capernaum, but resolves to preach the word in the smallest towns and villages. Leaving his ministers herein an instructive example to be as willing to preach the gospel in the smallest villages, as in the largest cities, if God calls them thereunto. Let the place be ever so obscure and mean, and the congregation ever so small and little, if God sends us thither, the greatest of us must not think it beneath us to go and instruct an handful of people.

40 And there came a leper to him, beseeching him, and kneeling down to him, and saying unto him, If thou wilt, thou canst make me clean.

41 And Jesus moved with compassion, put forth his hand and touched him, and saith unto him, I will; be thou clean.

42 And, as soon as he had spoken, immediately the leprosy departed from him, and he was cleansed.

43 And he straitly charged him, and forthwith sent him away;

44 And saith unto him, See thou say nothing to any man: but go thy way, show thyself to the priest, and offer for thy cleansing those things which Moses commanded, for a testimony unto them.

45 But he went out, and began to publish it much, and to blaze abroad the matter, insomuch that Jesus could no more openly enter into the city, but was without in desert places; and they came to him from every quarter.

The last miracle of our Saviour's recorded in this chapter, is the healing of a leper: he came beseeching Christ to heal him, "Saying, If thou wilt, thou canst make me clean." Where, Observe, 1. He doth not question Christ's power, but distrusts Christ's willingness to heal him; "Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst." Christ's divine power must be fully assented to and firmly believed, by all those that expect benefit by him, and healing from him. Observe, 2. The great readiness of Christ to help and heal this distressed person, "Jesus touched him, saying, I will; be thou clean." By the ceremonial law, the leper was forbidden to be touched, therefore Christ's touching this leper showed him to be above the law, and that he was the Lord of it, and might dispense with it; and his healing the leper by the word of his mouth, and touch of his hand, showed him to be truly and really God. Leprosy among the Jews was an incurable distemper, called the finger of God, a disease of his sending, and of his removing. Our Saviour, therefore, as a proof of his being the true Messiah, tells John's disciples, Matt. xi. 5. that "the lepers were cleansed, and the dead raised," by him: which two being joined together, do imply, that the cleansing of lepers is as much an act of divine power as the raising of the dead: and accordingly 2 Kings v. 7, it is said, "Am I a God, that this man sends to me to cure a man of his leprosy?" Observe, 3. The certainty and suddenness of the cure was a proof of Christ's divine power; immediately his leprosy was cleansed. Christ not only cured him without means, but without the ordinary time required for such a cure. Thus Christ showed both power and will to cure him miraculously, who believed his power, but questioned his willingness. Observe, 4. The cause moving our Saviour to cure this leper; his bowels were moved with tender pity and compassion towards him. Christ's exercising acts of mercy and compassion with such condolency and sympathizing pity, should by way of example teach us to be inwardly moved with tender compassion and mercy towards such as are in misery. We are not only to draw out our bread, but to draw out our soul to the hungry. Observe, 5. A two-fold charge and command given by Christ to the leper after his cure. 1. To conceal, and to tell it to no man. Where the great modesty, humility, and piety of Christ is discovered, together with the care of his own safety. His modesty in not desiring his good deeds should be published and proclaimed. His humility, in shunning vain-glorious applause and commendation. His piety, in desiring all honor and glory should redound entirely to God. And the care of his own safety appeared, lest the publishing of his miracles should create him untimely danger from the pharisees. The second part of the charge given to the recovered leper, was "to show himself to the priest, and offer the gift which Moses commanded, for a testimony unto them;" that is, to testify to the Jew, that he did not oppose the ceremonial law, which required a thank-offering at his hand, and that he was the true and promised Messiah. Learn thence, That our Saviour would have the ceremonial law punctually observed, so long as the time of its continuance did endure: though he came to destroy that law, yet while it stood he would have it punctually observed. Observe, 6. Notwithstanding our Saviour's strict prohibition, the leper publishes the fame of this miracle. It is likely his intention might be good, in extolling his great benefactor, but his acting contrary to Christ's command was a fault, and shows the corruption of human nature, it being most forward to do that which is most forbidden. It is a sin to do any thing against the command of Christ, though with ever so good a meaning, purpose or intention, and to exalt and honor Christ.

Observe lastly, The inconveniences which attended our Saviour upon this indiscreet publication of the miracle: and they were two: 1. Our Saviour could no more enter into Capernaum, and other cities, to preach in an open manner as he had done, by reason of the great concourse of people after him. 2. The fame of this miracle brought the people about him from all quarters; not so much to hear as to see; not so much to hear his holy and heavenly doctrine which he taught as to gratify their curiosity with the sight of the miracles which he wrought. O! how many thronged after Christ more to have their bodily diseases cured, than their souls healed! Christ desired not their flocking after him upon this account; therefore he retires from the breath of popular applause: he would not "openly enter into the city, but was without a desert place." O great humility! How little did our blessed Redeemer regard the applause and commendation of men! Constantly we find him, as soon as his public preaching and working of miracles was over, withdrawing himself from the multitude into some private place apart: he doth not stay in the crowd with his ear open to listen how men admire the preacher, and applaud the sermon. Plainly showing, that he sought his Father's glory, not his own praise or the people's commendation: leaving his example as an instructive pattern to all his ministers and ambassadors to take heed of vain-glory; not to affect popularity, or to seek the applause and commendation of men, in what they do, resolving, that man's opinion shall be nothing with them, but that the pleasing of God, and doing their duty to the souls of their people, shall always be their whole scope.

CHAPTER II.

AN D again he entered into Capernaum after some days: and it was noised that he was in the house.

(No. 10.)

2 And straightway many were gathered together, insomuch that there was no room to receive them, no, not so much as about the door: and he preached the word unto them.

In the last verse of the foregoing chapter, we find how industriously our blessed Saviour withdrew himself from the concourse and throng of people which flocked after him from every quarter; and to show how little he affected the applause and commendation of the multitude, "he left the cities, and was without in desert places." Hereby giving his ministers an instructive example to avoid vain-glory, and to shun popular applause. But now the words before us show that our Saviour having entered (privately as is probable) into the city of Capernaum, it is presently noised and reported that he was in the house, and a mighty concourse and throng of people after him; insomuch that neither the house nor hardly the streets, could contain them. Thence learn, That such as seek least after honor and applause from men, are oftentimes most famous and renowned. Our Saviour was so far from seeking the people's praise and commendation, that he came into Capernaum without observation, and betook himself to his dwelling-house there; but the more he sought to lie hid, the more he was taken notice of. Honor flies from them that pursue it, and pursues those that fly from it. The way to be honored, is to be humble. God seldom honors a proud man, by making him eminently serviceable or successful. Observe farther, The people being come together, our Saviour takes the opportunity to preach: And he preached the word unto them. Teaching his ministers by his example, to embrace all opportunities, in season and out of season, on the Lord's day and on the week day, to edify our people by our ministry, by our public exhortations, by our private instructions, prudent admonitions and holy examples.

3 And they come unto him, bringing one sick of the palsy, which was borne of four.

4 And when they could not come nigh unto him for the press, they uncovered the roof where he was; and when they had broken it up, they let down the bed wherein the sick of the palsy lay.

5 When Jesus saw their faith, he said unto the sick of the palsy, Son, thy sins be forgiven thee.

6 But there were certain of the scribes sitting there, and reasoning in their hearts.

7 Why doth this man thus speak blasphemies? who can forgive sins but God only?

8 And immediately, when Jesus perceived in his spirit that they so reasoned within themselves, he said unto them, Why reason ye these things in your hearts?

9 Whether is it easier to say to the sick of the palsy, Thy sins be forgiven thee; or to say, Arise, and take up thy bed and walk?

10 But that ye may know that the Son of man hath power on earth to forgive sins (he saith to the sick of the palsy), 11 I say unto thee, Arise, and take up thy bed, and go thy way into thine house.

12 And immediately he arose, took up the bed, and went forth before them all; insomuch that they were all amazed, and glorified God, saying, We never saw it on this fashion..

Here we have the relation of our Saviour's miraculous healing of one sick of the palsy at Capernaum. Where observe, 1. The diseased and distressed person; one sick of the palsy; which disease being a resolution or weakness of the nerves, enfeebles the joints, and confines the person to his bed or couch. As a demonstration of Christ's divine power, he was pleased to single out the palsy and leprosy, incurable diseases, to work a cure upon such as were afflicted with them: now this person was so great a cripple, by reason of the palsy, that he was borne of four. He could not go, nor was capable of being led, but was carried by four in his bed or couch. Observe, 2. As the grievousness of the disease, so the greatness of their faith. The man and his friends had a firm persuasion that Christ was clothed with a divine power and able to help him. Accordingly, the roof of the Jewish houses being flat, they uncovered some part of it, and let the bed down with the sick man in it into the room where Christ was. Observe, 3. No sooner did they exercise their faith in believing, but Christ exerts his divine power in healing. And see the marvellous efficacy of faith, it obtained not only what was desired, but more than was expected. They desired only the healing of the body, but Christ heals body and soul too. "Son be of good cheer, thy sins are forgiven thee." Thereby our Saviour shows them, that sin is the original cause of all bodily diseases; and consequently, that in sickness, the best way to find ease and deliverance from pain, is first to seek for pardon. The sense of pardon in some degree will take away the sense of pain. Observe, 4. The exception which the scribes took against our Saviour for pronouncing that this man's sins were forgiven him. They accuse him of the sin of blasphemy; urging, that it is God's peculiar prerogative to pardon sin. The doctrine was true, but their application false. No thing more true, than that it is the greatest degree of blasphemy for any mere man to arrogate to himself the incommunicable prerogative of God, which consists in an absolute and authoritative power to forgive sin. But then their denying this power to Christ of forgiving sin, which he had as God from all eternity, and as Mediator, God and man in one person when here upon earth; this was blasphemy in them; the challenging of it none in him.

Observe, 5. Our Saviour gives these scribes a twofold demonstration of his godhead; 1. By letting them know that he knew their thoughts: "Jesus perceiving in his spirit that they so reasoned within themselves." To search the hearts, and to know the thoughts and reasonings of men, is not in the power of angels or men, but the prerogative of God only. 2. By assuming to himself a power to forgive sin: for our Saviour here by assuming to himself a power to forgive sins in his own name, and by his own authority, doth give the world an undeniable proof and convincing evidence of his godhead: For who can forgive sins but God only? Observe, 6. The effect of this miracle upon the minds of the people; they marvelled and were amazed, but did not believe. They admire our Saviour for an extraordinary man, but did not believe him to be God. Learn thence, That the sight of Christ's miracles is not sufficient to work faith in the soul, without the concurring operation of the Holy Spirit. The one may make us marvel, the other must make us believe.

13 And he went forth again by the sea-side; and all the multitude resorted unto him, and he taught them.

14 ¶ And as he passed by he saw Levi, the son of Alpheus, sitting at the receipt of custom, and said unto him, Follow me. And he arose and followed him.

15 ¶ And it came to pass, that as Jesus sat at meat in his house, many publicans and sinners sat also together with Jesus and his disciples: for there were many, and they followed him.

16 And when the scribes and pharisees saw him eat with publicans and sinners, they said unto his disciples, How is it that he eateth and drinketh with publicans and sinners?

17 When Jesus heard it he saith unto them, They that are whole have no need of the physician, but they that are sick: I came not to call the righteous but sinners to repentance.

Observe here, 1. The unwearied pains and diligence which our Saviour used in the execution of his ministerial office and calling: no sooner had he done preaching in Capernaum, and healing the sick of the palsy, but he goeth out thence to the sea-side, to preach there. O blessed Saviour! how perpetually wert thou employed in the labors of thy calling, in the service of thy Father, and for the good of mankind! thou wentest about doing good, setting a pattern for all thy ministers to follow. How doth the example of thy laborious diligence at once instruct and shame us! Observe, 2. The number of our Lord's disciples not being filled up, observe what a free and gracious, unexpected and undeserved choice he makes. Levi, that is, Matthew, (for he hath both names) a grinding publican, who gathered the taxes for the Romans, and was probably guilty, as others were, of the sins of covetousness, extortion, and oppression; yet he is called to follow Christ as a special disciple. Learn thence, That such is the freeness of God's grace, that it calls and converts sinners unto Christ, when they think not of him nor seek unto him. Little did Levi now think of a Saviour, much less seek after him, yet he is at this time called by him. Matthew, a publican; Zaccheus, an extortioner; Saul a persecutor: all these are brought home to God as instances and evidences of the mighty power of converting grace. Observe, 3. Matthew's ready compliance with Christ's call: He arose and followed him. When the inward call of the Holy Spirit accompanieth the outward call of the word, the soul readily complies, and presently yields obedience to the voice of Christ. Christ oftentimes speaks by his words to our ears, and we hear not, we stir not; but when he speaks by his Spirit, efficaciously to our hearts, satan shall not hold us down, the world shall not keep us back, but we shall with Levi instantly arise, and follow our Saviour. Observe, 4. Levi, or Matthew, to show his thankfulness to Christ, makes him a great feast. Christ invited Matthew to a discipleship, Matthew invites Christ to a dinner. The servant invites his Master, a sinner invites his Saviour. We do not find, that when Christ was invited to any table, that he ever refused to go; if a publican, if a pharisee invited him, he constantly went; not so much for the pleasure of eating, as for the opportunity of conversing and doing good. Christ feasts us when we feast him. Learn hence, That new converts are full of affection towards Christ, and very excessive in their love unto him. Matthew touched with a sense of Christ's rich love, makes him a royal feast. Observe, 5. The cavil and exception which the scribes and pharisees made at our Lord's free conversation. They censure him for conversing with sinners: he justifies himself, telling them, that he conversed with them as their physician, not as their companion, They that are whole need no physician, says Christ, but they that are sick. As if our Lord had said, "With whom should a physician converse, but with sick patients? Now I come into the world to do the office of a kind physician unto men, surely, then I am to take all opportunities of conversing with them, that I may help and heal them, for they that are sick need the physician: but as for you scribes and pharisees, who are well and whole in your own opinion and conceit, I have no hopes of doing good upon you; for such as think themselves whole desire no physician's help." From this assertion of our Saviour, these truths are suggested to us. 1. That sin is the soul's malady, its spiritual disease and sickness. 2. That Christ is the physician appointed by God for the cure of this disease. 3. That there are multitudes of sinners spiritually sick, who yet think themselves sound and whole. 4. That such and only such, as find themselves spiritually sick, are the subjects capable of Christ's healing. "They that are whole need not the physician, but they that are sick; I came not to call the (opinionatively) righteous, but the (sensible) sinners to repentance."

18 And the disciples of John and of the pharisees used to fast: and they come, and say unto him, Why do the disciples of John and the pharisees fast, but thy disciples fast not?

19 And Jesus said unto them, Can the children of the bride-chamber fast while the bridegroom is with them? as long as they have the bridegroom with them they cannot fast.

20 But the days will come, when the bridegroom shall be taken away from them, and then shall they fast in those days.

21 No man, also, seweth a piece of new cloth on an old garment; else the new piece that filled it up taketh away from the old, and the rent is made worse.

22 And no man putteth new wine into old bottles; else the new wine doth burst the bottles, and the wine is spilled, and the bottles will be marred: but new wine must be put into new bottles.

Observe here, 1. A great difference betwixt John's disciples and Christ's in the manner of fasting. John's disciples imitated him, who was a man of an austere life, and much given to fasting: therefore is said to come neither eating nor drinking, Mat. xi. 18. On the other side, Christ's disciples follow him, who came eating and drinking, as other men did; and yet though there was a great difference betwixt John's disciples and Christ's in matters of practice, yet were they all of one faith and religion. Thence learn, That there may be unity of faith and religion among those who do not maintain an uniformity of practice. Men may differ in some outward religious observances and customs, and yet agree in the fundamentals in faith and religion. Thus did John's disciples and Christ's; the one fasted often, the other fasted not. Observe, 2. In that the disciples of the pharisees used to fast as well as John's disciples, we may learn, That hypocrites and wicked men may be, and sometimes are, as strict and forward in the outward duties of religion, as the holiest and best of christians: they pray, they fast, they hear the word, they receive the sacrament; they do, yea, it may be, they out-do and go beyond the sincere christian in external duties and outward performances. Observe, 3. The defensive plea which our blessed Saviour makes for the not fasting of his disciples; he declares that it was neither suitable to them, nor tolerable for them, thus to fast at present. Not suitable in regard of Christ's bodily presence with them. This made it a time of joy and rejoicing, not of mourning and fasting. Christ is the bridegroom, and his church the bride: whilst therefore, his spouse did enjoy his bodily presence with her, it was a day of joy and rejoicing to her, and mourning and fasting were improper for her. But when Christ's bodily presence shall be removed, there will be cause enough to fast and mourn. Again, this discipline of fasting was not at present tolerable for the disciples: for they were raw, green, and tender, not fit for austerities; nor could bear as yet the severities of religion, no more than an old garment could bear a new stiff cloth to be set into it, which will make the rent worse, if the garment comes to a stretch: no more than old bottles can keep new wine. As if our Saviour had said, "My disciples at present are tender and weak, newly called and converted: they cannot, therefore, bear the severities of religion presently: but ere long I shall leave them, and go to heaven, from whence I will send down my Holy Spirit upon them, which shall enable them to do all the duties which the gospel enjoins." Now the intended lesson of instruction from hence is this, That it is hurtful and dangerous for young converts, and weak christians, to be put upon the severer exercises of religion, or to be urged to the performance of such duties as are above their strength. But they ought to be handled with that tenderness which becomes the mild and gentle dispensation of the gospel. Our Saviour here recommends prudence to his ministers, in treating their people according to their strength, and putting them upon duties according to their time and standing.

23 ¶ And it came to pass, that he went through the corn-fields on the sabbath-day, and his disciples began, as they went, to pluck the ears of corn.

24 And the pharisees said unto him, Behold, why do they on the sabbath-day that which is not lawful?

25 And he said unto them, Have ye never read what David did, when he had need, and was an hungered, he, and they that were with him?

26 How he went into the house of God, in the days of Abiathar the highpriest, and did eat the show-bread, which is not lawful to eat but for the priests, and gave also to them which were with him?

27 And he said unto them, The sabbath was made for man, and not man for the sabbath:

28 Therefore the Son of man is Lord also of the sabbath.

Observe here, 1. The poverty, the low estate and condition of Christ's own disciples in this world; they wanted bread, and are forced to pluck the ears of corn to satisfy their hunger. God may, and sometimes doth suffer his dearest children to fall into straits, to taste of want, for the trial of their faith and their dependance upon his power and providence. Observe, 2. How the pharisees (who accompanied our Saviour only with a design to cavil at, and quarrel with every thing that either he or his disciples did) blame this action of the disciples, namely, their plucking the ears of corn on the sabbath-day. Yet note, 1. It was not any theft which the disciples were charged with, for to take in our necessity, so much of our neighbour's goods as we may reasonably suppose that, if he were present, and knew our circumstances, he would give us, is no theft. But it is the servile labor on the sabbath, in gathering the ears of corn, which the pharisees scruple. Whence observe, How zealous hypocrites are for the lesser things of the law, whilst they neglect the greater, and are superstitiously addicted to outward ceremonies, placing all holiness in the observation of them, neglecting moral duties. Observe farther, 3. How our Saviour defends the action of his disciples in gathering the ears of corn in their necessity, by the practice and example of David. Necessity freed him from fault and blame in eating the consecrated bread, which none but the priests might lawfully eat. For in cases of necessity, a ceremonial precept must give way to a moral duty. Works of mercy and necessity, for preserving our lives, and for the better fitting us for sabbath-services, are certainly lawful on the sabbath-day. Observe, 4. A double argument which our Saviour uses, to prove that the sabbath's observation may be dispensed with in a case of absolute necessity. 1. Drawn from the end of the sabbath's institution; The sabbath was made for man; that is, instituted of God for the good and benefit of mankind, both with respect to their souls and to their bodies. The outward observing and keeping of the sabbath is subordinate to the good of man, and therefore the good of man is to be preferred before the outward keeping of the sabbath. 2. Argument is drawn from the authority which Christ the institutor of the sabbath has over it. The Son of man is Lord also of the sabbath; that is, he has authority and power both as God and Mediator, to institute and appoint a sabbath, to alter and change the sabbath, to dispense with the breach of it upon a just and great occasion; and consequently, acts of mercy, which tend to fit us for works of piety, not only may, but ought to be done upon the sabbath-day; which was the proposition which our Saviour undertook to prove.

CHAPTER III.

AND he entered again into the synagogue; and there was a man there which had a withered hand.

2 And they watched him, whether he would heal him on the sabbath-day; that they might accuse him.

3 And he saith unto the man which had the withered hand, Stand forth.

4 And he saith unto them, Is it lawful to do good on the sabbath-day, or to do evil? to save life, or to kill? but they held their peace.

The former part of this chapter reports to us a miraculous cure wrought by Christ upon a man who had a withered hand. The place where he wrought it was the synagogue; the time when, was the sabbath-day; the manner how, was by speaking a word; the persons before whom, were the envious and malicious pharisees. These men were always cavilling at our Saviour's doctrine, and slandering his miracles; yet our Saviour goes on with his work before their faces, without either interruption or discouragement. Learn thence, that unjust censures and malicious cavils of wicked men against us for well-doing, must not discourage us from doing our duty, either towards God or towards our neighbour. Though the pharisees watched our Saviour, and when their envy and malice could find no occasion of quarrel, they could invent and make one; yet such was our Lord's courage and resolution, that he bids the man which had the withered hand, stand forth; to show that he was resolved to heal him, notwithstanding their malicious purpose to accuse him for it, as a breaker of the sabbath. Opposition met with in doing our duty, must not discourage us from doing good, if we will follow the example of our blessed Redeemer.

5 And when he had looked round about on them with anger, being grieved for the hardness of their hearts, he saith unto the man, Stretch forth thine hand. And he stretched it out: And his hand was restored whole as the other.

Observe here, 1. The pharisees' sinful and graceless disposition, and that was, hardness of heart. The heart of man is naturally hard, and full of obstinacy and enmity against Christ; but there is an acquired hardness, which continuance in sin occasions; the pharisees labored under both. Observe, 2. A double affection which this hardness of heart found in the pharisees did stir up in Christ; namely, anger and indignation, grief and commiseration; "He was grieved for the hardness of their hearts." Learn hence, 1. That human passions are not sinful, and that Christian religion doth not destroy natural affection. 2. That anger at sin, either in ourselves or others, if kept within due bounds, is not only lawful, but commendable. This passion of anger was found in him, in whom was no sin. 3. That our anger against sin ought to be accompanied with grief and compassion towards sinners. We should pour out our tears of compassion, when men pour forth their abominations. 4. That of all sins, hardness of heart and unbelief are most grievous and offensive, most displeasing and provoking to Jesus Christ: "He looked about with anger, being grieved for the hardness of their hearts." Observe, 4. The instantaneous cure which our Saviour wrought upon the man that had the withered hand, our Saviour did not touch him, but only said to him, Stretch forth thine hand, and it was presently cured. Learn hence that Christ having absolute power over all bodily diseases and infirmities, to cure them miraculously without means, only by a word speaking, is one argument that proves him to be truly and really God.

6 And the pharisees went forth, and straightway took counsel with the Herodians against him, how they might destroy him.

(No. 10.)

7 But Jesus withdrew himself with his disciples to the sea; and a great multitude from Galilee followed him, and from Judea.

8 And from Jerusalem, and from Idumea, and from beyond Jordan; and they about Tyre and Sidon, a great multitude, when they had heard what great things he did, came unto him.

9 And he spake unto his disciples, that a small ship should wait on him, because of the multitude, lest they should throng him.

10 For he had healed many; insomuch that they pressed upon him for to touch him, as many as had plagues.

11 And the unclean spirits, when they saw him, fell down before him, and cried, saying, 'Thou art the Son of God.

12 And he straitly charged them that they should not make him known.

Observe here, 1. What dismal effect this famous miracle of Christ had upon the pharisees and Herodians. Instead of being convinced by it, they conspire against him for it.—These Herodians and pharisees were of different opinions, enemies to one another, yet they join together in seeking the death of Christ. The pharisees were against paying tribute to Cesar, looking upon themselves as a free people, and accounting the Roman emperor an usurper. The Herodians were for it. Herod being made by the Roman emperor king of the Jews, was zealous for having the Jews pay tribute to Cesar; and such of the Jews as sided with him, particularly his courtiers and favorites, were styled Herodians: but both pharisees and Herodians take counsel against Christ. Learn thence, That unity and consent is of itself alone far from being a mark and note of the true church. Unity in the faith and doctrine of Christ, and in the profession and practice of the true religion, is a note indeed of the true church: but unity in opposing Christ, his person, his doctrine, his people, is so far from being a mark of the true church, that it is the badge of the anti-christian synagogue. Observe, 2. The prudent means which our Saviour uses to preserve himself from the rage of the pharisees, he withdrew himself from them. Christ's example teaches his ministers their duty in a time of danger to fly from persecution, and to endeavour to preserve their lives, unless when their sufferings are like to do more good than their lives. Observe, 3. The great zeal and forwardness of the people in flocking after our Saviour's ministry; people come now at first from all places and countries, from Judea, from Idumea, from beyond Jordan, from Tyre and Sidon, to hear his doctrine and see his miracles. The people came from all parts when our Saviour first began to preach. His ministers find it thus: at their first coming amongst a people their labors are most acceptable, and they do most good; our people's affections are then warmest, and perhaps our own too. Observe, 4. What sort of people they were which attended thus zealously upon our Saviour's ministry, they were the common and ordinary people; The poor received the gospel, whilst the pharisees, and other men of most account, the mighty, the noble, and the wise men after the flesh, despised our Saviour's person, slighted his ministry, and sought his life. The ordinary and meanest sort of people ever have been more zealous and forward in embracing the gospel, than ever the great, the rich, and the honorable part of the world have been. It is a sad, it is a certain truth, heaven is the place where few, comparatively, of the great men of the world are like to come; their temptations are many, their lusts are strong, and their great estates, through their own abuse, become fuel to their lusts. Observe, 5. The behaviour of the unclean spirits (the devils) towards our Saviour, and our Saviour's carriage towards them; "They fall down at the very sight of him, they cry out, and confess him to be the Son of God; but he sharply rebukes them, and charges them that they should not make him known." Not that our Saviour would have the knowledge of his person suppressed, but because the devils were not fit persons to preach Jesus Christ. A truth out of the mouth of the father of lies, is enough to render truth itself suspected. Besides, the time appointed for the full and clear manifestation of the godhead of Christ, was not yet come. This was not to be done till after his resurrection; the divine nature was to be hid under the veil of Christ's flesh during his state of humiliation and abasement.

13 ¶ And he goeth up into a mountain, and calleth unto him whom he would: and they came unto him.

14 And he ordained twelve, that they should be with him, and that he might send them forth to preach.

15 And to have power to heal sicknesses, and to cast out devils.

16 And Simon he surnamed Peter;

17 And James, the son of Zebedee, and John, the brother of James; (and he surnamed them Boanerges, which is, The sons of thunder,)

18 And Andrew, and Philip, and Bartholomew, and Matthew, and Thomas, and James, the son of Alphaeus, and Thaddeus, and Simon the Canaanite, 19 And Judas Iscariot, which also betrayed him: And they went into an house.

As the Jewish church arose from twelve patriarchs, so the christian church became planted by twelve apostles. The person commissioning them was Christ; none may undertake the work and calling of the ministry, but those whom Christ appoints and calls. The persons commissioned were disciples before they were apostles; to teach us, That Christ will have such as preach the gospel to be disciples before they are ministers, trained up in the faith and doctrine of the gospel, before they undertake a public charge. Observe farther, The holy preparative which our Saviour uses in order to this election of his apostles, he goeth up into a mountain to pray upon that great occasion. So says St. Luke, chap. vi. 12. "He went up into a mountain to pray, and spent the night in prayer to God. And when it was day, he called his disciples, and of them he chose twelve." In this prayer, no doubt, he pleaded with his Father to furnish all those that were to be sent forth by him with all ministerial gifts and graces. Learn thence, That as prayer is a necessary preparative to all duties, so more especially before the public election and ordination of the ministers of the church, solemn prayer is to be used by such as are to ordain and choose them; our Lord's practice is to be a standing rule herein to all church officers. Observe again, Though Christ called his apostles now; yet he did not send them forth now: "He ordained twelve that they should be with him. That is, that they might converse with him, and be eye-witnesses, and ear-witnesses, of his life, doctrine, and miracles. And having been thus with Christ, and fitted and prepared by him for their work, afterwards they went forth. Thence learn, That such as are to take upon them the office of the ministry, ought first to be fitted and prepared for it, then solemnly called to it, before they enterprise and undertake the execution of it: if the apostles here, who are called and qualified extraordinarily, were to spend some time with Christ to receive direction and instruction from him before they went forth to preach: how much more needful is it for such as are ordinarily called to be well fitted and furnished for the ministerial service before they undertake it? Observe next, How the several names of the apostles are here registered and recorded: God will honor those that honor him, and are the special instruments of his glory. Of these apostles, Peter is named first, and Judas last. Peter is named first, because probably elder than the rest, or because for order's sake he might speak before the rest. From whence may be inferred, a primacy, but no supremacy, a priority of order, not a superiority of degree. As the foreman of a grand jury has a precedence, but no pre-eminency; he is first in order before the rest, but no authority or power over the rest. Judas is named last: with a brand of infamy upon him; and that he was a traitor, the person that betrayed his Lord and Master. Whence learn, That though the truth of grace be absolutely necessary to a minister's salvation, yet the want of it doth not disannul his office, nor hinder the lawfulness of his ministry. Judas, though a traitor, was yet a lawful minister. The mission of a person may be valid, though he be not sanctified. Observe lastly, That our Saviour surnamed James and John, Boanerges, the sons of thunder. St. Jerome thinks this name was given them, because being with Christ in the mount at his transfiguration, they heard the Father's voice out of the cloud like thunder: others think them so called, because they were more vehement and earnest than the rest in preaching, and did with greater zeal and power sound forth the doctrine of the gospel like thunder. It is very probable, that Christ gave them this name from a foresight of the heat and zeal of their temper, of which they soon gave an instance, in desiring fire to come down from heaven to consume the Samaritans.

20 And the multitude cometh together again, so that they could not so much as eat bread.

21 And when his friends heard of it, they went out to lay hold on him; for they said he is beside himself.

22 ¶ And the Scribes which came down from Jerusalem, said, He hath Beelzebub, and by the prince of the devils casteth he out devils.

23 And he called them unto him, and said unto them in parables, How can satan cast out satan?

24 And if a kingdom be divided against itself, that kingdom cannot stand.

25 And if a house be divided against itself, that house cannot stand.

26 And if satan rise up against himself, and be divided, he cannot stand, but hath an end.

27 No man can enter into a strong man's house and spoil his goods, except he will first bind the strong man, and then he will spoil his house.

28 Verily I say unto you, All sins shall be forgiven unto the sons of men, and blasphemies wherewith soever they shall blaspheme:

29 But he that shall blaspheme against the Holy Ghost, hath never forgiveness, but is in danger of eternal damnation:

30 Because they said, He hath an unclean spirit.

Observe here, 1. How truly our Lord's words were verified, John vi. 34. "My meat is to do the will of him that sent me:" for he and his apostles going into an house to refresh themselves in their hunger, the people pressed upon him so fast to hear the word, that he regards not the satisfying of his hunger, but applies himself to instruct the people. Lord! how exemplary was thy zeal and diligence in preaching the everlasting gospel to a lost world! As it is instructive to, may it be imitated and followed by, all thy ambassadors; Observe, 2. The rash censure of our Saviour's friends, that is his kinsmen, concerning his action, in neglecting to eat bread, and suffering the multitude thus unseasonably to press upon him. They conclude he is beside himself, out of his right mind; and accordingly went out to lay hold upon him. Learn hence, 1. That the forward zeal and diligence of Christ and his ministers in preaching the gospel, is accounted madness and frenzy by a blind world. But they may say with the apostles, 2 Cor. v. 13. "If we be besides ourselves, it is unto God." But who were the persons that thus looked upon our Saviour as beside himself? Verily his own kindred and relations according to the flesh. Learn hence, That oft-times the servants of God meet with the strongest temptations from, and are most discouraged and molested by, such as are their nearest relations by blood or alliance. This is a great trial, to find our relations setting us back, instead of helping us forward, in the ways of religion; but we must bear it patiently, knowing, that not only others of God's children, but Jesus Christ, his own and only Son, did experience this trial. Observe, 3. The malicious and wicked slander which the scribes endeavoured to fix on our blessed Saviour; namely, that he was possessed of the devil, and by familiarity with him, and help from him, cast forth devils out of others. Good God! how was thine own and only Son, the holy and innocent Jesus, censured, slandered, and falsely accused of the worst of crimes; of gluttony, of blasphemy, of sorcery! Can any of thy children expect freedom from the persecution of the tongue, when innocency itself could not protect thy holy Son from slander and false accusation? Observe, 4. Our Saviour's answer and just apology for himself, in which are contained, 1. A confutation of their calamity and slander. 2. A reprehension of the scribes for the same. 1. To confute this slander, our Saviour, by several arguments, shows, how absurd and unlikely it is that the devil should cast out himself, and any ways seek to oppose and destroy his own kingdom. As if our Saviour had said, "Is it likely that satan would lend me his power to use it against himself? Surely satan would do nothing to weaken his own interest, or shake the pillars of his own kingdom. Now if I have received any power from satan, for destroying him and his kingdom, then is satan like a family divided within itself, and like a kingdom divided against itself, which can never stand, but be brought to desolation." Our Saviour having sufficiently shown that he did not work his miracles by the power of the devil, he next informs them from whence he had that power, even from God himself; and accordingly he compares satan to a strong man, well armed with weapons to defend his house; and he compares himself clothed with divine power, to one that is stronger than the strong man. So that the argument runs thus: the devil is very strong and powerful, and there is no power but God's only that is stronger than his. If then, says Christ, I were not assisted with a divine power, I could never cast out this strong man, who reigns in the bodies and souls of men as in his house, for it must be a stronger than the strong man that should bind satan, and who is he but the God of strength? Learn hence, That Christ's divine power is only superior to satan's strength. He only can vanquish and over-rule him at his pleasure, and drive him out of that possession which he holds either in the bodies, or in the souls of men. Observe, 5. The charge which our Saviour brings against the scribes and pharisees blaspheming his divine power in working miracles. He charges them with sinning the unpardonable sin against the Holy Ghost. "All sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven, but he that shall blaspheme against the Holy Ghost, hath never forgiveness." As if Christ had said, All the reproaches which you cast upon me as man, are pardonable; as when you check me with the poverty and meanness of my birth, when you censure me for a wine-bibber, a glutton, a friend and companion of sinners, and the like unjust censures: but when you blaspheme that divine power by which all my miracles are wrought, and contrary to the conviction of your own enlightened minds, maliciously ascribe all my miracles to the power of the devil, which were wrought indeed by the power of the Holy Ghost; this makes your condition not only dangerous but desperate, because you resist the last remedy, and oppose the best means for your conviction. For what can be done more to convince you that I am the true and promised Messiah, than to work so many miracles before your eyes to that purpose! Now, if when you see these you will say, It is not the Spirit of God that works these, but the power of the devil; as if Satan would conspire against himself, and seek the ruin of his own kingdom; there is no way or means left to convince you, but you will continue in your obstinacy, and malicious opposition to truth, to your unutterable and inevitable condemnation.

31 ¶ There came then his brethren and his mother, and standing without, sent unto him, calling him.

32 And the multitude sat about him, and they said unto him, Behold, thy mother and thy brethren without seek for thee.

33 And he answered them, saying, Who is my mother, or my brethren?

34 And he looked round about on them which sat about him, and said, Behold my mother and my brethren?

35 For whosoever shall do the will of God, the same is my brother, and my sister, and mother.

Observe, here, 1. The verity and truth of Christ's human nature; he had affinity and consanguinity with men, persons near in blood to him by the mother's side, called here his brethren, that is, his kinsmen. Observe, 2. That the mother of Christ, though she was a blessed and holy woman, yet she was not free from sin, but failings and infirmities are found with her. It was a fault to interrupt our Saviour unseasonably at this time, when he was preaching to the people. The like we see in her at other times, Luke ii. 48. and John ii. 3. No saint here on earth ever was in a state of sinless perfection. Blessed be God, we are hastening to such a state. Observe, 3. That Christ did not neglect his holy mother, or disregard his poor kindred and relations, but only showed that he preferred his Father's work and business, before their company and acquaintance at this time. Observe, 1. How exceeding dear obedient christians are to Jesus Christ; he prefers his spiritual kindred before his natural. Alliance by faith is more valued by our Saviour, than alliance by blood. To bear Christ in the heart is a greater honor than to bear him in the womb.

Blessed be God, this great and gracious privilege is not denied us even now. Although we cannot see Christ, yet love him we may. His bodily presence cannot be enjoyed by us, but his spiritual presence is not denied us. Though Christ be not ours in house, in arms, in affinity, in consanguinity: yet in heart, in faith, in love, in service, he is or may be ours. Verily, spiritual regeneration bringeth men into a more honorable relation to Christ, than natural generation ever did.

CHAPTER IV.

AND he began again to teach by the sea-side: and there was gathered unto him a great multitude, so that he entered into a ship, and sat in the sea; and the whole multitude was by the sea on the land.

2 And he taught them many things by parables, and said unto them in his doctrine,

The foregoing chapter acquainted us with the blasphemous slander which the scribes and pharisees cast upon our blessed Saviour, accusing him of casting out devils by the help of the devil. This did they, no doubt, to discredit his person, and hinder his ministry; yet, for all this the people follow him in great multitudes, more than ever, to hear him, and be instructed by him. Thence learn, 1. That all the power and malice of Satan and wicked men shall not be able to suppress the gospel, or hinder the free course of it; yea, the more it is oppressed, the more it shall prevail; the more the scribes and pharisees disgraced our Saviour, and vilified his doctrine, the more the people followed him in troops to be partakers of his ministry. Observe, 2. The place where our Lord now preached, in a ship. Not that he declined the temple, or the synagogue, when he had opportunity, but in the want of them Christ thought an house, a mountain, a ship, no unmeet place to preach in. It is not the place that sanctifies the ordinance, but the ordinance that sanctifies the place. Observe, 3. Our Saviour's gestures in preaching; he sat, it being the custom of the Jewish church to do so, Matt. xxiii. 2. "The scribes and pharisees sit in Moses' chair." Learn thence, That in indifferent rites and orders, touching the outward worship of God, we are to confirm ourselves to the laudable custom of the church in which we live, and whereof we are members. This did our Saviour, and so ought we. Observe, 4. The manner of our Lord's preaching, it was by parables and similitudes, which was an ancient way of instruction among the Jews, and a very convincing way; working upon men's minds, memories, and affections, all at once, making the mind attentive, and the memory retentive, and the auditors inquisitive after the interpretation of the parable. Some are of opinion that our Saviour's parables were suited to his hearers' employments; and accordingly many of his bearers being husbandmen, he resembles his doctrine to seed sown in the field. For thus he speaks:

3 Hearken, behold, there went out a sower to sow:

4 And it came to pass, as he sowed, some fell by the way-side, and the fowls of the air came and devoured it up.

6 And some fell on stony ground, where it had not much earth; and immediately it sprang up, because it had no depth of earth:

6 But when the sun was up it was scorched; and because it had no root, it withered away.

7 And some fell among thorns, and the thorns grew up and choked it, and it yielded no fruit.

8 And other fell on good ground, and did yield fruit that sprang up, and increased, and brought forth, some thirty, and some sixty, and some an hundred.

9 And he said unto them, He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.

Several things are here observable; as, 1. How Christ begins and ends the parable with an admonition to diligent and serious attention. Hearken, says Christ, verse 3. And he that hath ears to hear, let him hear, verse 9. This shows us at once the people's backwardness and negligence in applying their minds to hear and receive the word of God, and also shows the minister's duty to excite and stir up their people's diligence and attention in hearing God's word.—Observe, 2. What is the general scope and design of this parable: namely to show that there are four several sorts of hearers of God's word, and but one good one, but one sort only who hear to a saving advantage. Now as to the matter of the parable, Note 1. The sower is Christ and his apostles; he the principal sower, they subordinate seedsmen. Christ sows his own seed, they his seed. Woe unto us if we sow our own seed, not Christ's. Note, 2. The seed sown, the word of God: fabulous legends, and unwritten traditions, which the seedsmen of the church of Rome sow, these are not seed, but chaff, or their own seed, and not Christ's. Our Lord's field must be all sown with his own seed, with no mixt grain. Learn, 1. That the word preached, is like seed sown in the furrows of the field. As seed has a fructifying virtue in it, by which it increaseth and brings forth more of its own kind, so has the word of God a quickening power to regenerate and make alive dead souls. Learn, 2. From this parable, That the seed of the word, where it is most plentifully sown is not alike fruitful. Seed doth not thrive in all ground alike, neither doth the word fructify alike in the souls of men. There is a difference both from the nature of the soil, and from the influence of the Spirit. For though no ground be naturally good, yet some is worse than other. Learn, 3. That the cause of the word's unfruitfulness is very different; not the same in all. In some it is an hard heart of unbelief: in others the distracting cares of the world choke the word, like thorns which hinder the corn's growth, by overshadowing it, by drawing away the moisture and heat of the earth from it, and by hindering the influence of the sun from cherishing it. Unto which may be added the policy of satan, that bird of prey, which follows God's plough, and steals away the precious seeds of the word out of the furrows of their souls. Learn, 4. That the best ground doth not bring forth increase alike. Some good ground brings forth more, others less: some thirty, some sixty, some an hundred-fold. In like manner, a man may be a profitable hearer of the word, although he doth not bring forth so great a proportion of fruit as others, provided he brings forth as much as he can.

(No. 10)

10 And when he was alone, they that were about him, with the twelve, asked of him the parable.

11 And he said unto them, Unto you it is given to know the mystery of the kingdom of God: but unto them that are without, all these things are done in parables:

12 That seeing they may see, and not perceive: and hearing they may hear, and not understand: lest at any time they should be converted, and their sins should be forgiven them.

13 And he said unto them, Know ye not this parable? and how then will ye know all parables?

Observe here, The disciples' question, and our Saviour's reply. Their question is about the sense and meaning of the parable. They own their ignorance, and desire better information. It is no shame for the best of ministers, yea, the best of men, to acknowledge their own ignorance in the mysteries of religion, and to attend upon the means of instruction, in order to their further information. In our Saviour's answer, "To you it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of God, &c." Observe, 1. That the doctrines of the gospel are great mysteries. 2. That it is a matchless and invaluable privilege practically to understand gospel mysteries. 3. That this privilege all are not sharers in, and partakers of, but only those to whom it is given. 4. That it is a righteous thing with God to give such persons over to further blindness and ignorance in spiritual things, who wilfully reject the truth, and shut their eyes against the light and evidence of it. The pharisees had all along shut their eyes and said, they would not see; and now Christ closes their eyes, judicially, and says, they shall not see. "Seeing ye shall see and not perceive; and hearing ye shall hear, and not understand."

14 ¶ The sower soweth the word.

15 And these are they by the way-side, where the word is sown; but when they have heard, satan cometh immediately, and taketh away the word that was sown in their hearts.

16 And these are they likewise which are sown on stony ground: who, when they have heard the word, immediately receive it with gladness;

17 And have no root in themselves, and so endure but for a time; afterward, when affliction or persecution ariseth for the word's sake, immediately they are offended.

18 And these are they which are sown among thorns; such as hear the word.

19 And the cares of this world, and the deceitfulness of riches, and the lusts of other things entering in, choke the word, and it becometh unfruitful.

20 And these are they which are sown on good ground; such as hear the word, and receive it, and bring forth fruit, some thirty-fold, some sixty, and some an hundred.

Here our Saviour applies himself to interpret and explain the foregoing parable: the seed is the word, the sower is the preacher, the soil is the heart and soul of man. Some hearers Christ compares to the highway ground, in which the seed lies uncovered for want of the harrow of meditation. Others to stony ground, in which the word has no root. No root in their understandings, in their memories, wills and affections; but they are instantly offended, either at the depth or profoundness of the word, or at the sanctity and strictness of the word, or else at the plainness and simplicity of it. Again, some hearers our Lord compares to thorny ground; worldly and covetous desires are as thorns choking the good seed; they shadow the blade when sprung up, keep off the influences of the sun, and draw away the fatness of the soil from the seed. All these mischievous effects have thorns among the seed. And the like ill effects have worldly affections and covetous desires in the soul of man, rendering the seed of the word unfruitful and unprofitable. But the good christian hears the word attentively, keeps it retentively, believes it steadfastly, applies it particularly, practises it universally, and brings forth fruit perseveringly. Learn, 1. That no hearers are in Christ's account good hearers of the word, but such as bring forth fruit answerable to their hearing. 2. That a person may be a good hearer of the word in Christ's account if he brings forth the best fruit he can, though it be not in so great a proportion as others do. As some grounds bring forth thirty, some sixty, and some an hundred fold; in like manner do all sincere hearers of the word. They all bring forth fruit, though not all alike; all in sincerity, though not all equally, and none to perfection. Theophylact's note on the place: "How small is the number of good men, and how few are saved! For only the fourth part of the seed fell upon good ground, and was preserved." Others observe a gradation here: The seed sown in the highways comes not up at all; that on stony ground comes up, but increaseth not; that among thorns increaseth but bears no fruit; only that seed which fell on good ground brings forth fruit unto perfection.

21 And he said unto them. Is a candle brought to be put under a bushel, or under a bed, and not be set on a candlestick?

22 For there is nothing hid which shall not be manifested; neither was any thing kept secret, but that it should come abroad.

23 If any man have ears to hear, let him hear

24 And he said unto them, Take heed what ye hear. With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you; and unto you that hear, shall more be given.

25 For he that hath, to him shall be given: and he that hath not, from him shall be taken even that which he hath.

Observe here, 1. The end and design of Christ in revealing his word and will to his disciples, and in communicating to them the light of spiritual knowledge: namely, that they may communicate it to others, and not to keep it close unto themselves. Even as the candle in an house diffuses and disperses its light to all that come within the reach of it; in like manner ought all christians, particularly Christ's ministers, by the light of life and doctrine, to direct persons in their way towards heaven. Such as are enlightened by God in any measure, with the knowledge and understanding of his word, ought not to conceal and hide this knowledge within themselves; but communicate it to others, and employ it for the good and benefit of others. Observe, 2. The cautionary direction given by Christ to his disciples. To take heed how they hear the word. Such as would profit by hearing of the word, must diligently attend to the matter of the doctrine which they hear, and also to the manner how they hear. Such is the majesty and authority of the person that speaks to us in the word, such is the sublimity and the spirituality of the matter, and so great is our danger if we miscarry under the word, that it nearly concerns us to take heed, both what we hear and how we hear. Observe, 3. The argument which our Saviour makes use of to quicken his disciples to communicate the knowledge and improve the grace they had received for the good and benefit of others. To him that hath shall be given. That is such as improve their spiritual gifts shall have them increased; such as improve them not shall have them blasted. Learn hence, That the best course we can take to increase and thrive in grace, is to exercise and improve it. He that hides his talent, doth not only forfeit it, but is in danger of being punished severely for the non-improvement of it.

26 ¶ And he said, So is the kingdom of God, as if a man should cast seed into the ground.

27 And should sleep and rise night and day, and the seed should spring and grow up, he knoweth not how.

28 For the earth bringeth forth fruit of herself, first the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear.

29 But when the fruit is brought forth, immediately he putteth in the sickle because the harvest is come.

This parable of our Saviour is an instructive lesson to the ministers of the gospel, faithfully to do their parts in sowing the seed of the word amongst their people, and then not to be over solicitous about the event, but to leave the issue to God; not to be discouraged, though the fruit of their labor doth not presently appear. Accordingly Christ propounds the laborious husbandman to his minister's imitation. As the husbandman, when he has prudently and painfully cast his seed into the ground, is not anxiously disquieted, but goes to bed and rests in hope, and at length the corn springs up; first the blade, and then the ear, then the grain: in like manner let the ministers of God do their duty without discouragement, in the morning sow their seed, and in the evening not to withhold their hand. And although the seed sown doth not appear presently, it may be not in our days, but seems rotten among the clods; yet it may appear afterwards with a plentiful increase, when our own heads are laid among the clods, verifying that saying of our Saviour, One soweth and another reapeth: Learn hence, 1. That the ministry of the word is the ordinary, the necessary, and the principal means which God has appointed for sowing the seed of grace in the hearts of his people. "So is the kingdom of God, as if a man should cast seed into the ground." 2. That the virtue and efficacy of the word preached doth not depend upon the parts of a man, but upon the power of God. The seed springeth up he knoweth not how. Learn, 3. That the word of God sincerely preached may be successful, though it be not presently successful, the seed sown in one minister's days may spring up in another's. Happy we, if as God's husbandmen, we are employed in ploughing, sowing, or reaping; our Lord will reward us secundum laborum, non fructum; not according to our success, but according to our endeavours. The care and endeavour is ours, but the blessing and success is God's.

30 ¶ And he said, Whereunto shall we liken the kingdom of God? or with what comparison shall we compare it?

31 It is like a grain of mustard-seed, which when it is sown in the earth, is less than all the seeds that be in the earth.

32 But when it is sown it groweth up, and becometh greater than all herbs, and shooteth out great branches; so that the fowls of the air may lodge under the shadow of it.

33 And with many such parables spake he the word unto them, as they were able, to hear it.

34 But without a parable spake he not unto them; and when they were alone, he expounded all things to his disciples.

The design of our Saviour in this parable, is to show how the gospel-church, from small and little, from unlikely and contemptible beginnings, should spread and increase, fructify and grow up: like as mustard-seed, one of the smallest of grains, grows up to a considerable tallness, even Christ foretels that the gospel should spread and increase, nations and countries becoming christians. Hence learn, That how small beginnings soever the gospel had in its first plantation, yet by the fructifying blessing of God, it has had, and shall have, a wonderful increase.

35 And the same day, when the even was come, he saith unto them, Let us pass over unto the other side.

36 And, when they had sent away the multitude, they took him, even as he was in the ship. And there were also with him other little ships.

37 And there arose a great storm of wind, and the waves beat into the ship, so that it was now full.

38 And he was in the hinder part of the ship, asleep on a pillow. And they awake him, and say unto him, Master, carest thou not that we perish?

39 And he arose, and rebuked the wind, and said unto the sea, Peace, be still. And the wind ceased, and there was a great calm.

40 And he said unto them, Why are ye so fearful? How is it that ye have no faith?

41 And they feared exceedingly, and said one to another, What manner of man is this that even the wind and the sea obey him!

Observe here, 1. Our Saviour and his disciples no sooner put forth to sea, but dangers attend and difficulties do accompany them: a tempest arose and the ship was covered with waves, which Christ himself was in, with his disciples. Learn hence, That the presence of Christ himself does not exempt his disciples and followers from trouble and danger. Here is a great tempest about the disciples' ears, though Christ himself was in their company. Observe, 2. The posture our Saviour was in when this tempest arose; he being wearied with the labors of the day, was laid down upon a pillow to sleep at night, thereby showing himself to be truly and really man: and that as he took upon him our human nature, so he assumed the infirmities of our nature also, as weariness and pain, hunger and thirst. Observe, 3. The disciples' application made to Christ; they awake him with a sad outcry; Master, carest thou not that we perish? Here was faith mixed with human frailty. They believed that he could save them; but being asleep, they concluded he must be awakened before they can be saved by him: whereas, though his human nature was asleep, yet his divine nature neither slumbered nor slept. Learn hence, That the prevalency of fear, in a time of great and imminent danger, though it may argue weakness of faith, yet is no evidence of a total want of faith: in the midst of the disciples' fears they believed Christ's power. Observe, 4. A double rebuke given by our Saviour, first to the winds, next to the fears of his disciples. "He rebukes the winds," and instantly they are calm. When the sea was as furious as a madman, Christ with a single word calms it. Learn hence, That the most raging winds and outrageous sea cannot stand before the rebukes of Christ. Christ, as God, lays a law upon the most lawless creatures, even when they seem to act most lawlessly. Observe farther, Christ rebukes his disciples' fears, Why are ye fearful? No sooner was the storm up, but their fears were up: they forgot that the Lord High Admiral of the ocean was on board the ship; and were as much over-set with their boisterous passion, as the vessel was with the tempestuous winds; and accordingly Christ rebukes the tempest within, before the storm without. First he calms their hearts, then he quiets the seas. From this instance of the disciples we may gather that great faith in the habit may appear little in act and exercise; the disciples' faith, in forsaking all, and following Christ, was great faith: but in this present act their faith was weak, through the prevalency of their fears. O the imperfect composition of the best of saints! Faith and fear will take their turns, and act their part, whilst we are upon the stage of this world; ere long our fears will be vanquished, and our faith swallowed up in vision! Lord set our souls in long-ing for that joyful hour.

CHAPTER V.

AND they came over unto the other side of the sea, into the country of the Gadarenes.

2 And, when he was come out of the ship, immediately there met him out of the tombs a man with an unclean spirit,

3 Who had his dwelling among the tombs; and no man could bind him, no, not with chains;

4 Because that he had been often bound with fetters and chains, and the chains had been plucked asunder by him, and the fetters broken in pieces; neither could any man tame him.

5 And always, night and day, he was in the mountains, and in the tombs, crying, and cutting himself with stones.

6 But when he saw Jesus afar off, he ran and worshipped him,

7 And cried with a loud voice, and said, What have I to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of the most high God? I adjure thee by God that thou torment me not.

8 For he said unto him, Come out of the man, thou unclean spirit.

9 And he asked him, What is thy name? And he answered, saying, My name is Legion: for we are many.

10 And he besought him much that he would not send them away out of the country.

11 Now there was there, nigh unto the mountains, a great herd of swine feeding.

12 And all the devils besought him, saying, Send us into the swine, that we may enter into them.

13 And forthwith Jesus gave them leave. And the unclean spirits went out, and entered into the swine; and the herd ran violently down a steep place into the sea (they were about two thousand) and were choked in the sea.

14 And they that fed the swine fled, and told it in the city and in the country: And they went out to see what it was that was done.

15 And they come to Jesus, and see him that was possessed with the devil, and had the legion, sitting, and clothed, and in his right mind: and they were afraid.

16 And they that saw it, told them how it befel to him that was possessed with the devil, and also concerning the swine.

17 And they began to pray him to depart out of their coasts.

18 And when he was come into the ship, he that had been possessed with the devil prayed him that he might be with him.

19 Howbeit Jesus suffered him not; but saith unto him, Go home to thy friends, and tell them how great things the Lord hath done for thee, and hath had compassion on thee.

20 And he departed, and began to publish in Decapolis how great things Jesus had done for him. And all men did marvel.

This piece of history gives us a very sad relation of a person that was possessed with a legion of devils; we read of few, if any in the Old Testament, that were thus possessed, but of many in the New Testament. Our Saviour came into the world to destroy the works of the devil; therefore he suffered satan to enter some human bodies, to show his divine power in casting him out. Note here, 1. That the evil angels by their fall lost their purity, but not their power; for with God's permission they have power, not only to enter into men's bodies, and possess them, but also to distemper their minds and drive them to phrenzy and madness, causing them to offer violence to their own lives, and to do hurt and mischief to their own bodies. Thus did this possessed person here, wounding and cutting himself with stones. Note, 2. That the reason why the evil angels do not oftener exert their power in doing mischief to the bodies and lives of men, is from the restraining power of God. The devils cannot do all the mischief they would, and they shall not do all they can. Note, 3. That the place where these evil spirits delighted to make their abode, among the tombs or graves, places desolate, forlorn, and solitary, which are apt to breed horror of mind, and give advantage to temptations. Learn thence, That it is dangerous, and very unsafe, for persons, especially in whom melancholy prevails, to give themselves to solitariness, to frequent desolate, and forlorn places, and to affect the being much alone; it giving advantage to satan to set upon them with powerful temptations. It is better to frequent human society, and especially to delight in the society and communion of the saints, by means whereof we may be more and more strengthened and fortified against satan's temptations. Note, 4. That the devils own Christ to be the Son of God, and that he came into the world to be a Saviour, but not a Saviour to them; therefore they cry out, What have we to do with thee? or thou with us? O! what an uncomfortable confession and acknowledgment is this, to own Christ to be a Saviour, and at the same time to know, that he is none of our Saviour! Note, 5. That though the devils do own Christ to be the Son of God, and do pay homage and worship, and yield subjection to him, as his slaves and vassals, yet it is not a free and voluntary service, but extorted rather, and forced from them by the power of Christ. "He worshipped and cried out, (No. 10.)

saying, What have I to do with thee?" Note, 6. What a multitude of evil spirits do enter into one man. O the extreme malice and cruelty of the devil against mankind, in that so many evil spirits did at once afflict and torment a single person, even a legion, many thousands of them. Observe also, The unity and agreement which is amongst these evil spirits in doing mischief; though there was a legion of them in this one person, yet they have all but one name. Learn, That the very devils have a sort of unity among themselves, and in their malice and mischievous designs against mankind, they are as one. How happy were it if good men were so much united in designs and endeavours for the glory of God, as devils conspire and combine against it! Note, 7. The outcry which the devil makes at the appearance and approach of Christ, Art thou come to torment us before the time? From thence learn, 1. That there are tortures appointed to the spiritual natures of evil angels. 2. That the devils are not so full of torments as they shall be. Although they are as full of discontent as they can be, there will be a time when their torments shall be increased, when they shall have their fill of torment. This they know, and accordingly thus they pray, Torment us not before the time; that is, increase not our torments before the appointed time of their increase. Note, 8. The devil's request, 1. Not to send them out of the country, verse 10, for being now among heathens, they thought they were among their own, and not in Christ's jurisdiction, as being not amongst his people. 2. For permission and leave to go into the herd of swine. Where observe, first the devils' malice; he will hurt the poor beasts, rather than not hurt at all. Secondly, His powerful restraint; he cannot hurt a pig without permission: Suffer us to enter. Satan's malice indeed is infinite, but his power is bounded: it is Potestas sub potestate. A power under a power. If he could not hurt the swine, much less can he afflict the body or soul of man without leave or licence. Note, 9. How satan's request is yielded to by our Saviour; he permits the devils to enter into the swine, not to satisfy their desire in doing mischief; but first to show his power over the devils, that they could do nothing without his permission: next, to show how great the power and malice of the devils would be if, not restrained: And lastly, That the miracle of casting out such a multitude of devils might appear to be the greater. Learn hence, That sometimes Almighty God, for wise ends and just causes, doth suffer the devil to enjoy his desire, in doing hurt and mischief unto the creatures; Jesus said unto them, Go. Note, 10. What a contrary effect this miracle which Christ wrought had upon these people; instead of believing his divine power, upon the sight of his miraculous healing the possessed, the loss of their swine enrages them, and makes them desire Christ to depart from them; carnal hearts prefer their swine before their Saviour, and had rather lose Christ's presence than their worldly profit. So desirous were these Gadarenes to get rid of our Saviour's company, that they pray and beseech him to depart out of their coasts. Learn hence, Sad is the condition of such from whom Christ departs; more sad the condition of such who say unto Christ, Depart; but most sad the case of them who pray and beseech Christ to depart from them. Thus did these Gadarenes desire and beseech Christ to depart from them: which accordingly he did, and we read no more of his return to them. Note lastly, How desirous the possessed man was to continue with Christ; after he was, come to himself, he prayed that he might be with him. This he might desire, partly to testify his thankfulness to Christ, partly out of fear of being re-possessed again by satan, or perhaps to have the opportunity of hearing Christ's doctrine, and seeing his miracles: for such as have once tasted that the Lord is gracious, and experienced the pleasure and profit of Christ's company, are very desirous of the continuance of it, and exceeding loath to part with it: however, our Saviour at this time did not think fit to suffer him, knowing that more glory would redound to God, by publishing the miracle to his friends. Christ expects, after eminent deliverances wrought for us, that we shall be the publishers of his praise, and declare to all, far and near, the great things which God hath done for us. Add to this, that our Saviour might not permit this man to be with him, to avoid the suspicion of vainglory; of which he might have given some umbrage, had he carried about with him those upon whom his greatest miracles were wrought. And lastly, To show that Christ in his absence, as well as when present, is able to protect those that believe and trust in him from the malice of evil spirits.

21 ¶ And when Jesus was passed over again by ship unto the other side, much people gathered unto him; and he was nigh unto the sea.

22 And behold there cometh one of the rulers of the synagogue, Jairus by name: and when he saw him, he fell at his feet.

23 And besought him greatly, saying, My little daughter lieth at the point of death: I pray thee, come and lay thy hands on her, that she may be healed; and she shall live.

24 And Jesus went with him, and much people followed him, and thronged him.

Observe here, 1. The person who came to Christ on behalf of his sick daughter, described by this name, Jairus: by his office, a ruler of the synagogue: by his gesture, He fell down at Jesus' feet and worshipped him. This gesture of his was not only a sign of tender affection in him towards his daughter, but also an evidence of his faith in our blessed Saviour; yet his confining Christ's power to his bodily presence, and to the touch of his hand, was a token of the weakness of his faith. "Come, says he, and lay thine hand upon her, and she shall live." As if Christ could not have cured her without either coming to her, or laying his hand upon her. Note, All that come to Christ are not alike strong in faith. Yet our blessed Redeemer refuses none who come to him with a sincere faith, though in much weakness of faith. Observe, 2. How readily our Saviour complies with Jairus' request, Jesus went with him. Although his faith was but weak, yet our Saviour doth not reject, or deny his suit, but readily goes with him. Learn hence, How ready we should be to go to Christ in all our distresses, afflictions, and necessities, who is ready to hear, and so forward to help us, if we seek him in sincerity, though our faith be feeble. Observe, 3. The great humility of our blessed Saviour, in suffering himself to be thronged by poor people. Much people followed him, and thronged him. O humble and lowly Saviour! How free was thy conversation from pride and haughtiness! How willing to converse with the meanest of the people for their advantage! Our Lord did not only suffer them to come near him, but even to throng him: what an example is here for the greatest persons upon earth to imitate and follow, not to despise the persons, nor disdain the presence of the meanest and poorest of the people; but to look upon some with an eye of favor, upon others with an eye of pity, upon none with an eye of contempt.

25 And a certain woman, which had an issue of blood twelve years, 26 And had suffered many things of many physicians, and had spent all that she had, and was nothing bettered, but rather grew worse.

27 When she had heard of Jesus, came in the press behind, and touched his garment:

28 For she said, If I may but touch his clothes, I shall be whole.

29 And straightway the fountain of her blood was dried up; and she felt in her body that she was healed of that plague.

30 And Jesus immediately knowing in himself that virtue had gone out of him, turned him about in the press, and said, Who touched my clothes?

21 And his disciples said unto him, Thou seest the multitude thronging thee, and sayest thou, Who touched me?

32 And he looked round about to see her that had done this thing.

33 But the woman fearing and trembling, knowing what was done in her, came and fell down before him, and told him all the truth.

34 And he said unto her, Daughter, thy faith hath made thee whole: go in peace, and be whole of thy plague.

As our Saviour was on his way to Jairus' house, a diseased woman comes behind him, touches his clothes, and is presently healed; the virtue lay not in her finger, but in her faith, or rather in Christ, which her faith instrumentally drew forth. Observe here, 1. The diseased person, a woman with a bloody flux. Let women here take notice of the miseries which the sin of the first woman has brought upon all women, amongst which this is one, that it has made their bodies subject to unnatural issues and fluxes of blood. Observe, 2. The long continuance of this disease, twelve years. It pleases God to lay long and tedious afflictions upon some of his children in this life, and particularly to keep some of them a very long time under bodily weakness, to manifest his power in supporting them, and to magnify his mercy in delivering them. Observe, 3. This poor woman was found in the use of means: she sought to physicians for help, and is not blamed for it, though she had spent all she had upon them. The use of physic is not to be neglected by us in times of sickness, especially in dangerous diseases of the body. To trust to means, is to neglect God; and to neglect the means, is to tempt God. The health of our bodies ought to be dear and precious to us, and all lawful means ought to be used both to preserve it, to recover it, and confirm it. Observe, 4. The workings and acting of this poor woman's faith: her disease was unclean by the ceremonial law, and therefore to be separated from society; accordingly she is ashamed to appear before Christ, but comes behind him to touch his clothes, being firmly persuaded that Christ had a power communicated by God unto him, miraculously to cure incurable diseases. And see how our Saviour encouraged her faith, though she did not believe him to be the eternal Son of God, but one to whom God had communicated a power of healing bodily diseases; yet says Christ, This thy faith hath made thee whole. Learn hence, That faith oftentimes meets with a better welcome from Christ, than it did or could expect. This poor woman came to Christ trembling, but went away triumphing. Observe, 5. Christ would have this miracle discovered: he therefore says, Who touched me? and I perceive that virtue is gone out of me. First, In reference to himself, to manifest his divine power, that by the touch of his clothes he could cure such incurable diseases. Secondly, in relation to the woman that she might have opportunity to give God the praise and glory for the cure. And thirdly, With respect to Jairus, that his faith might be strengthened in the belief of Christ's power to raise his daughter. Now from those words, Virtue went out of Christ, and he healed them, is evident that the virtue which did these miraculous cures resided in Christ, and was not communicated to him; and consequently proves him to be God: for the divine virtue, by which the prophets and apostles did their cures, is ascribed to God; as Acts xix. 11. God wrought special miracles by the hands of Paul. But the miracles done by Christ are ascribed to the divine virtue dwelling in him. Accordingly, here he says, I perceive that virtue is gone out of me.

35 While he yet spake, there came from the rulers of the synagogue's house certain which said, Thy daughter is dead: why troublest thou the Master any further?

36 As soon as Jesus heard the word that was spoken, he saith unto the ruler of the synagogue, Be not afraid, only believe.

37 And he suffered no man to follow him save Peter, and James, and John the brother of James.

38 And he cometh to the house of the ruler of the synagogue, and seeth the tumult, and them that wept and wailed greatly,

39 And when he was come in, he saith unto them, why make ye this ado, and weep? the damsel is not dead, but sleepeth.

40 And they laughed him to scorn. But when he had put them all out, he taketh the father and the mother of the damsel, and them that were with him, and entereth in where the damsel was lying.

41 And he took the damsel by the hand, and saith unto her, Talitha Cumi; which is, being interpreted, Damsel (I say unto thee) arise.

42 And straightway the damsel arose and walked: for she was of the age of twelve years. And they were astonished with a great astonishment.

43 And he charged them straitly that no man should know it; and commanded that something should be given her to eat.

Observe here, 1. The doleful news brought to Jairus' ears, Thy daughter is dead. The Lord sometimes suffers the faith of his saints to be hard put to it, greatly assaulted with difficulties and trials. Observe, 2. Our Saviour's seasonable word of comfort; Be not afraid, only believe. Christ is ready to comfort believers in the hour of their strongest temptations and greatest trials. Observe, 3. Christ's application of himself to the raising unto life Jairus' dead daughter. In order to which, 1. He goes into the house with only three of his disciples, which were sufficient to witness the truth of the miracle. Our Saviour, to avoid all show of vain-glory, and to evidence that he sought not ambitiously his own honor and praise, would not work this great miracle publicly before all the people. 2. He rebukes them for the show they make of immoderate grief and sorrow for the dead damsel; they wept and wailed greatly with minstrels and musical instruments, according to the custom of the heathens, who by a mournful sort of music did stir up the passion of grief at their funerals. To mourn immoderately for the dead is a heathenish practice and custom. It is hurtful to the living, and dishonorable to the dead; nor is it an argument of more love, but an evidence of less grace. 3. He adds a reason for this rebuke and reproof given them; The damsel is not dead but sleepeth. Vobis mortua, mihi dormit: She is dead to you, but asleep to me: not so dead to be beyond my power to raise her to life." Souls departed are under the conduct of angels to their several regions of bliss and misery. It is very probable that the soul of this damsel was under the guard of angels near her dead body, waiting the pleasure of God in order to its disposal, either to restore it again to the body, or to translate it to its eternal mansion. Observe farther, The nature of death in general, and that of the saints in particular, described; It is a sleep. Sleep is a state of rest; sleep is a sudden surprisal; in sleep there is an insensible passage of our time; the person sleeping shall certainly awake, either in this world, or in the next. It will be our wisdom to prepare for the bed or the grave, and so to live, that when we lie down in it, there may be nothing to disturb our rest. Observe next, The words which our Saviour used at the raising of the damsel, Talitha cumi, Syriac words, to show the truth of the miracle; not like a conjuror, muttering a charm in unknown words to himself, and also to show the greatness of the miracle, that he was able to raise by a word speaking. Observe lastly, The charge given by our Saviour, not to divulge this miracle; He charged them straitly that none should know it. That is, not to divulge it imprudently to such of the scribes and pharisees as would not be convinced by it, but only cavil at it, and be the more enraged against him, and seek his death before his time was come. Also not to divulge it unseasonably, and all at once, but gradually and by degrees; for it was the will of God, that the divine glory of Christ should not be manifested to the world all at once, and on the sudden, but by little and little, during his state of humiliation; for his resurrection is the time appointed for the full manifestation of his godhead, Rom. i. 4. Declared to be the Son of God with power, by the resurrection from the dead.

CHAPTER VI.

AND he went out from thence, and came into his own country; and his disciples follow him.

2 And when the sabbath-day was come, he began to teach in the synagogue: and many hearing him were astonished, saying, From whence hath this man these things? and what wisdom is this which is given unto him, that even such mighty works are wrought by his hands?

3 Is not this the carpenter, the son of Mary, the brother of James, and Joses, and of Juda, and Simon? and are not his sisters here with us? and they were offended at him.

4 But Jesus said unto them, A prophet is not without honor, but in his own country, and among his own kin, and in his own house.

5 And he could do there no mighty work, save that he laid his hands upon a few sick folk, and healed them.

6 And he marvelled because of their unbelief. And he went round about the villages teaching.

Our blessed Saviour having in the former chapter wrought two famous miracles, in curing a woman of a bloody issue, and raising Jairus' daughter from death, we find him here in the beginning of this chapter passing into his own country, that is, the city of Nazareth in Galilee, called his own city and country, because he was there conceived, there brought up; there Joseph and Mary, and his kindred, dwelt, and Christ with them, during his private life, which was till he was thirty years of age. Now our Saviour being come into his own country; Observe, 1. What his employment was, he preached in their synagogues and held communion with the Jewish church, although she had many corruptions in her. Teaching us, by his example, not to desert and forsake the communion of such a church, in which there is found neither heretical doctrine nor idolatrous worship, although many things be found in her culpable and blameworthy. The Jewish church was certainly such, and yet our Saviour maintained not occasional only, but constant communion with her. Observe, 2. The influence and effect which our Saviour's preaching had upon his own countrymen, the people of Nazareth; it did work admiration in them, but not faith: they were astonished, but did not believe. Men may be mightily moved and affected by the word, and yet may never be converted by it; the men of Nazareth wondered, and they did not believe in him, but were offended at him. Observe, 3. The ground and cause of this their offence, and that was the meanness of his extraction, and the poverty of his condition; Is not this the carpenter? From whence the ancient fathers and particularly Justin Martyr, concluded that our Saviour did work at his father Joseph's trade, during his father's life, and thence was called the carpenter's son; and when Joseph was dead (which was before Christ was thirty years old, when he entered upon his public office) he was then called the carpenter. The ancients say, he spent his time in making ploughs and yokes, and that thence it was that he drew so many similitudes in his preaching from the yoke and the plough. This we are sure of, that our Lord lived not thirty years before his manifestation idly and unprofitably. It is most probable that he followed his father's calling, and wrought under him, it being said, he was subject to him, Luke ii. 15. as a child to a parent, and as a servant to his master. As to this, that it seems not only true but requisite, that Christ should be of some trade, because by the Jewish canons, all fathers were bound to teach their children some trade; yea, says the learned Dr. Whitby, their most celebrated rabbins thought it a great reproach not to be of some trade; doubtless our Lord, during his private life, did give no example of idleness. Indeed, after he entered upon his prophetic office, he no longer followed Joseph's calling, but applied himself wholly to the work of the ministry; he made no more ploughs, but one to break up hard hearts; no more yokes, but one for the devil's neck. However, in regard of our Saviour's low extraction and mean education, his countrymen were offended at him. Learn hence, That the poverty and meanness of Christ's condition, was that which multitudes stumbled at, and which kept many, yea most, from believing on him. None but a spiritual eye can discern beauty in an humbled and abased Saviour. Learn, 2. That it is the property and practice of profane men to take occasion, from the outward quality and condition of God's ministers, both to despise their persons, and to reject their doctrine. Observe, 4. The reason assigned by our Saviour why the men of Nazareth despised him and set him at nought, because he was their countryman and acquaintance; their familiarity bred contempt. Teaching us, That very often the faithful ministers of God are most contemned and dishonoured, where they are most familiarly known. Sometimes the remembrance of their mean original and extraction, sometimes the poverty of their parents' condition, sometimes the indecencies of their childhood, sometimes the follies of their youth, are ripped up; all which are occasions of contempt, and gave ground for this proverbial saying, That a prophet is not without honour, save in his own country. Which, like other proverbial speeches, holds true in general, and that for the most part it is so, but it is not universally true in all persons and cases. However, this good use may be made of our Saviour's observation, to teach his ministers to be wise, in conversing with their people, not to make themselves cheap and common in every company, not too familiar with all sorts of persons, nor be too light and vain in any company; for this will certainly breed contempt both of their persons and ministry. Our duty is, by strictness and gravity of deportment, to maintain our esteem in the consciences of our people, and to temper gravity with condescending affability. That minister which prostitutes his authority, frustrates the ends of his ministry, and is the occasion of his own contempt. Observe, 5. How this people's contempt of Christ's person, and unbelief of his doctrine, did hinder Christ from working miracles among them. He could do no mighty works there. Not because he was unable, but because they were unwilling. Not as if their infidelity abated his divine power, but they were unprepared to receive any benefit by him; his miracles would have been cast away upon such invincible persons. Who will sow upon barren sands, or water dead plants? it was an act of justice in Christ to deprive the pharisees of those advantages which they had so long resisted. Christ had a natural ability to do mighty works there, but no moral ability. He could not do it honourably, their unbelief was a moral hindrance; so then this ability proceeded from no deficiency in Christ's power, but from a defect in their faith. He could not, because he would not; and he would not, because it was not fit for him so to do. Although Christ be omnipotent, and has all power in his hands, yet unbelief binds his hands, and hinders him in the execution of that power. Unbelief is such a sin as keeps men from being partakers of the benefits of Christ. Observe, 6. How the incredulity and unbelief of this people was so great, that Christ wondered at it: He marvelled because of their unbelief. Not because he was ignorant of the cause of it, but because he had used such marvellous means for the curing them of their unbelief. Learn hence, that unbelief is a great sin at all times; but when marvels are wrought for the cure and healing of it, and it remains uncured, it is a marvellous sin, and justly causes admiration and wonder in Christ himself; He marvelled because of their unbelief.

7 ¶ And he called unto him the twelve, and began to send them forth by two and two; and gave them power over unclean spirits;

8 And commanded them that they should take nothing for their journey, save a staff only; no scrip, no bread, no money in their purse:

9 But be shod with sandals; and not put on two coats.

10 And he said unto them, In what place soever ye enter into an house, there abide till ye depart from that place.

11 And whosoever shall not receive you, nor hear you, when you depart thence, shake off the dust under your feet for a testimony against them. Verily I say unto you, It shall be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of Judgment, than for that city.

12 And they went out, and preached that men should repent.

13 And they cast out many devils, and anointed with oil, many that were sick, and healed them.

We heard before, chap. iii. of our Saviour's solemn calling his apostles to their work and office: now he sends them forth to execute their office. Where Observe, 1. The person that sends them forth, Christ. Learn thence, That none ought to take upon them the office of preaching, or any other ministerial function in the church, till thereunto lawfully called by Christ himself. The apostles were immediately called and sent forth by Christ himself, and received the doctrine which they taught immediately from Christ's own mouth. His ministers are now called mediately, they receive their authority from Christ, by the hands of the governors of his church. Observe, 2. The manner of their sending, by two and two in a company, partly to make their message of more authority; partly to testify their mutual consent in the doctrine which they taught; and partly to comfort and encourage, to help and strengthen, to assist and support, each other; in imitation of this example the Jesuits send forth their emissaries by pairs. Learn hence, That the ministers of the word do stand in great need of the mutual help and comfort, of the united assistance and encouragement, of each other, in the weighty duties of their calling and function; like labourers in the harvest-field, they should help one another, the strong endeavouring to strengthen the hands of the weak. But, Lord, what tears are sufficient to bewail the want of love and unity, yea, the prevalence of that fear and malignity which is found too often amongst the ministers of the gospel! So that instead of going forth by two and two, happy is he that is alone in a place. Well might Melancthon bless God when he lay a dying, that he was going to a place where he should be freed from the implacable hatred of divines. This is, and ought to be, for a lamentation. Observe, 3. The power given by Christ to work miracles, for confirming the doctrine of the gospel which the apostle preached; he gave them power over unclean spirits, and they cast out devils, and anointed with oil them that were sick and healed them. This power to work miracles was necessary for the apostles; partly to procure reverence to their persons, being poor unlearned men, but principally to gain credit and authority to their doctrine, for the doctrine of faith in the Messiah, is now come, and exhibited in the flesh, being a strange and new doctrine to the Jews; the truth and certainty of it was to be extraordinarily ratified by Christ and his apostles' miracles, some of which were casting out of devils; and by anointing with oil, to heal and recover sick persons. This gift of healing remained some time in the church, as appeared by St. James v. 14. Is any sick? anoint him with oil in the name of the Lord. Where Observe, that the apostles did not use oil as the instrument and means of healing (for then the cure had not been miraculous) but only as a symbol of the cure, or as an outward sign and testimony of miraculous healing: which outward sign was for the strengthening of the faith of such as were healed; assuring them, that as certainly as their bodies were anointed, so certainly should their health and strength be restored. The papists upon this, ground their sacrament of extreme unction, but very vainly; for the apostles anointed those that were sick, as a sign of their recovery; but the papists anoint those that have the pangs of death upon them, that their sins may be blotted out, and the snares of the devil avoided. Observe, 4. The charge given by Christ to his apostles at the time of their sending out. This is threefold: first, touching their preparation for their journey, he bids them not take much care, nor spend much time in furnishing themselves with victuals, money, apparel, weapons of defence, and the like; only taking a walking-staff in their hands, because they were to finish their journey speedily, and to return again to Christ. This command of our Saviour to his apostles, not to incumber themselves when going forth to preach the gospel, teaches his ministers their duty to free themselves as much as possibly they can from worldly incumbrances, which may hinder them in the performance of their office and function. 2. Tim. ii. 4. No man that warreth entangleth himself with the affairs of this life. Secondly, touching their lodging in their journey. Our Saviour advises them not to change it, during their stay in one place; but into whatsoever house they first entered, they should continue there till they departed out of that place; that so they might avoid all shew of lightness and inconstancy, and testify all gravity and stayed-ness in their behaviour, this being a special mean to win authority to their persons and ministry. Thirdly, Christ gives a charge to his apostles, touching their carriage towards such as should refuse to give entertainment to them and their doctrine. They were to denounce the judgments of God against such contemners, by shaking off the dust of their feet for a testimony against them. Thence learn, That the contempt of God's ministers, and especially of their ministry and doctrine, is an odious and execrable sin, detested by God, and which ought to be abhorred by man. Shake off the dust of your feet. This action was emblematical, signifying that Almighty God would in like manner shake them off as the vilest dust. Learn, 2. That wherever the word is preached, it is for a testimony; either a testimony for or against a people. For if the dust of a minister's feet bear witness against the despisers of the gospel, their sermons much more. Observe lastly, The dreadful judgment denounced by our Saviour against the contemners of the apostles' doctrine; Verily it shall be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment, than for that city. Where note, 1. That there shall be a day of judgment. 2. That in the day of judgment some sinners shall fare worse than others. 3. That of all sinners the condition of such will be saddest at the day of judgment, who having lived under the gospel, have died after all in impenitency and infidelity; Verily I say unto you, it shall be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment, than for that city.

14 And king Herod heard of him; for his name was spread abroad: and he said, That John the Baptist was risen from the dead, and therefore mighty works do shew forth themselves in him.

15 Others said, That it is Elias. And others said, That it is a prophet, or as one of the prophets.

16 But when Herod heard thereof, he said, It is John whom I beheaded: he is risen from the dead.

17 For Herod himself had sent forth and laid hold upon John, and bound him in prison, for Herodias' sake his brother Philip's wife; for he had married her.

18 For John had said unto Herod, It is not lawful for thee to have thy brother's wife.

19 Therefore Herodias had a quarrel against him, and would have killed him; but she could not,

20 For Herod feared John, knowing that he was a just man and an holy, and observed him: and when he heard him, he did many things, and heard him gladly.

21 And when a convenient day was come, that Herod on his birth-day made a supper unto his lords, high captains, and chief estates of Galilee:

22 And when the daughter of the said Herodias came in, and danced, and pleased Herod, and them that sat with him, the king said unto the damsel, Ask of me whatsoever thou wilt, and I will give it thee.

23 And he sware unto her, Whatsoever thou shalt ask of me, I will give it thee, unto the half of my kingdom.

24 And she went forth and said unto her mother, What shall I ask? and she said, The head of John the Baptist.

25 And she came in straightway with haste unto the King, and asked, saying, I wilt that thou give me by and by in a charger, the head of John the Baptist.

26 And the king was exceedingly sorry; yet for his oath's sake, and for their sakes which sat with him, he would not reject her.

27 And immediately the king sent an executioner, and commanded his head to be brought. And he went and beheaded him in prison.

28 And brought his head in a charger, and gave it to the damsel; and the damsel gave it to her mother.

29 And when his disciples heard of it, they came and took up his corpse, and laid it in a tomb.

The history of John the Baptist's death is here recorded by this Evangelist, as St. Matthew had done before, chap. xiv. 1, 2. Here we have these particulars farther observable; 1. The character and description of a zealous and faithful minister. He is one that deals plainly, and dares tell the greatest persons of their faults. Herod, though a king, is reproved by the Baptist for his incest, in taking his brother's wife. The crown and sceptre of Herod could not daunt the faithful messenger of God. There ought to meet in the ministers of God both courage and impartiality. Courage, in fearing no faces; impartiality, in sparing no sins. Observe, 2. Who it was that commanded the Baptist to be beheaded; it was Herod the king, whom he had reproved. How sad is it when kings, who should be the nursing fathers of the church, do prove the bloody butchers of the prophets of God. The severest persecutions which the prophets of God have fallen under are usually occasioned by their telling great men of their crimes. Men in power are impatient of reproof, and imagine that their authority gives them a licence to transgress. Observe, 3. The time of the Baptist's death; it was upon Herod's birth-day. It was an ancient custom among the eastern kings, to celebrate their birth-days; Pharaoh did so, Gen. xl. and Herod here, but both with blood; yet these personal sins do not make the practice unlawful, when we solemnize our birth-days with thankfulness to our Creator and Preserver, and recommend ourselves by prayer to his gracious providence and protection for the remainder of our days: this is an act of piety and religion. But Herod's birth-day was kept with reveling, with feasting, with music and dancing; all which were made sinful to him by the circumstances which did attend it. Great men's feasts and frolics are too often the season and occasion of much sin. Observe, 4. The instigators and promoters of the Holy Baptist's death; Herodias and her daughter. Lord! how deadly is the malice of souls debauched with lust! Imprisonment would not satisfy them, they must have his blood. Resolute sinners, who are mad upon their lust, run furiously upon their opposers, and resolve to bear down all opposition they meet with in the gratification of their unlawful desires. Observe, 5. With what great reluctance Herod consented to this villainy: The king was exceedingly sorry. Wicked men oft-times sin with a troubled and disturbed conscience; there is a mighty struggle between their reason and their lusts; but at last they master their consciences and choose rather to gratify their lusts, than to obey their reason. So did Herod here; for notwithstanding his sorrow, he commands the act; he sent and beheaded John in the prison. Observe, 6. The motives and inducements which prevailed with Herod to behead this holy man. 1. The conscience of his oath: Nevertheless for his oath's sake. See his hypocrisy; he made scruple of a rash oath, who made no scruple of real murder. See here not only the folly but great impiety of rash vows; especially in ignorant persons, who think themselves obliged by them; whereas it is their duty, first to repent of them, and then to break them as fast as they can. St. Chrysostom says, Herod might have spared the Baptist's head, and yet have kept his oath to Herodias; for he swore to give her only half of his kingdom, and his head was worth more than his whole kingdom. 2. Respect to his reputation, not only for his oath's sake, but for them that sat with him. They heard him promise, and will be witnesses of his inconstancy if he do not perform. Insisting upon punctilios of honour, has hazarded the loss of millions of souls. 3. His great unwillingness to discontent Herodias and her daughter. O! vain and foolish hypocrite, who dreaded the displeasing a wanton mistress, more than the offending of God and conscience! Observe, 7. These bloody women do not only require the Baptist to be beheaded, but that his head be brought in a charger to them. What a dish was here to be served up at a prince's table on his birth-day! a dead man's head swimming in blood! How prodigiously insatiable is cruelty and revenge! Herodias did not think herself sate till John was dead; she would not think him dead till his head was off, and would not believe his head was off till she had it in her hand. Revenge never thinks it has made sure enough. O! how cruel is a wicked heart, that could take pleasure in a spectacle of so much horror! Methinks I see how that holy head was tossed upon Herod's table by impure and filthy hands. That true and faithful tongue, those sacred lips, those chaste eyes, those mortified cheeks are now insultingly handled by a lewd and incestuous harlot, and made a scorn to Herod's drunken guests. Observe, 8. That neither the holiest of the prophets, nor the best of men, are more secure from violence than from natural death. The holy Baptist, who was sanctified in the womb, conceived and born with so much miracle, lived with so much reverence and observation, is now at midnight obscurely murdered in a close prison. Observe, 9. That it is as true a martyrdom to suffer for duty as for faith. He dies as truly a martyr that dies for doing his duty, as he that dies for professing his faith, and bearing witness to the truth. Observe, 10. How far men may go in religion, and yet be far enough from saving grace; they may reverence God's ministers, believe them to be holy and just men, hear them with delight and pleasure, protect and defend them from their opposers; they may reform and do many things; and yet be far from the kingdom of God. Herod did all this; he knew John to be a holy and just man, revered and respected him, guarded and kept him safe from Herodias' malice. For though he was imprisoned before, yet Herod suffered none to hurt him, but heard him often with pleasure and delight. Wicked and unregenerate men may be so affected with the word of God, as to become protectors and defenders of those that dispense it, and yet receive no saving advantage by it. The plain and powerful preaching of the word may win upon, and prevail with, an unregenerate man, to perform many good duties, and to forsake many known sins; and yet may he, after all, remain under the power of hypocrisy. Nay, from Herod's examples we may learn, That a wicked man may take some pleasure and delight in hearing the word preached; either the generality of the truths asserted, or the novelty of the notions delivered, or the wit and fancy, the graceful elocution and delivery of the preacher, may create a present delight; but it is neither a spiritual delight, nor an abiding delight. "And when his disciples heard of it, they came and took up his corpse, and laid it in a tomb." When his disciples heard of it, that is, the disciples of John hearing that their holy master was thus barbarously murdered, they took up his dead body, and decently interred it. Learn thence, That the faithful servants of God are not ashamed of the sufferings of the saints, but will testify their respects unto them, both living, dying, and dead. The disciples of John gave their master an honourable and respectful burial, fearing neither Herod's power, nor Herodias' malice.

30 ¶ And the apostles gathered themselves together unto Jesus, and told him all things, both what they had done, and what they had taught.

31 And he said unto them, come ye yourselves apart into a desert place, and rest awhile; for there were many coming and going, and they had no leisure so much as to eat.

32 And they departed into a desert place by ship privately.

33 And the people saw them departing, and many knew him, and ran afoot thither out of all cities, and out-went them, and came together unto him.

34 And Jesus, when he came out, saw much people, and was moved with compassion towards them, because they were as sheep not having a shepherd: and he began to teach them many things.

Observe here, 1. How the report of John's death being brought to Christ, he presently withdraws, and his disciples with him, from that place unto the desert. Christ will not long continue his presence in those places where any of his servants are slain, and others of them are in danger. Observe, 2. How our Saviour, upon the notice of John's death, flies into the desert for his own preservation: His hour was not yet come, and therefore he keeps out of Herod's way. It is no cowardice to fly from the rage of persecutors. Christ himself both practised it, and directed his disciples to it, saying, When they persecute you in one city fly to another. We must not expose our lives to hazard, but when the laying down our lives would do God and religion more service than we can do by living. Observe, 3. With what condolency and sympathizing pity our blessed Saviour exercised acts of mercy and compassion, when the objects of compassion were before him. "Jesus seeing the multitude, was moved with compassion towards them." Christ, when here on earth, did bear a tender and compassionate heart towards poor creatures in distress and misery; and to our comfort he retains the same compassionate nature and disposition now in heaven which he had here on earth. Observe, 4. The ground or cause of this compassion in our Saviour, because they were as sheep having no shepherd. Learn thence, That the case of such a people is very sad, and their condition to be much lamented and pitied, who are destitute of able, faithful, and conscientious pastors and teachers, to feed them with the spiritual food of the word and sacraments. Where provision fails, the people perish. But was the Jewish church now without pastors, as sheep without a shepherd? Had they not the pharisees, the scribes and doctors, to teach and instruct them? Yes, no doubt! but they were no pastors in Christ's account, because unfaithful pastors. Thence learn, That idle, negligent, and unfaithful pastors, are no pastors in the sight of God, and in the account of Christ." Jesus had compassion on the multitude, because they were as sheep having no shepherd."

35 And when the day was now far spent, his disciples came unto him, and said, This is a desert place, and now the time is far passed:

36 Send them away, that they may go into the country round about, and into the villages, and buy themselves bread : for they have nothing to eat.

37 He answered and said unto them, Give ye them to eat. And they say unto him, Shall we go and buy two hundred penny-worth of bread, and give them to eat ?

38 He saith unto them, how many loaves have ye ? go and see. And when they knew, they say Five, and two fishes.

39 And he commanded them to make all sit down by companies upon the green grass.

40 And they sat down in ranks, by hundreds and by fifties.

41 And when he had taken the five loaves and the two fishes, he looked up to heaven, and blessed, and brake the loaves, and gave them to his disciples to set before them ; and the two fishes divided he among them all.

42 And they did all eat, and were filled.

43 And they took up twelve baskets full of the fragments, and of the fishes.

44 And they that did eat of the loaves were about five thousand men.

This miracle of our Saviour's feeding five thousand men, besides women and children, with five loaves and two fishes, is recorded by all the four Evangelists, and in the history of it these following particulars are observable. Note, 1. The disciples' pity towards the multitude, who had long fasted, and wanted now the ordinary comforts and supports of life. It well becomes the ministers of Christ to respect the bodily necessities, as well as regard the spiritual wants of persons. Observe, 2. The motion which the disciples make to Christ on behalf of the multitude, Send them away, that they may buy victuals. Here was a strong charity, but a weak faith. A strong charity in desiring the people's relief ; but a weak faith, in supposing that they could not be otherwise relieved but by sending them away ; forgetting that Christ, who had healed the multitude miraculously, could also feed them miraculously if he pleased ; all things being equally easy to an almighty power. Observe, 3. Our Saviour's strange reply to his disciples' request ; they need not depart ; give ye them to eat. Need not depart ! Why, the people must either feed or famish. Victuals they must have, and a dry desert will afford none. Yes, says Christ to his disciples, Give ye them to eat. Alas, poor disciples ! they had nothing for themselves to eat, how then should they give the multitude to eat ? When Christ requires of us what we are unable to perform, it is to shew us our impotency and weakness, and to provoke us to look up to him, and depend by faith on his almighty power. Observe, 4. What a poor and slender provision the Lord of the earth has for his household and family ; Five barley loaves, and two small fishes. Teaching us, That these bodies of ours must be fed, but not pampered ; our belly must not be our master, much less our God. The end of food is to sustain nature, we must not stife it with a gluttonous variety. And as the quality of the victuals was plain, so the quantity of it was small ; five loaves and two fishes. Well might the disciples say, What are these among so many ? The eye of sense and reason sees an utter impossibility of those effects which faith can easily apprehend, and divine power more easily produce. Observe, 5. How Christ, the great master of the feast, doth marshal his guests. He commands them all to sit down in ranks, by hundreds and by fifties. None of them reply, " Sit down, but to what ! Here are the mouths, but where is the meat ! We may soon be set, but when or whence shall we be served ? " Not a word like this ; but they obey and expect. Lord, how easy is it to trust to thy providence, and rely upon thy power, when there is corn in the barn, bread in the cupboard, or money in the purse ! but when our stores are all empty, and we have nothing in hand, then to depend upon an invisible bounty, is a true and noble act of faith. Observe, 6. The actions performed by our blessed Saviour ; He blessed and brake, and gave the loaves to his disciples, and they to the multitude. 1. He blessed them, teaching us by his example, never to use or receive the good creatures of God for our nourishment, without prayer and praise ; never to sit down to our food as a beast to his forage. 2. He brake the loaves. He could have multiplied them whole, why then would he rather do it in the breaking ? Perhaps to teach us, that we may rather expect his blessing in the distribution of his bounty, than in the reservation of it. Scattering is the way to increasing ; liberality is the way to riches. 3. Christ gave the bread thus broken to his disciples, that they might distribute it to the multitude. But why did our Lord distribute the loaves by his disciples' hands ? Doubtless to gain respect to his disciples from the people, and the same course doth our Lord take in spiritual distributions. He that could feed the world by his own immediate hand, chuses rather by the hand of his ministers to divide the bread of life among his people. Observe, 7. The certainty and the greatness of the miracle : They did all eat and were filled. They did all eat, not a crumb or a bit, but to satiety and fulness. All that were hungry did eat, and all that did eat were satisfied, and yet twelve baskets of fragments remain. More was left than at first set on. It is hard to say which was the greatest miracle, the miraculous eating, or the miraculous leaving. If we consider what they ate, we may wonder that they left any thing : if what they left, they ate any thing. Observe, 8. These fragments, tho' of barley loaves and fish-bones, must not be lost, but at our Saviour's command, gathered up. The liberal house-keeper of the world would not allow the loss of his orts. O how tremendous will their account be ; who having large and plentiful estates, spend them upon their lusts, being worse than lost in God's account.

46 ¶ And straightway he constrained his disciples to get into the ship, and to go to the other side before, unto Bethsaida, while he sent away the people.

46 And when he had sent them away, he departed into a mountain to pray.

47 And when even was come, the ship was in the midst of the sea, and he alone on the land.

48 And he saw them toiling in rowing; for the wind was contrary unto them: and about the fourth watch of the night he cometh unto them, walking upon the sea, and would have passed by them.

49 But when they saw him walking upon the sea, they supposed it had been a spirit, and cried out.

50 For they all saw him, and were troubled. And immediately he talked with them, and saith unto them, Be of good cheer: it is I; be not afraid.

51 And he went up unto them into the ship; and the wind ceased. And they were sore amazed in themselves beyond measure, and wondered.

52 For they considered not the miracle of the loaves: for their hearts was hardened.

This paragraph acquaints us with another miracle which our Saviour wrought in walking upon the sea to his disciples: and herein we have observable, 1. His sending his disciples to sea, he constrained them to go into a ship; not compelling them against their wills, but commanding them to take ship, and go before him. No doubt his disciples were loath to do this, unwilling to leave him, and to go without him; for they that have once tasted the sweetness of Christ's company and acquaintance, are hardly and difficultly drawn away from him. Observe, 2. Christ having dismissed his disciples and the company, retires into a mountain to pray; to teach us, That when we address ourselves to God in duty, we take all helps, furtherances, and advantages, for the doing of our duty. We must dismiss the multitude, before we address to God in prayer; we must send away the multitude of worldly cares, worldly thoughts, worldly concerns, and business, when we would wait upon God in duty. Observe, 3. The great danger the disciples were in, and the difficulties they were to encounter with. They were in the midst of the sea, tossed with the waves, and the winds were contrary: and, which was saddest of all, Christ was absent. The wisdom of God sometimes suffers his children and people not only to be distressed, but greatly distressed with a variety of distresses. Observe, 4. The seasonable succour and relief which Christ afforded his disciples? In the fourth watch he came unto them, walking upon the waters.

It was not a stormy and tempestuous sea that could separate betwixt him and them, he that waded through a sea of blood, and a sea of wrath, to save his people, will walk upon a sea of waters to succour and relieve them. And the time was the fourth watch; about four in the morning, when they had been many hours conflicting with the waves and in great danger of their lives. To teach us, That Christ sometimes lengthens out the trials of his children before he delivers them; but when they come to an extremity, that is the season of his succour. Observe, 5. How the disciples took their deliverer for their destroyer; When they saw Christ; they cried out. Their fears were highest when their deliverer and deliverance were nearest; God may be coming with salvation and deliverance to his people, when they for the present cannot discern it. Observe, 6. When the disciples were in the saddest condition, one word from Christ revives them; it is a sufficient support in all afflictions to hear Christ's voice speaking to us, and to enjoy his favourable presence with us. Say but, O Saviour, It is I, and then let evils do their worst: that one word, It is I, is sufficient to allay all storms, and to calm a thousand tempests. Observe, lastly, What influence and effect this miracle had upon the disciples, They were sore amazed, and beyond measure astonished; they wonder at the ceasing of the winds, and calming of the seas; but they had forgotten the miracle of the loaves; which was a great stupidity and dulness in them, and argued hardness of heart, and want of consideration in them. Learn thence, That there is much stupidity of mind, and hardness of heart, remaining unmortified in the best of saints, whilst here in an imperfect state; the work of grace and sanctification is but imperfect in the best.

53 And when they had passed over, they came into the land of Gennesaret, and drew to the shore.

54 And when they were come out of the ship, straightway they knew him.

55 And ran through that whole region round about, and began to carry about in beds those that were sick, where they heard he was.

56 And whithersoever he entered, into villages, or cities, or country, they laid the sick in the streets, and besought him that they might touch, if it were but the border of his garment: and as many as touched him were made whole.

Here observe, 1. The unwearied diligence and industry of our Saviour in going about to do good: he no sooner landeth, but he goeth to Gennesaret, and healeth their sick. It was the great business and constant employment of our Saviour's life to travel from place to place, that he might be useful and beneficial to mankind; he went to those that could not, and to those that would not, come to him. Observe, 2. The people of Gennesaret's charity to their sick neighbours; they sent abroad to let all the country know, that Christ the great physician was come amongst them. There is a duty of love and mercy which we owe unto those that are in affliction and misery; namely, To afford them the best help, relief, and succour, we are able, both in their inward and outward afflictions. Observe, 3. The suddenness and certainty of cure; they touched him, and were made whole. The healing virtue lay not in their fingers, but in their faith; or rather in Christ, whom their faith apprehended.

CHAP. VII.

THEN came together unto him the pharisees, and certain of the scribes, which came from Jerusalem.

2 And when they saw some of his disciples eat bread with defiled (that is to say, with unwashen) hands, they found fault.

3 For the pharisees, and all the Jews, except they wash their hands oft, eat not, holding the tradition of the elders.

4 And when they come from the market, except they wash, they eat not. And many other things there be which they have received to hold, as the washing of cups and pots, brazen vessels, and of tables.

5 Then the pharisees and scribes asked him, Why walk not thy disciples according to the tradition of the elders, but eat bread with unwashen hands?

6 He answered and said unto them, Well hath Esaias prophesied of you hypocrites, as it is written, This people honoureth me with their lips, but their heart is far from me.

7 Howbeit, in vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men.

8 For laying aside the commandment of God, ye hold the tradition of men, as the washing of pots and cups: and many other such like things ye do.

9 And he said unto them, full well ye reject the commandment of God, that ye may keep your own tradition.

10 For Moses said, Honour thy father and thy mother: and, Whoso curseth father or mother, let him die the death:

11 But ye say, If a man shall say to his father or mother, It is Corban, that is to say, a gift, by whatsoever thou mightest be profited by me: he shall be free.

12 And ye suffer him no more to do ought for his father, or his mother.

13 Making the word of God of none effect through your tradition, which ye have delivered. And many such like things do ye.

The former part of this chapter acquaints us with the conference and disputation, which our Saviour had with the pharisees, about their superstitious observations of the Jewish traditions. These traditions were such rites and customs, as were delivered to them by the elders and rulers of the Jewish church in former times; which traditions they valued and regarded more than the express commandments of God. Learn thence, That superstitious men are always more fond of, and zealous for, the traditions of men in divine worship, than for the express and positive commands of God. Secondly, That it is the manner of such persons to tie others to their own practice and example in matters of religious worship, and to censure and condemn all those who do not conform to them in the smallest matters. The pharisees here censure the disciples for eating with unwashen hands, because it was their custom to wash when they did eat; yet did not Christ or his disciples refuse to wash before meat, as it was a civil and decent custom, but because the pharisees made it a religious rite. Teaching us, That what is in itself indifferent, and may without offence be done as a civil custom, ought to be discountenanced and opposed when required of us as an act of religion. The Jews, fearing lest they should touch any person or thing that was unclean, and so be defiled unawares, did use frequent washings, as of cups, pots, vessels, tables, beds, or couches, which they lay upon when they ate. Thus pharisaical hypocrisy puts God off with outward cleansing, instead of inward purity: regarding more the outward cleanliness of the hand, than the inward purity of the heart. This was the accusation of the pharisees, to which our Saviour replies, by way of recrimination, that if his disciples did not observe the tradition of the elders, they (the pharisees) "did reject and make void the commandment of God, and did worship him in vain, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." Learn hence, That all service and worship which is offered to God, according to man's will and ordinances, and not according to the rule of God's own word, is vain and unprofitable: Divine institution is the only pure rule of religious worship, as the substance of it; here what God doth not command, he forbids. Observe next, The instance which our Saviour produces of the pharisees violating an express command of God, and preferring their own traditions before it: he instances in the fifth commandment, which requires children to relieve their parents in their necessities. Now though the pharisees did not deny this in plain terms, yet they made an exception from it; which if children pleased, might render it vain, void, and useless. For the pharisees taught, That in case the child of a poor parent, that wanted relief, would give a gift to the temple, which gift they called corban, that is, a gift consecrated to God and religious uses, that then the children of such poor parents were discharged from making any further provision for their aged and impotent parents: but might reply after this manner, "That which thou askest for thy supply is given to God, and therefore I cannot relieve thee." So that covetous and graceless children looked upon it as the most frugal way, once for all, to fine to the temple, rather than pay the constant rent of daily relief to their poor parents. Learn hence, That the practice of moral duties is required before, and is more acceptable to Almighty God, than the most solemn acts and exercises of instituted worship whatsoever. "I will have mercy, says God, rather than sacrifice; and to do justice and judgment is more acceptable to the Lord than burnt-offerings." Secondly, That no duty, gift, or offering to God, is accepted, where the duty of charity is neglected: it is much more acceptable to God to refresh the bowels of his saints, who are the living temples of the Holy Ghost, than to adorn material temples with gold and silver. Corban is a Syriac word, signifying a gift given unto God. The pharisees applied these gifts to the use and service of the temple; possibly to repair, beautify and adorn it; which had not been amiss, if they had not taught that such gifts to the temple did discharge children from the duty of charity to their natural parents: These things they ought to have done, in the first place, and not to leave the other undone.

14 ¶ And when he had called all the people unto him, he said unto them, Hearken unto me every one of you, and understand.

15 There is nothing from without a man that entering into him can defile him: but the things which come out of him, those are they that defile the man.

16 If any man have ears to hear, let him hear.

17 And when he was entered into the house from the people, his disciples asked him concerning the parable.

18 And he saith unto them, Are ye so without understanding also? Do ye not perceive, that whatsoever thing from without entereth into the man, it cannot defile him.

19 Because it entereth not into his heart, but into the belly, and goeth out into the draught, purging all meats?

20 And he said, That which cometh out of the man, that defileth the man.

21 For from within, out of the heart of men, proceed evil thoughts, adulteries, fornications, murders,

22 Thefts, covetousness, wickedness, deceit, lasciviousness, an evil eye, blasphemy, pride, foolishness:

23 All these evil things come from within, and defile the man.

Our blessed Saviour, leaving the pharisees with some dislike, applies himself to the multitude, and instructs them in a very necessary and useful doctrine, touching the true original cause of all spiritual pollution and uncleanness; namely, The filthiness and impurity of man's heart and nature. And that it is not the meat eaten with the mouth, but the wickedness of the heart, vented by the mouth, which pollutes a person in God's account. The heart and soul of man alone is capable of sinful defilement. Nothing can defile a person in God's account, but that which defileth the inward man. Learn hence, 1. That the heart of man is the sink and seed-plot of all sin, the source and fountain of all pollution. 2. That all the impurity of the life proceeds from the impurity and filthiness of the heart. Men's lives would not be so bad if their hearts were not worse. The disciples desiring the interpretation of the foregoing parable, our Saviour gives it them; but withal expostulates with them for not understanding a matter so obvious and plain, Are ye yet without understanding? As if he had said, "Have ye sat thus long under my ministerial teaching, and enjoyed the benefit of my conversation, and yet are no farther proficient in knowledge?" Plainly intimating, that Christ expects a proficiency in knowledge from us proportionable to the opportunities, and means of knowledge enjoyed by us. Having given them this rebuke, he next acquaints them with the sense and meaning of the parable; namely, That it is out of a wicked and sinful heart, that all sin and wickedness doth proceed. Though the occasions of sin are from without, yet the source and original of it is from within. The heart of man is as a cage full of unclean birds: Hence proceeds evil thoughts, either against God or our neighbours. Adulteries, or all the sins of the flesh. Murders; That is, all cruelty and hard dealing towards others. An evil eye; that is, an envious spirit, which frets and grieves at the happiness of others, called an evil eye, because envy doth much shew and manifest itself in the outward countenance, and especially by the eyes. From the whole, Note, That the best way to hinder the progress of sin in this life, is to mortify it in the heart, to crucify all inordinate motions, lusts, and corruptions, in their root; for the heart is the first seat and subject of sin, from whence it flows forth into the life and conversation.

24 And from thence he arose, and went into the borders of Tyre and Sidon, and entered into an house, and would have no man know it: but he could not be hid,

25 For a certain woman, whose young daughter had an unclean spirit, heard of him, and came and fell at his feet:

26 The woman was a Greek, a Syro-phenician by nation. And she besought him that he would cast forth the devil out of her daughter.

27 But Jesus said unto her, Let the children first be filled : for it is not meet to take the children's bread, and to cast it unto the dogs.

28 And she answered and said unto him, Yes, Lord : yet the dogs under the table eat of the children's crumbs.

29 And he said unto her, For this saying go thy way : the devil is gone out of thy daughter.

30 And when she was come to her house, she found the devil was gone out, and her daughter laid upon the bed.

All along in the history of our Saviour's life, we are to take notice how he went about from place to place doing good. Being now come into the borders of Tyre and Sidon, he finds a poor woman of the race of the Canaanites, who becomes first an humble supplicant, and then a bold beggar, on the behalf of her possessed daughter. Where observe, 1. That though all Israel could not example the faith of this Canaanite, yet was her daughter tormented with the devil. Learn thence, That neither truth of faith, nor strength of faith, can secure against Satan's inward temptations, or outward vexations : and consequently, the worst of bodily afflictions are no sufficient proof of divine displeasure. Observe, 2. The daughter did not come to Christ for herself, but the mother for her. Perhaps the child was not so sensible of its own misery, but the mother feels both the child's sorrow and her own. True goodness teaches us to appropriate the afflictions of others to ourselves, causing us to bear their griefs, and to sympathize with them in their sorrows. Observe, 3. The seeming severity of Christ to this poor woman; he calls her not a woman, but a dog; and, as it were, spurns her from the table. Did ever so severe a word drop from those mild lips? What shall we say? Is the Lamb of God turned a lion, that a woman in distress, imploring pity, should be thus rated out of Christ's presence? But hence we learn, How Christ puts the strongest faith of his own children on the severest trial. This trial had never been so sharp, if her faith had not been so strong : usually, where God gives much grace, he tries grace much. Observe, 4. The humble carriage of this holy woman; her humility grants all, her patience overcomes all, she meekly desires to possess the dog's place; not to croud to the table, but to creep under it, and to partake of the crumbs of mercy that fall from thence. Nothing is so pleasing to Christ as to see his people follow him with faith and importunity when he seems to withdraw himself from them.

31 ¶ And again, departing from the coasts of Tyre and Sidon, he came unto the sea of Galilee, through the midst of the coasts of Decapolis.

32 And they bring unto him one that was deaf and had an impediment in his speech : and they beseech him to put his hand upon him.

33 And he took him aside from the multitude, and put his fingers into his ears, and he spit, and touched his tongue.

34 And looking up to heaven, he sighed, and saith unto him, Ephphatha, that is, Be opened.

35 And straightway his ears were opened, and the string of his tongue was loosed, and he spake plain.

36 And he charged them that they should tell no man. But the more he charged them, so much the more a great deal they published it.

37 And were beyond measure astonished, saying, he hath done all things well : he maketh both the deaf to hear and the dumb to speak.

See here, 1. The bitter fruits and sad effects of sin, which has brought deafness, dumbness, and blindness, upon the human nature. As death, so all diseases entered into the world by sin; sin first brought infirmities and mortality into our natures, and the wages of sin are diseases and death. Observe, 2. That the blessing of bodily health and healing is from Christ; who by his divine power, as he was God, miraculously and immediately healed them that were brought unto him. Observe, 3. The actions and gestures which our Saviour used in healing this deaf person. He puts his finger into his ears, he spit, and touched his tongue. Not that these were means or natural causes effecting the cures, for there was no healing virtue in the spittle; but only outward signs, testimonies, and pledges, of Christ's divine power and gracious readiness to cure the person in distress. Observe, 4. How Christ withdrew the person from the multitude, whom he was about to help and heal. Teaching us, in all our good works to avoid all shew and appearance of ostentation and vain glory: to set God's glory before our eyes, and not to seek our own praise. Observe, 5. The effect which this miracle had upon the multitude; it occasioned their astonishment and applause: They were astonished, and said, He hath done all things well. It becomes us both to take notice of the wonderful works of God, and also to magnify and extol the author of them. This is one way of glorifying our Creator.

CHAP. VIII.

IN those days the multitude being very great, and having nothing to eat, Jesus called his disciples unto him, and saith unto them,

2 I have compassion on the multitude because they have now been with me three days, and have nothing to eat.

3 And if I send them away fasting to their own houses, they will faint by the way : for divers of them came from far.

4 And his disciples answered him, From whence can a man satisfy these men with bread here in the wilderness ?

5 And he asked them, How many loaves have ye ? And they said, Seven.

6 And he commanded the people to sit down on the ground : and he took the seven loaves, and gave thanks, and brake, and gave to his disciples to set before them ; and they set them before the people.

7 And they had a few small fishes ; and he blessed, and commanded to set them also before them.

8 So they did eat, and they were filled ; and they took up of the broken meat that was left, seven baskets.

9 And they that had eaten were about four thousand. And he sent them away.

This chapter begins with the relation of a famous miracle wrought by our Saviour ; namely, his feeding of four thousand persons with seven loaves, and a few fishes. And here we have observable, first, the tender care which Christ took of the bodies of men, to provide all necessities for their support and comfort ; he giveth us richly all things to enjoy. The great housekeeper of the world openeth his hands, and filleth all things living with plenteousness. How careful was our Saviour here that the bodies of poor creatures might not faint, nor be over weak and weary by the way ! Therefore he would not dismiss them without refreshment. Observe, 2. The original source and spring from whence this care that Christ had of the multitude did proceed and flow ; namely, from that sympathizing pity and tender compassion which the merciful heart of Christ did bear towards persons in distress and misery. Learn hence, That the tender pity and compassion of Christ is not the spring and fountain of spiritual mercies only, but of temporal blessings also ; I have compassion on the multitude who have nothing to eat. Observe, 3. How the disciples, not seeing any outward, visible means for the people's support, conclude it impossible for so many to be satisfied with the little supply they had ; namely, seven loaves and a few small fishes. Learn thence, That a weak faith soon grows thoughtful, and sometimes distrustful at the sight of difficulties. Whence say the disciples, can these men be satisfied with bread ? Not considering that the power of God in blessing our food, is far above the means of food. It is as easy for him to sustain and nourish us with a little as with much ; Man liveth not by bread, but by the blessing of God upon the bread he eats. Observe, 4. That although Christ could have fed these four thousand without the loaves, yet he takes and makes use of them seeing they may be had. Learn hence, That Christ did not neglect his own appointed ordinary means nor do any thing in an extraordinary way, farther than was absolutely necessary. Christ was above means, and could work without them, and when they failed, did so ; but when the means were at hand, he made use of them himself, to teach us never to expect that in a way of miracle, which may be come at in a way of means. Observe, 5. From our Lord's example, that religious custom of begging a blessing upon our food before we sit down to it, and of receiving the good creatures of God with thanksgiving. How unworthy is he of the crumbs that fall from his own table, who with the swine look not up unto, and takes no thankful notice of, the hand that feeds him ? Observe, 6. The certainty and greatness of the miracle : They did all eat, and were filled. They did all eat, not a crust of bread, or bit of fish, but to satiety and fulness. All that were hungry did eat, and all that did eat were satisfied, and yet seven baskets remain ; more is left than was at first set on. It is hard to say which was the greatest miracle, the miraculous eating, or miraculous leaving. If we consider what they ate, we may wonder that they left any thing ; if what they left, that they eat any thing. Observe lastly, Our Lord's command to gather up the fragments, Teaches us, That we make no waste of the good creatures of God, The fragments of fish-bones and broken bread must be gathered up ; the liberal housekeeper of the world will not allow the loss of his orts. Frugality is a commendable duty. God hath made us stewards, but not absolute lords of his blessings. We must be accountable to him for all the instances of his bounty received from him.

10 ¶ And straightway he entered into a ship with his disciples, and came into the parts of Dalmanutha.

11 And the pharisees came forth, and began to question with him, seeking of him a sign from heaven, tempting him.

12 And he sighed deeply in his spirit, and saith, Why doth this generation seek after a sign ? Verily I say unto you, there shall no sign be given to this generation.

13 And he left them, and entering into the ship again, departed to the other side.

Observe here, 1. The unreasonable practice of the wicked pharisees in asking a sign of Christ : that is, some new and extraordinary miracle to be wrought by him, to demonstrate him to be the true and promised Messias ; but had not our Saviour shewed them signs enough already ? What were all the miracles daily wrought before their eyes, but convincing signs of his divine power : But infidelity, mixed with obstinacy, is never satisfied. Observe, 2. Our Saviour's carriage towards these obstinate pharisees, who persisted in their unbelief; He sighed deeply in his spirit, and mourned for the hardness of their hearts. Learn thence, That to grieve and mourn for the sins of others, to be affected with them, and deeply afflicted for them, is a gracious and Christ-like temper. It is not sufficient to make an outward shew of grieving for others sins, but we ought to lay them to heart, and to be inwardly afflicted for them. Jesus sighed deeply in his spirit. Observe, 3. A sharp reproof given by our Saviour to them. At the same time that our Saviour did inwardly grieve for the pharisees wickedness, he did openly reprove them for it. It is not sufficient that we mourn for the sins of others, but we must prudently reprove them, as occasion is offered, and our duty requireth. Observe, 4. The sin which the pharisees are reprov'd for; namely, for seeking after a sign: that is, for demanding new miracles, after he had wrought so many before their eyes, to prove the divinity of his person. Learn thence, That it is a sin for any to require new signs and miracles for the confirmation of that doctrine which has been already sufficiently confirmed by miracles; yea, an heinous sin, which deserveth a sharp reproof and censure. Observe lastly, Our Saviour's peremptory denial of the pharisees presumptuous request; There shall be no sign given to this generation: this is no such sign or miracle as they desire or would have; no sign or miracle shall be wrought at their motion and suit. Although after this, Christ of his own accord, and at his own pleasure, wrought many miracles before their eyes. Such as wilfully harden themselves against the light of their own consciences, are righteously delivered up to hardness of heart, and final impenitency. These hypocritical pharisees shut their eyes against the most convictive evidence; and they are given up to their own obstinacy; our Saviour left them, and departed.

14 Now the disciples had forgotten to take bread, neither had they in the ship with them more than one loaf.

15 And he charged them, saying, Take heed, beware of the leaven of the pharisees, and of the leaven of Herod.

16 And they reasoned among themselves saying, It is because we have no bread.

17 And when Jesus knew it, he saith unto them, Why reason ye, because ye have no bread? perceive ye not yet, neither understand? have ye your hearts yet hardened?

18 Having eyes, see ye not? and having ears, hear ye not? and do ye not remember?

19 When I brake the five loaves among five thousand, how many baskets full of fragments took ye up? They say unto him, Twelve.

20 And when the seven among four thousand, how many baskets full of fragments took ye up? and they said, Seven.

21 And he said unto them, how is it that ye do not understand.

Observe here, 1. How dull the disciples of Christ were under Christ's own teaching, and how apt to put a carnal sense upon his words. They apprehended he had spoken to them of the leaven of bread, what he intended of the leaven of the pharisees' doctrine. Observe, 2. The rebuke our Saviour gives his disciples for not understanding the sense and signification of what he spake. Christ is much offended with his own people, when he discerns blindness and ignorance in them, after more than ordinary means of knowledge enjoyed by them: How is it that ye do not yet understand? Observe, 3. The metaphor by which Christ sets forth the corrupt doctrines of the pharisees and Herodians. He compares it to leaven; partly for its sourness, and partly for its diffusiveness. Now the leaven of Herod, or the Herodians, is supposed to be this: That because Herod was made king of the Jews, and lived at the time when the Messiah was expected, there were those that maintained the opinion that he was the promised Messiah; which opinion Christ compares to leaven, because as that diffuses itself into the whole mass or lump of bread with which it is mixed, so false doctrine was not only evil and corrupt in itself, but apt to spread its contagion farther and farther, to the infecting of others with it. Learn thence, That error is as damnable as vice; and persons erroneous in judgment to be avoided, as well as those that are wicked in conversation; and he, that has a due care of his soul's salvation, will be as much afraid of erroneous principles, as he is of debauched practices. Observe, 4. Our Saviour does not command his disciples to separate from communion with the pharisees, and oblige them not to hear their doctrine but only beware of their errors; which they mixed with their doctrine. We may and ought to hold communion with a church, though erroneous in judgment, if not fundamentally erroneous. For separation from a church is not justifiable upon any other grounds than that which makes a separation between God and that church, which is either apostasy into gross idolatry, or in point of doctrine, into damnable heresy. Observe, 5. The fault observed by our Saviour in his disciples, hardness of heart; Have ye your hearts yet hardened? There may be, and oft-times is, some degree of hardness of heart in sincere Christians; but this is not a total hardness; it is lamented and humbled for, not indulged and delighted in. As Christ is grieved for the hardness of his people's hearts, so are they grieved also; it is both bitter and burdensome to them.

22 ¶ And he cometh to Bethsaida; and they bring a blind man unto him, and besought him to touch him.

23 And he took the blind man by the hand, and led him out of the town; and when he had spit on his eyes, and put his hands upon him, he asked him if he saw aught.

24 And he looked up, and said, I see men as trees, walking.

25 After that, he put his hands again upon his eyes, and made him look up : and he was restored, and saw every man clearly.

26 And he sent him away to his house, saying, Neither go into the town, nor tell it to any in the town.

Here we have recorded a special miracle wrought by our Saviour at Bethsaida, in curing a blind man brought unto him. Where observe, 1. What evident proof the pharisees had of Christ's divine power and godhead : he had before caused the deaf to hear, the dumb to speak, and the lame to walk ; now he makes the blind to see ; yet did the pharisees obstinately resist all means of their conviction, and continued in their opposition to truth, to their inevitable and unutterable condemnation. Observe, 2. The wonderful humility, the great condescension of Jesus Christ towards this blind man ; He took him by the hand, and led him, himself. A great evidence of his condescending humility, and of his goodness and mercy ; shewing how ready and willing he was to help and heal him ; see here a singular pattern of humility and condescending grace and mercy in our dear Redeemer, in that he vouchsafed with his own hands to take and lead a poor blind man through the streets of Bethsaida, in the sight of all the people. Let us learn of him, who was thus meek, and lowly in heart. Observe, 3. Our Lord leads the blind man out of the town before he heals him, not in the town where all the people might take notice of it. Thereby teaching us to avoid all shew of ambition, all appearance of vain-glory ; in what we do. Even as Christ sought not his own glory, but the glory of him that sent him. Observe, 4. The manner of the cure wrought upon this blind man ; it was gradual, and by degrees ; not instantaneous, and at once : he had first a dark, dim, and obscure sight, afterwards a clear, and a perfect sight. Christ thereby, gave evidence of his absolute and omnipotent power, that he was not tied to any particular means, or manner, or order of working ; but wrought his miracles variously, as he saw to be most fit for the glory of God, and the benefit of his people. Observe lastly, The charge, given by our Saviour not to publish this miracle in the town of Bethsaida : a place where Christ had so often preached, and wrought so many miracles ; but the inhabitants had obstinately and contemptuously undervalued and despised both his doctrine and miracles ; therefore we read, Mat. xi. 21.

that our Saviour denounced a "woe against Bethsaida, assuring her, that it would be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon than for her." The higher a people rise under the means, the lower they fall if they miscarry. Such a people as have been nearest to conversion, being not converted, shall have the greatest condemnation when they are judged.

27 And Jesus went out, and his disciples, into the towns of Cesarea Philippi ; and by the way he asked his disciples, saying unto them, Whom do men say that I am ?

28 And they answered, John the Baptist : but some say, Elias, and others, One of the prophets.

29 And he saith unto them, But whom say ye that I am ? and Peter answereth, and saith unto him, Thou art the Christ.

30 And he charged them that they should tell no man of him.

31 And he began to teach them that the Son of man must suffer many things, and be rejected of the elders, and of the chief priests and scribes, and be killed, and after three days rise again.

32 And he spake that saying openly. And Peter took him, and began to rebuke him.

33 But when he had turned about, and looked on his disciples, he rebuked Peter saying, Get thee behind me, Satan : for thou savourest not the things that be of God, but the things that be of men.

These verses relate to us a conference which our Saviour had with his disciples, touching their own and others opinion of his person. Where observe, 1. The place where Christ and his disciples did confer ; it was in the way as they walked together. Teaching us our duty to take all occasions and opportunities for holy conference, to good discourse touching spiritual things, when in the house, when in the field, when travelling in the way. Mat. iii. 16. Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another. Observe, 2. The conference itself : Whom do men say that I am ? That is, What do the common people think and speak of me ? Not as if Christ were ignorant what men said of him, or did vain-gloriously enquire after the opinion of the multitude concerning him ; but with an intention more firmly to settle and establish his disciples in the belief of his being the true and promised Messiah. The disciples tell him, That "some said, He was John the Baptist, others Elias, others one of the prophets." It is no new thing, it seems, to find diversity of judgments and opinions concerning Christ, and the affairs of his kingdom. When our Saviour was amongst men, who daily conversed with him, yet was there then a great diversity of opinions concerning him. Observe, 3. How St. Peter, as the mouth of all the apostles, and in their names make a full and open confession of Christ, acknowledging him to be the true and promised Messiah; Peter said, Thou art the Christ. Whence note, That the veil of Christ's human nature did not keep the eye of the disciples' faith from seeing him to be truly and really God. 2. That Jesus the son of the virgin Mary, was the Christ, the true Messiah, or the person ordained by God to be the Mediator betwixt God and man: the Redeemer and Saviour of mankind; Thou art the Christ. Observe, 4. The charge and special injunction given by our Saviour to tell no man of him: that is, not commonly and openly to declare that he was the Son of God and the true Messiah; because he was now in his state of humiliation, and the glory of his divinity was to be concealed till his resurrection. Christ had his own fit times and proper seasons, in which he revealed the great mysteries of his kingdom to the world. Observe, 5. The great wisdom of our Saviour in acquainting his disciples with the near approach of his death and passion; thereby to prevent that scandal and offence which otherwise they might have taken at his sufferings; the better to fit and prepare them to bear that great trial, and to correct the error which they had entertained touching an earthly kingdom of Christ: that the Messiah was to be a temporal prince. Observe, 6. St. Peter's carriage towards Christ upon this occasion: He took him aside; and began to blame him for affirming that he must die. O how ready is flesh and blood to oppose all that tends to suffering! What need have we to be fortified against the temptations of our friends, as well as of our enemies! Satan sometimes makes use of good men as his instruments to do his work by, when they little suspect it. Little did Peter think, that Satan now set him on work to hinder the redemption of mankind, by dissuading Christ from dying. Observe, 7. With what indignation Christ rejects Peter's admonition; Get thee behind me, Satan. Christ heard Satan speaking in Peter; it was Peter's tongue, but Satan tuned it, therefore Christ calls Peter by Satan's name: They that will do the devil's work, shall have the devil's name too. He that would hinder the redemption of mankind is Satan, an adversary to mankind. From our Saviour's smart reproof given to Peter, we learn, That no respect to men's persons, or regard to their piety, must cause us to flatter them in their sins, or move us to speak favourably of their sins. As well as our Saviour loved Peter, he rebukes him severely. O Lord! so intent was thy heart upon the great work of our redemption, that thou couldst not bear the least word that should obstruct thee in it, or divert thee from it.

34 And when he had called the people unto him, with his disciples also, he said unto them, Whosoever will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me.

35 For whosoever will save his life shall lose it, but whosoever shall lose his life for my sake and the gospel's, the same shall save it.

Observe here, 1. How our blessed Saviour recommends his religion to every one's election and choice, not attempting by force and violence to compel any person to the embracing of it. If any man will come after me: that is, if any man chooses and resolves to be a Christian. Observe, 2. Our Saviour's terms propounded; namely, self-denial, gospel-suffering, and gospel-service. 1. Self-denial; Let him deny himself. By which we are not to understand, either the denying of our senses in matters of faith, or the renouncing of our reason in the matters of religion; but a willingness to part with all our earthly comforts, and temporal enjoyments, for the sake of Christ, when called thereunto. 2. Gospel-suffering; He must take up his cross. An allusion to the Roman custom, that the malefactor who was to be crucified, took his cross upon his shoulder, and carried it to the place of execution. Where note, That not the making of the cross, but the patient bearing of it, when God has made it, and laid it upon our shoulders, is the duty enjoined. Let him take up his cross. 3. Gospel-service; Let him follow me, says Christ: that is, obey my commands, and imitate my example. He must set my life and doctrine continually before him, and be daily correcting and reforming his life, by that rule and pattern. Observe, 3. The reasons urged by our Saviour to induce men to a willingness to lay down their lives for the sake of Christ and his holy religion; "He that will save his life, shall lose it; and he that is willing to lose his life for the gospel's sake, the same shall find it." Intimating to us, 1. That the love of this temporal life is a great temptation to men to deny Christ, and renounce his holy religion. And, 2. That the surest way to attain eternal life, is cheerfully to lay down our temporal life, when the glory of Christ, and the honour of religion, requires it at our hand.

36 For what shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?

37 Or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?

Our Saviour had shewn in the former verses the great danger of seeking to save our temporal life, by exposing to hazard our eternal life. This he confirms in the words before us by a double argument: the first drawn from the excellency of eternal life, or the life of the soul; the second from the irrecoverableness of this loss, or the impossibility of redeeming the loss of the soul by any way or means whatsoever. What shall a man give in exchange for his soul? Learn, 1. That Almighty God has intrusted every one of us with a soul of inestimable worth and preciousness, capable of being saved or lost, and that to all eternity. 2. That the gain of the whole world is not comparable with the loss of one precious soul: the soul's loss is an inconceivable, irrecompensable, and irrecoverable loss.

38 Whosoever, therefore, shall be ashamed of me, and of my words, in this adulterous and sinful generation, of him, also, shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he cometh in the glory of his Father with the holy angels.

That is, whosoever shall deny or disown me, either in my person, my gospel, or my members, for any fear or favour of man, he shall with shame be disowned and eternally rejected by me at the great day. There are two passions that make persons disown Christ and religion in the duty of temptation; namely, fear and shame. Many good men have been overcome by the former, as St. Peter, and others; but we find not any good man in scripture guilty of the latter: namely, that denied Christ out of shame. This argues a rotten, unsound, and corrupt heart. If any man thinks it beneath his honour and quality to own the opposed truths and despised members of Jesus Christ, he will think it much more beneath him, his honour and dignity, to own them at the great day. Learn hence, That it is not sufficient that we own Christ by believing in him, but we must honour him with an outward professing of him also. Secondly, That such as are ashamed of Christ's doctrine or members, are ashamed of Christ himself. Thirdly, That such as either for fear dare not, or for shame will not, own the doctrine of Christ, or the members of Christ now, shall find Christ ashamed to own and confess them at the great day. "Whosoever is ashamed of me, and of my words, in this adulterous and wicked generation, of him also shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he cometh in the glory of his Father, with the holy angels."

CHAP. IX.

AND he said unto them, Verily, I say unto you, that there be some of them that stand here, which shall not taste of death till they have seen the kingdom of God come with power.

There is a threefold sense and interpretation given of these words by expositors; 1. Some refer the words to the times of the gospel after Christ's resurrection and ascension, when the gospel was spread and propagated far and near, and the kingdom of God come with power. Learn hence, that where the gospel is powerfully preached, and cheerfully obeyed, there Christ cometh most gloriously in his kingdom. 2. Others understand these words of Christ's coming, and exercising his kingly power in the destruction of Jerusalem: which some of the apostles then standing by lived to see. 3. Others (as most agreeable to the context) understand the words as relating to our Saviour's transfiguration. As if he had said, Some of you, meaning Peter, James, and John, shall shortly see me on mount Tabor, in such splendour and glory, as shall be a prælude, a shadow and representation of that glory which I shall appear in, when I come to judge the world at the great day. And whereas our Saviour says not, there be some standing here which shall not die, but, which shall not taste of death; this implies two things; 1. That after they had seen his transfiguration; they must taste of death as well as others. 2. That they should but taste of it, and no more. From hence learn, 1. That the faithful servants and disciples of Christ must at length, in God's appointed time, taste and have experience of death as well as others. 2. That although they must taste, yet that they shall but taste of death; they shall not drink of the dregs of that bitter cup; though they fall by the hand of death, yet shall they not be overcome by it; but in the very fall get victory over it.

2 ¶ And after six days Jesus taketh with him Peter, and James, and John, and leadeth them up into an high mountain apart by themselves: and he was transfigured before them.

Here we have the history of our Saviour's transfiguration, when he laid, as it were, the garments of our frail humanity aside for a little time, assuming to himself the robes of majesty and glory, to demonstrate and testify the truth of his divinity; for this divine glory was an evidence of his divine nature; and also an emblem of that glory which he and his disciples, all his faithful servants and followers, shall enjoy together in heaven.

3 And his raiment became shining exceeding white as snow; so as no fuller on earth can white them.

4 And there appeared unto them Elias, with Moses: and they were talking with Jesus.

5 And Peter answered, and said to Jesus, Master, it is good for us to be here, and let us make three tabernacles, one for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias.

6 For he wist not what to say: for they were sore afraid.

7 And there was a cloud that overshadowed them: and a voice came out of the cloud, saying, This is my beloved Son; hear ye him.

8 And suddenly when they had looked round about, they saw no man any more, save Jesus only with themselves.

Observe here, 1. That to confirm the disciples' faith in the truth of Christ's divine nature, he was pleased to suffer the rays of his divinity to dart forth before their eyes, so far as they were able to bear it. His face shined with a pleasing brightness, and his raiment with such a glorious lustre, as did at once both delight and dazzle the eyes of the disciples. Observe, 2. The choice which our Saviour makes of the witnesses of his glorious transfiguration; his three disciples, Peter, James and John. But why disciples? Why three disciples? Why these three? 1. Why disciples? Because this transfiguration was a type and shadow of his glory in heaven: Christ vouchsafes therefore the earnest and first fruits of that glory only to saints, upon whom he intended to bestow the full harvest in due time. 2. Why three disciples? Because three were sufficient to witness the truth and reality of this miracle. Judah was unworthy of this favour; yet lest he should murmur or be discontented, others are left out as well as he. But, 3. Why these three, rather than others? Probably, 1. Because these three were more eminent for grace, zeal, and love towards Christ. Now the most eminent manifestations of glory are made to those that are most excelling in grace. 2. These three disciples were witnesses of Christ's agony and passion; to prepare them for which, they are here made witnesses of his transfiguration. This glorious vision upon mount Tabor fitted them to abide the terror of mount Calvary. Observe, 3. The glorious attendants upon our Saviour, at his transfiguration. They were two, two men; and those two men, Moses and Elias. This being but a glimpse of Christ's glory, not a full manifestation of it, only two of the glorified saints attend at it. These two attendants are not two angels, but two men; because men were more nearly concerned than angels in what was done. But why Moses and Elias, rather than other men? 1. Because Moses was the giver of the law, and Elias the chief of the prophets. Now both these attending upon Christ, did shew the consent of the law and the prophets with Christ, and their accomplishment and fulfilling in them. 2. Because these two were the most laborious servants of Christ, both adventured their lives in God's cause, and therefore are highly honoured by him. For, Those that honour him, he will honour. Observe, 4. The carriage and demeanour of the disciples upon this great occasion: 1. They supplicate Jesus, not Moses and Elias; they make no suit to them, but to Christ only: Master, it is good being here. O! what a ravishing comfort and satisfaction is the communion and fellowship of the saints! But the presence of Christ amongst them, renders their joys transporting. 2. They proffer their service to farther their continuance of what they did enjoy; Let us make three tabernacles. Saints will stick at no pains or cost for the enjoyment of Christ's presence and his people's company. Learn hence, That a glimpse of heaven's glory is sufficient to wrap a soul in extacy, and to make it out of love with worldly company. 3. That we are too apt to desire more of heaven upon earth than God will allow. We would have the heavenly glory come down to us; but are unwilling by death to go up to that. Observe, 5. How a cloud was put before the disciples' eyes, when the divine glory was manifested to them; partly to allay the lustre and resplendency of that glory which they were swallowed up with: the glory of heaven is insupportable in this sinful state; we cannot bear it unveiled: and partly to hinder their farther prying and looking into that glory. We must be content to behold God through a cloud darkly here, ere long we shall see him face to face. Observe, 6. The testimony given out of the cloud, by God the father concerning Jesus Christ his Son; This is my beloved Son, hear him. Whence note, 1. The dignity of his person; he is my Son: For nature co essential, and for duration co-eternal, with his Father. 2. The endearment of his relation; he is my beloved Son; because of his conformity to me, and compliance with me. Likeness is the cause of love; and an union and harmony of wills, causes a mutual endearing of affections. 3. The authority of his doctrine; Hear ye him; not Moses and Elias, who were servants, but Christ my Son, whom I have commissioned to be the great Prophet and Teacher of my church. Therefore, adore him as my Son, believe in him as your Saviour, and hear him as your lawgiver. The obedient ear honours Christ more than either the gazing eye, the adoring knee, or the applauding tongue.

9 And as they came down from the mountain, he charged them that they should tell no man what things they had seen, till the Son of man were risen from the dead.

10 And they kept that saying with themselves, questioning one with another, what the rising from the dead should mean.

11 And they asked him, saying, Why say the scribes that Elias must first come?

12 And he answered, and told them, Elias verily cometh first, and restoreth all things, and how it is written of the Son of man that he must suffer many things; and be set at nought.

13 But I say unto you, That Elias is indeed come, and they have done unto him whatsoever they listed, as it is written of him.

Observe here, 1. The strict injunction given by Christ to his disciples not to publish or proclaim this glorious vision at his transfiguration: till after his resurrection; because being now in a state of humiliation, he would have his divine majesty and glory veiled and concealed. Learn hence, That the divine glory of Christ's person, as God, was not to be manifested suddenly, and all at once, but gradually, and by steps. First, more obscurely, by his miracles, by the forced acknowledgments of devils, by the free confession of his disciples, and by the glorious vision of his transfiguration; but the more clear and full, the more public and open, manifestation of his divine glory, was at the time of his resurrection and ascension. Observe, 2. The disciples' obedience to Christ's injunction, touching the concealing of his transfiguration till after his resurrection; "They kept that saying with themselves, questioning one with another what the rising from the dead should mean." Not that they questioned the resurrection in general, but Christ's resurrection in particular, because his resurrection did suppose his death; and they could not conceive how the Messiah, whom they erroneously supposed must be a temporal prince, should suffer death at the hands of men. Observe, 3. The question which the disciples put to Christ, how the observation of the Jewish doctors holds good; namely, that Elias must come before the Messiah came; we see the Messiah, but no Elias. Our Saviour answers, That Elias was come already; not Elias in person, but one in the spirit and power of Elias, to wit, John the Baptist, who was prophesied of under the name of Elias; there being a great resemblance between the Elias of the Old Testament, and of the New, viz. John the Baptist, they were both men of great zeal for God and Religion, they were both undaunted reprovers of the faults of princes, and they were both implacably hated and persecut for the same. Thence learn, That hatred and persecution, even unto death, has often been the lot and portion of such persons who have had the courage and zeal to reprove the faults of princes. "Elias is indeed come, and they have done unto him whatsoever they listed."

14 ¶ And when he came to his disciples, he saw a great multitude about them, and the scribes questioning with them.

15 And, straightway, all the people, when they beheld him, were greatly amazed, and running to him, saluted him.

16 And he asked the scribes, What question ye with them?

17 And one of the multitude answered, and said, Master, I have brought unto thee my son, which hath a dumb spirit;

18 And wheresoever he taketh him, he teareth him; and he foameth, and gnasheth with his teeth, and pineth away. And I spake to thy disciples that they should cast him out; and they could not.

19 He answered him, and saith, O faithless generation, how long shall I be with you? how long shall I suffer you? Bring him unto me.

20 And they brought him unto him. And when he saw him, straightway the spirit tare him; and he fell on the ground, and wallowed foaming.

21 And he asked his father, How long is it ago since this came into him? and he said, Of a child.

22 And oft-times it hath cast him into the fire, and into the waters to destroy him: but if thou canst do any thing, have compassion on us, and help us.

23 Jesus said unto him, if thou canst believe, all things are possible to him that believeth.

24 And, straightway, the father of the child cried out, and said with tears, Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief.

25 When Jesus saw that the people came running together, he rebuked the foul spirit, saying unto him, Thou dumb and deaf spirit I charge thee, come out of him, and enter no more into him.

26 And the Spirit cried, and rent him sore, and came out of him; and he was as one dead; insomuch that many said, He is dead.

27 But Jesus took him by the hand, and lifted him up; and he arose.

28 And when he was come into the house, his disciples asked him privately, Why could we not cast him out?

29 And he said unto them, This kind can come forth by nothing, but by prayer and fasting.

Observe here, 1. The person brought to Christ for help and healing; one bodily possessed by Satan who had made him deaf and dumb from his childhood, and oft-times cast him into the fire and water, but rather to torment than to dispatch him. O how does Satan, that malicious tyrant, rejoice in doing hurt to the bodies, as well as the souls, of mankind! Lord abate his power, since his malice will not be abated. How great is thy goodness, in preserving us from the power and malice of evil spirits! and how watchful is thy providence over us to preserve us, when Satan is seeking, by all imaginable means and methods, to destroy us! Observe, 2. The person that represents his sad condition to our Saviour; his compassionate father who kneeled down, and cried out: need will make a person both humble and eloquent. Every one has a tongue to speak for himself, happy is he that keeps a tongue for others. Observe, 3. The circumstance of time; Satan had got possession! of his person very young, in his youth; nay in his childhood; and O how hard was it to cast him out, after such long possession! The disciples could not do it, with all their power and prayers: and when our Saviour himself, by the power of his Godhead, did dispossess him, it was with foaming and rending that he left him. Thus, when Satan gets possession of person's hearts in their youth, O how hard will it be to cast him out! It will put the soul to great grief, great pain, great sorrow of heart. Satan will endeavour to hold his own, and keep the sinner his slave and vassal, if all the power of hell can keep him. Lord! convince young persons, that it is easier to keep Satan out, than it is to cast him out, of the possession of their hearts. Observe, 4. The physicians which this distressed person is brought unto. First to the disciples, and then to Jesus. We never apply ourselves importunately to the God of power, till we despair of the creature's help. But why could not the disciples cast him out? Christ tells them, because of their unbelief; that is, because of the weakness of their faith, not the total want of faith. Whence learn, That secret unbelief may lie hid and undiscerned in the heart, which neither others nor ourselves may take notice of until some trial doth discover it. Observe, 5. The poor man's humble request, and Christ's gracious reply. If thou canst do any thing, help me, says the father: If thou canst believe, all things are possible, says our Saviour. Note thence, That the fault is not in Christ, but in ourselves, if we receive not that mercy from him, which we desire and need. There is no deficiency in Christ's power, the defect lies in our faith. Hereupon the man cries out with tears, Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief." If these were tears of joy for the truth of his faith, then we may gather, that the lowest degree and least measure of faith is matter of joy unspeakable to the owner and possessor of it: if these were tears of sorrow for the weakness of his faith, then we may collect, that the remains of unbelief in the children of God do cost them many tears: they are the burden and sorrow of gracious souls. "The father of the child cried out with tears, Lord, I believe; help thou my unbelief." Observe, 6. With what facility and ease our Saviour cast out this stubborn devil, that had so long possessed this poor child, even with a word speaking. How long soever Satan has kept possession of a soul, Christ can eject and cast him out both easily and speedily; one word of Christ's mouth is sufficient to help us out of all distress, both bodily and spiritual. Yet did our Lord suffer the wicked spirit to rage and rend the child before he went out of him; not from any delight in the poor child's misery, but that the multitude, seeing the desperateness, of the case, might the more admire the power of Christ in his deliverance. Observe, 7. The sovereign power and absolute authority, which Christ had even here upon earth, when in his state of humiliation, over the devil and his angels; he commands him to go out, and enter no more into the child, and is obeyed. This was a proof and demonstration of the Godhead of our Saviour, that he had power and authority over devils, to command and over rule them, to curb and restrain them at his pleasure. And whereas Christ commands the devil not only to come out, but to enter no more into the person; it implies, that Satan being cast out of his hold, earnestly desires to enter in again to recover his hold, and to regain his possession; but if Christ says, Enter no more, Satan shall obey his voice. Observe, 8. The disciples enquire into the reasons why they could not cast this stubborn devil out, according to the power which he had given them to work miracles. Christ tells them it was, 1. Because of their unbelief; by which understand the weakness of their faith, not their total want of faith. 2. Because they did not in this extraordinary case apply themselves to the use of extraordinary means; namely, Prayer and fasting. Learn hence, First, That in extraordinary cases, where the necessities either of soul or body do require it, recourse must be had to the use of extraordinary means; one of which is an importunate application unto God by solemn prayer. Secondly, That fasting and prayer are two special means of Christ's own appointment, for the enabling of his people victoriously to overcome Satan, and cast him out of ourselves or others. We must set an edge upon our faith by prayer, and upon our prayer by fasting.

30 ¶ And they departed thence, and passed through Galilee; and he would not that any man should know it.

31 For he taught his disciples, and said unto them, The Son of man is delivered into the hands of men, and they shall kill him: and after that he is killed, he shall rise the third day.

32 But they understood not that saying, and were afraid to ask him.

Observable it is, how frequently our Saviour forewarned his disciples of his approaching sufferings; and as the time of his sufferings drew near, he did more frequently warn them of it. But it was all little enough to warn them against the scandal of the cross, and to reconcile their thoughts to a suffering condition. The disciples had taken up the common opinion, that the Messiah was to be a temporal prince, and as such to reign here upon earth, and they knew not how to reconcile this with his "being delivered up into the hands of men that should kill him; and yet they were afraid to ask him concerning this matter." Now from Christ's frequent forewarning his disciples of approaching suffering, we may gather, That we can never hear either too often, or too much, of the doctrine of the cross, nor be too frequently instructed in our duty to prepare for a suffering state. As Christ went by his cross to his crown, from a state of abasement to a state of exaltation, so must all his disciples and followers likewise.

33 ¶ And he came to Capernaum: and being in the house, he asked them, What was it that ye disputed among yourselves by the way?

34 But they held their peace. For by the way they had disputed among themselves who should be the greatest.

35 And he sat down and called the twelve, and saith unto them, If any man desire to be first, the same shall be last of all, and servant of all.

36 And he took a child, and set him in the midst of them: and when he had taken him in his arms, he said unto them, 37 Whosoever shall receive one of such children in my name, receiveth me: and whosoever shall receive me, receiveth not me, but him that sent me.

It may justly seem a wonder, that when our blessed Saviour discoursed so frequently with his disciples about his sufferings, they should at the same time be disputing among themselves about precedence and pre-eminency, which of them should be the greatest, the first in place, and the highest in dignity and honour. But from this instance we may learn, That the holiest and best of men are subject to pride and ambition, prone to covet worldly dignity and greatness, ready to catch at the bait of honour, to affect a precedence before, and a superiority over, others. The apostles themselves were touched, if not tainted, with the itch of ambition. To cure which, our Saviour preaches to them the doctrine of humility. Where observe, 1. Our Lord doth not say, that he is first, but "he that desireth to be first, shall be last of all, and servant of all." Teaching us,

That all persons in general, and ministers in particular, ought not to seek out places of dignity and pre-eminency for themselves, but be sought out for them: he that is first in seeking them, usually least deserves them, and last obtains them; "If any man desire to be first, the same shall be last of all." Observe, 2. Our Saviour teaches his disciples humility by the type and example of a little child, which he sets before them as the proper emblem of humility; shewing them that they ought to be as free from ambition as a young child, which affects nothing of precedency or superiority. Such as are of highest eminency in the church of Christ, ought to be adorned with humility, and look upon themselves as lying under the greatest obligations to be most eminently useful and serviceable for the church's good. Observe, 3. How exceedingly dear and precious such persons are to Christ, who resemble little children in true humility and lowliness of mind; assuring the world, that whatsoever kindness or respect they shew to them, he accounts shewn to himself; He that receiveth them, says Christ, receiveth me. So near is the union, so dear the relation, betwixt Christ and his members, that whatever good or evil is done to them, he reckons it as done unto himself.

38 And John answered him saying, Master, we saw one casting out devils in thy name, and he followeth not us; and we forbade him, because he followeth not us.

39 But Jesus said, Forbid him not; for there is no man which shall do a miracle in my name, that can lightly speak evil of me.

40 For he that is not against us, is on our part.

41 For whosoever shall give you a cup of water to drink in my name, because ye belong to Christ, verily I say unto you, he shall not lose his reward.

42 And whosoever shall offend one of these little ones that believe in me, it is better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he were cast into the sea.

The Evangelist here sets down a conference betwixt our Saviour Christ and St. John his disciple. Where observe, 1. St. John's relation of a matter of fact to Christ, namely, his forbidding one to cast out devils in Christ's name, that did not follow Christ as they did, being his professed disciples. Though only the disciples that followed Christ had a commission to work miracles, yet there were others, no enemies to Christ, who, in imitation of the disciples, did attempt to do the like; and God was pleased, for the honour of his Son, in whose name they cast out devils, to give them sometimes success. Almighty God may, and sometimes doth, give success to such actions and enterprizes as are good in themselves, though undertaken by persons that have no lawful call or warrant from God to do them. However, it was no small confirmation of the truth of Christianity, that Christ's name was thus powerful, even among those that did not follow him, and therefore could do nothing by compact with him. Observe, 2. The action of the disciples towards this person; We forbade him. This shewed, 1. Their ignorance in supposing that none could be true disciples, nor work miracles, but such as followed them; We forbade him because he followed not us. 2. Their rashness in forbidding him of their own heads, before they had consulted Christ about it. 3. Their envy and emulation in that they were grieved and discontented at this person's casting out devils because he was not a follower of them. O, the imperfect composition of the best of saints! how much weakness, infirmity, and corruption doth John the beloved disciple discover upon this occasion! the sin of envy and emulation against the gifts of God in others, is very natural to men, and to good men; yea, to the best of men. It is as difficult to look upon other men's gifts without envy, as to look upon our own without pride. Observe, 3. Our Saviour's answer and reply: Forbid him not. Because our Saviour knew that his enterprize of casting out devils in his name, would in some manner and measure redound to the glory of his name, although he undertook the matter without sufficient warrant from Christ. We ought not to censure and condemn those who do that which is good in itself, though they fail in the manner of it, and in the means they use for effecting it. Observe, 4. What encouragement our Saviour gives the world to be kind to his friends and followers: he assures them that even a cup of cold water given for his sake, to such as profess his name, shall not miss of a reward. Learn thence, That the least office of love and respect, of kindness and charity, shewn to any of the ministers or members of Jesus Christ, for his sake, is represented as done unto himself, and shall be rewarded by himself. Observe, 5. He shall gain that which he cannot lose, by parting with that which he could not keep. Observe, 6. What an heinous and grievous sin it is to scandalize or offend any of the disciples of Jesus Christ; he will most severely judge and punish such as give offence to them, by any wrong or injury done unto them, both in this life and the next. "It were better a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he were cast into the sea."

43 And if thy hand offend thee, cut it off: it is better for thee to enter into life maimed, than having two hands, to go into hell, into the fire that never shall be quenched:

44 Where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched.

45 And if thy foot offend thee, cut it off: it is better for thee to enter halt into life than having two feet to be cast into hell, into the fire that never shall be quenched:

46 Where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched.

47 And if thine eye offend thee, pluck it out: it is better for thee to enter into the kingdom of God with one eye, than having two eyes to be cast into hell fire:

48 Where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched.

In the former verse our Saviour dissuaded from the sin of scandal, or giving offence to the serious and sincere Christians, threatening a very grievous judgment against such as should any ways offend them; now in these six verses he prescribes a remedy against that and all other sins, namely, by avoiding all occasions that lead to sin. Here observe, 1. The admonition or warning given by Christ unto us, to remove far from us all occasion of sin, though ever so dear unto us. We are not to understand the command literally, as if it was our duty to maim our bodily members, but metaphorically to cut off all occasions that may betray us into sin. Hence note, That as sin may be avoided, it is our duty to avoid whatever leads unto it, or may be the instrument and occasion of it. Observe, 2. A reason enforcing the admonition: this is drawn from the benefit and advantage that will come by cutting of such occasions of sin. It will further us in our attainment of eternal life, and prevent our being cast into hell-fire. Now our Saviour affirms, that it is better for a man to enter into life with the love of all those things that are dear and precious to him in this world, rather than to go into hell with the fruition and enjoyment of them. Learn hence, That a diligent and daily care to avoid sin, and all occasions that lead unto it, will be a special means to escape the torments of hell, and further us in our attainments of heaven, and eternal life. Observe, 3. The description which our Saviour gives of the torments of hell: first, by its extremity; it is like a gnawing worm, and a consuming fire. Secondly, and by its eternity, a worm that never dieth, and a fire that is never quenched. Where note, That the remembrance of things past, the experience of things present, and expectation of things to come, are the bitings of the worm of conscience, at every bite whereof damned souls give a dreadful shriek; such as will not hear the voice of conscience, shall feel, and that to purpose, the sting of conscience. Learn hence, That there is most certainly a place and state of punishment and torment in another world for wicked men to suffer in, upon the score of sin committed in this world. Secondly, That the punishment and torments of the wicked in hell are intolerable and indeterminable, of exquisite pain, and endless duration: "Their worm never dieth, and their fire is not quenched."

49 For every one shall be salted with fire, and every sacrifice shall be salted with salt.

"Every one shall be salted with fire;" that is, every one of them mentioned in the foregoing verses, who refuses to "cut off a right hand, and pluck out a right eye;" that is, to mortify their bosom lusts, and beloved corruptions, which are as dear as a right hand or a right eye: every such wicked and unmortified person shall be salted with fire; that is, thrown into hell-fire, where the worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched; as our Saviour speaks, v. 4. And their being salted with fire, imports and implies, that as to their beings they shall be preserved, even as salt preserves things from corruption, that they may be the objects of the eternal wrath of God. So that for sinners to be salted with fire, is to be given up to everlasting destruction. Learn hence, that all such unsavoury sinners as indulge their corrupt lusts and affections, shall be salted with fire; that is, given up to everlasting destruction in hell-fire! but every sacrifice shall be salted with salt; that is, every Christian who has given up himself a real sacrifice unto God, shall be salted, not with fire, but with salt, to be preserved and kept savoury. The grace of mortification is that to the soul, which salt is to the body; it preserves it from putrefaction, and renders it savoury. Learn hence, 1. That every Christian in this life ought to be a spiritual sacrifice or oblation unto God. 2. That there is a putrid and corrupt part in every sacrifice, in every Christian, which must be purged out, and the sacrifice purified and cleansed from. 3. That the grace of mortification is the true salt which must clarify the soul, and with which every sacrifice must be salted, that will be a savoury offering unto God; "Every one shall be salted with fire, and every sacrifice shall be salted with salt."

50 Salt is good; but if the salt have lost its saltness, wherewith will you season it? Have salt in yourselves, and have peace one with another.

Our blessed Saviour here compares Christians in general, and his ministers in particular, unto salt, for a double reason. First, Because it is the nature of salt to preserve things from corruption and putrefaction, and to render them savoury and pleasant. Thus are the ministers of Christ to labour and endeavour by the purity of their doctrine, to sweeten putrifying sinners: that they may become savoury unto God and man, and be kept from being fly-blown with errors and false doctrines. Secondly, Because salt has an acrimony, a piercing power in it, which subdues the whole lump, and turns it into its own nature. Such a piercing power is there in the ministry of the word, that it subdues the whole man to the obedience of itself; "Have salt in yourselves, and have peace one with another;" that is, let all persons, especially ministers, retain a seasoning virtue in themselves, that they may sweeten and season others, even all that they converse with; and as salt has an uniting power, and knits the parts of the body salted together, so the upholding of union and peace one with another, will declare that ye have salt in yourselves. Learn hence, That it is the duty of all Christians, but especially of the ministers of the gospel, to maintain brotherly concord and agreement among themselves, both as an argument of their sincerity, and an ornament to their profession.

CHAP. X.

AND he arose from thence, and cometh into the coasts of Judea, by the farther side of Jordan; and the people resort unto him again; and, as he was wont, he taught them again.

2 ¶ And the pharisees came to him, and asked him, Is it lawful for a man to put away his wife? tempting him?

3 And he answered and said unto them, What did Moses command you?

4 And they said, Moses suffered to write a bill of divorcement, and put her away.

5 And Jesus answered and said unto them, For the hardness of your heart he wrote you this precept.

6 But from the beginning of the creation God made them male and female.

7 For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and cleave to his wife:

8 And they twain shall be one flesh; so then they are no more twain, but one flesh.

9 What therefore God hath joined together, let no man put asunder.

10 And in the house his disciples asked him again of the same matter.

11 And he saith unto them, Whosoever shall put away his wife, and marry another, committeth adultery against her.

12 And if a woman shall put away her husband, and be married to another, she committeth adultery.

The first verse of this chapter acquaints us with the great labour and pains our Saviour took in the exercise of his ministry, travelling from place to place, in an hot country, and on foot, to preach the gospel, when he was here upon earth; Teaching all persons, but especially ministers, by his example, to be willing to undergo pains and labour, even unto much weariness, in the service of God, and in the duties of their calling. For this is God's ordinance, that every one should feel the burden of his calling, and painfulness of it. But, Lord, how nice and delicate are some labourers in thy vineyard, who are willing to do nothing but what they can do with ease; they cannot endure to think of labouring unto weariness, but are sparing of their pains, for fear of shortening their days and hastening their ends! Whereas the lamp of our lives can never be better spent, or burnt out, than by the lighting others to heaven. The following verses acquaints us with an ensnaring question which the pharisees put to our Saviour concerning the matter of divorce, concluding, that they should entrap him in his answer, whatever it was; if he denied the lawfulness of divorce, then they would charge him with contradicting Moses who allowed it. If he affirmed it, then they would condemn him for contradicting his own doctrine, St. Matt. v. 32, for favouring men's lusts, and complying with the Jews, who upon every slight and frivolous occasion, put away their wives from them. But such was the wisdom of our Saviour in all his answers to the ensnaring pharisees: that neither their wit nor malice could lay hold on any thing to entangle him in his talk. Observe therefore, The piety and prudence of our Saviour's answer to the pharisees; he refers them to the first institution of marriage, when God made husband and wife one flesh, to the intent that matrimonial love might be both incommunicable and indissoluble; and accordingly asks them, What did Moses command you? Thereby teaching us, that the best means for deciding all doubts, and resolving all controversies, about matters of religion, is to have recourse unto the scripture, or the written word of God: What did Moses command you? Observe farther, How our Saviour, to confute the pharisees, and convince them of the unlawfulness of divorce, used by the Jews, lays down the first institution of marriage, and shews them first the author, next the time, then the end of the institution. The author, God, What God has joined together, &c.

Marriage is an ordinance of God's own appointment, as the ground and foundation of all sacred and civil society. The time of the institution was, in the beginning. Marriage is almost as old as the world, as old as nature itself; there was no sooner one person, but God divided him into two; and no sooner were there two, but he united them in one. And the end of the institution of marriage, Christ declares was this, That there might be not only an intimacy and nearness, but also an inseparable union and oneness, by means of this endearing relation: the conjugal knot is tied so close, that the bonds of matrimonial love are stronger than those of nature. Stricter is the tie betwixt husband and wife, than that betwixt parent and child, according to God's own appointment. "For this cause shall a man leave father and mother, and cleave to his wife, and they twain shall be one flesh." And whereas our Saviour adds, what God hath joined together let no man put asunder. Two things are hereby intimated to us, 1. That God is the author of the close and intimate union which is betwixt man and wife in the married condition. 2. That it is not in the power of man to untie or dissolve that union which God has made betwixt man and his wife in the married state; yea, it is a great sin to advise unto, or endeavour after, the separation of them. Observe lastly, Our Saviour's private conference with the disciples, after his public disputation with the pharisees, about this matter of divorce. He tells his disciples, and in them he tells all Christians to the end of the world, that it is utterly unlawful for man and wife to be separated by divorcement one from another, for any cause whatsoever, except only for the sin of adultery committed by either of them.

after the marriage. Learn hence, That according to the word and will of God, nothing can violate the bonds of marriage, and justify a divorce betwixt man and wife, save only the defiling of the marriage-bed, by adultery and uncleanness. This is the only case in which man and wife may lawfully part; and being for this cause parted, whether they may afterwards marry again to other persons has been much disputed; but that the innocent and injured person, whether man or woman (for there is an equal right on both sides) may not marry again, seems very unreasonable; for why should one suffer for another's fault?

13 ¶ And they brought young children to him that he should touch them; and his disciples rebuked those that brought them.

14 But when Jesus saw it, he was much displeased, and said unto them, Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of God.

15 Verily I say unto you, Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, he shall not enter therein.

16 And he took them up in his arms, put his hands upon them and blessed them.

Observe here, A solemn action performed; children are brought to Christ to be blessed by him. Where note, 1. The persons brought, children, young children, sucking children as the word imports, St. Luke xviii. 15. They brought them in their arms, not led them by the hands. 2. The person they are brought unto, Jesus Christ. But for what end? Not to baptize them, but to bless them; the parents looking upon Christ as a prophet, a great prophet, the great prophet, do bring their infants to him, that they might receive the benefit of his blessing and prayers. Whence learn, 1. That infants are capable of benefit by Jesus Christ. 2. That it is the best office that parents can perform unto their children, to bring them unto Christ, that they may be made partakers of that benefit. 3. If infants be capable of benefit by Christ, if capable of his blessing on earth and presence in heaven, if they be subjects of his kingdom of grace, and heirs of his kingdom of glory, then may they be baptized; for they that are in covenant, have a right to the seal of the covenant. If Christ denies not infants the kingdom of heaven, which is the greater, what reason have ministers to deny them the benefit of baptism, which is the less?

17 And when he was gone forth into the way, there came one running, and kneeled to him, and asked him, Good Master, what shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?

Observe here, 1. A person addressing himself to Christ with an important question in his mouth. This person was a young man, a rich man, and a ruler; a young man in the prime of his age, a rich man in the fulness of his wealth, and a ruler in the prime of his authority and power. From whence learn, That for young men, rich men, especially noblemen, to inquire the way to salvation, is very commendable, but very rare. Observe, 2. As the person addressing, so the manner of the address, he came running and kneeled to Christ. Where observe his voluntariness, he came of himself, not drawn by other's importunity, but drawn by his own personal afflictions. And his readiness, he came running. This shewed his zeal and forwardness to meet with Christ, and be resolved by him. And, lastly, his humility; he kneeled to him, as an eminent prophet and teacher, not knowing him to be the Son of God. Observe, 3. The address itself, What shall I do to inherit eternal life? Where note, 1. He believes the certainty of a future state. 2. He professes his desire of an eternal happiness in that state. 3. He declares his readiness to do some good thing, in order to the obtaining of that happiness. Hence learn, That the light of nature, or natural religion, teaches men that good works are necessary to salvation; or that some good thing must be done by them, who at death expect eternal life. It is not talking well, and professing well, but doing well, that entitles us to heaven and eternal life.

18 And Jesus said unto him, Why callest thou me good? there is none good but one, that is God,

As if Christ had said, Why callest thou me good, when thou dost not believe or own me to be God? For there is none good, that is, essentially or originally good, absolutely and immutably good, but God only; nor any derivately good, but he that receiveth his goodness from God also: there is no mere man that is absolutely and perfectly good of himself, but by participation and derivation from God only. See the note on St. Matt. xix. 17.

19 Thou knowest the commandments, Do not commit adultery, Do not kill, Do not steal, Do not bear false witness, Defraud not, Honour thy father and mother.

Observe here, That the duties which our Saviour instances in, are the duties of the second table, which hypocrites are most failing in. But nothing is a better evidence of our unfeigned love to God, than the sincere performance of our duty to our neighbours. Love to man is a fruit and testimony of our love to God; "for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?" 1 John iv. 20. Learn hence, that such as are defective in the duties of the second table, charity and justice, do make but a counterfeit shew of religion, though they pretend to the highest measures and degrees of love to God. Here note, That there are two ways of injuring our neighbour, which ought to be avoided; namely, 1. By theft; and this either privately and clandestinely, without the knowledge of the owner; or openly and by force, against the consent of the owner: both these are forbidden in the eighth commandment. 2. By secret and cunning devices, where the law and a pretence of right is made use of to cover the injury. This is forbidden in the tenth commandment, and here expressed by, Thou shalt not defraud. And surely all such endeavours to defraud, must shew a very covetous mind inclining a person against the dictates of his own conscience, to defraud another of his right.

20 And he answered and said unto him, Master, all these have I observed from my youth.

This assertion of the young man might be very true, according to the pharisees' sense and interpretation of the law, which only condemned the gross outward act, not the inward lust and motion of the heart. An outside obedience to the law this young man had performed; this made him think well of himself, and conclude the goodness of his own condition. Learn hence, How prone men are to think the best of themselves, and to have too high an opinion of their own goodness and righteousness before God; All these things have I kept from my youth. It is a natural corruption in men to think too well of themselves, and of their own goodness and righteousness before God: but it is very dangerous and fatal so to do.

21 Then Jesus beholding him, loved him, and said unto him, One thing thou lackest: go thy way, sell whatsoever thou hast, and give to the poor; and thou shalt have treasure in heaven; and come, take up the cross, and follow me.

22 And he was sad at that saying, and went away grieved; for he had great possessions.

Observe here, 1. Christ's compassion towards this young man. He loved him with a love of pity and compassion, with a love of courtesy and respect. There may be some very amiable and lovely qualities in natural and unregenerate men; and goodness, in what kind or degree soever it is, doth attract and draw forth Christ's love towards a person. If Christ did love civility, what respect has he for sincere sanctity. Observe, 2. Our Lord's admonition. One thing thou lackest, which was true self-denial, in renouncing the sin of covetousness, and the inordinate love of worldly wealth. We ought, upon God's call, to maintain such a readiness of mind, as to be willing to part with all for God's sake which is dear unto us in this world. Observe, 3. Our Lord's injunction, Sell what thou hast, and give to the poor. This was not a common, but a special precept, belonging particularly to this young man. It was a commandment of trial given to him, like that given to Abraham, Gen. xxii. To convince him of his corrupt confidence in his riches; yet it is thus far of general use to us all, to teach us to condemn worldly possessions, as to be willing to part with them when they hinder our happiness and salvation. It follows, And take up the cross; an allusion to the Roman custom, when the malefactor was to be crucified, he bore his cross upon his shoulder, and carried it to the place of execution. It is not the making, but the patient bearing of the cross, which is our duty. Learn, That all Christ's followers should prepare their shoulders for Christ's cross. To bear the cross, implies faithfulness and integrity without shifting, patience and submission without murmuring, joy and cheerfulness without fainting. Observe, 4. The effect which our Saviour's admonition had upon this young person: He was sad and grieved at that saying. Thence note, 1. That carnal men are sad, and exceeding sorrowful, when they cannot win heaven in their own way. 2. That such as are wedded to the world, will renounce Christ rather than the world, when the world and Christ stand in competition.

23 And Jesus looked round about, and saith unto his disciples, How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God!

24 And the disciples were astonished at his words. But Jesus answereth again, and saith unto them, Children, how hard is it for them that trust in riches to enter into the kingdom of God!

25 It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God.

26 And they were astonished out of measure, saying among themselves, Who can then be saved?

27 And Jesus, looking upon them, saith, With men it is impossible, but not with God: for with God all things are possible.

From this discourse of our holy Lord's concerning the danger of riches, and the difficulty that attends rich men in their way to heaven, we may collect and gather, first, That rich men do certainly meet with more difficulties in their way to heaven than other men. It is difficult to withdraw their affection from riches, to place their supreme love upon God in the midst of their abundance. It is difficult to depend entirely upon God in a rich condition: for the rich man's wealth is his strong tower. Secondly, That yet the fault lies not in riches, but in rich men; who by placing their trust, and reposing their confidence in riches, do render themselves incapable of the kingdom of God. Observe, 3. The proverbial speech which our Saviour makes use of to set forth the difficulty of a rich man's salvation: It is easier for a camel to go through a needle's eye. This was a proverb among the Jews, signifying a thing of great difficulty, next to an impossibility; and it implies thus much, That it is not only a very great difficulty, but an utter impossibility, for such as abound in worldly wealth, and place their confidence therein, to be saved, without an extraordinary grace and assistance from God. It is hard for God to make a rich man happy, because he thinks himself happy without God. Observe, 4. The disciples are affected with wonder and admiration at this doctrine of our Saviour's, and cry out, Who then can be saved? Learn thence, That such are the special and peculiar difficulties which lie in the rich man's way to salvation, that their getting to heaven is matter of wonder and admiration to the disciples of Christ. Observe, 5. How our Saviour resolves this doubt, by telling his disciples, That what was impossible with men, was possible with God; implying, That it is impossible for any man, rich or poor, by his own natural strength, to get to heaven. And, 2. That when we are discouraged with the sense of our own impotency, we should consider the power of God, and fix our faith upon it; With God all things are possible.

28 Then Peter began to say unto him, Lo, we have left all, and followed thee.

29 And Jesus answered and said, Verily I say unto you, There is no man that hath left house, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my sake and the gospel's, 30 But he shall receive an hundred-fold now in this time, houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, and children, and lands, with persecutions; and in the world to come, eternal life.

31 But many that are first shall be last; and the last, first.

The apostles having heard our Saviour's command to sell all and give to the poor, St. Peter, in the name of the rest, tells Christ, that they had left all to follow him. Where note, How Peter magnifies that little which he had left for Christ, and ushers it in with a note of admiration, Lo! we have left all. Learn hence, That though it be very little that we suffer for Christ, and have to forsake upon his account, yet are we apt to magnify and extol it, as if it were some great matter: Behold, we have left all, and followed thee. Observe next, Our Lord's kind and gracious answer, that those that leave all to follow him, shall be no losers by him, we may be losers for Christ, we shall never be losers by him, for whatever we part with in this world for the sake of Christ, "Houses or lands, brethren or sisters, we shall receive an hundred-fold now in this life." But how so? Non formaliter, sed eminenter; non in specie, sed in valore: "Not in kind, but in equivalency," not an hundred brethren, sisters, or lands in kind, but he shall enjoy that in God, which all creatures would be to him if they were multiplied an hundred times; and the gifts and graces, the comforts and consolations of the Holy Spirit, shall be an hundred times better portion than any thing we can part with for the sake of Christ. For the sense of those words, The first shall be last, &c. see the note, on Matt. xx. 19.

32 ¶ And they were in the way going up to Jerusalem; and Jesus went before them; and they were amazed; and as they followed they were afraid. And he took again the twelve, and began to tell them what things should happen unto him.

33 Saying, Behold we go up to Jerusalem; and the Son of man shall be delivered unto the chief priests, and unto the scribes; and they shall condemn him to death, and shall deliver him to the Gentiles:

34 And they shall mock him, and shall scourge him, and shall spit upon him, and shall kill him; and the third day he shall rise again.

This is at least the third time that Christ had acquainted his disciples with his approaching sufferings. The first time he told his disciples of his death in general; the second time he declares the means, by treason; now he tells them the manner, by crucifying him: all this he did to prevent their dejection at his sufferings. Learn hence, That it is highly necessary that the doctrine of the cross be often preached to us, that so being armed with expectation of sufferings before they come, we may be the less dismayed and disheartened when they come. Our Lord's forewarning his disciples so frequently of his death and sufferings, was to fore arm them with expectations of his sufferings, and with preparation for their own. Observe farther, Who were the persons that were the instrumental causes of our Saviour's death, they were both Jews and Gentiles: "The Son of man shall be delivered to the chief priests, and they shall deliver him to the Gentiles." As both Jews and Gentiles had a hand in the death and sufferings of our Lord Jesus Christ, so are they by faith capable of an interest in the merit of his death, and in the virtue and efficacy of his sufferings. Christ offered up his blood to God on the behalf of them that shed it.

35 And James and John the sons of Zebedee came unto him, saying, Master, we would that thou shouldest do for us whatsoever we shall desire.

36 And he said unto them, What would ye that I should do for you?

37 They said unto him, Grant unto us that we may sit, one on thy right hand and the other on thy left hand, in thy glory.

38 But Jesus said unto them, Ye know not what ye ask: can ye drink of the cup that I drink of? and be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with?

39 And they said unto him, We can. And Jesus said unto them, Ye shall indeed drink of the cup that I drink of; and with the baptism that I am baptized withal shall ye be baptized:

40 But to sit on my right hand and on my left hand, is not mine to give, but it shall be given to them for whom it is prepared.

41 And when the ten heard it, they began to be much displeased with James and John.

Observe here, 1. The ambitious suit and request of the two apostles, James and John, for dignity and superiority. "Grant that we may sit, one on thy right hand and the other on thy left hand, in thy glory, or in thy kingdom." Where observe, That by Christ's kingdom and glory, they understood an earthly temporal kingdom; for of that sort the Jews did expect the kingdom of the Messiah should be, and the disciples themselves were tainted with the common errors. Learn hence, That ambition and inordinate desire of worldly honour and dignity, is a sin very natural and incident to the best of men: who can wonder to see some sparks of ambition in the holiest of God's ministers, when Christ's own apostles were not free from aspiring thoughts, even when they lay in the bosom of our Saviour! Observe, 2. Both the unseasonableness and unreasonableness of this request made by James and John; Christ speaks of his sufferings to them, and they sue for dignity and great places from him. In optimis non nihil est pessimi: the holiest, the wisest, and the best of men are not wholly free from passionate infirmities; who could have thought that when our Saviour had been preaching the doctrine of the cross to his disciples, that they should at the same time be seeking and suing to him for secular dignity and honour, pre-eminence and power? but the best of men are but men; none are in a state of perfection on this side heaven. Observe, 3. Our Saviour's answer to his disciples ambitious request, and the course which he takes to cool their ambition; he tells them, they must expect here, not crowns on their heads, but a cross on their backs; they must first taste of his sufferings, before they partake of his glory, and those who suffer most for Christ shall partake of the highest dignity and glory from him. Observe, 4. The presumptuous confidence which the apostles had of their own strength and ability for sufferings; Are ye able, says Christ, to drink of my cup? We are able, says the disciples. Alas! poor men, when it came to the trial, they all cowardly forsook him and fled. Those that are least acquainted with suffering, are usually the most confident undertakers. See note on Matt. xx. 22, 23.

42 But Jesus called them to him, and saith unto them, Ye know that they which are accounted to rule over the Gentiles, exercise lordship over them; and their great ones exercise authority upon them.

43 But so shall it not be among you; but whosoever will be great among you, shall be your minister.

44 And whosoever of you will be the chiefest, shall be servant of all.

45 For even the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many.

To the end that our blessed Saviour might effectually quench those unhappy sparks of ambition which were kindled in the apostles' minds, he tells them that supremacy and dominion belong to secular princes, not to gospel ministers, who ought to carry themselves with humility and condescension one towards another. Not that Christ directs to a parity and equality amongst his ministers, but only condemns the elevation of superiority, and the love of pre-eminence. Learn hence, 1. That the ministers of Christ ought to be so far from effecting a domination and superiority over their brethren, that in imitation of their Lord and Master, they ought to account themselves fellow-servants: "The Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister." Observe, 2. That such ministers as do love and affect pre-eminence and superiority are most unfit for it; and they deserve it best who seek it least. 3. That the dignity and honour which the ministers of Christ should chiefly, yea only, affect, is in another world; and the way to be greatest and highest there, is to be low and humble, mean in our own eyes, and little in our own esteem. See note on Matt. xx. 28.

46 ¶ And they came to Jericho. And as he went out of Jericho with his disciples, and a great number of people, blind Bartimeus, the son of Timæus, sat by the highway-side begging.

47 And when he heard that it was Jesus of Nazareth, he began to cry out and say, Jesus, thou Son of David, have mercy on me.

48 And many charged him that he should hold his peace; but he cried the more a great deal, Thou Son of David, have mercy on me.

49 And Jesus stood still, and commanded him to be called; and they call the blind man, saying unto him, Be of good comfort, rise; he calleth thee.

50 And he, casting away his garment, arose and came to Jesus.

51 And Jesus answered and said unto him, What wilt thou that I should do unto thee? The blind man said unto him, Lord, That I might receive my sight.

52 And Jesus said unto him, Go thy way: thy faith hath made thee whole. And immediately he received his sight, and followed Jesus in the way.

This chapter concludes with the recital of a famous miracle wrought by our blessed Saviour upon blind Bartimeus, in the sight of a great multitude which followed him. Where note, 1. The blind man's faith, in acknowledging Jesus to be the Messiah; for so much the title of the Son of David signified. 2. His fervency, in crying so earnestly to Christ for mercy and healing. Have mercy upon me thou Son of David. A true sense of want will make the soul cry unto Christ with earnestness and importunity. Observe, 3. The great compassion and condescension of Christ towards this poor blind man, he stood still, he called him, and enlightened his eyes. A mighty instance of Christ's divine power: he that can open blind eyes with a touch of his finger, and that by his own power, is really God; his touch is an omnipotent touch. Observe, 4. Although Christ well knew the condition of this blind man, yet before he will restore his sight, he must sensibly complain of the want of sight, and cry unto him for help and healing. Christ knows all his creatures' wants, but takes no notice of them till they make them known to him by prayer. Observe, 5. The course which the blind man takes to express his thankfulness to Christ for recovered sight; He rose, and followed Jesus. Mercy from Christ is then well improved, when it engages us to follow Christ. This should be the effect of all salvations wrought for us. He praiseth God best that serveth him most. The life of thankfulness consists in the thankfulness of the life.

CHAP. XI.

AND when they came nigh to Jerusalem, unto Bethphage and Bethany, at the mount of Olives, he sendeth forth two of his disciples,

2 And saith unto them, Go your way into the village over against you; and, as soon as ye be entered into it, ye shall find a colt tied, whereon never man sat; loose him, and bring him.

3 And if any man say unto you, Why do ye this? say ye, that the Lord hath need of him; and straightway he will send him hither.

4 And they went their way, and found a colt tied by the door without, in a place where two ways met; and they loose him.

5 And certain of them that stood there, said unto them, What do ye loosing the colt?

6 And they said unto them even as Jesus had commanded: and they let them go.

The former part of this chapter acquaints us with our Saviour's solemn and triumphant riding into the city of Jerusalem: he who in all his journeys travelled like a poor man on foot, without noise and without train; now he goes up to Jerusalem to die for sinners, he rides, to shew his great forwardness to lay down his life for us: the beast he rides on is an ass, as the manner of kings and great princes anciently was, and to fulfil that prophecy, Zech. xi. 9. Tell ye the daughter of Zion, Behold thy king cometh riding upon an ass. It was also an ass upon which man never sat before; signifying thereby, that the most ugly and untamed creatures become obsequious to Christ. Grotius observes, That such animals as had not been employed in the use of man, were wont to be chosen for sacred uses. Even heathens adjudged those things most proper for the services of the Gods which had never been put to profane uses. Thus in 1. Sam. vi. 7. we read, that the Philistines return the ark in a new cart, drawn by heifers never before put to the yoke; they thinking them polluted by being put to profane work. Our Saviour here chooses an ass which had never been backed before; and that the colt should so patiently suffer Christ to ride upon him, was miraculous. And this was a borrowed ass, whereby our Saviour's right to all the creatures was manifested, and accordingly he bids his disciples tell the owner, That the Lord hath need of him. Not your lord, or our lord, but the Lord; that is, he that is Lord of all, whose are the cattle on a thousand hills. Observe farther, That notwithstanding Christ's supreme right to the colt, he will not have it taken without the owner's knowledge and consent, Tell him that the Lord hath need of him. Observe lastly, What a clear and full demonstration Christ gave of his divine nature; of his omniscience, in foreseeing and foretelling the event; of his omnipotency, in inclining the heart, and overruling the will, of the owner, to let the colt go; and of his sovereignty, as he was Lord of his creatures, to command and call for their service when he needed them.

7 And they brought the colt to Jesus, and cast their garments on him; and he sat upon him.

8 And many spread their garments in the way: and others cut down branches off the trees, and strawed them in the way.

9 And they that went before, and they that followed, cried, saying, Hosanna: Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord:

10 Blessed be the kingdom of our father David, that cometh in the name of the Lord; Hosanna in the highest.

Observe, 1. The obedience of his disciples. First, they did as Jesus had commanded, they do not dispute their Lord's commands, nor raise objections, nor are afraid of danger; when our call is clear, our obedience must be speedy; what Christ commands we are not to dispute, but to obey. Observe, 2. The actions of the multitude in acknowledging Christ to be their King: they cast their garments on the ground, for him to ride upon, according to the custom of princes when they ride in state; and do not only disrobe their backs, but expend their breath in joyful acclamations and loud hosannas, wishing all manner of prosperity to their meek but mighty King. In this princely, yet poor and despicable pomp, doth our Saviour enter the famous city of Jerusalem. O how far was our holy Lord from affecting worldly greatness and grandeur; He despised that glory which worldly hearts fondly admire; yet because he was a King, he would be proclaimed such, and have his kingdom confessed, applauded, and blessed. But that it might appear that his kingdom was not of this world, he abandons all worldly magnificence. O glorious, yet homely pomp! O meek, but mighty prince!

11 And Jesus entered into Jerusalem, and into the temple: and when he had looked round about upon all things, and now the even tide was come, he went out unto Bethany with the twelve.

12 ¶ And on the morrow, when they were come from Bethany, he was hungry:

13 And seeing a fig-tree afar off, having leaves, he came, if haply he might find any thing thereon; and when he came to it he found nothing but leaves: for the time of figs was not yet.

14 And Jesus answered and said unto it, No man eat fruit of thee hereafter for ever. And his disciples heard it.

Some move the question here, how Christ came to curse a tree for want of that fruit which the season afforded not? It is answered, that naturalists observe, that the fig-tree puts forth her fruit as soon as her leaf; that tree is always bearing; and whilst one fig is ripe, another is green. And whereas it is said, That the time of figs was not yet; the meaning is, "That the time of gathering of figs was not yet;" but the tree having leaves, shewed it might have fruit: accordingly Christ goes in expectation of its having fruit; but finding none, either ripe or green, he curses the tree for totally disappointing his expectation. Besides, Christ was wont not only to speak, but work parables; and this action of his was typical, an emblem of Jerusalem's destruction in general, and of every person's in particular that satisfies himself with a withered profession, bearing leaves only, but no fruit: as this fig-tree was, so are they nigh unto cursing. From whence note, That all such as content themselves with a fruitless profession of religion, are in great danger of having God's blasting added to their barrenness.

15 And they come to Jerusalem. And Jesus went into the temple, and began to cast out them that sold and bought in the temple, and overthrew the tables of the money-changers, and the seats of them that sold doves;

16 And would not suffer that any man should carry any vessel through the temple.

17 And he taught, saying unto them, Is it not written, My house shall be called of all nations, The house of prayer? but ye have made it a den of thieves.

18 And the scribes and chief priests heard it, and sought how they might destroy him: for they feared him, because all the people were astonished at his doctrine.

19 And when even was come, he went out of the city.

No sooner had our blessed Saviour entered Jerusalem, but his first walk was to the temple, and his first work there was to purge and reform. All reformation of manners must begin at the house of God. Yet observe, Our Lord's business at the temple was not to ruin, but reform it only. Places dedicated to public worship, if profaned and polluted, ought to be purged from their abuses, not pulled down and destroyed, because they have been abused. But what was the profanation of the temple, which so offended our Saviour; I answer, in the outward court of the temple there was a public mart, or market kept, where were sold oxen, sheep, and doves for sacrifice. Many of the Jews coming an hundred miles to the temple, it was burdensome to bring their sacrifices so far with them; wherefore the priests ordered, that sheep and oxen, meal and oil, and such other requisites for sacrifice, should be had for money close by the altar, to the great ease of the offerer; nothing could be more plausible than this plea. But the fairest pretences cannot bear out a sin with God. Therefore our blessed Saviour, in a just indignation, whips out these chapmen, casts down their tables, and vindicates the honour and reputation of his Father's house. Learn hence, That there is reverence due to God's house, for the owner's sake, and for the service sake. Nothing but holiness can become the place where God is worshipped in the beauty of holiness. Observe lastly, The reason which our Saviour gives for this act of his: Is it not written, says he, my house shall be called the house of prayer? Where by prayer is to be understood the whole worship and service of God, of which prayer is an eminent and principal part. That which gives denomination to an house is certainly the chief work to be done in that house. Now God's house being called an house of prayer, certainly implies; that prayer is the chief and principal work to be performed in his house. Yet take we heed, that we set not the ordinances of God at variance, we must not idolize one ordinance, and vilify another, but reverence them all.

20 And in the morning, as they passed by, they saw the fig-tree dried up from the roots.

21 And Peter, calling to remembrance, saith unto him, Master, behold, the fig-tree which thou cursedst is withered away.

22 And Jesus, answering, saith unto them, Have faith in God.

23 For verily I say unto you, That whosoever shall say unto this mountain, Be thou removed, and be thou cast into the sea; and shall not doubt in his heart, but shall believe that those things which he saith shall come to pass; he shall have whatsoever he saith.

24 Therefore I say unto you, What things soever ye desire when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them.

The blasting and sudden withering of the fig-tree at the word of Christ, plainly shewed his divine power, and by this miraculous operation, our Saviour designed to shew his disciples the mighty power of faith; that is, a full persuasion of the power of God, that he is able, and of the goodness of God, that he is willing, to grant whatever we ask according to his will, that has a tendency to his glory and our good. Learn hence, That faith is a necessary and principal ingredient in prayer, praying without faith, is like to a man's shooting without a bullet: it makes a noise, but doth no execution. Secondly, That whatsoever good thing God has made the matter of his promise, shall be given to good men in a way of performance, provided they pray in faith. "Whatsoever ye desire, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them."

25 And when ye stand praying, forgive, if ye have ought against any; that your Father also which is in heaven may forgive you your trespasses.

26 But if you do not forgive, neither will your Father which is in heaven forgive your trespasses.

There are two qualifications requisite in prayer, if we expect to find acceptance with God, namely, faith and love: to the first Christ had spoken in the former verse, to the latter in this. When ye stand praying, forgive. It was ordinary for the Jews to pray standing, yet in their solemn days of fasting they did kneel, and prostrate themselves before the Lord; but the Christians usually kneeled down and prayed, Acts ix. 40. Now the command here to forgive those that offend us before we pray, shews, 1. That no resentments of what our brother doth, should stick long upon our spirits, because they indispose us for that duty we are to be continually prepared for. 2. That there is some sort and kind of forgiveness to be exercised towards an offending brother before he asks it, and though he doth not shew any token of repentance and sorrow for it; because I am to pray for him out of love to him, and must lift up pure hands, without wrath. Learn hence, That they who are suing for, and expecting forgiveness from God, must exercise forgiveness towards others, or else their prayers are a sort of imprecation on themselves. 2. Observe, Christ speaks indefinitely; When ye pray, forgive. He doth not say, your brethren, but men: Matt. vi. 14. If we forgive men their trespasses; that is, all men, good and bad, friends and enemies; if we forgive one another freely, our heavenly Father will forgive us fully. Our forgiving one another is the indispensable condition of God's forgiving us, and of hearing the prayers which are put up by us.

27 ¶ And they come again to Jerusalem: and, as he was walking in the temple, there come to him the chief priests, and the scribes, and the elders, 28 And say unto him, By what authority doest thou these things? And who gave thee this authority to do these things?

29 And Jesus answered and said unto them, I will also ask of you one question, and answer me, and I will tell you by what authority I do these things.

30 The baptism of John, was it from heaven, or of men? answer me.

31 And they reasoned with themselves, saying, If we shall say from heaven: he will say, Why then did you not believe him?

32 But if we shall say, Of men, they feared the people: for all men counted John, that he was a prophet indeed.

33 And they answered and said unto Jesus, We cannot tell. And Jesus, answering, saith unto them. Neither do I tell you by what authority I do these things.

The pharisees having often questioned our Saviour's doctrine before, they call in question his mission and authority now, although they might easily have understood his divine mission by his daily miracles: for Almighty God never empowered any, to work miracles that were not sent by him. Our blessed Saviour, understanding their design, answers them one question by asking them another: says Christ; That baptism of John, was it from heaven, or of men? Was it of divine institution, or of human invention? implying very plainly, that the calling of such as call themselves the ministers of God, ought to be from God: "No man ought to take that honour upon himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron," Heb. v. 4. The pharisees reply, They could not tell whence John had his mission and authority; this was a manifest untruth. By refusing to tell the truth, they fall into a lye against the truth; one sin ensnares and draws men into the commission of many more. Such as will not speak exact truth, according to their knowledge, fall into the sin of lying against their knowledge and their conscience. Our Saviour answers them, Neither tell I you by what authority I do these things. He doth not say, I cannot, or I will not tell you, but I do not, I need not tell you; because the mi-acles which I work before you are a sufficient demonstration of my divine commission, that I am sent of God amongst you : for God never set the seal of his omnipotence to a lye, nor impowered an impostor to work real miracles.

CHAP. XII.

AND he began to speak unto them by A parables : A certain man planted a vineyard, and set an hedge about it, and digged a place for the wine-fat, and built a tower, and let it out to husbandmen, and went into a far country.

2 And at the season he sent to the husbandmen a servant, that he might receive from the husbandmen of the fruit of the vineyard.

3 And they caught him, and beat him, and sent him away empty.

4 And again he sent unto them another servant; and at him they cast stones, and wounded him in the head, and sent him away shamefully handled.

5 And again he sent another; and him they killed, and many others; beating some, and killing some.

6 Having yet, therefore, one son, his well-beloved, he sent him also last unto them, saying, They will reverence my son.

7 But those husbandmen said amongst themselves, This is the heir, come, let us kill him, and the inheritance shall be ours.

8 And they took him, and killed him; and cast him out of the vineyard.

In this parable, the Jewish church is compared to a vineyard; Almighty God to an householder; his planting, pruning, and fencing his vineyard, denotes his care to furnish his church with all needful helps and means to make it spiritually fruitful; His letting it out to husbandmen, signifies his committing the care of his church to the priests and Levites; the public pastors and governors of the church: His servants are the prophets and apostles, whom he sent time after time to admonish them to bring forth fruit answerable to the cost which God had expended on them: His Son is Jesus Christ, whom the rulers of the Jewish Church slew and murdered. The design and scope of the parable is to discover to the Jews, particularly to the pharisees, their obstinate impenitency under all means of grace, their bloody cruelty towards the prophets of God, their tremendous guilt in crucifying the Son of God; for all which God would unchurch them finally, ruin their nation, and set up a church among the Gentiles, that should bring forth better fruit than the Jewish church ever did. From the whole, note, 1. That the church is God's vineyard. A vineyard is a place inclosed, a place well planted, well fruited, and exceeding dear and precious to the planter and the owner of it. 2. As dear as God's vineyard is unto him, in case of barrenness and unfruitfulness, it is in great danger of being destroyed and laid waste by him. 3. That the only way and course to engage God's care over his vineyard, and to prevent its being given to the other husbandmen, is to give him the fruit of it; it is but a vineyard that God left out; it is no inheritance. No people ever had so many promises of God's favour, as the Jews had, nor ever enjoyed so many privileges, whilst they continued in his favour, as they did; yet though they were the first and the natural branches, "they are broken off, and we Gentiles stand by faith; let us not be high-minded, but fear," Rom. xi. 20.

9 What shall, therefore, the Lord of the vineyard do? he will come and destroy the husbandmen, and will give the vineyard unto others.

10 And have ye not read this scripture? The stone which the builders rejected is become the head of the corner:

11 This was the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes.

12 And they sought to lay hold on him, but feared the people: for they knew that he had spoken the parable against them; and they left him, and went their way.

These words of our Saviour are taken out of the cxviiith psalm, which the Jews understood to be a prophecy of the Messiah, and accordingly Christ applies them to himself: the church is the building intended, Christ himself the stone rejected. The rejecters, or the builders rejecting, are the heads of the Jewish church; that is the chief priests and pharisees. God, the great master builder of his church, takes this precious foundation-stone out of the rubbish, and sets it in the head of the corner. Nevertheless, there are many that stumble at his stone; some through ignorance, others through fear and malice; some are offended at his person, others at his doctrine. "These shall be broken in pieces; but on whomsoever this stone shall fall, it will grind them to powder;" that is, Christ himself will fall as a burdensome stone upon all them that knowingly and maliciously oppose him; and particularly upon the Jews; who not only rejected, but persecuted and destroyed him. Thus Christ tells the chief priests and pharisees their particular doom, and also declares what will be the fatal issue of all that opposition which is made against himself and his church; it will terminate in the inevitable destruction of all its opposers; "Whosoever shall fall on this stone shall be broken; and on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind them to powder."

13 ¶ And they send unto him certain of the Pharisees, and of the Herodians, to catch him in his words.

14 And when they were come, they say unto him, Master, we know that thou art true and carest for no man; for thou regard-est not the person of men, but teachest the way of God in truth: Is it lawful to give tribute to Cæsar, or not?

15 Shall we give, or shall we not give? But he, knowing their hypocrisy, said unto them, Why tempt ye me? bring me a penny, that I may see it.

16 And they brought it. And he saith unto them, Whose is this image and superscription? and they said unto him, Cæsar's.

17 And Jesus answering, said unto them, Render to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and to God the things that are God's. And they marvelled at him.

Observe here, A grand design to entangle our blessed Saviour in his discourse. Where note, 1. The persons employed to put the ensnaring question to Christ, namely, the Pharisees and Herodians. The pharisees was against paying tribute to Cæsar, looking upon themselves as a free people, and the emperor as an usurper, but the Herodians were for it. Herod being made by the Roman emperor king over the Jews, he was very zealous for having the Jews pay tribute to Cæsar; and such of the Jews as side with him, particularly his courtiers and favourites, were called Herodians. Note, 2. The policy and wicked craft here used, in employing these two contrary parties to put this question to our Saviour concerning tribute, thereby laying him under a necessity as they hoped, to offend one side, let him answer how he would; if, to please the pharisees, he denied paying tribute to Cæsar; then he is accused of sedition, if, to gratify the Herodians, he voted for paying tribute to Cæsar, then he is looked upon as an enemy to the liberty of his country, and exposed to popular odium. Thus has it all along been the practice of Satan and his instruments, to draw the ministers of God into dislike, either with the magistrates or with the people, that they may fall under the censure of the one, or the displeasure of the other. Observe, 3. With what wisdom and caution our Lord answers them; he calls for the Roman penny, answering to sevenpence halfpenny of our money, two of which they paid by way of tribute, as poll money for every head to the emperor. Christ asks them, Whose image or superscription this their coin bore? They answer, Cæsar's. Render then, says he, to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's. As if our Lord had said, "Your admitting of the Roman coin among you is an evidence that you are under subjection to the emperor, because the coining and imposing of money is an act of sovereign authority; therefore you have owned Cæsar's authority over you by accepting of his coin amongst you: give unto him his just dues, and render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's." Learn hence, 1. That our Saviour was no enemy to magistracy and civil government; there was no truer paymaster of the king's dues, than he that was King of kings; he preached it, and he practised it, Matt. xvii. 27. 2. Where a kingdom is in subjection to a temporal prince, whether his right be by descent, election, or by conquest, the subjects ought, from a principle of conscience, to pay tribute to him. 3. That as Christ is no enemy to the civil rights of princes, and his religion exempts none from paying their civil dues: so princes should be as careful not to rob him of his divine honour, as he is not to wrong them of their civil rights; as Christ requires all his followers to render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, so should princes oblige all their subjects to render unto God the things that are God's.

18 ¶ Then come unto him the Sadducees, which say there is no resurrection; and they asked him, saying, 19 Master, Moses wrote unto us, If a man's brother die, and leave his wife behind him, and leave no children, that his brother should take his wife, and raise up seed unto his brother.

20 Now there were seven brethren: and the first took a wife, and dying left no seed.

21 And the second took her, and died, neither left he any seed: and the third likewise.

22 And the seven had her, and left no seed: Last of all the woman died also.

23 In the resurrection, therefore, when they shall rise, whose wife shall she be of them? for the seven had her to wife.

24 And Jesus answering, said unto them, Do ye not therefore err, because ye know not the scriptures, neither the power of God?

25 For when they shall rise from the dead they neither marry nor are given in marriage; but are as the angels which are in heaven.

26 And as touching the dead that they rise, have ye not read in the book of Moses, how in the bush God spake unto him, saying, I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob?

27 He is not the God of the dead, but the God of the living: Ye, therefore, do greatly err.

Our blessed Saviour having put the Pharisees and Herodians to silence in the former verses, here he encounters the Sadducees. This sect derived its name from one Sadock, who denied the immortality of the soul, the resurrection of the body, and angels, and spirits. Here they propound a case to our Saviour, of a woman who had seven brethren successively to her husbands: they demand whose wife of the seven this woman should be at the resurrection? As if they had said, "If there be a resurrection of bodies, surely there will be of relations too; and the other world, if there be such a place, will be like this, in which men will marry, as they do here: and if so, whose wife of the seven shall this woman be, they all having an equal claim to her?" Now our Saviour, for resolving of this question, first shews the different state of men in this and in the other world. The children of this world, says our Saviour, marry and are given in marriage, but in the resurrection they do neither. As if Christ had said, "After men have lived a while in this world, they die, and therefore marriage is necessary to maintain a succession of mankind; but in the other world, men shall become immortal, and live for ever, and then the reason of marriage will wholly cease; for when men can die no more, there will be no need of any new supplies of mankind." Observe, secondly, That our Saviour having got clear of the sadducees' objection, by taking away the foundation and ground work of it, he produceth an argument for the proof of the soul's immortality and the body's resurrection. "Those to whom Almighty God pronounces himself a God, are certainly alive; but God pronounced himself a God to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, many hundred years after their bodies were dead, therefore their souls are yet alive; for otherwise God could not be their God: because he is not God of the dead but of the living. From the whole note, 1. That there is no opinion so monstrous and absurd, that having had a mother, will die for lack of a nurse. The beastly opinion of the mortality of the soul, and the annihilation of the body, find sadducees to profess and propagate it. Note, 2. The certainty of another life after this, in which men shall be eternally happy, or intolerably miserable; accordingly as they behave themselves here. Though some men live like beasts, yet they shall not die like them, nor shall their last end be like theirs. Note, 3. That glorified saints in the morning of the resurrection, shall be like the glorious angels; not like them in essence and nature, but like them in their properties and qualities, in holiness and purity, in immortality and incorruptibility: as also in their manner of living, they shall stand in no more need of meat and drink than the angels do, but shall live the same heavenly, immortal, and incorruptible life that the angels live. Note, 4. That those who are in covenant with God, whose God the Lord is, their souls do immediately pass into glory, and their bodies at the resurrection shall be sharers in the same happiness with their souls; if God be just, their souls must live, and their bodies must rise: for good must be rewarded, and wicked men punished somewhere; either in this life or in another. God will most certainly, at one time or other, plentifully reward the righteous, and punish the wicked doers. But, this being not always done in this life, the justice of God requires that it must be done in the next.

28 And one of the scribes came, and having heard them reasoning together, and perceiving that he had answered them well, asked him, Which is the first commandment of all?

29 And Jesus answered him, The first of all the commandments is, Hear, O Israel; the Lord our God is one Lord:

30 And thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength. This is the first commandment.

31 And the second is like, namely, this, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. There is none other commandment greater than these:

32 And the scribe said unto him, Well, Master, thou hast said the truth: for there is one God; and there is none other but he:

33 And to love him with all the heart, and with all the understanding, and with all the soul, and with all the strength, and love his neighbour as himself, is more than all whole burnt-offerings and sacrifices.

34 And when Jesus saw that he answered discreetly, he said unto him, Thou art not far from the kingdom of God. And no man after that durst ask him any question.

Observe here, 1. A question propounded to our blessed Saviour, and his answer thereunto. The question propounded is this, Which is the first and great commandment? Our Saviour tells them, It is to love God with all their heart and soul, with all their mind and strength; that is, with all the powers, faculties and abilities of the soul, with the highest measures, and most intense degrees of love; this is the sum of the duties of the first table: This is the first and great commandment, and the second is like unto it. He doth not say equal with it: although the duties of the second table are of the same authority, and of the same necessity with the first, as no man can be saved without the love of God, so neither without the love of his neighbour. Whence note, 1. That the fervency of all our affections, and particularly the supremacy of our love, is required by God as his right and due: love must pass through, and possess all the powers and faculties of our souls; the mind must meditate upon God, the will must choose and embrace him, and the affections must delight in him. The measure of loving God is to love him without measure; God reckons that we love him not at all, if we love him not above all. Note, 2. That thus to love God, is the first great commandment; great in regard of its object, which is God, the first cause and the chief good; great in regard of the obligation of it. To love God is so indispensable a duty, that God himself cannot free us from the obligation of it; for so long as he is God, and we his creatures, we shall lie under a natural obligation to love and serve him. Great also is this command and duty, in regard to the duration and continuance of it; when faith shall be swallowed up in vision, and hope in fruition, love will then be perfected in a full enjoyment. Note, 3. That every man may, yea, ought to love himself; not his sinful self, but his natural self; especially his spiritual self, the new nature in him. This it ought to be his particular care to strengthen and increase. Indeed there is no express command in scripture, for a man to love himself, because the light of nature directs, and the law of nature binds, every man so to do. God has put a principle of self love, and of self-preservation, into all his creatures, but especially into man. Note, 4. That as every man ought to love himself, so it is every man's duty to love his neighbour as himself; not as he doth love himself, but as he ought to love himself; yet not in the same degree that he loves himself, but after the same manner, and with the same kind of love that he loves himself. As we love ourselves freely and readily, sincerely and unfeignedly, tenderly and compassionately, constantly and continually, so should we love our neighbour also; though we love him not as much as we love ourselves, yet must we love him truly, as truly as we love ourselves. Note, lastly, That the duties of the first and second table are inseparable, namely, love to God, and love to our neighbour. These two must not be separated; he that loveth not his neighbour whom he hath seen, never loved God whom he hath not seen. A conscientious regard to the duties of both tables, will be an argument of our sincerity, and an ornament to our profession. Observe, lastly, The favourable censure which our Saviour passes upon the scribe: he tells him, "He was not far from the kingdom of God." Note here, 1. Some persons may be far, and farther than others, from the kingdom of heaven; some are farther in regard of the means; they want the ordinances, the dispensation of the word and sacraments; others are far from the kingdom of God, in regard of qualifications and dispositions; of the former sort, are all heathens without the pale of the church; they are afar off, as the apostle expresses it, Eph. ii. 13, of the latter sort, are all gross and close hypocrites within the church; who, whilst they continue such, shall not inherit the kingdom of God. Note, 2. As some persons may be said to be far from the kingdom of God, so there are others which may be said, not to be far; such who have escaped the pollutions of the world, abstained from open and scandalous sins, are less wicked than multitudes are; but are strangers to an inward, thorough, and prevailing change in the frame of their hearts, and course of their lives: they have often said, I would be, but they never said, I will be, the Lord's. When the work of regeneration is brought to the birth, after all, it proves an abortion. Lord! what a disappointment will this be, to perish within sight of the promised land; to be near heaven in our expectation, and yet not nearer in the issue and event? Woe unto us, if this be the condition of any of us, who have all our days sat under the dispensation of thy gospel.

35 ¶ And Jesus answered and said, while he taught in the temple, How say the scribes that Christ is the son of David?

36 For David himself said by the Holy Ghost, The Lord said to my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand, till I make thine enemies thy footstool.

37 David, therefore, himself calleth him Lord; and whence is he then his son? And the common people heard him gladly.

The pharisees had often put forth several questions maliciously unto Christ, and now Christ puts forth one question innocently unto them; namely, What they thought of the Messiah whom they expected? They reply, that he was to be the Son of David; that is, a secular prince descending from David, who should deliver them from the power of the Romans, and restore them to their civil rites. This was the notion they had of the Messiah, that he should be a mere man, the son of David according to the flesh, and nothing more. Our Saviour replies, "Whence is it then that David calls the Messiah Lord?" Psal. cx. i. "The Lord said to my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand." How could he be both David's Lord, and David's son: no son being lord to his father! Therefore, if Christ were David's Sovereign, he must be more than man, more than David's son, as man, so he was David's son; as God-man, so he was David's Lord. Note, hence, 1. That although Christ was truly and really man, yet he was more than a bare man; he was Lord unto, and the salvation of, his own forefathers. Note, 2. That the only way to reconcile the scriptures which speak concerning Christ, is to believe and acknowledge him to be God and man in one person; the Messiah as man, was to come forth out of David's loins; but as God man, he was David's Sovereign and Saviour: as man he was his Father's son; as God he was Lord to his own father.

38 And he said unto them in his doctrine, Beware of the scribes, which love to go in long clothing, and love salutations in the market-places,

39 And the chief seats in the synagogues, and the uppermost rooms at feasts;

40 Which devour widows' houses, and for a pretence make long prayers; these shall receive greater damnation.

Observe here, What it is that our Saviour condemns; not civil salutations in the market-place, not the chief seats in synagogues, not the uppermost rooms at feasts; but their fond affecting of these things, and their ambitious aspiring after them. It was not their taking, but their loving the uppermost rooms at feasts, which Christ condemns. Observe, 2. How our Saviour condemns the pharisees for their gross hypocrisy, in colouring over their covetousness with a pretence of religion, making long prayers in the temple and synagogues for widows, and thereupon persuading them to give bountifully to corban; that is, the common treasury for the temple, some part of which was employed for their maintenance. Whence we learn, That it is no new thing for designing hypocrites to cover the foulest transgressions with the cloke of religion. The pharisees made long prayers a cloke and cover for their covetousness.

41 ¶ And Jesus sat over against the treasury, and beheld how the people cast money into the treasury; and many that were rich cast in much.

42 And there came a certain poor widow, and she threw in two mites, which making a farthing.

43 And he called unto him his disciples, and saith unto them, Verily I say unto you, that this poor widow hath cast more in than all they which have cast into the treasury:

44 For all they did cast in of their abundance: but she of her want did cast in all that she had, even all her living.

As our blessed Saviour sat over against the treasury, that is, that part of the court of the temple where the corban, or chests for receiving the people's offerings and gifts, were set, he observed, and took notice of those that offered their oblations; and some that were rich offered very liberally; but a certain poor woman came and offered two mites. Our Saviour hereupon takes occasion to instruct his disciples in this comfortable truth; namely, "That Almighty God accepts the will of those that give cheerfully, though they cannot give largely." This poor woman cast in more, in respect of the inward affection of her heart, and in proportion to her estate, than all those that were rich and wealthy, that had cast in before her; a mite to her being more than a pound to them. From the whole note, 1. That the poorer, yea, the poorest sort of people, are not exempted from good works; even they must exercise charity according to their abilities. Learn, 2. That in all works of charity which we perform, God looks at the heart, the will and the affection of the giver, more than the largeness and liberality of the gift: "If there be a willing mind," says the apostle, 2 Cor. viii. 12, "it is accepted according to what a man hath, and not according to what he hath not." 3. That a person ought sometimes to give what he cannot very well spare himself; and be ready to distribute not only to his power, but even above and beyond his power, 2 Cor. viii. 2, 3.

CHAP. XIII.

AND as he went out of the temple, one of his disciples saith unto him, Master, see what manner of stones and what buildings are here!

2 And Jesus, answering, said unto him, Seest thou these great buildings? there shall not be left one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down.

Our blessed Saviour being now ready to depart from the temple; never more, after this, entering into it; and his disciples shewing him with wonder and admiration the magnificent structures and buildings thereof, apprehending that in regard to its invincible strength it could not be destroyed, or that at least, in regard to its incredible magnificence, it was a great pity it should be destroyed; they say to Christ, Master, Behold what buildings are here; Not considering how sin would undermine and blow up the most famous structures. Sin brings cities and kingdoms as well as particular persons, to their end; not one stone of that magnificent structure, says Christ, shall remain unpulled down: which threatening was exactly fulfilled after Christ's death, when Titus, the Roman emperor, destroyed the city, burnt the temple, and Turnus Rufus, the general of his army, ploughed up the very foundation on which the temple stood; thus was the threatening of God fulfilled. Jer. xxvi. 18. "Zion shall be ploughed as a field, and Jerusalem shall become an heap." Learn hence, 1. That sin has laid the foundation of ruin in the most flourishing cities and kingdoms. That the threatenings of God are to be feared, and shall be fulfilled, whatever appearing improbabilities there may be to the contrary. It is neither the temple's strength nor beauty that can oppose or withstand God's power.

3 And as he sat upon the mount of Olives, over against the temple, Peter, and James, and John, and Andrew, asked him privately, 4 Tell us when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign when all these things shall be fulfilled?

A double question is here propounded to our Saviour by his disciples: namely, When the destruction of Jerusalem shall be? and, what shall be the sign of that destruction? See here, what an itching curiosity there is in the best of men to know futurities; to know things that shall come to pass hereafter; and when that hereafter is come to pass, O how happy were we, if as forward to obey the declaration of God's revealed will, as we are to pry into the hidden counsels of his secret will! Tell us, says his disciples, When shall these things be?

5 And Jesus, answering them, began to say, take heed lest any man deceive you:

6 For many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ: and shall deceive many.

7 And when ye shall hear of wars, and rumours of wars, be ye not troubled; for such things must needs be; but the end shall not be yet.

8 For nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom: and there shall be earthquakes in diverse places, and there shall be famines and troubles: these are the beginnings of sorrows.

9 ¶ But take heed to yourselves; for they shall deliver you up to councils; and in the synagogues ye shall be beaten; and ye shall be brought before rulers and kings for my sake, for a testimony against them.

10 And the gospel must first be published among all nations.

Here, and the following verses, Our Saviour gives his disciples the signs which should forerun the destruction of Jerusalem. The first of which was this, that "there should arise false christi, false prophets, and seducers;" such as Theudas, and others, under the name and person of the Messiah, some affirming themselves to be Christ personal, or the promised Messiah; others to be Christ doctrinal, affirming their erroneous opinions to be the mind and doctrine of Jesus Christ. Learn hence, That as there will be many seducers before the end of the world (for Jerusalem's destruction was a type and emblem of the world's destruction) and many will be seduced and misled by them: so it is the duty of Christ's own disciples to take heed lest they, "being also led away by the error of the wicked, do fall from their own steadfastness: Take heed, (says Christ,) that no man deceive you, for many will come in my name, saying, I am Christ, and will deceive many." The second sign of Jerusalem's destruction was, wars and rumours of wars; that civil broils, and intestine commotions among themselves; as also famines and earthquakes. Whence note, That war and fire, earthquakes and famines, are judgments and calamities inflicted by God upon a sinful people, for their contempt of Christ and gospel grace. 2. That although these be very terrible judgments, and desolating calamities, yet to an incorrigible and irreclaimable people are they the forerunners of worse judgments. These are, says Christ, the beginnings of sorrows. The third sign of this approaching destruction, was a general persecution of the ministers of the gospel, for preaching the doctrine of the gospel to a lost world; "Ye shall be beaten and brought before kings for my sake, for a testimony." From whence note, That the preaching of the gospel, wherever it comes, will be for a testimony to them to whom it comes; either a testimony for them, or against them: to the humble it is a testimony for, to despisers and scornors it is a testimony against; if the dust of ministers' feet bear witness against the despisers of the gospel, their sermons much more. The word of God delivered in the scriptures, and dispensed in the ministry thereof, hath its divers and contrary effects upon different and contrary subjects; from both which yet Almighty God knows how to raise his own glory; to the humble and teachable, the gospel is in adjutorium; to the scornors and despisers of it, will be in testimonium; to some, the saviour of life unto life; to others, the saviour of death unto death.

11 But when they shall lead you, and deliver you up, take no thought beforehand what ye shall speak, neither do ye premeditate; but whatsoever shall be given you in that hour, that speak ye: for it is not ye that speak, but the Holy Ghost.

12 Now, the brother shall betray the brother to death, and the father the son: and children shall rise up against their parents, and shall cause them to be put to death.

13 And ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake: But he that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved.

Here our Saviour acquaints his disciples, that for preaching the gospel they should be brought before kings and rulers; but advises them, when they should be so brought, not to be anxiously thoughtful and sollicitous what they shall say: for it should be suggested to them by the Holy Ghost what to say in that hour. Note here, That this promise seems to be peculiar to the apostles, and that it belonged to them only, when they were brought before kings and rulers to plead the cause of Christ. Learn hence, That though the truth of Christ may be opposed, yet the defenders of it should never be ashamed: for rather than they shall want a tongue to plead for it, God himself will prompt them by his Holy Spirit, and suggest such arguments to them as all their enemies shall not be able to gainsay. Observe, farther, How our Saviour describes the enmity of the world against the preachers of the gospel, to be such as would overcome and extinguish even the natural affection of the dearest relations one towards another: "The brother shall betray the brother to death." Grace teaches us to lay down our lives for the brethren; but corruption in general, and enmity to the gospel in particular, teaches brother to take away the life of a brother: "The brother shall betray the brother to death." Observe, lastly, How our Saviour comforts his disciples, that there would be an end of these their sharp and bitter sufferings: assuring them that if their faith and patience did hold out unto the end, they should be saved. This is our comfort, our sufferings for Christ must be sharp, but they shall be short: if our sufferings for Christ end not in our life time, they will end with our lives.

14 ¶ But when ye shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, standing where it ought not, (let him that readeth understand)—

The sense is, "As soon as ye shall see the Roman army, which is an abomination upon you, and an occasion of great desolation wherever it goes: when you shall see that abominable desolating army, begirting the city of Jerusalem, in order to her ruin and being laid waste, then call to mind the prophecy of Daniel, which primarily respected Antiochus, but secondarily Titus the Roman emperor, and shall now be fully completed; for the siege shall not be raised till both city and temple be razed to the ground." From whence learn, 1. That God has instruments ready at his call to lay waste the strongest cities; and to ruin the most flourishing kingdoms, which do reject his Son, and refuse the tenders of his grace. 2. That God can, and sometimes doth, make use of those very persons whom sinners must abhor, to be the instruments of their punishment, and the occasions of their destruction. The Roman army, which was an abomination to the Jews, did God destroy them by.

—Then let them that be in Judea flee to the mountains:

15 And let him that is on the house-top not go down into the house, neither enter therein, to take any thing out of his house:

16 And let him that is in the field not turn back again for to take up his garment

17 But woe to them that are with child, and to them that give suck, in those days!

18 And pray ye that your flight be not in the winter.

The meaning is, "As soon as ye shall see the Roman army appear before the city of Jerusalem, let every one that values his own safety fly, as far and as fast as he can, as Lot fled from the flames of Sodom; and be glad if by flight he can save his life, though he lose goods and clothes, and all things beside." Whence learn, That when Almighty God is pouring forth his fury upon a sinful people, it is both lawful, and a necessary duty, by flight, to endeavour to shelter and secure ourselves from the approaching calamity and desolation; when ye see Jerusalem encompassed with armies, flee to the mountains. 2 That in case of flight before an enraged enemy, and bloody army, if we lose all that we have, and our lives be given us for a prey, we fare well, and the Lord deals very graciously and mercifully with us. Next, Our Saviour declares the doleful distress of those that could not flee from the Roman army encompassing Jerusalem, as women great with child, and others giving suck, who by that means are like to lose their lives; and adds farther, That it would increase the calamity, if their flight should happen to be in the winter; St. Matthew adds, on the sabbath-day, Matt. xxiv. 20. Pray ye that your flight be not in the winter, nor on the sabbath-day. Flight in the winter is sad, because we can then fly neither fast nor far; and on the sabbath-day it is very sorrowful, that being the day of our spiritual labour, and of our bodily rest.

Learn hence, That it is a great addition to the trouble and disquiet of a good man's spirit, when the day of his spiritual rest is interrupted; and instead of enjoying communion with God in his house, he is driven from house and home.

19 For in those days shall be affliction, such as was not from the beginning of the creation; which God created, unto this time, neither shall be.

20 And except that the Lord had shortened those days, no flesh should be saved; but for the elect's sake, whom he hath chosen, he hath shortened the days.

The dreadful calamities which were coming upon the Jews in general, and Jerusalem in particular, are here foretold by our blessed Saviour, partly from the Roman army without, and partly from the seditions and factions of the zealots within; who committed such outrages and slaughters that there were no less than an hundred thousand Jews slain, and ninety-seven thousand taken prisoners. They that bought our Saviour for thirty pence, were now themselves sold thirty for a penny. Nor did the temple itself become a sacrifice, a whole burnt-offering, and was consumed to ashes. Yet observe, Christ promises, that those days of vengeance should be shortened for the elect's sake: God had a remnant which he designed should survive that destruction, to be an holy seed; and accordingly the providence of God so ordered it, that the city was taken in six months, and the whole country depopulated in eighteen. From whence observe, How the Lord intermixes some mercy with the extremest misery that doth befall a people for their sin on this side hell. No sinners can say, in this life, that they feel the strikes of justice to the utmost, or that they have judgment without mercy.

21 And then, if any man shall say to you, Lo, here is Christ; or, lo, he is there; believe him not:

22 For false christs and false prophets shall rise, and shall shew signs and wonders, to seduce, if it were possible, even the elect.

23 But take ye heed: behold, I have foretold you all things.

The Jews had all along cherished in themselves a vain expectation, that the promised Messiah should be a temporal deliverer; and set them at liberty from the power and slavery of the Romans; and accordingly, our Saviour declares to his disciples here, That immediately before Jerusalem's destruction, several persons, taking the advantage of this expectation, would make themselves heads of parties; and pretend that they were the true Messiah, who should save and deliver them from their enemies, if they would follow them. Hereupon our Saviour cautions his disciples against such false christs, and false prophets, and bids them not believe them, though they did ever so many great signs and wonders, and promise them ever such glorious deliverances. From hence note, 1. That the church's great danger is from seducers, that come in Christ's name and presence to work signs and wonders by his authority. Note, 2. That such is the power of seduction and delusion, that many, in all ages of the church, have been carried away with seducers and false teachers. 3. That the elect themselves, if left to themselves, might be seduced; but being guarded by divine power against seduction and delusion, they shall be preserved from that fatal mischief; "They shall seduce, if possible, even the elect."

24 ¶ But in those days, after that tribulation, the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light;

25 And the stars of heaven shall fall, and the powers that are in heaven shall be shaken.

26 And then they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds, with great power and glory.

27 And then shall he send his angels, and shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from the uttermost part of the earth, to the uttermost part of heaven.

Our Saviour goes on in figurative expressions, to set forth the calamities that should befall the Jewish nation immediately after Jerusalem's destruction. The Sun shall be darkened; that is, all their glory and excellency shall be eclipsed, all their wealth and prosperity shall be laid waste, their whole government, civil and ecclesiastical, destroyed; and such marks of misery found upon them, as never were seen upon a people. Those that apply this to the general judgment, understand the words literally, that the sun and moon will then have their influences suspended; that the holy angels will be sent forth "to gather the elect from all quarters of the world, with the sound of a trumpet," says St. Matthew. Probably, as there was an audible sound of a trumpet at the giving of the law, so there shall be the like sound of a trumpet, when Christ shall summon the world to judgment, for transgressing of that law. A joyful sound will this be to the friends of Christ, a doleful, dreadful sound in the ears of his enemies.

28 Now, learn a parable of the fig-tree: When her branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is near:

29 So ye, in like manner, when ye shall see these things come to pass, know that it is nigh, even at the doors.

30 Verily I say unto you, That this generation shall not pass till all these things be done.

31 Heaven and earth shall pass away; but my words shall not pass away.

32 But of that day, and that hour, knoweth no man, no, not the angels which are in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father.

Here our blessed Saviour declares two things with reference to his coming. 1. The certainty of the thing itself. 2. The uncertainty of the time. The certainty of his coming he sets forth by the similitude of the fig-tree, whose beginning to bud declares the summer at hand. Thus our Saviour tells them, that when they should see the forementioned signs, they might conclude the destruction of their city and temple to be nigh at hand; and accordingly, some then living did see these predictions fulfilled. Observe, 2. The uncertainty as to the precise time when this judgment should come; no angel in heaven, nor creature upon earth, could determine the time; only the glorious persons in the godhead, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. Learn hence, That all things are not revealed to the angels themselves; but such things only as it concerns them to know, and the wisdom of God thinks fit to reveal. 2. That the precise time of the day of judgment is kept by God as a secret to himself; we are not to know the hour, to the intent we may be upon our watch every hour: Christ himself did not know it as a man, but as God only. The knowledge and revelation of this, was no part of Christ's prophetic office; it being one of those times and seasons which the Father has put in his own power, Acts i. 7. Consider Christ as God, or the second person in the Trinity, and to affirm that there is any thing which he does not know is blasphemy; but consider him as the Messiah, and to say there were some things which Christ as such did not know, is no blasphemy. For though Christ as God was equal with the Father, yet as Messiah, or God-man, he was inferior to the Father, his servant or messenger, and could do nothing of himself, and did not know all things.

33 Take ye heed, watch and pray; for ye know not when the time is.

34 For the Son of man is as a man taking a far journey, who left his house, and gave authority to his servants, and to every man his work, and commanded the porter to watch.

35 Watch ye, therefore: for ye know not when the Master of the house cometh, at even, or at midnight, or at the cock-crowing, or in the morning:

36 Lest, coming suddenly, he find you sleeping.

37 And what I say unto you, I say unto all, Watch.

Our blessed Saviour takes occasion, from the foregoing doctrine of the certainty and suddenness of his coming to judgment, to enforce the duty of diligent and industrious watchfulness upon his disciples and followers; that is, to be upon their guard against all sin, and to be in an actual readiness for his appearance and approach. Learn hence, That it is the indispensable duty, and ought to be the indefatigable endeavour of every Christian, to stand upon his guard in a prepared readiness for Christ's appearance, both for his coming to them, and for their going to him. There is a twofold readiness for Christ's coming; namely, habitual and actual; an habitual readiness is a readiness of the state and condition; actual readiness is the readiness of the person: when we are furnished with all the graces and virtues of a good life, when our lamps are burning, and our loins girded, our souls furnished with all the graces of God's Holy Spirit, our lives fruitful in good works: "Blessed is that servant, who, when his Lord cometh, shall be found thus watching."

CHAP. XIV.

AFTER two days was the feast of the passover, and of unleavened bread: and the Chief Priests and the Scribes sought how they might take him by craft, and put him to death.

2 But they said, Not on the feast-day, lest there be an uproar of the people.

This chapter gives us a sad and sorrowful account of the high priest's conspiracy against the life of our blessed Saviour; in which we have observable, The persons that made this conspiracy, the manner of the conspiracy, and the time when this conspiracy was made. 1. The persons conspiring are the chief priests, scribes, and elders: that is, the whole Jewish sanhedrim, or general council; they lay their malicious heads together, to contrive the destruction of the innocent Jesus. Thence learn, That general councils have erred and may err fundamentally in matters of doctrine: so did this general council at Jerusalem, consisting of chief priests, doctors, and elders, with the high priest their president, in not believing Jesus to be the Messiah, after all the miracles wrought before their eyes. Observe, 2. The manner of this conspiracy against our Saviour's life, it was clandestine, secret, and subtle; "they consult how they might take him by craft, and put him to death." Thence note, That Satan makes use of the subtlety of crafty men, and abuseth their parts as well as their power, for his own purposes and designs; the devil sends no fools of his errands. Observe, 3. The circumstance of time when this conspiracy was managed, at the feast of the passover; it being a custom among the Jews to execute malefactors at their solemn feasts, as at the feast of the passover, the feast of weeks, and the feast of tabernacles; at which times all the Jews came up to Jerusalem to sacrifice, and then they put malefactors to death, that all Israel might see and hear, and not do so wickedly. Accordingly, this feast of the passover was waited for by the Jews, as a fit opportunity to put our Saviour to death. The only objection was, That it might occasion a tumult amongst the people, there being such a mighty concourse at that time in Jerusalem. But Judas making them a proffer, they readily complied with the motion, and resolve to take the first opportunity to put our Saviour to death.

3 ¶ And being in Bethany, in the house of Simon the leper, as he sat at meat, there came a woman, having an alabaster box of ointment of spikenard, very precious: and she brake the box, and poured it on his head.

4 And there were some that had indignation within themselves, and said, Why was this waste of the ointment made?

5 For it might have been sold for more than three hundred pence, and have been given to the poor. And they murmured against her.

6 And Jesus said, Let her alone: why trouble ye her? she hath wrought a good work on me.

7 For ye have the poor with you always, and whensoever ye will ye may do them good; but me ye have not always.

8 She hath done what she could: she is come aforehand to anoint my body to the burying.

9 Verily, I say unto you, Wheresoever this gospel shall be preached throughout the whole world, this also that she hath done shall be spoken of for a memorial of her.

Several particulars are observable in this piece of history: as, first, the action which this holy woman performed; she pours a box of precious ointment upon our Saviour's head as he sat at meat, according to the custom of the eastern countries at their feasts. Murmuring Judas valued this ointment at three hundred pence, which makes, of our money, nine pounds seven shillings and sixpence, reckoning the Roman penny at sevenpence halfpenny. I do not find that any of the apostles were at this much cost and charge to put honour upon our Saviour, as this poor woman was. Learn hence, That where strong love prevails in the heart towards Christ, nothing is adjudged too dear for him; neither will it suffer itself to be outshined by any examples; the weakest woman that strongly loves her Saviour, will piously strive with the greatest apostle to express the fervour of her affection towards him. Observe, 2. How this action was resented and reflected upon by Judas, and some other disciples whom he influenced; "They had indignation within themselves, and said, To what purpose is this waste?" O! how doth a covetous heart think every thing too good for Christ! Happy was it for this poor woman, that she had a more righteous Judge to pass sentence upon her actions than murmuring Judas. Observe, 3. How readily our holy Lord vindicates this good woman; she says nothing for herself, nor need she, having so good an advocate. First he rebukes Judas. Let her alone, why trouble ye the woman? Next he justifies the action, She hath wrought a good work, because it flowed from a principle of love to Christ. And lastly, he gives the reason of her action, She did it for my burial. As kings and great persons were wont in those eastern countries, at their funerals, to be embalmed with odours and sweet perfumes, so, says our Saviour, this woman, to declare her faith in me as her king and Lord, both with this box of ointment, as it were before-hand, embalm my body for its burial. True faith puts honour upon a crucified, as well as a glorified, Saviour. This holy woman accounts Christ worthy of all honour in his death, believing it would be a sweet smelling sacrifice unto God, and the saviour of life unto his people. Observe, 4. Our Saviour doth not only justify and defend the action of this poor woman, but magnifies and extols it; declaring that she should be rewarded for it with an honourable memorial in all ages of the church: "Whosoever this gospel is preached, this shall be spoken of as a memorial of her." Note hence, The care which Christ takes to have the good deeds of his children not buried in the dust with them, but had in everlasting remembrance. Though sin causes men to rot above the ground, and stink alive, and when they are dead, leaves an ignominy upon their graves; yet will the actions of the just smell sweet and blossom in the dust.

10 ¶ And Judas Iscariot, one of the twelve, went unto the chiefs, to betray him unto them.

11 And when they heard it, they were glad, and promised to give him money. And he sought how he might conveniently betray him.

Observe here, 1. The person betraying our blessed Redeemer: Judas, Judas a professor; Judas, a preacher; Judas, an apostle; and one of the twelve, whom Christ had chosen out of all the world to be his dearest friends, his family and household; shall we wonder to find friends unfriendly or unfaithful to us, when our Saviour had a traitor in his own family! Observe, 2. The heinous nature of Judas' sin, he betrayed Jesus; Jesus his Maker, Jesus his Master. It is no strange or uncommon thing for the vilest of sins, and most horrid impieties, to be acted by such persons, as make the most eminent profession of holiness and religion. Observe, 3. What was the occasion that led Judas to the commission of this sin: It was his inordinate love of money. I do not find that Judas had any particular malice, spite, or ill-will, against our Saviour, but a base and unworthy spirit of covetousness possessed him, and this made him sell his Master. Covetousness is the root-sin. An eager and insatiable thirst after the world, is a parent of the most monstrous and unnatural sins; for which reason our Saviour doubles his caution, Luke xii. 15. Take heed, and beware of covetousness. It shews us both the danger of the sin, and the great care we ought to take to preserve ourselves from it.

12 ¶ And the first day of unleavened bread, when they killed the passover, his disciples said unto him, Where wilt thou that we go and prepare, that thou mayest eat the passover.

13 And he sendeth forth two of his disciples, and saith unto them, Go ye into the city, and there shall meet you a man bearing a pitcher of water: follow him.

14 And wheresoever he shall go in, say ye to the good man of the house, The master saith, Where is the guest-chamber where I shall eat the passover with my disciples?

15 And he will shew you a large upper room furnished and prepared: there make ready for us.

16 And his disciples went forth, and came into the city, and found as he had said unto them: and they made ready the passover.

The time for the celebration of the passover being now at hand, Christ sends two of his disciples to Jerusalem to prepare things necessary in order thereunto. And here we have observable, 1. An eminent proof of Christ's divine nature, in telling them all the particulars which they should meet with in the city, as A man bearing a pitcher of water, &c. 2. How readily the heart of this householder was disposed to receive our Saviour and his disciples, and to accommodate them with all things needful upon this occasion. Our blessed Saviour had not a lamb of his own, and peradventure no money wherewith to buy one, yet he finds as excellent accommodations in this poor man's house, as if he had dwelt in Ahab's ivory palace, and had the provision of Solomon's table. When Christ has a passover to celebrate, he will dispose the heart to a free reception of himself. The room which Christ will enter into, must be a large room, an upper room, furnished and prepared; a large room, is an enlarged heart, enlarged with love and thankfulness; an upper room, is an heart exalted, not puffed up with pride, but lifted up by heavenly-mindedness; a room furnished, is a soul adorned with the graces of the Holy Spirit; into such an heart, and only such, will Christ enter.

17 And in the evening he cometh with the twelve.

18 And as they sat, and did eat, Jesus said, Verily I say unto you, One of you which eateth with me shall betray me.

19 And they began to be sorrowful, and say unto him one by one, Is it I? and another said, Is it I?

20 And he answered and said unto them, It is one of the twelve that dippeth with me in the dish.

21 The Son of man indeed goeth, as it is written of him; but woe to that man by whom the Son of man is betrayed: good were it for that man if he had never been born.

Observe here, 1. The unexampled boldness of this impudent traitor Judas; he presumed, as soon as he had sold his Master, to sit down at the table with him, and did eat the passover with the disciples: had the presence of Judas polluted this ordinance to any but himself, doubtless our Saviour would never have suffered him to approach unto it. But hence we learn, 1. That nothing is more ordinary than for unholy persons to press in unto the holy ordinances of God, which they have no right, while such, to partake of. 2. That the presence of such persons doth pollute the ordinance only to themselves; holy persons are not polluted by their sins, therefore ought not to be discouraged from coming by their presence there. Observe, 2. What a surprising and astonishing word it was which dropt from our Saviour's mouth amongst his disciples; One shall betray me; yea, one of you shall betray me. Can any church upon earth expect purity in all its members, when Christ's own family of twelve had a traitor and devil in it? Yet though it was very sad to hear of one, it was matter of joy to understand that there was but one. One hypocrite in a congregation is too much, but there is cause of rejoicing if there be no more. Observe, 3. Christ did not name Judas, and say, "Thou, O perfidious Judas! art the traitor, but one of you shall betray me." Doubtless it was to draw him to repentance, and to prevent the giving him any provocation. Lord! how sad is it for any of thy family, who pretend friendship to thee, to conspire with thine enemies against thee! for any "that eat of thy bread to lift up their heel against thee!" Observe, 4. The disciples' sorrow upon these words of Christ, and the effect of that sorrow. Their sorrow was (as well it might be) exceeding great; well might innocent disciples be overwhelmed with sorrow, to hear that their Master should die, that he should die by treason, that the traitor should be one of themselves. But though their sorrow was great, yet was the effect of their sorrow very good, it wrought in them an holy suspicion of themselves, and caused every one to search himself, and say, Master, Is it I? Learn hence, That it is possible for such sacred wickedness to lodge in the heart as we never suspected, till time and temptation draw it forth. None of the disciples suspected, nay, Judas himself never apprehended that depth of iniquity and hypocrisy which was found lodging in him. Yet note, That though the disciples were jealous and suspicious, yet was it of themselves, not of one another; nay, not of Judas himself; every one said, Master, Is it I? Not, Master, Is it Judas? True sincerity and Christian charity will make us more suspicious of ourselves than of any other: it hopes the best of others, and fears the worst of ourselves. Observe, 5. That though Judas sees himself pointed at by our Saviour, and hears the dreadful threatenings denounced against him, that it had been better for him that he had never been born, yet he is no more blanked than innocence itself. Resolute sinners run on desperately in their evil courses; and with open eyes see and meet their own destruction, without being either dismayed at it, or concerned about it. This shameless man had the impudence to say to our blessed Saviour, Master, Is it I? Our blessed Saviour gives him a direct answer, Thou sayest it. Did not Judas, think we, blush extremely, cast down his guilty eyes, and let fall his drooping head, at so galling an intimation? Nothing less, we read of nothing like it. Lord! how does obduracy in sin steel the brow, and make it incapable of all relenting impressions! Observe, lastly, How our Saviour prefers non-entity before damnation; It had been better for that man he had never been born. A temporal, miserable being, is not worse than no being; but eternal misery is much worse than non-entity; better to have no being, than not to have a being in Christ. It had been better for Judas that he had never been born, than to lie under everlasting wrath.

22 And as they did eat, Jesus took bread, and blessed, and brake it, and gave to them, and said, Take, eat; this is my body.

23 And he took the cup; and when he had given thanks, he gave it to them: and they all drank of it.

24 And he said unto them, this is my blood of the New Testament, which is shed for many.

25 Verily I say unto you, I will drink no more of the fruit of the vine, until that day that I drink it new in the kingdom of God.

26 And when they had sung an hymn, they went out into the mount of Olives.

Immediately after the celebration of the passover, our Lord institutes his holy supper; in which institution, we have observable the author, the time, the elements, and ministerial actions. Observe here, 1. The author of this new sacrament: Jesus took bread. Note thence, That to institute a sacrament is the sole prerogative of Jesus Christ. The church has no power to make new sacraments: it is only her duty to celebrate those which our Saviour has made. Observe, 2. The time of the institution, the night before his passion; The night in which he was betrayed, Jesus took bread. Learn thence, That it is very necessary when sufferings are approaching, to have recourse to the table of the Lord, which affords both an antidote against fear, and is a restorative to our faith.

Observe, 3. The sacramental elements, bread and wine; bread representing the body, and wine the blood, of our dear Redeemer. Observe, 4. The ministerial actions, The breaking of the bread, and the blessing of the cup. As to the bread, Jesus took it; that is, set it apart from common use, and separated it for holy ends and purposes. He blessed it; that is, prayed for a blessing upon it, and broke it; thereby shadowing forth his body broken upon the cross; and he gave it to his disciples, saying, This broken bread signifies my body, suddenly to be broken upon the cross, for the redemption and salvation of a lost world; Do this in remembrance of my death. As to the cup, Christ having set it apart by prayer and thanksgiving, he commands his disciples to drink all of it; and accordingly they all drank of it, says this evangelist; and our Saviour gives his reason for it, ver. 24. "For this is my blood of the New Testament, which is shed for the remission of sins;" that is, the wine in this cup represents the shedding of my blood, by which this new covenant between God and man is ratified and confirmed. Whence we gather, That every communicant hath as undoubted a right to the cup as to the bread, in the Lord's supper; Drink ye all of this, says Christ; therefore to deny the cup to the common people, is sacrilege, and directly contrary to our Saviour's institution. And Christ calling the cup the fruit of the vine, affords a strong argument against the doctrine of transubstantiation; thus, "That which after consecration remains the fruit of the vine, is not substantially changed into the blood of Christ." But Christ called the wine in the cup the fruit of the vine after consecration; therefore that which Christ gave the apostles to drink, was not substantially changed into his blood. Wine is metaphorically called the blood of the grape; why may it not, by a like metaphor, be styled the blood of Christ? After the celebration was over, our Saviour and his disciples sung an hymn, as the Jews were wont to do at the passover, the six eucharistical psalms, from the 113th to the 119th psalm. From Christ's example, we may gather, how suitable it is to sing a psalm after the celebration of the Lord's supper; how fit it is that God be glorified in his church, by singing of psalms; and in particular when the Lord's supper is celebrated: "When they had sung an hymn, they went into the mount of Olives."

27 And Jesus saith unto them, All ye shall be offended because of me this night: for it is written, I will smite the shepherd, and the sheep shall be scattered.

28 But after that I am risen, I will go before you into Galilee.

29 But Peter said unto him, Although all shall be offended, yet will not I.

30 And Jesus said unto him, Verily I say unto thee, that this day, even in this night, before the cock crow twice, thou shalt deny me thrice.

31 But he spake the more vehemently,

If I should die with thee, I will not deny thee in any wise. Likewise also said they all.

Observe here, 1. The warning that our Saviour gives his disciples of their forsaking of him in the time of his sufferings; All ye shall be offended because of me this night. Learn, That Christ's dearest friends forsook and left him alone, in the midst of his greatest distress and danger. Observe, 2. What was the cause of their flight; it was their fear, the weakness of their faith, and the prevalency of their fear. O! how sad and dangerous is it for the best of men to be left under the power of their own fears in the day of temptation! Observe, 3. Notwithstanding our Saviour's prediction, St Peter's presumption of his own strength and standing; Though all men forsake thee, yet will not I. Learn thence, That self-confidence, and presumptuous opinion of their own strength, is a sin very incident to the holiest and best of men. This good man resolved honestly, no doubt; but too, too much in his own strength. Little did he think what a feather he should be in the wind of temptation, if once left to the power and prevalency of his own fears. None are so near falling, as those who are the most confident of their own standing; if ever we stand in the day of trial, it is the fear of falling that must enable us to stand.

32 And they came to a place which was named Gethsemane: and he saith to his disciples, Sit ye here, while I shall pray.

33 And he taketh with him Peter, and James, and John, and began to be sore amazed, and to be very heavy.

34 And saith unto them, My soul is exceeding sorrowful unto death; tarry ye here, and watch.

35 And he went forward a little, and fell on the ground, and prayed, that, if it were possible, the hour might pass from him.

36 And he said Abba, Father, all things are possible unto thee; take away this cup from me; nevertheless, not what I will, but what thou wilt.

37 And he cometh, and findeth them sleeping, and saith unto Peter, Simon, sleepest thou? couldst not thou watch one hour?

38 Watch ye and pray, lest ye enter into temptation. The spirit truly is ready, but the flesh is weak.

39 And again he went away, and prayed, and spake the same words.

40 And when he returned, he found them asleep again; for their eyes were heavy: neither wist they what to answer him.

41 And he cometh a third time, and said unto them, Sleep on now, and take your rest: it is enough, the hour is come: behold, the Son of man is betrayed into the hands of sinners.

42 Rise up, let us go: lo, he that betrayeth me is at hand.

Our blessed Saviour being now come with his disciples into the garden, he falls there into a bitter and bloody agony, in which he prayed with wonderful ferrency and importunity to his heavenly Father; his sufferings were now coming on a great pace, and he meets them upon his knees, and would be found in a praying posture. Learn thence, That prayer is the best preparative for, as well as the most powerful support under, the heaviest sufferings that can befall us. As to the prayer of our Saviour in the garden, many things are very observable; as first, The place where he prayed, the garden. But why went Christ thither? Not, with our first parents, to hide himself there amongst the trees of the garden, from the notice and observation of his enemies: but as a garden was the place where our misery began, as the first scene of human sin and misery was acted in a garden, so does our Lord choose a garden as the place for his agony and satisfactory pains to begin in. Again, this garden was a place of privacy and retirement, where our Lord might best attend the offices of devotion preparatory to his passion: St. John xviii. 2, tells us, That Jesus oft-times resorted to this garden with his disciples, and that Judas well knew the place. It is evident then that Christ went not into the garden to shun his sufferings, but to prepare himself by prayer to meet his enemies. Observe, 2. The time when he entered into the garden for prayer, it was in the evening before he suffered; here he spent some hours in pouring forth his soul to God; for about midnight Judas with his black guard came and apprehended him in a praying posture. Our Lord teaching us by his example, That when imminent dangers are before us, especially when death is apprehended by us, to be very much in prayer to God, and very fervent in our wrestlings with him. Observe, 3. The matter of our Lord's prayer: That if possible the cup might pass from him; and he might be kept from the hour of suffering, that his soul might escape that dreadful wrath at which he was so sore amazed. "But what! did Christ then begin to repent of his undertaking for sinners? Did he shrink and give back when it came to the pinch?" No, nothing less; but as he had two natures, being God and man, so he had two distinct wills: as man, he feared, and shunned death! as God-man, he willingly submitted to it. The divine nature and the human spirit of Christ, did now assault each other with disagreeing interests. Again, this prayer was not absolute, but conditional. If it be possible, Father; if it may be; if thou art willing, if it please thee, let this cup pass; if not, I will drink it. The cup of sufferings we see is a very bitter and distasteful cup; a cup which human nature abhors, and cannot desire, but pray against; yet God doth put this cup of affliction into the hands oft-times of those whom he doth sincerely love, and when he doth so, it is their duty to drink it with silence and submission, as here their Lord did before them; Father, let the cup pass; yet not my will but thine be done. Observe, 4. The manner of our Lord's prayer in the garden; and here we may remark, 1. It was a solitary prayer; he went by himself alone, out of the hearing of his disciples. The company of our best and dearest friends is not always seasonable; there is a time to be solitary as well as to be sociable; there are times and cases when a Christian would not be willing that the most intimate friend he has in the world should be with him, to hear what passes in secret between him and his God. 2. It was an humble prayer, that is evident by the postures into which he cast himself, sometimes kneeling, sometimes lying prostrate upon his face: he lies in the very dust, and lower he cannot lie; and his heart was as low as his body. 3. It was a vehement, fervent, and most importunate prayer; such was the fervour of our Lord's spirit, that he prayed himself into an agony. Q let us blush to think how unlike we are to Christ in prayer, as to our praying frame of spirit. Lord! What deadness and drowsiness, what stupidity and formality, what dulness and laziness, is found in our prayers! How often do our lips move, when our hearts stand still! 4. It was a reiterated and repeated prayer; he prayed the first, second, and third time, for the passing of the cup from him; he returns upon God over and over again, resolving to take no denial. Let us not be discouraged, though we have sought God often for a particular mercy, and yet no answer has been given in unto us. A prayer put up in faith, according to the will of God, though it may be delayed, it shall not be lost. Our Saviour prayed the first, second, and third time for the passing of the cup; and although he was not heard as to exemption from suffering, yet he was heard as to support under suffering. Observe, 5. The posture the disciples were found in when our Saviour was in this agony, praying to his Father, They were fast asleep. Good God! Could they possibly sleep at such a time as that was, when Christ's soul was exceeding sorrowful! Could their eyes be thus heavy! Learn thence, That the best of Christ's disciples may be, and oft-times are; overtaken with infirmities, with great infirmities, when the most important duties are performing; He cometh to his disciples, and finds them sleeping. Observe, 6. The mild and gentle reproof which he gives his disciples for their sleeping; Could ye not watch with me one hour? Could ye not watch when your master was in such danger? Could ye not watch with me when I am going to deliver up my life for you? What! not one hour? And that the parting hour too? After this reprehension, he subjoins an exhortation, Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation; and superadds a forcible reason, for though the spirit be willing yet the flesh is weak. Thence learn, That the holiest and best-resolved Christians, who have willing spirits for Christ and his service, yet in regard of the weakness of the flesh, or frailty of human nature, it is their duty to watch and pray, and thereby guard themselves against temptation; Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation: for though the spirit is willing, yet the flesh is weak.

43 ¶ And immediately, while he yet spake, cometh Judas, one of the twelve, and with him a great multitude, with swords and staves, from the chief priests, and the scribes, and the elders.

44 And he that betrayed him had given them a token, saying, Whomsoever I shall kiss, the same is he; take him, and lead him away safely.

45 And, as soon as he was come, he goeth straightway to him, and saith, Master, master; and kissed him.

46 And they laid their hands on him, and took him.

47 And one of them that stood by, drew a sword, and smote a servant of the high-priest, and cut off his ear.

48 And Jesus answered, and said unto them, Are ye come out as against a thief, with swords and with staves, to take me?

49 I was daily with you in the temple teaching, and ye took me not: But the scriptures must be fulfilled.

50 And they all forsook him, and fled.

The hour is now almost come, even that hour of sorrow which Christ had so often spoken of, Yet a little while, and the Son of man is betrayed into the hands of sinners; for while he yet spake, cometh Judas with a band of soldiers to apprehend him; it was the lot and portion of our dear Redeemer, to be betrayed into the hands of his mortal enemies, by the treachery of a false and dissembling friend. Here we have observable, 1. The traitor. 2. The treason. 3. The manner how. 4. The time when this treasonable design was executed. Observe, 1. The traitor, Judas. All the evangelists carefully describe him by his name, Judas; by his surname, Judas Iscariot; lest he should be mistaken for Jude, the brother of James. Almighty God takes great care to preserve the names of his upright-hearted servants. He is further described by his office, one of the twelve. The eminency of his place and station, was an high aggravation of his transgression. Learn hence, That the greatest professors had need be very jealous of themselves, and suspicious of their own hearts, and look well to the grounds and principles of their profession; for a profession begun in hypocrisy, will certainly end in apostacy. Learn farther, That persons are never in such imminent danger, as when they meet with temptations exactly suited to their master-lusts. Covetousness was Judas' master sin; the love of the world made him a slave to Satan, and the devil lays a temptation before him exactly suited to his temper and inclination, and it instantly overcomes him. O! pray we, that we may be suited to a strong and suitable temptation; a temptation suited to our inclination and predominant lust and corruption. Observe, 2. The treason of this traitor Judas; he led on an armed multitude to the place where Christ was, gave them a signal to discover him by, and bids them lay hands upon him, and hold him fast. Some conjecture, that when Judas bade them hold Christ fast, he thought they could not do it: but that as Christ had at other times conveyed himself from the multitude, when they attempted to kill or stone him, so he would have done now: but his hour was now come, and accordingly he suffers himself to be delivered by the treachery of Judas into his enemies' hands. And this his treason is attended with these hellish aggravations; he had been a witness to the miracles which our Saviour had wrought by his divine power, and therefore could not sin out of ignorance; what he did was not at the solicitation of others, but he was a volunteer in this service: the high priest did not send to him, but he went to them, offering his assistance; no doubt it was a matter of surprize to the chief priests, to find one of Christ's own disciples at the head of a conspiracy against him. Lord! how dangerous is it to allow ourselves in any one secret or open sin! None can say, how far that one sin may in time lead us. Should any have told Judas, that his love of money would at last make him sell his Saviour, he would have said with Hazael, Is thy servant a dog, that he should do this thing? That soul can never be safe that harbours one sin within its breast. Observe, 3. The manner how this hellish plot was executed; partly by force, and partly by fraud: by force, in that Judas came with a multitude armed with swords and staves; and by fraud, giving a kiss, and saying, Hail, Master! Here was honey in the lips, but poison in the heart. Observe, 4. The time when, the place where, and the work which our Saviour was about, when this treasonable design was executed; he was in the garden with his disciples, exhorting them to prayer and watchfulness, dropping heavenly advice and comfort upon them. While he yet spake, Lo! Judas came. Our Saviour was found in the most heavenly and excellent employment, when his enemies came to apprehend him. Lord! how happy is it when our sufferings find us in God's way, engaged in his work, and engaging his assistance by fervent supplication: Thus did our Lord's sufferings meet him: may our's in like manner meet us. Observe, 5. The endeavours used by the disciples for their Master's rescue; One of them (St. Matthew says it was Peter) draws his sword, and cuts off the ear of Malchus, who probably was one of the forwardest to lay hands on Christ. But why did not St. Peter draw upon Judas rather than Malchus? Because though Judas was more faulty, yet Malchus was more forward to arrest and carry off our Saviour. How doth a pious breast swell with indignation at the sight of an open affront offered to its Saviour! Yet though St. Peter's heart was sincere, his hand was rash; good intentions are no warrant for irregular actions: and accordingly Christ, who accepted the affection, reproves the action: Put up thy sword; for they that take the sword, shall perish by the sword; Christ will thank no man to fight for him without a warrant and commission from him. To resist a lawful magistrate in Christ's own defence, is rash zeal, and discountenanced by the gospel. Observe, lastly, The effect which our Saviour's apprehension had upon the disciples; They all forsook him and fled. They that said to Christ a little before, Though we should die with thee, yet we will not deny thee, do all here desert and cowardly forsake him when it came to the trial. Learn hence, That the best and holiest of men know not their own hearts, when great temptations and trials are before them, until such time as they come to grapple with them. No man knows his own strength, till temptation puts it to the proof.

51 And there followed him a certain young man, having a linen cloth cast about his naked body: and the young man laid hold on him.

52 And he left the linen cloth, and fled from them naked

53 And they led Jesus away to the high priest; and with him were assembled all the chief priests, and the elders, and the scribes.

54 And Peter followed him afar off, even into the palace of the high priest: and he sat with the servants, and warmed himself at the fire.

55 And the chief priests, and all the council, sought for witness against Jesus to put him to death; and found none:

56 For many bare false witness against him, but their witness agreed not together.

57 And there arose certain, and bear false witness against him, saying,

58 We heard him say, I will destroy this temple that is made with hands, and within three days I will build another made without hands.

59 But neither so did their witness agree together.

60 And the high priest stood up in the midst, and asked Jesus, saying, Answerest thou nothing? What is it which these witness against thee?

61 But he held his peace, and answered nothing. Again the high priest asked him, and said unto him, Art thou the Christ, the Son of the Blessed?

62 A Jesus said, I am; and ye shall see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven.

63 Then the high priest rent his clothes, and saith, What need we any further witnesses?

64 Ye have heard the blasphemy: what think ye? And they all condemned him to be guilty of death.

65 And some began to spit on him, and to cover his face, and to buffet him, and to say unto him, Prophecy: And the servants did strike him with the palms of their hands.

Here we have the history of our Saviour's examination before the high priest and council, who sat up all night to arraign and try the holy and innocent Jesus; for lest his death should look like a downright murder, they allow him a mock trial, and abuse the law, by perverting it to injustice and bloodshed. Accordingly, false witnesses are suborned, who depose that they heard him say, He would destroy their temple, and build it again in three days. It is not in the power of the greatest innocence to protect the most innocent and holy person from slander and false accusation; yea, no person is so innocent and good, whom false witnesses may not condemn. Observe, 2. Our Lord's meekness and patience, his silence under all these wicked suggestions and false accusations; Jesus held his peace and answered nothing, ver. 16. Guilt is naturally clamorous and impatient, but innocence is silent, and careless of misreports. Learn hence, That to bear the revilings, and contradictions, and false accusations of men, with a silent and submissive spirit, is an excellent and Christ-like temper. Our Lord stood before his unjust judge, and false accusers, even as a sheep before the shearer, dumb, and not opening his mouth; even then when a trial for his life was managed most maliciously and illegally against him: When he was reviled, he reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not. May the same humble mind and forgiving spirit be in us, which was also in Christ Jesus! Observe, 3. That although our Saviour was silent, and made no reply to the false witnesses; yet now, when the question was solemnly put by the high priest, Art thou the Christ, the Son of the Blessed? He answered, I am. Thence learn, That although we are not obliged by every ensnaring question to make answer, yet are we bound faithfully to own, and freely to confess the truth, when solemnly called thereunto; when our silence will be interpreted a denial of the truth, a dishonour to God, a reproach and scandal to our brethren, it will be a great sin to hold our peace; and we must not be silent, though our confession of the truth hazards our liberty, yea, our life. Christ knew that his answer would cost him his life, yet he durst not but give it; Art thou the Son of the Blessed? Jesus said, I am. Observe, 4. The crime which the high priest pronounces our Saviour to be guilty of, is blasphemy. He hath spoken blasphemy. Hereupon the high priest rent his clothes; it being usual with the Jews so to do, both to shew their sorrow for it, and great detestation of it, and indignation against it. Observe, 5. The vile affronts and horrid abuses which the enemies of our Saviour put upon him; they spit in his face, they blindfold him, they smite him with their hands, and in contempt and mockery bid him prophecy who it was that smote him. Verily there is no degree of contempt, no mark of shame, no kind of suffering, which we ought to decline, or stick at, for Christ's sake, who hid not his face from shame and spitting upon our account. Observe, 6. The high priest rends his clothes at Christ's telling him, ver. 62. "He shall see the Son of man sitting on God's right hand, and coming in the clouds of heaven." And well might his clothes and his heart rend also. It was as if our Lord had said, "I that am now your prisoner, shall shortly be your judge. I now stand at your bar; and, ere long, you must stand at my tribunal. Those eyes of yours, that now see me in the form of a servant, shall behold me in the clouds, at the right hand of your God, and my Father."

66 ¶ And, as Peter was beneath in the palace, there cometh one of the maids of the high priest;

67 And, when she saw Peter warming himself, she looked upon him, and said, And thou, also, wast with Jesus of Nazareth.

68 But he denied, saying, I know him not, neither understand I what thou sayest: And he went out into the porch; and the cock crew.

69 And a maid saw him again, and began to say to them that stood by, This is one of them.

70 And he denied it again. And a little after they that stood by said again to Peter, Surely thou art one of them: for thou art a Galilean, and thy speech agreeth thereto.

71 But he began to curse and to swear, saying, I know not this man of whom ye speak.

72 And the second time the cock crew. And Peter called to mind the word that Jesus said unto him: Before the cock crow twice, thou shalt deny me thrice: And when he thought thereon, he wept.

This last paragraph of the chapter gives us an account of the fall and rising of Peter; of his sin in denying Christ, and of his recovery by repentance. Both are considered distinctly in the notes on St. Matt. xxvi. 69. That which is here farther to be taken notice of, is as followeth. Observe, 1. That amongst all the apostles and disciples of Christ, we meet not with any so extraordinary, either for faith or obedience, as Peter. He was an early professor, St. Matt. iv. 18, and a glorious confessor, St. Matt. xvi. 16. Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. Which confession of his faith, like a rock, was to be the foundation of the gospel-church in all ages; and Christ was pleased to put that honour upon Peter, as to use his ministry, in first laying the foundation of a Christian church among the Jews and Gentiles, he being the first preacher to them of that faith he did here confess. To the Jews, Acts ii. where we read of three thousand souls converted and baptized; and to the Gentiles, Acts x. in the conversion of Cornelius and his friends, whom God directed to send, not to Jerusalem for James, nor to Damascus for Paul, but to Joppa for Peter, whom Christ had appointed for that work, that he might tell him words by which he and his household should be saved. Observe, 2. The great and mighty courage which was found in St. Peter. 1. At the command of Christ, he adventures to walk on the waves of the sea, Matt. xvi. 28, being firmly persuaded, that whatsoever Christ commanded his disciples to do, he would give them strength and ability to perform. And, 2. It was a noble courage which enabled him to say, Though I die with thee, yet will I not deny thee. No doubt the good man really resolved to do as he said, little suspecting that he should with horrid oaths and bitter imprecations, deny and abjure his dying Master. "Lord! how prone are we to think our hearts better than they are! our grace stronger than it is! Not all the instances we have of human frailty in ourselves, or all the scars, marks, and wounds upon some of the best and holiest of men, by reason of their sad and shameful fall, will sufficiently convince us of our wretched impotency, and how unable we are to do good, or resist evil, by our own shattered and impaired strength." 3. An undaunted courage, and heroic greatness of mind, appeared in this apostle, when he told the Jews to their faces that they were guilty of murder, and must never expect salvation any other way, than by faith in that Jesus whom they had ignominiously crucified, and unjustly slain. Nor did St. Peter say this in a corner, or behind the curtain, but in the sanhedrim, that open court of judicature, which had so lately sentenced and condemned his Lord and Master. Observe, 3. St. Peter's profound humility and lowliness of mind: it was a mighty honour that Christ put upon him in making use of his ministry, for laying the foundation of a Christian church, both among Jews and Gentiles. And accordingly Cornelius, Acts x. would have entertained him with more than ordinary honour and veneration, falling down at his feet, and ready to adore him; but this humble apostle was so far from complying with it, that he plainly told him that he was no other than such a man as himself. And when our Lord, by a stupendous act of condescension, stooped so low as to wash his disciples' feet, St. Peter could by no means be persuaded to admit of it, neither could he be induced personally to accept it, till Christ was in a sort forced to threaten him into obedience, and a compliance with it, St. John xiii. 8. Observe, How admirable was his love unto, and burning his zeal for, his Lord and Master, insomuch that he could and did appeal to his omnipotency, for the truth and sincerity of it; Lord, thou knowest all things: thou knowest that I love thee. It was love that caused him to draw his sword in his Master's defence, against a band of soldiers, and an armed multitude. It was love that caused him to adventure on the greatest difficulties, and to expose his life to the greatest hazards. It was love that caused him to engage so deep, as to suffer and die, rather than deny him. These were his exemplary virtues; his failings were these: first, Too great a confidence of his own strength, notwithstanding Christ had particularly told him, that Satan had desired to winnow him as wheat. None are so likely to be overcome by temptation, as those who are the least afraid of it; none so ready to fall, as those that think it impossible to fall. It is a dangerous thing to believe, that, because we have so long kept our innocence, we can never lose it; and to conclude, because we have been once or twice victorious over temptations, we must be ever conquerors, 1. Cor. x. 12. Let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall; that is, let him keep a jealous eye upon the weakness and inconstancy of his nature, and with a believing eye look up to the power and promise of God, that he may be preserved from falling, and be presented faultless in the day of Christ. Secondly, His fears overcame his faith. The insolent affronts offered to his injured Master, caused him to forget his former resolutions, and instead of being a valiant confessor, he turns a shameful renegade, renouncing him for whom a little before he resolved to die. Learn hence, That slavish fear is a most tumultuous and ungovernable passion; its powerful assaults not only vanquish the strongest reason, but sometimes overcome the strongest faith. It is a weapon which the tempter uses, to the discomfort of some, and destruction of others, and therefore ought to be guarded against by those who set any value on the peace and comfort of their souls. Thirdly, One sin drew on another: his sinful equivocation in saying, I know not the man, prepared him for a downright denial, and that for an abjuration of him, with an imprecation and an anathema, swearing that he knew not the man. "Ah! Peter, is this thy owning thy Lord? Is this thy not being offended, though all should be offended? Is this thy dying with him, rather than deny him? What! hast thou forgot all thy promises and engagements to him, and all the dear and sweet pledges of love, so lately shown to thee? Surely I have learned from thy example, that it is as dangerous to trust a heart of flesh, as to rely upon an arm of flesh; for had not thy denied and forsaken Master prayed for thee, and timely succoured thee, Satan would not only have winnowed thee like wheat, but ground thee to powder." Fourthly, Observe how many complicated sins were included in this sin of Peter's: the highest ingratitude to his Master; unpardonable rashness, in venturing into such company, tarrying there so long, and without a call; making bold with temptation; and for a time there was impenitence and hardness of heart.

It is holy and safe to resist the beginnings of sin; if we yield to Satan in one temptation, he will certainly assault us with more, and stronger. Peter proceeded here from a denial to a lye, from a lye to an oath, and from an oath to a curse. Let us resist sin at first, for then have we most power, and sin has least. "And the Lord looked on Peter, and Peter remembered the word of the Lord, and went out, and wept bitterly." Observe, If Christ had not looked towards Peter, Peter would never more have looked after Christ; nor was it barely the turn of Christ's bodily eye that brought this disciple to a sorrowful remembrance of his sin; had not this outward look been accompanied with the inward and secret influences of the Spirit, it had certainly proved ineffectual. Christ looked on Judas after his treason, aye, and reproved him too; but neither that look nor that reproof did break his heart. As the sun with the same beams softens wax and hardens clay, so a look from the same Christ leaves Judas hard and impenitent, and melts down Peter into tears. Though none can say, that tears are always a sign of true repentance, yet certainly when they flow from a heart duly sensible of sin, and deeply affected with sorrow, it administers matters of hope, that there is sincere repentance. Peter, after he had wept bitterly for sin, never more returned to the after commission of sin: but he that was before timorous as an hare, became afterwards bold as a lion. He that once so shamefully denied, nay, abjured his Master, afterwards openly confessed him, and sealed that confession joyfully with his blood. It is usually observed, that a broken bone once well set, never more breaks again in the same place; a returning backslider, when once restored, contracts such an hatred of former sins, as never, never more to run into the commission of them. Let St. Peter's fall then, be a warning to all professors, against presumptuous confidence, and his restoration be an encouragement to all backsliders to renew their faith and repentance. Amen.

CHAP. XV.

AND, straightway in the morning, the chief priests held a consultation with the elders and scribes, and the whole council, and bound Jesus, and carried him away, and delivered him to Pilate.

The foregoing chapter gave us an account of Judas' treason, in delivering our Saviour into the hands of the chief priests. In this chapter we find our Lord brought by the chief priests unto Pontius Pilate, the Roman governor, in order to his condemnation. Whence observe, That it has been the old policy of corrupt church-governors, to abuse the power of the civil magistrate, in executing their cruel and unjust censures and sentences upon holy and innocent persons. The chief priests and elders do not kill our Saviour themselves, for it was not lawful for them to put any man to death, being themselves under the power of the Roman government; accordingly they deliver Christ over to the secular power, and desire Pilate, the civil magistrate, to sentence and condemn him.

2 And Pilate asked him, Art thou the King of the Jews? And he, answering, said unto him, Thou sayest it.

3 And the chief priests accused him of many things; but he answered nothing.

4 And Pilate asked him again, saying, Answerest thou nothing? Behold, how many things they witness against thee.

5 But Jesus yet answered nothing; so that Pilate marvelled.

It is very observable, how readily our Saviour answers before Pilate; Pilate said, Art thou the king of the Jews? Jesus answered, Thou sayest it; or, it is as thou sayest. But to all the accusations of the chief priests, and to all that they falsely laid to his charge before Pilate, our Saviour answered never a word. He answered Pilate, but would not answer the chief priests a word before Pilate; probably for these reasons, because his innocency was such as needed no apology; because their calumnies and accusations were so notoriously false, that they needed no confutations to shew his contempt of death, and teach us, by his example, to despise the false accusations of malicious men, and to learn us patience and submission, when for his sake we are slandered and traduced; for these reasons our Saviour was as a deaf man, not answering the calumnies of the chief priests: but when Pilate asks him a question, which our Saviour knew that a direct answer to would cost him his life, Art thou the king of the Jews? He replies, I am. Hence says the apostle, 1. Tim. vi. 13. that Jesus Christ before Pontius Pilate witnessed a good confession. Teaching us, That although we may, and sometimes ought to hold our peace, when our own reputation is concerned, yet must we never be silent when the honour of God and his truth may effectually be promoted by a full confession: "For says Christ, whosoever denies me before man, him will I deny in the presence of my Father, and before all his holy angels."

6 Now at that feast he released unto them one prisoner, whomsoever they desired.

7 And there was one, named Barabbas, which lay bound with them that had made insurrection with him, who had committed murder in the insurrection.

8 And the multitude, crying aloud, began to desire him to do as he had ever done unto them.

9 But Pilate answered them, saying, Will ye that I release unto you the King of the Jews?

10 (For he knew that the chief priests had delivered him for envy.)

11 But the chief priests moved the people, to desire that he should rather release Barabbas unto them.

12 And Pilate answered, and said again unto them, What will ye then that I should do unto him whom ye call the King of the Jews?

13 And they cried out again, Crucify him.

14 Then Pilate said unto them, Why, what evil hath he done? And they cried out the more exceedingly, Crucify him.

15 ¶ And so Pilate, willing to content the people released Barabbas unto them, and delivered Jesus, when he had scourged him, to be crucified.

Now at that feast, that is, at the feast of the passover, which by way of eminency is called the feast, the governor used to release a prisoner; possibly by way of memorial of their deliverance out of Egypt; accordingly Pilate makes a motion that Christ may be the prisoner set at liberty in honour of their feast; for he was sensible that what they did was out of envy and malice. Observe here, 1. What were the sins which immediately occasioned the death of Christ; they were covetousness and envy. Covetousness caused Judas to sell him to the chief priests, and envy caused the chief priests to deliver him up to Pilate to crucify him. Envy is a killing and murdering passion; Envy slayeth the silly one, Job v. 2. That is, it slayeth the silly person who harbours this pestilent lust in his breast and bosom; being like a fire in his bones, continually preying upon his spirits; and it is also the occasion of slaying many an holy and innocent person; for who can stand before envy? The person envying wishes the envied out of his way, yea, out of the world; and if need be, will not only wish it, but lend a lift upon occasion toward it also. Witness the chief priests here, whose envy was so conspicuous and barefaced, that Pilate himself takes notice of it; he knew that the Chief Priests had delivered him for envy. Observe, 2. How unwilling, how very unwilling Pilate was to be the instrument of our Saviour's death. One while he expostulates with the chief priests, saying, What evil hath he done? Another while he bids them, Take him, and judge him according to their law. Nay, St. Luke says, that Pilate came forth three several times, professing, That he found no fault in him. Luke xxviii. From hence note, That hypocrites within the visible church may be guilty of such tremendous acts of wickedness, as the consciences of infidels and pagans without the church may boggle at, and protest against. Pilate, a pagan, absolves Christ, whilst the hypocritical Jews, that heard his doctrine, and saw his miracles, do condemn him. Observe, lastly, How Pilate suffers himself to be overcome with the Jews' importunity, and, contrary to the light of his own reason and judgment, delivers the holy and innocent Jesus, first to be scourged, and then crucified. It is a vain apology for sin, when persons pretend that it was not committed with their own consent, but at the instigation and importunity of others; such is the frame and constitution of man's soul, that one can make him either wicked or miserable without his own consent. Pilate willing to content the people, When he had scourged Jesus, delivered him to be crucified. Here observe, That as the death of the cross was a Roman punishment, so it was the manner of the Romans first to whip their malefactors and then crucify them. Now the manner of the Romans' scourging is said to be thus: "They stripped the condemned person, and bound him to a post; two strong men first scourged him with rods of thorns, then two others scourged him with whips of thorns full of knots, and last of all two more with whips of wire, and therewith tore off the very flesh and skin from the malefactor's back and sides." That our blessed Saviour was thus cruelly scourged by Pilate's command, seems to some not improbable, from that of the psalmist, Psal. cxxix. 3. The ploughers ploughed upon my back, and made long furrows: which if spoken prophetically of Christ, was literally fulfilled in the day of his scourging. But why was the precious and tender body of our holy Lord thus galled, rent, and torn with scourging? Doubtless to fulfil that prophecy, Isaiah l. 6. "I gave my back to the smiters, and my cheek to them that pluck off the hair; that by his stripes we might be healed;" and from his example, learn, Not to think it strange, if we find ourselves scourged with the tongue, with the hands, or with both, when we see our dear Redeemer bleeding by stripes and scourges before our eyes.

16 And the soldiers led him away into the hall called Pretorium; and they call together the whole band.

17 And they clothed him with purple, and platted a crown of thorns, and put it about his head, 18 And began to salute him, Hail, King of the Jews!

19 And they smote him on the head with a reed, and did spit upon him, and, bowing their knees, worshipped him.

20 And, when they had mocked him, they took off the purple from him, and put his own clothes on him, and led him out to crucify him.

The next part of our Saviour's sufferings, consisted of cruel mockings: he had owned himself to be the king of the Jews; that is, a spiritual King in and over his church; but the Jews expecting that the Messiah should have appeared in the pomp of an earthly prince, and finding themselves disappointed of their expectation in our Saviour, they look upon him as a deceiver and impostor; and accordingly treat him as a mock-king, with all the marks of derision and scorn; for first they put a crown upon his head, but a very ignominious and cruel one, a crown of thorns; they place a sceptre in his hand, but that of a reed; a robe of scarlet or purple upon his body, and then bowed their knees before him, as they were wont to do before their princes, crying, Hail, King. Thus were all the marks of scorn imaginable put upon our dear Redeemer; yet what they did in jest God permitted to be in earnest. For all these things were signs and marks of sovereignty; and Almighty God caused the regal dignity of his Son to shine forth, even in the midst of his greatest abasement; whence was all his jeering and sport, but to flout majesty? And why did Christ undergo all this ignominy, disgrace, and shame, but to shew what was due unto us for our sins? as also to give us an example to bear all the scorn, reproach, and shame imaginable for his sake: "who for the joy that was set before him, despised the shame, as well as endured the cross."

21 And they compel one Simon, a

Cyrenian, who passed by, coming out of the country, the father of Alexander and Rufus, to bear his cross.

22 And they bring him unto the place Golgotha, which is, being interpreted, The place of a scull.

23 And they gave him to drink wine mingled with myrrh: but he received it not.

24 And when they had crucified him, they parted his garments, casting lots upon them, what every man should take.

25 And it was the third hour, and they crucified him.

26 And the superscription of his accusation was written over, THE KING OF THE JEWS.

27 ¶ And with him they crucify two thieves; the one on his right hand, and the other on his left.

28 And the scripture was fulfilled, which saith, And he was numbered with the transgressors.

29 And they that passed by railed on him, wagging their heads and saying, Ah, thou that destroyest the temple, and buildest it in three days, 30 Save thyself, and come down from the cross.

31 Likewise also the chief priests, mocking, said, among themselves with the scribes, He saved others; himself he cannot save.

32 Let Christ the King of Israel descend now from the cross, that we may see and believe. And they that were crucified with him reviled him.

33 And, when the sixth hour was come, there was darkness over the whole land until the ninth hour.

34 And at the ninth hour Jesus cried with a loud voice, saying, Eloi, Eloi, lama sabachthani? which is, being interpreted, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?

35 And some of them that stood by, when they heard it, said, Behold, he calleth Elias.

36 And one ran, and filled a sponge full of vinegar, and put it on a reed, and gave him to drink, saying, Let alone; let us see whether Elias will come to take him down.

37 And Jesus cried with a loud voice, and gave up the ghost.

The sentence of death being passed by Pilate, who can with dry eyes, behold the sad pomp of our Saviour's bloody execution? Forth comes the blessed Jesus out of Pilate's gate, bearing that cross which was soon after to bear him; with his cross on his shoulder, he marches towards Golgotha; and when they see he can go no faster, they force Simon the Cyrenian, not out of compassion but indignation, to be the porter of his cross. This Cyrenian being a Gentile, not a Jew, that bare our Saviour's cross, thereby might be signified that the Gentiles should have a part in Christ, as well as the Jews, and be sharers with them in the benefits of the cross. At length our holy Lord comes to Golgotha, the place of his bitter and bloody execution; here, in a public place, with infamous company, betwixt two thieves, is he crucified; that is fastened to a great cross of wood, his hands stretched forth abroad, and his feet closed together, and both hands and feet fastened with nails; his naked body was lifted up in the air, hanging betwixt heaven and earth; signifying thereby, that the crucified person deserved to live in neither. This shameful, painful, and accursed death, did the holy and innocent Jesus suffer and undergo, for shameless sinners. Some observe all the dimensions of length, breadth, depth, and height, in our Saviour's sufferings; for length, his passion was several hours long, from twelve to three, exposed all that time both to hunger and cold. The thieves that were crucified with him, endured only personal pains, but he underwent the miseries of all mankind. As to its breadth, his passion extended over all the powers and parts of his soul and body; no part free but his tongue, which was at liberty to pray for his enemies. His sight was tormented with the scornful gestures of those who passed by, wagging their heads; his hearing grieved with taunts and jeers of the priests and people; his smelling offended with noisome savours in the place of sculls; his taste with the gall and vinegar given him to drink; his feeling was wonderfully affected by the nails which pierced his tender nerves with a multiplicity of wounds; and for the depth of his passion, it was as deep as hell itself; enduring torture in his soul, as well as torments in his body; groaning under the burden of desertion, and crying out, My God, My God, why hast thou forsaken me? Lastly, for the height of his passion, his sufferings were as high as heaven, his person being infinite as well as innocent, no less than the son of God, which adds infinite worth and value to his sufferings, Lord, "Let us be able to comprehend with all saints, what is the breadth and length, depth and height, of our Saviour's love," in suffering for us, "and let us know that love of his which passeth knowledge." Observe next, The inscription wrote by Pilate over our suffering Saviour, This is Jesus the King of the Jews; it was the manner of the Romans, when they crucified a malefactor, to publish the cause of his death in capital letters, placed over the head of the person. Now it is observable, How wonderfully the wisdom of God over-ruled the heart and pen of Pilate to draw his title, which was truly honourable, and fix it to his cross; Pilate is Christ's herald, and proclaims him King of the Jews. Learn hence, That the regal dignity of Christ was proclaimed by an enemy, and that in a time of his greatest sufferings and reproaches; Pilate, without his own knowledge, did our Saviour an eminent piece of service; he did that for Christ which none of his own disciples durst do: not that he did it designedly, but from the special overruling providence of God: no thanks to Pilate for all this, because the highest services performed to Christ undesignedly, shall neither be accepted nor rewarded by God. Observe farther, The several aggravations of our Lord's sufferings upon the cross. 1. From the company, he suffered with two thieves: it had been a sufficient disparagement to our blessed Saviour to have been sorted with the best of men; but to be numbered with the scum of mankind, is such an indignity, as confounds our thoughts. This was designed by the Jews to dishonour and disgrace our Saviour the more, and persuade the world that he was the greatest of offenders; but God over-ruled this also, for fulfilling an ancient prophecy concerning the Messiah, Isa. liii. last verse: "And he was numbered with the transgressors." 2. Another aggravation of our Lord's suffering upon the cross, was the scorn and mocking derision which he met with in his dying moments, both from the common people, from the chief priests, and from the thieves that suffered with him. The common people reviled him, wagging their heads: the chief priests, though men of age and gravity, yet barbarously mocked him in his misery; and not only so, but they atheistically scoff and jeer at his faith and affiance in God, saying, "He trusted in God that he would deliver him; let him deliver him if he would have him."

Where note, That persecutors are generally atheistical scoffers; the chief priests and elders, though knowing men, yet they blaspheme God; they mock at his power, and deride his providence, which is as bad as to deny his being; so that from hence we may gather, That those who administer to God in holy things, by way of office, if they be not the best, they are the worst of men. No such bitter enemies to the power of godliness, as the ministers of religion, who were never acquainted with the efficacy and power of it upon their own hearts and lives. Nothing on this side hell is worse than a wicked priest, a minister of God devoted to the service of the devil. A third aggravation of our Lord's sufferings upon the cross, was this, that the thieves that suffered with him, reviled him with the rest: that is, one of them, as St. Luke has it, or perhaps both of them might do it at first: which, if so, increases the wonder of the penitent thief's conversion. From the penitent thief's reviling Christ, we learn, That neither shame nor pain will change the mind of a resolute sinner, but even then, when he is in the suburbs of hell, will he blaspheme: They that were crucified with him reviled him. But the most aggravating circumstance of all the rest in our Lord's sufferings, was this, That he was forsaken of his father; My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? Thence learn, That the Lord Jesus Christ, when suffering for our sins, was really deserted and forsaken by his Father, and left destitute of all sensible consolation! Why hast thou forsaken me? Learn farther, That under this desertion Christ despaired not, but still retained a firm persuasion of God's love unto him, and experienced necessary supports from him: My God, my God, these are words of affiance and faith. Christ was thus forsaken for us, that we might never be forsaken by God; yet by God's forsaking of Christ, we are not to understand any abatement of divine love, but only a withdrawing from the human nature the sense of his love, and a letting out upon his soul, a deep, afflicting sense of his displeasure against sin. There is a twofold desertion; the one total, final, and eternal, by which God utterly forsakes a person, both as to grace and glory, being for sin wholly cast out of God's presence, and adjudged to eternal torments. This Christ was not capable of, nor could the dignity of his person admit it. The other is a partial temporary desertion; when God for a little moment hides his face from his children. Now this was most agreeable to Christ's nature, and also suitable to his office, who was to satisfy the justice of God for our forsaking of him, and to bring us back again to God, that we might be received for ever. Observe, lastly, What a miraculous evidence Christ gave of his Godhead; instantly before he gave up the ghost, he cried with a loud voice. This shews he did not die according to the ordinary course of nature, gradually drawing on, as we express it; but his life was whole in him to the last, and nature as strong as it was at first. Other men die by degrees, and towards their end their sense of pain is much blunted: but Christ stood under the pains of death in his full strength, and his life was whole and entire in him to the very last moment. This was evident by the mighty outcry he made when he gave up the ghost, contrary to the sense and experience of all persons. Now he that could cry with such a loud voice as he did (in articulo mortis) could have kept himself from dying, if he would. Hence we learn, That when Christ died, he rather conquered death, than was conquered by it, he most voluntarily and freely laid down his life, before death could come at him. Thus died Christ, the captain of our salvation; and, like Sampson, became more victorious by his death, than he was in his life.

38 And the vail of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom.

39 And when the centurion, which stood over against him, saw that he so cried out, and gave up the ghost, he said, Truly this man was the Son of God.

40 There were also women looking on afar off, among whom was Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James the less, and of Joses, and Salome;

41 (Who also, when he was in Galilee, followed him, and ministered unto him;) and many other women which came up with him unto Jerusalem.

Three circumstances are here observable; 1. A stupendous prodigy happening, upon the death of our Saviour, The vail of the temple was rent in twain from top to bottom: the vail was a hanging which parted the most holy place from the holy sanctuary. By the reading of which, God testified that he was now about to forsake his temple; that the ceremonial law was now abolished by the death of Christ, and that by the blood of Jesus we have access unto God, and may enter into the holy of holies. See the note on Matt. xxvii. 51. Observe, 2. What influence the manner and circumstances of our Saviour's death had upon the mind of the centurion, and the soldiers with him; they cry, Verily this was the Son of God. Where, observe, That the heathen soldiers were sooner convinced of the divinity of our Saviour than the unbelieving Jewish doctors. Obstinacy and unbelief filled their minds with an invincible prejudice against Christ, so that neither the miracles wrought by him in his life, or at his death, could convince them that Christ was any thing better than an impostor or deceiver. None are so blind as those who through malicious obstinacy and inveterate prejudice will not see. Observe, 3. Who of Christ's friends were witnesses of his death; they are the women that followed him, and ministered unto him; not one of his dear disciples came near him, except John, who stood by the virgin Mary. O what a shame was this, for the apostles to be absent from a spectacle upon which the salvation of the world did depend! And what an honour was this to the female sex in general, and to these holy women in particular, that they had the courage to follow Christ to his cross, when all his disciples forsook him and fled! God can make timorous and fearful women bold and courageous confessors of his truth, and fortify them against the fears of suffering, contrary to the natural timorousness of their temper: These women wait upon Christ's cross when his apostles fly, and durst not come nigh it.

42 ¶ And now, when the even was come, because it was the preparation, that is, the day before the sabbath;

43 Joseph of Arimathea, an honourable counsellor, which also waited for the kingdom of God, came, and went in boldly unto Pilate, and craved the body of Jesus.

44 And Pilate marvelled if he were already dead: and calling unto him the centurion, he asked him whether he had been any while dead.

45 And, when he knew it of the centurion, he gave the body to Joseph.

46 And he bought fine linen, and took him down, and wrapped him in the linen, and laid him in a sepulchre which was hewn out of a rock, and rolled a stone unto the door of the sepulchre.

47 And Mary Magdalene, and Mary the Mother of Joses, beheld where he was laid.

The circumstances of our Lord's funeral, and honourable interment in the grave, are here recorded by the evangelist; such a funeral as never was since graves were first digged. Where observe, 1. Our Lord's body must be begged before it could be buried; the dead bodies of malefactors benign in the power; and at the disposal of the judge. Pilate grants it, and accordingly the dead body is taken down, wrapped in fine linen, and prepared for the sepulchre. Observe, 2. The person that bestows this honourable burial upon our Saviour, Joseph of Arimathea; a disciple no doubt, though he did not make a public and open profession; a worthy, though a close disciple. Grace doth not always make a public and open shew where it is; as there is much secret riches in the bowels of the earth, which no eye ever saw, so there is much grace in the hearts of some Christians, that the eye of the world takes little notice of. Some gracious persons cannot put forward, and discover themselves, in discourse as others; and yet such weak Christians, as the world count them, perhaps shall stand their ground when stronger run away. We read of none of the apostles at Christ's funeral; fear had chased them away; but Joseph of Arimathea appears boldly; if God strengthens the weak, and leaves the strong to the prevalency of their own fears, The weak shall be as David, the strong as tow. Observe, 3. The mourners that followed our Saviour's hearse, namely, the women which came out of Galilee, particularly the two Marys; a very poor train of mourners; the apostles were all scattered, and afraid to own their Lord and Master, either dying or dead. And as our Lord affected no pomp or gallantry in his life, so funeral pomp had been no way suitable, either to the end or manner of his death. Humiliation was designed in his death, and his burial was the lowest degree of humiliation, therefore might not be pompous. Observe, 4. The grave or sepulchre where our Lord was buried: it was in a sepulchre hewn out of a rock; in a new sepulchre: in a new sepulchre in a garden. 1. Our Lord was buried in a garden: as by the sin of the first Adam we were driven out of the garden of pleasure, the earthly paradise; so by the sufferings of the second Adam, who lay buried in a garden, we may hope for entrance into the heavenly paradise. 2. It was in a sepulchre hewn out of a rock; that so his enemies might have no occasion to cavil, and say, that his disciples stole him away by secret holes, or unseen passages under ground. 3. It was in a new sepulchre, in which never man was laid; lest his adversaries should say, it was some other that was risen, who was buried there before him; or that he arose from the dead by touching some other corpse. Observe, 5. The manner of our Lord's funeral; it was hasty, open, and decent; it was performed in haste, by reason of the straits of time;

the sabbath was approaching, and they lay all business aside to prepare for that. Learn hence, How much it is our duty to dispatch our worldly business, as early as we can, towards the end of the week, that we may be the better prepared to sanctify the Lord's day, if we live to enjoy it. Hence it is that we are called upon to remember that day before it comes, and to sanctify it when it is come. Again, The Lord was buried openly, as well as hastily; all persons had liberty to be spectators, lest any should object that there was deceit and fraud used in or about our Saviour's burial: yet was he also interred decently, his holy body being wrapped in fine linen, and perfumed with spices, according to the Jewish custom. Observe, 6. The reasons why our Lord was buried, seeing he was to rise again in as short a time as other men lie by the walls: and had his body remained a thousand years unburied, it would have seen no corruption, having never been tainted with sin. Sin is the cause of the body's corruption; it is sin that makes our bodies stink worse than carrion when they are dead. A funeral then was not necessary for Christ's body upon the same account as it was necessary for ours. But, 1. Our Lord was buried to declare the certainty of his death, and the reality of his resurrection; and for this reason did God's providence order it, that he should be embalmed, to cut off all pretensions; for in this kind of embalming, his mouth, his ears, and his nostrils, were all filled with odours and spices, that there could be no latent principle of life in him; his being thus buried then, did demonstrate him to be certainly dead. 2. Christ was buried, to fulfil the types and prophecies that went before concerning him. "Jonas' being three days and three nights in the belly of the whale, was a type of Christ's being three days and three nights in the heart of the earth;" yea, the prophet Isaiah, chap. liii. 9, declared our Lord's funeral, and the manner of it, long before he was born; "He made his grave with the wicked, and with the rich in his death;" pointing by that expression at this tomb of Joseph's who was a rich man, and laid him in a tomb designed for himself. 3. He was buried to complete his humiliation. "They have brought me to the dust of death," says David, a type of Christ. This was the lowest step he could possibly descend in his abased state; lower he could not be laid, and so low his blessed head must be laid, else he had not been humble to the lowest degree of humiliation. 4. Christ went into the grave, that he might conquer death in his own territories and dominions. His victory over the grave causes his saints to triumph and sing, O grave where is thy destruction! Our dear Redeemer has perfumed the bed of the grave by his own lying in it, so that a pillow of down is not so soft to a believer's head as a pillow of dust. Observe lastly, Of what use the doctrine of the Lord's burial may be unto us his disciples and followers; 1. For instruction. Here we see the amazing depths of our Lord's humiliation; from what, and to what, his love brought him; even from the bosom of his Father, to the bosom of the grave. O how doth the depth of humiliation shew us the sufficiency of his satisfaction, and therein the heinousness of our transgression! 2. For consolation against the fears of death and the grave; the grave received Christ, but could not retain him; death swallowed him up, as the fish did Jonas, but quickly vomited him up again: and so shall it fare with Christ mystical, as it did with Christ personal. As it was done to the head, so it shall be done to the members: the grave could not long keep him, it shall not always keep us: as his body rested in hope so shall ours also; and although we see corruption, yet shall we not always lie under the power of corruption. In short, Christ's lying in the grave has changed and altered the nature of the grave; it was a prison before, a bed of rest now; a loathsome grave before, a perfumed bed now; he whose head is in heaven, need not fear to put his feet into the grave; "Awake, and sing, thou that dwellest in the dust," for the enmity of the grave is slain by Christ. 3. For our imitation: let us study and endeavour to be buried with Christ; in respect of our sins, I mean, Rom. vi. 4. Buried with him into death. Our sins should be as a dead body in several respects. Are dead bodies removed out of the society of men? So should our sins be removed far from us. Do dead bodies in the grave spend and consume by degrees? So should our sins daily. Will dead bodies grow every day more and more loathsome to others? So should our sins be to ourselves. Do dead bodies wax out of memory, and are quite forgotten? So should our sins also, in respect of any delight that we take in remembering of them: we should always remember our sins to our humiliation, but never speak of them with the least delight or satisfaction; for this, in God's account, is a new commission of them, and lays us under an aggravated guilt and condemnation.

CHAP. XVI.

This last chapter of St. Mark's gospel contains the history of our Saviour's resurrection, and gives us an account of what he did upon earth, between the time of his triumphant resurrection, and his glorious ascension.

AND, when the sabbath was past, Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James, and Salome, had bought sweet spices, that they might come and anoint him.

2 And very early in the morning, the first day of the week, they came unto the sepulchre at the rising of the sun.

The Lord of life was buried on the Friday, in the evening of that day on which he was crucified, and his holy body rested in the silent grave all the next day, and some part of the day following. Thus arose he again the third day, neither sooner nor later: not sooner, lest the truth of his death should have been questioned, that he did not die at all; and not later, lest the faith of his disciples should have failed. Accordingly when the sabbath was past, Mary Magdalene getting the other women together, she and they set out before day to visit the holy sepulchre; and about sun-rising they get to it, intending with their spices and odours farther to embalm their Lord's body. Here observe, 1. That although the hearts of these holy women did burn with an ardent zeal and affection to their crucified Lord, yet the commanded duties of the sabbath are not omitted by them; they keep close, and silently spend that holy day in a mixture of grief and hope. A good pattern of sabbath-sanctification, and worthy of our Christian imitation. Observe, 2. These holy women go, but not empty-handed; she that bestowed a costly alabaster box of ointment upon Christ whilst alive, has prepared no less precious odours for him now dead: thereby paying their last homage to our Saviour's corpse. But what need of odours to perfume a body which could not see corruption: True, his holy body did not want them, but the love and affection of his friends could not withhold them. Observe, 3. How great a tribute of respect and honour is due and payable to the memory of these holy women, for their great magnanimity and courage; they followed Christ when his cowardly disciples left him; they accompanied him to the cross, they followed his bier to the grave, when his disciples durst not appear; and now, very early in the morning, they go to visit his sepulchre, fearing neither the darkness of the night, nor the presence of the watchmen. Learn hence, That courage is the special gift of God, and if he gives it to the feebler sex, even to timorous and fearful women, it is not in the power of men to make them afraid.

3 And they said among themselves, Who shall roll us away the stone from the door of the sepulchre?

4 And when they looked, they saw that the stone was rolled away; for it was very great.

5 And entering into the sepulchre, they saw a young man sitting on the right side, clothed in a long white garment; and they were affrighted.

6 And he saith unto them, Be not affrighted. Ye seek Jesus of Nazareth, which was crucified; he is risen: he is not here; behold the place where they laid him.

7 But go your way, tell his disciples and Peter, that he goeth before you into Galilee: there shall ye see him, as he said unto you.

8 And they went out quickly, and fled from the sepulchre: for they trembled, and were amazed; and neither said they any thing to any man; for they were afraid.

Observe here, 1. With what pomp and triumph doth our Lord arise; an angel is sent from heaven to roll away the stone. But could not Christ have risen without the angel's help? yes, doubtless; he that raised himself, could surely have rolled away the stone; but God thinks fit to send an officer from heaven to open the prison door of the grave, and by setting our surety at liberty, proclaims our debt to the divine justice fully satisfied. Besides, it was fit that the angels who had been witnesses of our Saviour's passion, should also be witnesses of his resurrection. Observe, 2. Our Lord's resurrection declared, He is risen, he is not here. Almighty God never intended that the darling of his soul should be left in an obscure sepulchre; He is not here, said the angel, where they laid him, where you left him. Death has lost its prey, and the grave has lost its prisoner. Observe, 3. It is not said, he is not here, for he is raised, but, He is risen. The word imports the active power of Christ, or the self-quickening principle by which Christ raised himself from the dead, Acts i. 3. He shewed himself alive after his passion. Hence learn, That it was the divine nature, or godhead, of Christ, which raised the human nature from death to life: others were raised from the grave by Christ's power; but he raised himself by his own power. Observe, 4. The testimony or witness given of our Lord's resurrection; that of an angel in human shape. A young man clothed in a long white garment. But why is an angel the first publisher of our Saviour's resurrection? Surely the dignity of our Lord's person, and the excellency of his resurrection require that it should be thus published. How very serviceable and officious the holy angels were in attending upon our Saviour in the days of his flesh, see in the note on Matt. xxviii. 6, 7. Observe, 5. The persons to whom our Lord's resurrection was first declared and made known; to women, to the two Marys. But why to women? And why to these women? Why to women? Because God will make use of weak means for producing great effects; knowing that the weakness of the instrument redounds to the greater honour of the agent. In the whole dispensation of the gospel, God intermixes divine power with human weakness. Thus the conception of Christ was by the power of the Holy Ghost, but his mother was a poor woman, a carpenter's spouse; so the crucifixion of Christ was in much meanness and outward baseness, being crucified between two thieves. But the powers of heaven and earth trembling, the rocks rending, the graves opening, shewed a mixture of divine power. Thus here God will honour what instruments he pleases for the accomplishment of his own purposes. But why to these women, the two Marys, is the first discovery made of our Saviour's resurrection? Possibly it was a reward for their magnanimity and masculine courage; these women cleaved to Christ when the apostles forsook him; they assisted at his cross, they attended at his funeral, they waited at his sepulchre; these women had more courage than the apostles, therefore God makes them apostles to the apostles, this was a tacit rebuke, a secret check given to the apostles, that they should be out-done by women; these holy women went before the apostles in the last services that were done for Christ, and therefore the apostles come after them in their rewards and comforts. Observe, 6. The evidence which the angel offers to the women, to evince and prove the verity and certainty of our Saviour's resurrection, namely, by an appeal to their senses; "Behold the place where they laid him:" the senses, when rightly disposed, are the proper judges of all sensible objects, and accordingly Christ himself did appeal to his disciples' senses concerning the truth of his own resurrection: "Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I myself." And, indeed, if we must not believe our senses, we shall want the best external evidence for the proof of the certainty and truth of the Christian religion; namely, the miracles wrought by Christ and his apostles: for what assurance can we have of the reality of those miracles, but from our senses? Therefore, says our Saviour, "If you believe not me, yet believe the works that I do:" that is, the miracles which I have wrought before your eyes. Now as my senses tell me that Christ's miracles were true, so they assure me that the doctrine of transubstantiation is false. From the whole, note, That the Lord Jesus Christ, by the omnipotent power of his godhead, revived and rose again from the dead the third day, to the terror and consternation of his enemies, and the unspeakable joy and consolation of believers. Observe, lastly, The quick dispatch made of the joyful news of our Lord's resurrection to the sorrowful disciples: Go tell the disciples, says the angel; Go tell my brethren, says Christ, Matt. xxviii. 10. Christ might have said, "Go tell those apostate apostles, that cowardly left me in my danger, that durst not own me in the high priest's hall, that durst not come within the shadow of my cross, nor within sight of my sepulchre;" not a word of this, by way of upbraiding them for their late shameful cowardice, but all words of kindness; Go tell my brethren. Where note, That Christ calls them brethren after his resurrection and exaltation; whereby shewing that the change in his condition had wrought no change in his affection towards his poor disciples; but those that were his brethren before, in the time of his abasement, are still so after his exaltation and advancement; Go tell my brethren, says Christ; Go tell his disciples and Peter, says the angel. Where note, That St. Peter is here particularly named, not because of his primacy and superiority over the rest of the apostles, as the church of Rome would have it, but because he had denied Christ, and for that denial was swallowed up with sorrow, and stood most in need of comfort; therefore, says Christ by an angel, speak particularly to Peter, be sure that his sad heart be comforted with this joyful news, that he may know that I am friends with him, notwithstanding his late cowardice; "Tell the disciples and Peter, that he goeth before you into Galilee." But why into Galilee? because Jerusalem was now a forsaken place, a people abandoned to destruction; but Galilee was a place where Christ's ministry was more acceptable. Such places shall be most honoured with Christ's presence, where his gospel is most accepted.

9. ¶ Now, when Jesus was risen early, the first day of the week, he appeared first to Mary Magdalene, out of whom he had cast seven devils.

10 And she went and told them that had been with him, as they mourned and wept, 11 And they, when they had heard that he was alive, and had been seen of her, believed not.

12 After that, he appeared in another form unto two of them, as they walked and went into the country.

13 And they went and told it unto the residue : neither believed they them.

14 Afterward he appeared unto the eleven as they sat at meat, and upbraided them with their unbelief and hardness of heart, because they believed not them which had seen him after he was risen.

An account is here given of a threefold appearance of Christ after his resurrection. 1. To Mary Magdalene, not to the virgin Mary; and it is observable, That our blessed Saviour, after his resurrection, first appeared to Mary Magdalene, a grievous sinner, for the comfort of all true penitents. Mary goes immediately to his disciples, whom she finds weeping and mourning, and tells them, She had seen the Lord ; but they believed her not. The second appearance was to the two disciples going into the country, that is, into the village of Emmaus; as they were in the way, Jesus joined himself to their company, but their eyes were holden by the power of God, that they did not discern him in his own proper shape, but apprehended him to be another person whom they conversed with. His third appearance was to the eleven as they sat at meat, whom he upbraids with their unbelief; and to convince them effectually that he was risen from the dead, he eats with them a piece of broiled fish, and of an honeycomb. Not that he needed it, seeing he was now become immortal, but to assure them that he had still the same body. From the whole note, How industriously our Lord endeavours to confirm his disciples' faith in the doctrine of his resurrection: so slack and backward were they to believe that the Messiah was risen from the dead, that all the predictions of scripture, all the assurances they had received from our Saviour's mouth, yea, all the appearances of our Saviour to them, after he was actually risen from the dead, were little enough to confirm and establish them in the certain belief that he was risen from the dead.

15 ¶ And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature.

16 He that believeth, and is baptized, shall be saved ; but he that believeth not, shall be damned.

Here our Saviour gives commission to his disciples to congregate and gather a Christian church out of all nations, to go forth and preach the gospel to every creature ; that is, to all reasonable creatures that are capable of it; not to the Jews only, but to the Gentiles also, without any distinction of country, age, or sex whatsoever. Learn thence, That the apostles and first planters of the gospel had a commission from Christ to go amongst the Pagan Gentiles, without limitation or distinction, to instruct them in the saving mysteries of the gospel. The second branch of their commission was, to baptize. Where observe the encouraging promise made by Christ, He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved ; that is, he that receiveth and embraceth the gospel preached by you, and thereupon becomes a proselyte and disciple of Christ, and receives baptism, the seal of the new covenant, shall for all his former sins receive pardon, and upon his perseverance obtain eternal life; but he that stands out obstinately and impenitently shall certainly be damned. The two damning sins under the gospel, are infidelity and hypocrisy; not receiving Christ for their Lord and Saviour by some, or doing this feignedly by others. Happy are they in whom the preaching of the gospel produceth such a faith as is the parent and principle of obedience; He that so believeth and is baptized, shall be saved : Accordingly, some paraphrase the words thus: "He that believeth, and is baptized, shall be saved; that is, he shall, by virtue of the faith in baptism, be put into a state of salvation; so that if they continue in that faith, and do not wilfully recede from his baptismal covenant, he shall actually be saved." Note farther, That they who hence conclude, that infants are not capable of baptism, because they cannot believe, must also hence conclude, that they cannot be saved, because they cannot believe; for faith is more expressly required to salvation, than to baptism. Note lastly, that though it be said, He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved ; it is not said, He that is not baptized, shall be damned ; because it is not the want, but the contempt of baptism that damns, otherwise infants might be damned for their parents' neglects.

17 And these signs shall follow them that believe: In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues:

18 They shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover.

Here we have a gracious promise of Christ, that in order to the spreading and propagating the gospel, as far as may be, the Spirit should be poured forth abundantly from on high upon the apostles, and thereby they should be enabled to work miracles, to cast out devils, to speak strange languages, which we read they did, Acts ii. And this power of working miracles, continued in the church an hundred years after Christ's ascension, until Christianity had taken root in the hearts of men. Iræneus lib. ii. ch. 58, says, that many believers, besides the apostles, had this power of working miracles; as new-set plants are watered at first, till they have taken fast rooting, so, that the Christian faith might grow the faster, God watered it with miracles at his first plantation, Yet observe, That all the miracles which they had power to work, were healing and beneficent; not terrifying judgments, but acts of kindness and mercy. It was our Saviour's design to bring over persons to Christianity by lenity, mildness, and gentleness, not to affright them into a compliance with astonishing judgment, which might affect their fear, but little influence their faith; for the will and consent of persons to the principles of any religion, especially the Christian, is like a royal fort which must not be stormed by violence, but taken by surrender.

19 ¶ So then after the Lord had spoken unto them, he was received up into heaven, and sat on the right hand of God.

Here we have that grand article of our Christian faith asserted, namely, our Saviour's ascension into heaven, together with his exaltation there, expressed by his sitting at God's right hand; he ascended now to heaven in his human nature, for in his divine nature he was there already; and it was necessary that he should thus ascend, in order to his own personal exaltation and glorification. When he was on earth, his humility, patience, and self-denial, were exercised by undergoing God's wrath, the devil's rage, and man's cruelty; now he goes to heaven, that they may be rewarded; he that is a patient sufferer upon earth, shall be a triumphant conqueror in heaven; also with respect to his church on earth, it was necessary that our Lord should ascend up into heaven, namely, to send down the Holy Spirit upon his apostles, which he did at the feast of Pentecost. "If I go not away, (says Christ,) the comforter will not come; but if I depart, I will send him unto you;" and likewise to be a powerful advocate and intercessor with his Father in heaven; on the behalf of his church and children here upon earth. Heb. ix. 24. "Christ is entered into heaven itself, there to appear in the presence of God for us." Finally, Christ ascended into heaven, to give us an assurance, that in due time we should ascend after him, John xiv. 2. "I go to prepare a place for you." Hence the apostle calls our Saviour, our forerunner, Heb. vi. 19. Now if Christ in his ascension, was a forerunner, then there are some to follow after. To the same purpose is that expression of the apostle, Eph. ii. 6. "He hath made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ;" that is, we are already sat down in him, and, ere long, shall sit down by him as his members. The only way to this, namely, to ascend unto, and sit down with Christ in heaven, is to live like him, and to live unto him, here on earth; "If any man love me he will follow me, and where I am, there shall also my servant be," St. John xii. 26.

20 And they went forth, and preached every where, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following. Amen.

Observe here, first, the general publication of the gospel by the apostles; they went and preached every where. Secondly, the reason of the efficacy and success of it; namely, that divine and miraculous power which accompanied the preaching of it; "The Lord wrought with them, and confirmed the word with signs following." Observe, 1. The general publication of the gospel by the apostles: "they went forth and preached every where." The industry of the holy apostles was incredibly great, yet was their success greater than their industry; even beyond all human expectation; which will evidently appear, if we consider, 1. The vast spreading of the gospel so far in so short a space of time; for in thirty years' time after Christ's death, it was spread through the greatest part of the Roman empire, and reached as far as Parthia and India. 3. The wonderful power and efficacy which the gospel had upon the lives and manners of men; the generality of those that entertained the gospel were obedient to it, both in word and deed; because christianity being an hated and persecuted profession, no man could have any inducement to embrace it, that did not resolve to practice it, and live up to it. 3. The weakness and meanness of the instruments that were employed in propagating the gospel, shews the success of it to be very great and strange, a company of plain and illiterate men, most of them destitute of the advantages of education, and unassisted by the countenance of any authority whatsoever; yet did they in a short space, draw the world after them. The powerful opposition which was raised against the gospel, namely, the prejudices of education, the power of in-dwelling lusts, and also the powers of the world then in being, did strongly combine against it: yet did Christianity bear up against all this opposition, and made its way through all the resistance that the lusts and prejudices of men, armed with the power and authority of the whole world, could make against it. 4. The great discouragements that men were then under to embrace the gospel and the Christian profession; all the evils of this world threatened them, mockings and scourgings, banishments and imprisonments, reproach and ruin; death in all its fearful shapes, was presented to them, to deter them from embracing this religion. Observe therefore, 2. The reason of this wonderful success, "The Lord wrought with them, and confirmed the word with signs following." "The Lord wrought with them;" This points at the inward operation of the Holy Spirit upon the minds of men. O! it is sweet and prosperous working in fellowship with Christ and his Holy Spirit; he directs his ministers, he assists them, he guides their lips, influences their minds, quickens their affections, sets home their instructions, and crowns all their endeavours with his blessing. "And confirmed the word with signs:" that is, confirmed their doctrine with miracles, such as healing diseases, raising the dead, casting out devils, inflicting corporal diseases on scandalous persons, and sometimes death itself. From the whole, we gather the truth and divinity of the Christian religion; that it was, and is certainly, of God; and therefore never could, never can, be overthrown.

THE END OF ST. MARK'S GOSPEL.

THE

Holy Gospel according to St. Luke.

CHAP. I.

FORASMUCH as many have taken in hand to set forth in order a declaration of those things which are most surely believed among us,

2 Even as they delivered them unto us, which from the beginning were eye-witnesses, and ministers of the word ;

3 It seemed good to me also, having had perfect understanding of all things from the very first, to write unto thee in order, most excellent Theophilus,

4 That thou mightest know the certainty of those things wherein thou hast been instructed.

This gospel, together with the Acts of the Apostles, were written by St. Luke, the beloved physician and companion of St. Paul, who wrote, as did the rest of the evangelists, by the special direction and inspiration of the Holy Ghost : where we may profitably remark the wonderful wisdom of God, who, in order to the confirming of our faith in the truth of the gospel, raised up a sufficient number of witnesses to testify the verity and infallible certainty of all that the gospel delivers unto us. Now this evangelist, St. Luke, dedicates this gospel, together with all Acts of the Apostles, to Theophilus, who was, as some think, an honourable senator ; or a renowned and eminent person in the church, as others suppose ; but many take the word Theophilus, not for a proper name, but common name, signifying every one that loveth God ; to whom St. Luke addresses his discourse. The first four verses of this chapter are a preface to the following history, and acquaints us with the reasons which induced St. Luke to write, namely, because divers persons in that age had imprudently and inconsiderately set upon writing gospels, without direction from the Spirit of God, whose errors and mistakes were to be corrected by a true narrative. This St. Luke declares he was able to make, having had perfect understanding and knowledge of the truth of those things he was about to relate : partly by his familiarity with St. Paul, and partly by his conversation with the other apostles, who, constantly attending our Saviour, were eye and ear witnesses of those things that are the subject matter of the ensuing history. Hence learn, 1. That there were some apocryphal writings (or writings which were not of divine authority) relating to the New Testament, as well as to the Old ; as the books of Asher, Gad, and Iddo, are recited in the Old Testament, but were never received into the canon of the scripture ; so were there some gospels, or historical relations of our Saviour's life and actions, wrote by persons which the church never received, as not having the impress of God's ordination. Note, 2. That the gospels which St. Luke and the other evangelists wrote have nothing of fallibility or uncertainty in them ; they wrote nothing but what they either heard, or saw themselves, or else received from those that were eye and ear witnesses of matter of fact. " It seemed good to me to write, having had perfect knowledge of all things from the very first."

5 THERE was, in the days of Herod, the king of Judea, a certain priest named Zacharias, of the course of Abia ; and his wife was of the daughters of Aaron, and her name was Elizabeth.

In this and the following verses, the Holy Ghost gives us a description of John the Baptist, who was the harbinger and forerunner of our Saviour Christ; he is described first by his parentage, being the son of Zacharias and Elizabeth. This Zachary was a priest, who had a course in the temple, or a right to officiate there when it came to his turn; for we read in 1 Chron. xxiv. 10 That "David appointed the priests, the sons of Aaron to minister by turns, and divided them into four and twenty courses," every one ministering in the temple by their weeks. Here note, That Zacharias, a priest, and attending the service of the temple, was a married person, having one of the daughters of Aaron to wife, according to the command of God, Levit. xxi. 14, where the priest is required to marry one of his own people. Learn hence, That neither the priests under the law did, nor the ministers of Christ under the Gospel ought to abhor the marriage-bed; nor to judge themselves too pure for an institution of their Maker. The doctrine of the church of Rome, "which forbids to marry," St. Paul calls "a doctrine of devils."

6 And they were both righteous before God, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless.

Observe here, 1. The sweet harmony of this religious couple in the ways of God, "They both walked in the commandments of God." It is a happy match when husband and wife are one, not only in themselves, but in the Lord. Observe, 2. The universality of their holiness and obedience: "They walked" not in some, but "in all, the ordinances and commandments of the Lord." Such as will approve themselves to be sincerely religious, must make conscience of every known duty, and endeavour to obey every precept and command of God. Observe, 3. The high commendation which the Holy Spirit of God gives of this their religious course of holiness and obedience; they are pronounced blameless. He that liveth without gross sin, in the gospel sense, liveth blameless, and without sin. To live without gross sin, is our holiness upon earth; to live without any sin, will be our happiness in heaven. Many sins may be in him that has true grace; but he that has truth of grace, cannot allow himself in any sin. Such are the condescensions of the covenant of grace, that sincere obedience is called perfection. Truth of grace is our perfection on earth, but in heaven we shall have perfection as well as truth. Observe lastly, A pattern for their imitation who wait at God's altar, and are employed in and about holy things; such ought all the ministers of the gospel and their wives to be, what Zacharias and Elizabeth are here said to be, namely, blameless; that is, very innocent and inoffensive in their daily conversation.

7 And they had no child, because that Elizabeth was barren, and they both were now well stricken in years.

Observe here, 1. This holy pair, Zacharias and Elizabeth, were fruitful in holy obedience, but barren in children; a fruitful soul and a barren womb are consistent, and do oft-times meet together. This religious couple made no less progress in virtue than in age, and yet their virtue could not make their age fruitful. Observe, 2. Elizabeth was barren in the flower of her age, but much more so in old age. Here was a double obstacle, and consequently a double instance of the divine power in the birth of John the Baptist, shewing him to be a prophet very extraordinary, and miraculously sent by God. Observe, 3. That when Almighty God in old time did long delay to give the blessing of children to holy women, he rewarded their expectation with the birth of some eminent and extraordinary person; thus Sarah after long barrenness, brought forth an Isaac; Rebecca, a Jacob; Rachael, a Joseph; Hannah, a Samuel; and Elizabeth, St. John the Baptist. When God makes his people wait long for a particular mercy, he gives it in at last with a double reward for their expectation.

8 And it came to pass, that, while he executed the priest's office before God in the order of his course, 9 According to the custom of the priest's office, his lot was to burn incense when he went into the temple of the Lord.

Here note, 1. That none but a son of Aaron might offer incense to God in the temple; and not every son of Aaron neither: nay, not any of them at all seasons. God is a God of order, and hates confusion no less than irreligion. And, as under the law of old, so under the gospel of this day, "No man ought to take this honour upon him, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron." Observe, 2. That there were courses of ministration in the legal services, in which the priests did relieve one another weekly. God never purposed to burthen any of his servants with devotion, nor is he pleased when his service is made burthensome, either to or by his ministers. Many of the sons of Aaron served together in the temple, according to the variety of their employments, which were assigned them by lot: and accordingly, it fell out this time, that Zachary was chosen by lot to burn incense. Observe, 3. That morning and evening, twice a day, the priests offered up their incense to God, that both parts of the day might be consecrated to him, who was the Maker and Giver of their time. This incense offered under the law, represents our prayers offered to God, under the gospel. These Almighty God expects that we should, all his church over, send up to him morning and evening. The ejaculatory elevations of our hearts should be perpetual; but if twice a day we do not present God with our solemn invocation, we make the gospel less officious than the law; and can we reasonably think that Almighty God will accept of less now, than would content him then?

10 And the whole multitude of the people were praying without at the time of incense.

Observe here, 1. While the incense was burning, the people were praying; while the priest sends up his incense in the temple within, the people send up their prayers in the court without. The incense of the priest and the prayers of the people meet, and go up to heaven together. Hence learn, That it is a blessed thing when both ministers and people jointly offer up their prayers for each other at the same throne of grace, and mutually strive together in their supplications one with, and one for another. Observe, 2. How both priest and people keep their place and station; the priest burns incense in the holy place, and the people offer up their prayers in the outward court. The people might no more go into the holy place to offer up their prayers, than Zachary might go into the holy of holies to burn incense. Whilst the partition which stood betwixt Jew and Gentile, there was also a partition betwixt the Jews themselves. But now, under the gospel, every man is a priest to God, and may enter the holy of holies by the blood of Jesus. But, Lord! what are we the better for this great and gracious freedom of access to thee, if we want hearts to prize and improve our privilege from thee?

11 And there appeared unto him an angel of the Lord standing on the right side of the altar of incense.

Whilst Zachary was praying to God, an angel appears to Zachary. When we are nearest God, the good angels are highest us; they are most with us when we are most with him. The presence of angels with us is no novelty, but their apparition to us is so. They are always with us, but rarely seen by us. Let our faith see them, whom our senses cannot discern: their assumed shapes do not make them more present, but only more visible. Observe, 2. The place as well as the time where the angel appeared, in the temple and at the altar, and "on the right side of the altar of incense." As the holy angels are always present with us in our devotions, so especially in religious assemblies; as in all places, so most of all in God's house; they rejoice to be with us whilst we are with God, but they turn their faces from us when we go about our sins.

12 And when Zacharias saw him he was troubled, and fear fell upon him.

It was partly the suddenness, partly the unexpectedness, and partly the glory of the apparition, that affrighted this good man. Glorious and sudden apparitions do affright even the holiest and best of men. We cannot bear the sight and presence of an angel without consternation and fear in this our frail and sinful state. O happy, happy hour! when mortality and sin being taken out of our natures, we shall not only behold the glorified angels without fear, but the glorious God with delight and love. Lord! let me now see thee by faith, hereafter by sight. Sit in alio seculo, non in hoc! visio tua, merces mea. Gerson.

13 But the angel said unto him, Fear not, Zacharias; for thy prayer is heard; and thy wife Elizabeth shall bear thee a son, and thou shalt call his name John.

Observe here, 1. How apprehensive this good angel was of Zachary's surprising fear, and encourages him against it. The holy angels, though they did not express it in words, yet they pity our frailties, and suggest comfort to us. The evil angels if they might, would kill us with terror; the good angels labour altogether for our tranquillity and cheerfulness. "The angel said unto him, Fear not." Observe, 2. The comfortable words spoken unto Zacharias: "Thy prayer is heard, and thy wife Elizabeth shall bear thee a son." No doubt Zachary and Elizabeth had often prayed for a child, and now God sends them one when they least expected it. Learn hence, That sometimes God gives in a mercy to us, when we least expect it; yea, when we have given over looking for it. No doubt it was the case here, "Zachary and Elizabeth being both well stricken in age." Observe, 3. The name which the angel directed Zachary to give his son: "Thou shalt call his name John," which signifies gracious: because he was to open the kingdom of grace, and to preach the grace of the gospel through Jesus Christ. The giving of significant names to children has been an ancient and pious practice; names which either carried a remembrance of duty or of mercy in them.

14 And thou shalt have joy and gladness, and many shall rejoice at his birth.

15 For he shall be great in the sight of the Lord, and shall drink neither wine nor strong drink; and he shall be filled with the Holy Ghost, even from his mother's womb.

16 And many of the children of Israel shall he turn to the Lord their God.

17 And he shall go before him in the spirit and power of Elias, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just; to make ready a people prepared for the Lord.

Here the angel declared to Zachary, what kind of son should be born unto him, even one of eminent endowments, and designed for extraordinary services. The proof of children makes them either the blessings or crosses of their parents. What greater comfort could Zachary desire in a child, than is here promised to him? 1. He hears of a son that should bring joy to himself, and many others; even to all that did expect the coming of the Messiah, whose forerunner the Baptist was. 2. "That he should be great in the sight of the Lord:" that is, a person of great eminency, and great usefulness in the church. A person of great riches and reputation is great in the sight of men; but the man of great ability and usefulness, the man of great integrity and serviceableness, he is truly "great in the sight of the Lord." They are little men in the sight of the Lord, that live in the world to little purposes; who do little service to God, and bring little honour and glory to him. But the man that does all the possible service he can for God, and the utmost good he is capable of doing to all mankind; he is the person great in the sight of the Lord; and such was the holy Baptist. 3. It is foretold, that he should neither drink wine nor strong drink; that is, that he should be a very temperate and abstemious person, living after the manner of the Nazarites, though he was not separated by any vow of his own or his parents, but by the special designation and appointment of God only; it was forbidden the priests, under the law, to drink either wine or strong drink, upon pain of death, during the time of their ministration, Lev. x. 9. And the ministers of Christ under the gospel are forbidden to be lovers of wine. 1 Tim. iii. 3. 4. He shall be filled with the Holy Ghost from his mother's womb; that is, he shall be furnished abundantly with the extraordinary gifts and sanctifying graces of the Holy Spirit, which shall very early appear to be in him, and upon him. 5. His high and honourable office is declared, that he shall go before the Messias, as his harbinger and fore-runner, with the same spirit of zeal and courage against sin, which was found in the old prophet Elias, whom he did so nearly resemble. 6. The great success of his ministry is foretold, namely, "That he should turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just;" that is, the hearts of the Jews to the Gentiles, say some; that he should bring men, say others, even the most disobedient and rebellious pharisees and sadducees, publicans and sinners, unto repentance, unto the minding of justice and righteousness, and all moral duties; and thus he made ready a people for the Lord, by fitting men to receive Christ upon his own terms and conditions; namely, faith and repentance. From the whole, note, That those whom Almighty God designs for eminent usefulness in his church, he furnishes with endowments suitable to their employment; and when he calls to extraordinary service, comes in with more than ordinary assistance. Here was the Holy Baptist extraordinarily called, and as extraordinarily furnished, for his office and ministry.

18 And Zacharias said unto the angel, Whereby shall I know this? for I am an old man, and my wife well stricken in years.

19 And the angel answering, said unto him, I am Gabriel, that stand in the presence of God: and am sent to speak unto thee, and to shew thee these glad tidings.

20 And, behold, thou shalt be dumb, and not able to speak, until the day that these things shall be performed, because thou believest not my words, which shall be fulfilled in their season.

21 And the people waited for Zacharias, and marvelled that he tarried so long in the temple.

22 And when he came out he could not speak unto them: And they perceived that he had seen a vision in the temple: for he beckoned unto them, and remained speechless.

Observe here, Zachary being slow to believe so strange a message, asks the angel, by what sign he should know that this thing, so far above the usual course of nature, should come to pass? The angel answers, that he was dispatched by God as a messenger extraordinary, to declare this good news to him. And seeing he was so hard to believe it, and required a sign, he should have it, but such a one as should be a punishment for his unbelief, as well as a sign to confirm his faith; namely, he should from thence forward to the birth of the child, be dumb and deaf, as the original word signifies; because he had not hearkened to the angel's speech, he was struck deaf; and because he had gain-said it, he was made dumb. Learn hence, That the word of God in the mouth of his messengers is God's own word, and as such to be received and believed. 2. That not believing their word, is a sin which God will severely punish; it is all one not to believe God, and not to believe the messengers of God speaking from him. Some expositors will have this dumbness of Zachary to be prefigurative. The priest, at the dismissal of the people, when the service of the temple was finished, was to pronounce the blessing, recorded, Numb. vi. 24, 25, which when Zachary was about to do, he was struck dumb and could not perform it; signifying thereby, that the silencing of the Levitical priesthood was now at hand; that they must expect another kind of worship, and that he who was able to bless indeed, namely, the Messias, was near at hand. Observe lastly, That though Zachary ceased to speak, yet he did not cease to minister; he takes not his dumbness for a dismissal, but stays out the eight days of his course, knowing that the service of his heart and hand would be accepted of that God which had bereaved him of his tongue. The powers which we have we must make use of in the public service of God, who will accept us according to what we have; pardoning our infirmity and rewarding our sincerity.

23 And it came to pass, that, as soon as the days of his ministration were accomplished, he departed to his own house.

24 And after those days his wife Elizabeth conceived, and hid herself five months, saying, 25 Thus hath the Lord dealt with me in the days wherein he looked on me, to take away my reproach among men.

The priests, during the time of their administration, had their lodgings in buildings appertaining to the temple. Zachary having ended his administration, leaves his lodgings, and returns to his house, where his wife Elizabeth conceiving, she hides herself; that is, retires from company, partly to prevent the discourse of people, until it was out of all doubt that she had conceived; and partly to give herself opportunity of returning her thankful acknowledgments unto God, who had given her this miraculous mercy: and had thereby taken away the reproach of barrenness, which was so heavy and insupportable among the Jews. Note here, two things, 1. How piously Elizabeth ascribes this mercy to the power of God: Thus hath the Lord dealt with me. It is God that keeps the key of the womb in his own hand, and makes the fruit of it his reward, and therefore children are to be owned as his special gift. Note, 2. How great a reproach bodily barrenness is in the sight of man, but not so great as spiritual barrenness in the sight of God; for this is at once a reproach to God, a reproach to religion, a reproach to professors, and to ourselves.

26 ¶ And in the sixth month the angel Gabriel was sent from God unto a city of Galilee, named Nazareth.

27 To a virgin espoused to a man whose name was Joseph, of the house of David; and the virgin's name was Mary.

28 And the angel came in unto her, and said, Hail, thou that art highly favoured, the Lord is with thee; blessed art thou among women.

29 And when she saw him, she was troubled at his saying, and cast in her mind what manner of salutation this should be.

30 And the angel said unto her, Fear not, Mary; for thou hast found favour with God.

31 And behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and shalt call his name JESUS.

32 He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David.

33 And he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever: and of his kingdom there shall be no end.

In this history of our Saviour's miraculous and immaculate conception, we have several things observable, as, 1. The messenger sent from heaven to publish the news of the conception of the son of God, an angel; an evil angel was the first author of our ruin; a good angel could not be the author of our restoration, but is the joyful reporter of it.

Observe, 2. The angel's name, Gabriel, which signifieth the power of God; the same angel who had many hundred years before declared to the prophet Daniel the coming of the Messiah. Observe, 3. The place which the angel is sent unto, Nazareth, an obscure place, little taken notice of; yea, a city in Galilee, out of which arises no prophet; even there doth the God of prophets condescend to be conceived. No blind corner of Nazareth can hide the blessed virgin from the angel. The favours of God will find out his children wherever they are withdrawn. Observe, 4. The person whom the angel is sent unto, To a virgin espoused, whose name was Mary; for the honour of virginity, Christ chose a virgin for his mother: for the honour of marriage, a virgin espoused to an husband. Observe, 5. The message itself, Hail, thou that art highly favoured, the Lord is with thee; blessed art thou among women. Where note, That the angel salutes the virgin as a saint, he doth not pray to her as a goddess. The church of Rome idolatrously uses these words as a prayer to the holy virgin (saying ten Ave-Maries for one Pater-Noster) whereas they are only a salutation; declaring that she, above all women, had the honour freely conferred by God upon her to be the mother of the Messiah. The original words signify, not full of grace, but freely beloved. Compare Mary with other renowned women, and what had she, besides this favour, more than they? Had she the spirit of prophecy? so had they. Had she the spirit of sanctification? so had they: and she had no more immunity and freedom from sin and death than they. Accordingly, says the angel, Blessed art thou among women; he doth not say, Blessed art thou above women. Let the church of Rome be as copious as they will in the commendation of the mother, so they do not derogate from the glory of the Son. But how senseless are they, 1. In turning a salutation into a prayer! 2. In making use of these words upon every occasion, which were spoken by an angel upon a special occasion! 3. In applying these words to her now in heaven, which suited with her only when she was here on earth, saying, Full of grace, to her who is full of glory; and, The Lord is with thee, to her that is with the Lord! Observe, 6. The effect which the sight and salutation of the angel had upon the holy virgin: she was afraid. If Zachary before her was amazed at the sight of the angel, much more the virgin, her sex subjecting her to fear. All passions, but particularly the passion of fear, disquiets the heart, and makes it unfit to receive the messages of God. Therefore the angel instantly says unto her, Fear not; let joy enter into thy heart, out of whose womb shall come salvation. Thus the fears of holy persons do end in comfort: joy was the errand which the angel came upon, and not terror. What little cause she had to fear the presence of an angel, who was so highly favoured of him, at whose presence the angels tremble! But we see the holiest person on earth cannot bear the presence of an holy angel, much less the presence of an holy God; nor stand before the manifestations of his favours: Lord! how unable then will the wicked be at the great day to stand before the manifestation of thy fury! If the sight of an holy angel now makes the best of saints to quake and tremble, what will the sight of an infinitely holy and just God then do, when the wicked shall be slain by the brightness of his presence? Observe lastly, the character which the angel gives of the person that should be born of the Blessed Virgin, He shall be great, and called the Son of the Highest. Great, in respect of his person : Great, in respect of his offices : Great, in respect of his kingdom ; for God would settle upon him a spiritual kingdom, of which David's earthly one was a type which shall never be abolished ; though the administration of it by the word and sacraments shall cease at the day of judgment, when he shall deliver up the kingdom, in that respect, to his Father. All other kingdoms have had, or shall have, their periods, but the gospel-church, which is Christ's kingdom, shall continue till his kingdom of glory be revealed.

34 Then said Mary unto the angel, How shall this be, seeing I know not a man ?

35 And the angel answered and said unto her, The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee : therefore, also, that holy thing which shall be born of thee, shall be called the Son of God.

36 And, behold, thy cousin Elizabeth, she hath also conceived a son in her old age : and this is the sixth month with her who was called barren.

37 For with God nothing shall be impossible.

38 And Mary said, Behold the handmaid of the Lord, be it unto me according to thy word. And the angel departed from her.

Observe here, 1. The virgin's question, How shall this be ? This question did not import her denial of the possibility of the thing, but her wonder at the strangeness of the thing ; it proceeded rather from a desire of information, than from a doubt of infidelity. Therefore she doth not say, This cannot be, nor, How can this be ? but, How shall this be ? She doth not distrust, but demand, how her virginity shall become fruitful, and how she, being a virgin, could bring forth a son ? Observe, 2. The angel's reply to the virgin's question, The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee. Where note, The angel declares the author who, but not the manner how : the Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, but in what way, and after what manner, is not declared : no mother knows the manner of her natural conception, what presumption had it then been, for the mother of the Messiah, to have enquired how the Son of God could take flesh and blood of his creature ! It is for none but the Almighty to know those works which do immediately concern himself. Observe, 3. The holy and immaculate conception of our blessed Redeemer : "The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Most High shall overshadow thee ; wherefore that holy thing which shall be born of thee, shall be called the Son of God ;" that is, the Holy Ghost shall prepare and sanctify so much of thy flesh, blood, or seed, as shall constitute the body of Christ. For though it was a work of the whole Trinity, yet it is ascribed particularly to the Holy Ghost, sanctification being his peculiar work. And the title and epithet of that holy thing, sheweth the purity and immaculateness of Christ's human nature, and that none was ever born thus holy and immaculate but Christ only ; because none had ever such a way and means of conception, but only he : Therefore that holy thing shall be called the Son of God ; not constituted and made, but evidenced and declared. Christ was God before he assumed flesh, even from eternity ; but his taking flesh in this manner, evidences him to be the Son of God. Observe, 4. The argument used by the angel to confirm Mary in the belief of what he had told her, namely, The wonderful conception of her cousin Elizabeth, in her old age, who was now six months gone with child. Where observe, 1. What an exact knowledge God has, and what a particular notice he takes of all the children of men ; he knoweth not only ourselves, but our relations also, Behold thy cousin Elizabeth : the knowledge which God has of every person, and every action, is a clear and distinct knowledge. Note, 2. How the angel strengthens her faith by a consideration drawn from the almighty power of God ; With God nothing shall be impossible, be it ever so strange and difficult. There is no such way to overcome difficulties, as by strengthening our faith in the almighty power of God. Faith will enable us to assent to truths, though seemingly incredible, and to believe the possibility of things, though appearing impossible. Observe lastly, How the virgin expresses her faith and obedience, her submission and entire resignation, to the divine pleasure, to be disposed of by God as he thought fit : Behold the handmaid of the Lord, be it unto me according to thy word. We hear of no more objections or interrogations, but an humble and submissive silence. Learn hence, That a gracious heart, when once it understands the pleasure of God, argues no farther, but quietly-rests in a believing expectation of what God will do. All disputations with God, after his will is made known and understood, arise from infidelity and unbelief. The virgin having thus consented, instantly conceived by the overshadowing power of the Holy Ghost.

39 ¶ And Mary arose in those days, and went into the hill-country with haste, into a city of Juda.

40 And entered into the house of Zacharias, and saluted Elizabeth.

41 And it came to pass, that when Elizabeth heard the salutation of Mary, the babe leaped in her womb : and Elizabeth was filled with the Holy Ghost.

42 And she spake out with a loud voice, and said, Blessed art thou among women, and blessed is the fruit of thy womb.

43 And whence is this to me, that the mother of my Lord should come to me ?

44 For, lo, as soon as the voice of thy salutation sounded in mine ears, the babe leaped in my womb for joy.

45 And blessed is she that believed ; for there shall be a performance of those things which were told her from the Lord.

Observe here, 1. The visit made by the Virgin Mary to her cousin Elizabeth. The holy virgin had understood by the angel, that Elizabeth was no less akin to her in condition than in relation, being both fruitful in conception ; she hastens into the hill country to visit that holy matron ; the two wonders of the world were now met under one roof, to congratulate their mutual happiness ; only the meeting of the saints in heaven, can parallel the meeting of these two saints on earth. Observe, 2. The design and intention of this visit, which was partly to communicate their joys to each other, and partly to strengthen the faith of each other : such a soul as has Christ spiritually conceived in it, is restless, and cannot be quiet till it has imparted its joy. Observe, 3. The effect of the virgin's salutation ; she had no sooner saluted Elizabeth, but the babe in Elizabeth's womb leaped for joy, doing homage, and paying adoration, to his Lord, who was then in presence. If Elizabeth and her holy babe thus rejoiced, when Christ came under their roof, how should our hearts leap within us, when the Son of God vouchsafes to come into the secret of our souls, not to visit us for an hour, but to dwell with us, yea, to dwell in us, and that for ever. Observe, 4. How Elizabeth, by an extraordinary spirit of prophecy, confirms what the angel before had told the holy virgin : " Blessed, says she, art thou among women, and blessed is the fruit of thy womb ; and what an honour is this, that the mother of my Lord should come unto me ! " Where note, How Elizabeth acknowledged the incarnation of Christ, and the union of the divine and human nature in the person of the Mediator. She acknowledges Christ to be her Lord, and Mary to be the mother of the Son of God. Observe lastly, How the virgin is pronounced blessed, not so much for carrying Christ in her womb by sense, as for bearing him in her heart by faith ; Blessed is she that believed. Mary was not so blessed in the bringing forth Christ, as believing in him : yet the believing here mentioned, I take to be, her firm assent to the message brought her by the angel ; as if Elizabeth had said, " Dumbness was inflicted on my husband, for his unbelief of what the angel said, but, " Blessed art thou that didst believe the angel." My husband, a man, an aged man, a learned and eminent man, a priest of the most high God ; and the message to him of more appearing possibility ; yet he disbelieved ; but thou a woman, a mean, unlearned woman, of a private condition, and the message brought most incredible both to nature and reason, and yet it is believed by thee ! Blessed, therefore, is she that believed, and know, that as a reward for thy faith, all things shall certainly be performed that were foretold thee from the Lord. Learn hence, 1. That it is the property of God to do great and wonderful things. Our faith must be great, and our expectation great ; great expectations from God, honour the greatness of God. 2. That if our faith be great, God's performances will be gracious and full. " Blessed is she that believed ; for there shall be a performance of those things which were told her from the Lord."

46 ¶ And Mary said, My soul doth magnify the Lord.

47 And my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Saviour.

48 For he hath regarded the low estate of his hand-maiden ; for, behold, from henceforth all generations shall call me blessed.

49 For he that is mighty hath done to me great things, and holy is his name.

50 And his mercy is on them that fear him, from generation to generation.

51 He hath shewed strength with his arm, he hath scattered the proud in the imagination of their hearts.

52 He hath put down the mighty from their seats, and exalted them of low degree.

53 He hath filled the hungry with good things, and the rich he hath sent empty away.

54 He hath holpen his servant Israel, in remembrance of his mercy.

55 As he spake to our fathers, to Abraham, and to his seed for ever.

This is the first canticle, or song of praise, recorded in the New Testament, composed by the blessed virgin with unspeakable joy, for designing her to be the instrument of the conception and birth of the Saviour of the world : where observe, 1. The manner of her praise ; her soul and spirit bear their part in the work of thanksgiving, My soul doth magnify, my spirit hath rejoiced. As the sweetest music is made in the belly of the instrument, so the most delightful praise arises from the bottom of the heart. Observe, 2. The object of her praise ; she does not magnify herself, but the Lord ; yea, she doth not rejoice so much in her son, as in her Saviour. Where note, 1. That she doth implicitly own and confess herself a sinner ; for none need a Saviour but a sinner : and, 2. By rejoicing in Christ as her Saviour, she declares how she values herself, rather by her spiritual relation to Christ as his member, than by her natural relation to him as his mother ; according to that of St. Austin. Beatior fruit Maria percipiendo Christi fidem, quam concipiendo carnem ; she might have been miserable, notwithstanding she bore him as her son, had she not believed in him as her Saviour : therefore she sings, My spirit hath rejoiced in God my Saviour. Observe, 3. How she admires and magnifies God's peculiar favour towards herself, in casting an eye upon her poverty and low condition ; that she, a poor, obscure maid, unknown to the world, should be looked upon with an eye of regard by him that dwells in the highest heavens. Where note, That as God magnified her, she magnified him, ascribing all honour and glory to him that had thus dignified and exalted her. "He that is mighty hath done for me great things, and glorified be his name."

Observe, 4. She thankfully takes notice, that it was not only an high honour, but a lasting honour, which was conferred upon her. "All generations shall call me blessed." She beholds an infinite, a lasting honour prepared for her, as being the mother of an universal and everlasting blessing, which all former ages had desired, and all succeeding ages should rejoice in, and proclaim her happy, for being the instrument of.

5. How the holy virgin passes from the consideration of her personal privileges, to the universal goodness of God; shewing us, that the mercies and favours of God, were not confined and limited to herself, "But his mercy is on all them that fear him, throughout all generations." She declares the general providence of God towards all persons, his mercy to the pious, "his mercy is on all them that fear him:" his justice on the proud, "he hath put down the mighty from their seats, and scattered the proud in the imagination of their hearts;" his bounty to the poor, "he fills the hungry with good things." Learn hence, The excellency and advantageous usefulness of the grace of humility; how good it is to be meek and lowly in heart. This will render us lovely in God's eye, and though the world may trample upon us, he will exalt us to the admiration of ourselves, and the envy of our despisers.

Observe lastly, How she magnifies the special grace of God in our redemption; "He hath holpen his servant Israel;" that is, blessed them with a Saviour, who lived in the faith, hope, and expectation, of the promised Messiah, and this blessing, she declares, was, 1. The result of great mercy, "He remembering his mercy, hath holpen his servant Israel."

2. The effect of his truth and faithfulness in his promises, as he promised to our forefathers, Abraham and his seed for ever." Learn hence, That the appearance of the promised Messiah, in the fulness of time, in order to the redemption and salvation of a lost world, it was the fruit of God's tender love, and the effect of his faithfulness in the promises made of old, to his church and children: "He hath holpen his servant Israel, in remembrance of his mercy, as he spake to our forefathers, to Abraham, and to his seed for ever."

56 And Mary abode with her about three months, and returned to her own house.

57 ¶ Now Elizabeth's full time came that she should be delivered; and she brought forth a son.

58 And her neighbours and her cousins heard how the Lord had shewed great mercy upon her; and they rejoiced with her.

Two things are here observable, 1. The civil courtesy of the Virgin Mary, towards her cousin Elizabeth. She stays with her three months, probably till she was delivered and brought to bed, not leaving her just at the time of travail:

for the angel told Mary, v. 36, That it was then the sixth month with Elizabeth, after which Mary stays with her three months, which made up the full time. To visit and accompany our friends in the time of their distress, is not only an act of civil courtesy, but of religious piety; not a matter of indifference, but of duty, James i. 27. "Pure religion, and undefiled is this, to visit in affliction;" that is, this is an eminent act and exercise of religion, the evidence and fruit of sincere religion; and the virgin's doing this was an act and instance of her piety, as well as of her civil courtesy. Observe, 2. The religious joy, and spiritual rejoicing which the neighbours and kindred expressed at the lying-in of Elizabeth: they did not meet together upon that great occasion, only to eat and drink and make merry; "but they rejoiced that the Lord had shewed great mercy upon her." Oh! how rarely is this example followed in our age! At the delivery of the mother, and at the birth of the child, how little is God taken notice of! How little is his power magnified, and his goodness celebrated, in opening the womb, in giving strength to bring forth! And how rarely is this the subject of discourse at the woman's labour! Verily, if the mercy of a child, and the safe delivery of the mother, be not the first and principal things taken notice of at such rejoicing meetings, they look more like Pagan than Christian rejoicings.

59 And it came to pass, that on the eighth day they came to circumcise the child: and they called him Zacharias, after the name of his father.

60 And his mother answered and said, Not so; but he shall be called John.

61 And they said unto her, There is none of thy kindred that is called by this name.

62 And they made signs to his father, how he would have him called.

63 And he asked for a writing-table, and wrote, saying, His name is John. And they marvelled all.

64 And his mouth was opened immediately, and his tongue loosed, and he spake, and praised God.

65 And fear came on all that dwelt round about them: and all these sayings were noised abroad throughout all the hill-country of Judea.

66 And all they that heard them laid them up in their hearts, saying, What manner of child shall this be? And the hand of the Lord was with him.

"Observe here, 1. The circumcision of the child at eight days' old, according to the commandment, Gen. xvi. Where note, first, The act, circumcising. Secondly, The time, at eight days' old. God commanded every male child to be circumcised; because the males by the foreskin, propagate sin, and convey original impurity. By this ordinance, God gave his people to understand the exceeding filthiness of sin, and that man brings something into the world with him, which ought presently to be cut off. Note also, the time of circumcising the child, at eight days' old; not before, lest the child should be too weak to bear the pain; and it must not be deferred longer, lest God interpret the delay to be a contempt of the ordinance. Hence by the way we may learn, That God did not tie salvation to the outward sacrament; for if the child had perished that died uncircumcised, it had been a hard thing to defer circumcision eight hours. 'Tis not the want, but the contempt and neglect, of the sacrament that damns. "It came to pass on the eighth day they came to circumcise the child." We find in scripture, the ordinance appointed, and the time limited, but neither the person nor the place declared: Moses' wife "circumcised the child, and that in an inn." Exod. iv. A duty is sometimes positively enjoined in the scriptures, when the circumstances belonging to the duty are undetermined. Thus the sacrament of the Lord's Supper is appointed by Christ; but the time, the place, the gesture, are not positively commanded, but to be prudentially determined. Observe, 2. The name is given, or at least declared, at the time of the child's circumcising, and that by his parents; "His mother said, he shall be called John." But how did his mother know that, when her husband was dumb? Ans. 'Tis likely her husband Zachary had, by a writing, informed his wife concerning the whole vision, and what name was imposed upon him by the angel; therefore she says, "He shall be called John," and Zachary ratifies it, "His name is John." The nomination was originally from the angel, the imposition of the name is now at circumcision from the parents. Observe, 3. How ancient a custom it has been to give names to children, according to the names of their fathers or kindred: "There is none of thy kindred of his name," say they: the Jews made it a part of religion, to give suitable names to their children, and significant names. Accordingly they either gave them names to put them in remembrance of God's mercy to them, or of their duty to him. Thus Zachary signifies the remembrance of God; which name points at God's mercy in remembering him, and his duty in remembering God. Well then, it is usual and useful for parents to give significant names to their children; then let the children have an holy ambition to make good the signification of their names. Thus John signifies the "grace of God;" but how will that gracious name be raised up in judgment against that child that is graceless! Observe, 4. How Zachary's speech is immediately restored to him upon the naming of his child. The angel, v. 20. told him "he should be dumb till the things he had told him should be performed;" and now that they were performed, "his tongue is loosed, and he praised God, in a most thankful manner." Observe, 5. The effect which all this had upon the neighbourhood; "Fear came upon all them that dwelt round about them;" that is, an awful and religious fear of God occasioned by these miraculous operations; and they "laid up these sayings in their hearts;" that is, considered of them, and pondered upon them. It argues a very vain spirit and temper of mind, when we pass over the observation of God's wonderful acts with a slight regard. The true reason why we do so little admire the wonderful works of God, is, because we consider so little of them. Observe, 6. The special favour vouchsafed by God to this child John: "The hand of the Lord was with him;" that is, God was in a special manner present with him, to direct and assist him, to protect and prosper him. The hand of God, in scripture, signifies the help of God, the strength and assistance of God. The hand of man is a weak and impotent hand, a short and ineffectual hand: but the hand of God is a strong hand, an almighty hand, able to assist and help, able to protect and preserve: "The hand of the Lord was with him;" that is, the heart of God and the help of God, the love and favour of God to support him, the power and providence of God to protect and preserve him. Lord, let our hearts be with thee, and then thy heart and thy helping hand will be with us.

67 ¶ And his father Zacharias was filled with the Holy Ghost, and prophesied, saying,

68 Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, for he hath visited and redeemed his people,

69 And hath raised up an horn of salvation for us in the house of his servant David;

70 As he spake by the mouth of his holy prophets, which have been since the world began;

71 That we should be saved from our enemies, and from the hand of all that hate us;

72 To perform the mercy promised to our fathers, and to remember his holy covenant:

73 The oath which he sware to our father Abraham,

74 That he would grant unto us, that we, being delivered out of the hands of our enemies, might serve him without fear.

75 In holiness and righteousness before him, all the days of our life.

76 And thou, child, shalt be called The Prophet of the Highest: for thou shalt go before the face of the Lord to prepare his ways:

77 To give knowledge of salvation unto his people, by the remission of their sins,

78 Through the tender mercy of our God; whereby the day-spring from on high hath visited us, 79 To give light to them that sit in darkness, and in the shadow of death, to guide our feet into the way of peace.

Here observe, 1. That no sooner was Zachary recovered and restored to his speech, but he sings the praises of his Redeemer, and offers up a thanksgiving to God; the best return we can make to God for the use of our tongues, for the giving or restoring of our speech, is to publish our Creator's praises, to plead his cause, and vindicate his honour. Observe, 2. What it is that Zachary makes the subject-matter of his song: what is the particular and special mercy which he praises and blesses God for. It is not for his own particular and private mercy; namely, the recovery of his speech, though undoubtedly he was very thankful to God for that mercy; but he blesses and praises God for catholic and universal mercies bestowed upon his church and people: He doth not say, Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, that hath visited me in mercy, that hath once more loosed my tongue, and restored my speech: but, "Blessed be the Lord that hath visited and redeemed his people." Whence learn, That it is both the duty and disposition of a gracious soul to abound in praise and thankfulness to God, more for catholic and universal mercies towards the church of God, than for any particular and private mercies, how great soever towards himself: "Blessed be God for visiting and redeeming his people." Observe, 3. In this evangelical hymn there is a prophetic prediction, both concerning Christ, and concerning John. Concerning Christ, he declares that God the Father had sent him of his free mercy and rich grace, yet in performance of his truth and faithfulness; and according to his promise and oath which he had made to Abraham, and the fathers of the old Testament. Where note, 1. He blesses God for the comprehensive blessing of the Messiah; "Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, who hath visited his people;" namely, in his Son's incarnation. The Lord Jesus Christ, in the fulness of time, made such a visit to this sinful world, as men and angels admired at, and will admire to all eternity. Note, 2. The special fruit and benefit of this gracious and merciful visitation, and that was the redemption of a lost world, he hath visited and "redeemed his people." This implies that miserable thralldom and bondage, which we were under to sin and Satan, and expresses the stupendous love of Christ, in buying our lives with his dearest blood; and both by price and power rescuing us out of the hands of our spiritual enemies. Note, 3. The character given of this Saviour and Redeemer; he is an horn of salvation; that is, a royal and glorious, a strong and a powerful Saviour to his church and people. The horn, in scripture, signifies glory and dignity, strength and power; as the beauty, so the strength of the beast lies in its horn; now Christ being styled an horn of salvation, intimates, that he himself is a royal and princely Saviour, and that the salvation which he brings, is great and plentiful, glorious and powerful; "God hath raised up an horn of salvation for us in the house of his servant David." Note, 4. The nature and quality of that salvation and deliverance, which the Son of God came to accomplish for us; not a temporal deliverance, as the Jews expected, from the power of the Romans; but spiritual from the hands of sin and Satan, death and hell: his design was to purchase a spiritual freedom and liberty for us, "that we might be enabled to serve him without fear;" that is, without the servile and offending fear of a slave, but with the dutiful and ingenuous fear of a child: and this in "holiness and righteousness;" that is, in the duties of the first and second table, "all the days of our life." Learn hence, That believers, who were slaves of Satan, are by Christ made God's free men. Secondly, That as such they owe God a service, a willing, cheerful, and delightful service, without fear; and a constant persevering service all the days of their life, that "we being delivered out of the hands, &c." Note, 5. The source and fountain from whence this glorious Saviour and gracious salvation did arise and spring: namely, from the mercy and faithfulness of God: "To perform the mercy promised to our forefathers, and to remember his holy covenant, the oath which he sware to our father Abraham. Learn hence, That the Lord Jesus Christ, the mercy of mercies, was graciously promised, and faithfully performed, by God to his church and people. Christ was a free and full mercy; a suitable, a seasonable, and a satisfying mercy; an incomparable, unsearchable, and everlasting mercy; which God graciously promised in the beginning of time, and faithfully performed in the fulness of time. Thus far this hymn of Zachary respects the Messiah. Observe, 4. How he next turns himself to his child, and prophesies concerning him: "And thou child shalt be called the prophet of the Highest, &c." Where note, 1. The nature of his office, "thou shalt be a prophet;" not a common and ordinary one, but a prophet of the highest rank; the messenger of the Lord of Hosts. A prophet thou shalt be, and more than a prophet. Note, 2. As the nature of his office, so the quality of his work: "Thou shalt go before the face of the Lord, to prepare his way:" thou shalt be an herald and harbinger to the Most High; thou shalt go before the race of the Messiah, and by thy severe reproofs, and powerful exhortations, shalt prepare his way before him, and make men fit and ready to receive this mighty Saviour. Thou, child, shalt be as the morning star to foretel the glorious arising of this Sun of Righteousness. Learn hence, 1. That it is the highest honour and dignity to serve Christ in the quality and relation of a prophet. 2. That it is the office and duty of the prophets of Christ to prepare and make fit the hearts of men, to receive and embrace him. Observe, 5. That Zachary having spoken a few words concerning his son, he returns instantly to celebrate the praises of our Saviour, comparing him to the rising sun, which shined forth in the brightness of his gospel, to enlighten the dark corners of the world: "Through the tender mercies of our God, whereby the day-spring from on high hath visited us, to give light to them that sit in darkness." Learn hence, 1. That Jesus Christ is that true Son of Righteousness, which in the fulness of time did spring from on high, to visit a lost and undone world. 2. That the great errand of Christ's coming into the world, and the particular end of his appearing in the flesh, was "to give light to them that sit in darkness." 3. That it was nothing less than infinite mercy, and bowels of compassion in God and Christ, which inclined him to come in from on high, to visit them that sit in darkness: "Through the tender bowels of mercy in our God, whereby his own and only Son sprung from on high to visit us here below, who sat in darkness and the shadow of death; and to guide our feet unto the way that leads to everlasting peace."

80 And the child grew, and waxed strong in spirit, and was in the deserts till the day of his shewing unto Israel.

Here we have a short account of John's private life before he entered upon his public ministry, which was at thirty years of age; He grew, that is, in bodily stature, "and waxed strong in spirit;" that is, in the gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit, which increased with his age, and shewed themselves in him every day more and more. "And he was in the deserts;" that is, in the mountainous country of Judea, where he was born, till the time of his preaching to and amongst the Jews; not that he lived like an hermit, recluse from all society with men, but contented himself to continue in an obscure privacy, till called forth to promulge and preach the gospel; and when that time was come, John leaves the hill-country, and enters with resolution and unwearied diligence upon his public ministry; teaching us by his example, That when we are fit and ripe for public service, we should no less willingly leave our obscurity, than we took the benefit of it for our preparation. John abode "in the deserts till his shewing unto Israel:" that is, till the time of his setting forth to execute his office among the Jews.

CHAP. II.

AND it came to pass in those days, that there went out a decree from Cæsar Augustus, that all the world should be taxed.

2 (And this taxing was first made when Cyrenius was governor of Syria.)

3 And all went to be taxed, every one into his own city.

4 And Joseph also went up from Galilee, out of the city of Nazareth, into Judea, unto the city of David, which is called Beth-lehem (because he was of the house and lineage of David.)

5 To be taxed with Mary his espoused wife, being great with child.

6 ¶ And so it was, that while they were there, the days were accomplished that she should be delivered.

7 And she brought forth her first-born son, and wrapped him in swaddling-clothes, and laid him in a manger, because there was no room for them in the inn.

The conclusion of the former chapter acquainted us with the birth of John the Baptist; the beginning of this chapter relates the birth of our Saviour Jesus Christ, and the remarkable circumstances which did attend it. And here we have observable, 1. The place where he was born, not at Nazareth, but at Bethlehem, according to the prediction of the prophet Micah, chap. v. 2 "And thou Bethlehem, in the land of Judah, art not the least among the princes of Judah, for out of thee shall come a Governor that shall rule my people Israel." We may suppose, that the blessed virgin little thought of changing her place, but to have been delivered of her holy burden at Nazareth, where it was conceived. Her house at Nazareth was honoured by the presence of the angel; yea, by the over-shadowing of the Holy Ghost; that house therefore, we may suppose, was most satisfactory to the virgin's desire. But he that made choice of the womb where his son should be conceived, it was fit he should also choose the place, where his son should be born. And this place many hundred years before the nativity, was foretold should be Bethlehem. Observe, 2. How remarkable the providence of God was in bringing the virgin up from Nazareth to Bethlehem, that Christ, as it was prophesied of him, might be born there, Augustus, the Roman emperor, to whom the nation of the Jews was now become tributary, puts forth a decree, that all the Roman empire should have their names and families enrolled, in order to their being taxed. This edict required, that every family should repair to that city to which they did belong, to be enrolled and taxed there. Accordingly, Joseph and Mary, being of the house and lineage of David, have recourse to Bethlehem, the city of David, where, according to the prophecy, the Messiah was to be born. Here note, How the wisdom of God over-rules the actions of men, for higher or nobler ends than what they aimed at. The emperor's aim was by this edict to fill his coffers. God's end was to fulfil his prophecies. Observe, 3. How readily Joseph and Mary yielded obedience to the edict and decree of this heathen emperor. It was no less than four days' journey from Nazareth to Bethlehem: how just an excuse might the virgin have pleaded for her absence! What woman ever undertook so hazardous a journey, that was so near her delivery? And Joseph, no doubt, was sufficiently unwilling to draw her forth into so manifest an hazard. But as the emperor's command was peremptory, so their obedience was exemplary. We must not plead difficulty for withdrawing our obedience to supreme commands. How did our blessed Saviour, even in the womb of his mother, yield homage to civil rulers and governors! The first lesson which Christ's example taught the world, was loyalty and obedience to the supreme magistrate. Observe, 4. After many weary steps, the holy virgin comes to Bethlehem, where every house is taken up by reason of the great confluence of people that came to be taxed; and there is no room for Christ but in a stable: the stable is our Lord's palace, the manger is his cradle. Oh, how can we be abased low enough for him that thus neglected himself for us! What an early indication was this, that our Lord's kingdom was not of this world! Yet some observe a mystery in all this; an inn is domus publici juris, not a private house, but open and free for all passengers, and a stable is the commonest place in the inn; to mind us, that he who was born there, would be a common Saviour to high and low, noble and base, rich and poor, Jew and Gentile; called therefore so often the Son of man; the design of his birth being the benefit of mankind.

8 And there were in the same country shepherds abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flock by night.

9 And, lo, the angel of the Lord came upon them, and the glory of the Lord shone round about them; and they were sore afraid.

10 And the angel said unto them, Fear not: for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people.

11 For unto you is born this day, in the city of David, a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord.

12 And this shall be a sign unto you; Ye shall find the babe wrapped in swaddling-clothes, lying in a manger.

Here we have the promulgation and first publishing of our Saviour's birth to the world: The angel said unto the shepherds, I bring you glad tidings, a Saviour is born. Where observe, 1. The messenger employed by God to publish the joyful news of a Saviour's birth; the holy angels, heavenly messengers employed about an heavenly work: it is worth our notice, how serviceable the angels were to Christ upon all occasions, when he was here upon earth; an angel declares his conception; an host of angels publish his birth; in his temptation, an angel strengthens him; in his agony, an angel comforts him; at his resurrection, an angel rolls away the stone from the door of the sepulchre; at his ascension, the angels attend him up to heaven; and at his second coming to judge the world, he shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels. And great reason there is, that the angels should be thus officious in their attendances upon Christ, who is an head of confirmation to them, as he was an head of redemption to fallen man. Observe, 2. The persons to whom this joyful message of a Saviour's birth is first brought, and they are the shepherds: The angel said unto the shepherds, Fear not. 1. Because Christ, the great shepherd of his church, was come into the world. 2. Because he was of old promised unto shepherds, the old patriarchs, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, who by their occupations were shepherds. Observe, 3. The time when these shepherds had the honour of this revelation; it was not when they were asleep on their beds of idleness and sloth, but when they were lying abroad, and watching their flocks. The blessings of heaven usually meet us in the way of an honest and industrious diligence; whereas the idle are fit for nothing but temptation to work upon. If these shepherds had been snoring in their beds, they had no more seen angels, nor yet heard the news of a Saviour than their neighbours. Observe, 4. The nature and quality of the message which the angel brought; it was a message of joy, a message of great joy, a message of great joy unto all people. For here was born a Son, that Son a Prince, that Prince a Saviour, that Saviour not a particular Saviour of the Jews only, but an universal Saviour, whose salvation is to the ends of the earth. Well might the angel call it a message, or glad tidings of great joy unto all people! Observe, 5. The ground and occasion of this joy, the foundation of all this good news, which was proclaimed in the ears of a lost world; and that was, the birth of a Saviour: Unto you is born this day, in the city of David, a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord. Hence learn, 1. That the incarnation and birth of our Lord Jesus Christ, and his manifestation in our flesh and nature, was and is matter of exceeding joy and rejoicing unto all people. 2. That the great end and design of our Lord's incarnation and coming into the world, was to be the Saviour of lost sinners; Unto you is born a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord.

13 And suddenly there was with the angel, a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying, 14 Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will towards men.

Although the birth of our blessed Saviour was published by one angel, yet is it celebrated by an host of angels; a whole choir of angels chaunt forth the praises of Almighty God, upon this great and joyful occasion. Here observe, 1. The singers. 2. The song itself. The singers of this heavenly anthem are the holy angels; called an host, partly for their number, and partly for their order. Where learn, 1. The goodness and sweet disposition of these blessed spirits, in whose bosom that cankered passion of envy has no place; if it had, there was never such an occasion to stir it up as now: but heaven admits of no such passion; envy is a native of hell, it is the smoke of the bottomless pit, the character and temper of the apostate spirits; these grieve at the happiness of man, as much as the angels rejoice. O ye blessed angels! what did these tidings concern you, that ruined mankind should be taken again into favour; whereas those of your own host, which fell likewise, remained still in that gulph of perdition, into which their sin had plunged them, without either hope of mercy, or possibility of recovery! The less we repine at the good, and the more we rejoice at the happiness of others, the more like we are to the holy angels; yea, the more we resemble God himself. Learn, 2. Did the angels thus joy and rejoice for us? Then what joy ought we to express for ourselves? Had we the tongue of angels, we could not sufficiently chaunt forth the praises of our Redeemer. Eternity itself would be too short to spend in the rapturous contemplation of redeeming mercy. Observe, 3. The anthem or song itself, which begins with a doxology, Glory be to God in the highest; that is, let God in the highest heavens be glorified by the angels that dwell on high. The angelical choir excite themselves, and all the hosts of angels, to give glory to God for these wonderful tidings; as if they had said, "Let the power, the wisdom, the goodness and mercy of God, be acknowledged and revered by all the host of heaven for ever and ever." Next to the doxology, follows a gratulation: glory be to God in the highest, for there is peace on earth, and good will towards men. The birth of Christ has brought a peace of reconciliation betwixt God and man upon earth; and also a peace of amity and concord betwixt man and man, and is therefore to be celebrated with acclamations of joy.

15 And it came to pass, as the angels were gone away from them into heaven, the shepherds said one to another, Let us now go even unto Bethlehem, and see this thing which is come to pass, which the Lord hath made known unto us.

16 And they came with haste, and found Mary and Joseph, and the babe lying in a manger.

17 And when they had seen it, they made known abroad the saying which was told them concerning this child.

18 And all they that heard it, wondered at those things which were told them by the shepherds.

19 But Mary kept all these things, and pondered them in her heart.

20 And the shepherds returned, glorifying and praising God for all the things that they had heard and seen, as it was told unto them.

Several particulars are here observable: as, 1. That the shepherds no sooner heard the news of a Saviour, but they ran to Bethlehem to seek him; and though it was at midnight, yet they delayed not to go. Those that left their beds to attend their flocks, now leave their flocks to inquire after their Saviour. Learn thence, That a gracious soul no sooner hears where Christ is, but instantly makes out after him, and judges no earthly comfort too dear to be left and forsaken for him. These shepherds shew, that they preferred their Saviour before their sheep. Observe, 2. These shepherds having found Christ themselves, do make him known to others, verse 17. When they had seen it, they made known abroad the saying, which was told them concerning this child. Learn, That such as have found Christ to their comfort, and tasted that the Lord is gracious to themselves, cannot but recommend him to the love and admiration of others. Observe, 3. What effect this relation had upon the generality of people that heard it; it wrought in them amazement and astonishment, but not faith: The people wondered, but believed not. 'Tis not the hearing of Christ with the hearing of the ear, nor the seeing of Christ with the sight of the outward eye; neither the hearing of his doctrine, nor the sight of his miracles, will work divine faith in the soul, without the concurring operation of the Holy Spirit; the one may make us marvel, but the other makes us believe. All that heard it wondered at these things. Lastly, note, The effect which these things had upon Mary, quite differed from what they had upon the common people; they wondered, she pondered; the things that affected their heads, influenced her heart; She kept all these things, and pondered them in her heart.

21 ¶ And when eight days were accomplished, for the circumcising of the child, his name was called JESUS, which was so named of the angel before he was conceived in the womb:

Two things are here observable, 1. Our Saviour's circumcision, and the name given him at his circumcision. There was no impurity in the Son of God, and yet is he circumcised, and baptized also, though he had neither filth nor foreskin, which wanted either the circumcising knife or the baptismal water, yet he condescends to be both circumcised and baptized; thereby shewing, that as he was made of a woman, so he would be made under the law, which he punctually observed to a tittle. And accordingly he was not only circumcised, but circumcised the eighth day, as the ceremonial law required: and thus our Lord fulfilled all righteousness, Matt. iii. 15. Observe, 2. The name given at our Saviour's circumcision. His name was called Jesus; that is, a Saviour; he being to save his people from their sins, Matt. i. 21. The great end of Christ's coming into the world was to save persons from the punishment and power of their sins. Had he not saved us from our sins, we must have died in our sins, and died for our sins, and that eternally. Never let us then sit down desponding, either under the guilt, or under the power of our sins; and conclude, that they are either so great, that they cannot be forgiven, or so strong, that they can never be overcome.

22 And when the days of her purification, according to the law of Moses, were accomplished, they brought him to Jerusalem, to present him to the Lord, 23 (As it is written in the law of the Lord, Every male that openeth the womb shall be called holy to the Lord).

24 And to offer a sacrifice according to that which is said in the law of the Lord, A pair of turtle-doves, or two young pigeons.

A twofold act of obedience doth the holy virgin here perform to two ceremonial laws, the one concerning the purification of women after child birth, the other concerning the presenting the male child before the Lord. The law concerning the purification of women we have recorded, Levit. xii. Where the time mentioned for the women's purification is set down, namely, after a male child, forty days, after a female four score days: after which time she was to bring a lamb of a year old for a burnt-offering, in case she was a person of ability; or a pair of turtle doves, or two young pigeons in case of extreme poverty. Now as to the virgin's purification, observe, 1. That no sooner was she able and allowed to walk, but she travels to the temple. Where note, That she visited God's house at Jerusalem, before her own house at Nazareth. Learn thence, That such women, whom God has blessed with safety of deliverance, if they make not their first visit to the temple of God to offer up their praises and thanksgivings there, they are strangers to the virgin's piety and devotion. Observe, 2. Another act of Mary's obedience to the ceremonial law as she presented her child at Jerusalem to the Lord. But how durst the blessed virgin carry her holy babe to Jerusalem, into Herod's mouth? It was but a little before that Herod sought the young child's life to destroy it; yet the virgin sticks not in obedience to the commands of God, to carry him to Jerusalem. Learn hence, That no apprehension of dangers, either imminent or approaching, either at hand or afar off, ought to hinder us from performing our duty to Almighty God: we ought not to neglect a certain duty, to escape an uncertain danger. Observe farther, As the obedience, so the humility of the holy virgin, in submitting to the law for purifying of uncleanness; for thus she might have pleaded, "What need have I of purging, who did not conceive in sin? Other births are from men, but mine is from the Holy Ghost, who is purity itself. Other women's children are under the law, mine is above the law." But like the mother of him whom it behoved to fulfil all righteousness, she dutifully fulfils the law of God without quarrelling or disputing. Observe, lastly, as the exemplary humility, so the great poverty of the holy virgin: she has not a lamb, but comes with her two doves to God. Her offering declares her penury. The best are sometimes the poorest, seldom the wealthiest: yet none are so poor, but God expects an offering from them: he looks for somewhat from every one, not from every one alike. The providence of God it is that makes difference in persons abilities, but his pleasure will make no difference in the acceptance. "Where there is a willing mind, it shall be accepted according to what a person hath." 2. Cor. viii. 12.

25 And, behold, there was a man in Jerusalem, whose name was Simeon; and the same man was just and devout, waiting for the Consolation of Israel: and the Holy Ghost was upon him.

26 And it was revealed unto him by the Holy Ghost, that he should not see death before he had seen the Lord's Christ.

27 And he came by the Spirit into the temple; and when the parents brought in the child Jesus, to do for him after the custom of the law,

28 Then took he him up in his arms, and blessed God, and said,

No sooner was our Saviour brought into the temple, and presented to the Lord by his holy parents, but in springs old Simeon, a pious and devout man, who had a revelation from God, that he should not die, until he had with his bodily eyes, seen the promised Messiah. Accordingly he takes up the child Jesus in his arms, but hugs him faster by his faith than by his feeble arms, and with ravishment of heart praises God for the sight of his Saviour, whom he calls the Consolation of Israel; that is the Messiah, whom the Israel of God had long looked and waited for, and now took comfort and consolation in. Note here, 1. How God always performs his promises to his children with wonderful advantage. Simeon had a revelation, that he should not die until he had seen Christ; now he not only sees him, but feels him too: he not only has him in his eye, but holds him in his hands. Though God stays long before he fulfils his promises, he certainly comes at last with a double reward for our double expectation. Note, 2. That the coming of the Messiah in the fulness of time, and his appearing in our flesh and nature, was and is matter of unspeakable consolation to the Israel of God. And now that he is come, let us live by faith in him, as the foundation of all comfort and consolation both in life and death. Alas! what are all other consolations beside this, and without this? They are impotent and insufficient consolations, they are dying and perishing consolations; nay, they are sometimes afflictive and distressing consolations. The bitterness accompanying them, is sometimes more than the sweetness that is tasted in them; but in Christ, who is, the Consolation of Israel, there is light without darkness, joy without sorrow, all consolation without any mixture of discomfort.

29 Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace according to thy word:

30 For mine eyes have seen thy salvation,

31 Which thou hast prepared before the face of all people;

32 A light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of thy people Israel.

33 And Joseph and his mother marvelled at those things which were spoken of him.

These words are a sweet canticle, or swan-like song of old Simeon ; a little before his dissolution. He had seen the Messias before by faith, now by sight, and wishes to have his eyes closed, that he might see nothing after this desirable sight. It is said of some Turks, that after they have seen Mahomet's tomb, they put out their eyes, that they may never defile them after they have seen so glorious an object : thus old Simeon desires to see no more of the world, after he had seen Christ the Saviour of the world : but sues for his dismissal, Lord, let thy servant depart. Note, here, 1. That a good man having served his generation, and God in his generation faithfully, is weary of the world, and willing to be dismissed from it. 2. That the death of a good man is nothing else but a quiet and peaceable departure : it is a departure in peace to the God of peace. 3. That it is only a spiritual sight of Christ by faith that can welcome the approach of death, and render it an object desirable to the Christian's choice ; he only that can say, My eyes have seen thy salvation, will be able to say, Lord, let thy servant depart. Observe farther, Holy Simeon having declared the faithfulness of God to himself in the gift of Christ, next he celebrates the mercy of God, in bestowing this invaluable gift of a Saviour upon the whole world. The world consists of Jews and Gentiles ; Christ is a light to the one, and the glory of the other. A light to the blind and dark Gentiles, and the glory of the renowned church of the Jews ; the Messias being promised to them, born and bred up with them, living amongst them, preaching his doctrine to them, and working his miracles before them ; and thus was Christ, the glory of his people Israel.

34 And Simeon blessed them, and said unto Mary his mother, Behold, this child is set for the fall and rising again of many in Israel ; and for a sign which shall be spoken against :

35 (Yea, a sword shall pierce through thy own soul also) that the thoughts of many hearts may be revealed.

Two things are here observed, Simeon's blessing, and Simeon's prediction ; He blessed them ; that is, the parents and the child Jesus ; not authoritatively, but prophetically, declaring how God would bless them ; his prediction is twofold. 1. Concerning Christ, 2. Concerning his mother. Concerning Christ, Simeon declares, that he should be for the rise of many in Israel ; namely, all such as should embrace and obey his doctrine ; and imitate and follow his example ; and for the fall of others, that is, shall bring punishment and ruin upon all obdurate and impenitent sinners ; and a sign to be spoken against ; that is, he shall be as a mark for obstinate sinners to set themselves against. Christ himself when here in the world, was a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence to the men of the world, enduring the contradiction of sinners against himself, both the virulence of their tongues, and the violence of their hands. Doubtless God's first design in sending his Son into the world was, That through him the world might be saved, John iii. 16. But to such persons whose minds had no relish for spiritual things, he became accidentally a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence. Secondly, Concerning the mother of Christ, Simeon declares, that the sight of her Son's bitter sufferings, would, like a sword, pierce her heart ; for though he might be born, yet should he not die without the pains of his mother ; as if she throws suffered by other women at the birth, were reserved for her to endure at the death of her Son. The sufferings of the holy Jesus, on the cross, were as a sword or dagger at the heart of the holy virgin, and she suffered with him both as a tender mother, and as a sympathizing member of his body : yea, suffered martyrdom after him, saith Epiphanius.

36 And there was one Anna a prophetess, the daughter of Phanuel, of the tribe of Aser ; she was of a great age, and had lived with an husband seven years from her virginity :

37 And she was a widow of about fourscore and four years : which departed not from the temple, but served God with fastings and prayers night and day.

38 And she, coming in that instant, gave thanks likewise unto the Lord, and spake of him to all them that looked for redemption in Jerusalem.

Simeon is seconded by Anna, a prophetess ; she also declares, that the child Jesus was the promised and expected Messias ; and thus Christ was proclaimed in the temple by two heralds of different sexes. Concerning this aged woman Anna, it is said, that she departed not from the temple night nor day ; not that she lived and lodged there, but by her never departing from, understand her daily repairing to the temple. That which is often done, is said in scripture to be always done : we are said to do a thing continually, when we do it seasonably ; thus we pray continually, when we pray as often as duty requires us to pray. Learn hence, That such duties as a Christian performs out of conscience, he will perform with constancy and perseverance ; nature will have her good moods, but grace is steady. The devotions of a pious soul, like Anna's, are as constant, but more frequent, than the returns of day and night.

39 And when they had performed all things according to the law of the Lord, they returned into Galilee, to their own city Nazareth.

40 And the child grew, and waxed strong in spirit, filled with wisdom ; and the grace of God was upon him.

Here we see the truth and reality of Christ's human nature, he grew as we do, from infancy to childhood, from childhood to youth and manhood. To his divine nature no accession or addition could be made, for that which is infinite cannot increase. The Deity was infinite in Christ, so was not the humanity, but capable of additions ; and accordingly, as Christ grew up in the stature of his body, the faculties of his mind increased, through the grace and power of God's spirit upon him.

41 ¶ Now his parents went to Jerusalem every year at the feast of the Passover.

42 And when he was twelve years old, they went up to Jerusalem after the custom of the feast.

Observe here, The persons making this yearly journey to Jerusalem, our Saviour's parents and himself ; 1. Joseph, who is called Christ's father, not that he was his natural father, for Christ had no father upon earth ; but Joseph was his reputed and supposed father, his nursing father, who by the appointment of God, took a fatherly care of him : and his father-in-law, being husband to Mary. 2. Mary, the mother of Christ, went up to Jerusalem with her husband and her Son : God commanded only the males to go up to Jerusalem, the weaker sex were excused ; but the holy virgin, well-knowing the spiritual profit of that long journey, would not stay at home. Such as will go no farther than they are dragged in religious services, are strangers to the virgin's piety and devotion. But 3. The child Jesus in his minority goes up with his parents to this holy solemnity, thereby, no doubt, intending our instruction, when we are young to give God an early possession of our souls, to consecrate the virgin operation of our minds to him, and in our youth to keep close to the worship and service of God, when we are so importunately courted by the world. Observe farther, This holy family came not to look at the feast and begone, but they duly stayed out all the appointed time. Joseph's calling the virgin's household business, could neither keep them at home, nor hasten them home before the public duties in the temple were dispatched and ended. All worldly business must give place to divine offices, and we must attend God's service to the end, except we depart unblest. Observe lastly, The constant returns of their devotion, They went up to Jerusalem every year. No difficulties, no discouragements, could hinder their attendance. Though it is no certain evidence of the truth of grace to frequent public assemblies, yet it is an infallible sign of the want of grace customarily to neglect them.

43 And when they had fulfilled the days as they returned, the child Jesus tarried behind in Jerusalem ; and Joseph and his mother knew not of it.

44 But they supposing him to have been in the company, went a day's journey ; and they sought him among their kinsfolk and acquaintance.

45 And when they found him not, they turned back again to Jerusalem, seeking him.

The service of the temple being ended, they return home to Nazareth. Religious duties are not to be attended to the prejudice and neglect of our particular callings. God calls us, as well from his house, as to his house. They are much mistaken who think God is pleased with nothing but devotion ; he that says, Be fervent in spirit, serving the Lord ; says also, Be not slothful in business. Piety and industry must keep pace with one another ; God is as well pleased with our return to Nazareth, as with our going up to Jerusalem. Observe farther, Though Joseph and Mary returned home, the child Jesus, unknown to them, stays behind. Their back was no sooner turned upon the temple, but his face was towards it : Christ had business in that place which his parents knew not of. They missing him, seek him in the company, concluding him with their kinsfolk and acquaintance ; from whence we may gather, That the parents of Christ knew him to be of a sweet and social, of a free and conversative, not of a sullen and morose disposition. They did not suspect him to be wandering in the fields or deserts ; but, when they missed him, sought him among their kinsfolk : had he not wanted to converse formerly with them, he had not now been sought amongst them. Our blessed Saviour, when on earth, did not take pleasure in a wild reticeness, in a forward austerity, but in a mild affability and amiable conversation ; and herein also his example is very instructive to us.

46 And it came to pass, that after three days they found him in the temple, sitting in the midst of the doctors, both hearing them and asking them questions.

47 And all that heard him, were astonished at his understanding and answers.

Observe here, 1. The place where the child Jesus is found ; in the temple : where could there be a more likely place to find the Son of God, than in the house of his Father ? No wonder that his parents found him there ; but that they went not first to seek him there. Observe, 2. At twelve years old, our Saviour disputes in the temple with the doctors of the law : never had those great rabbies heard the voice of such a tutor. Thus, in our Saviour's nonage, he gives a proof of his proficiency ; even as the spring shews us what we may hope for of the tree in summer. Our Saviour discovered his accomplishments by degrees ; had his perfections appeared all at once, they had rather dazzled than delighted the eyes of the beholders ; even as the sun would confound all eyes, should it appear at its first rising in its full strength. Christ could now have taught all those great rabbies the deep mysteries of God : but being not yet called by his Father to be a public teacher, he contents himself to hear with diligence, and to ask with modesty. Learn hence, That parts and abilities for the ministerial function, are not sufficient to warrant our undertaking of it without a regular call. Christ himself would not run, no not on his heavenly Father's errand, before he was sent ; much less should we.

48 And when they saw him, they were amazed : and his mother said unto him, Son, why hast thou thus dealt with us ? behold, thy father and I have sought thee sorrowing.

Without doubt, it was impossible to express the sorrow of the holy virgin's soul, when all the search of three days could bring them no tidings of their holy child. How did she blame her eyes for once looking off this object of her love, and spend both days and nights in a passionate bemoaning of her loss ! O blessed Saviour ! who can miss thee, and not mourn for thee ? Never any soul conceived thee by faith, but was apprehensive of thy worth, and sensible of thy want : what comforts are we capable of, while we want thee ? And what relish can we taste in any earthly delight, without thee ?

49 And he said unto them, How is it that ye sought me ? wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business ?

Observe here, That Christ blames not his parents for their solicitous care of him, but shews them how able he was to live without any dependency upon them and their care ; and also to let them understand, that higher respects had called him away ; that as he had meat to eat, so had he work to do, which they knew not of : for, says he, Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business ? As if he had said, " Although I owe respect to you as my natural parents, yet my duty to my heavenly Father must be preferred. I am about his work, promoting his glory, and propagating his truth." We have also a Father in heaven. O ! how good it is to steal away from our earthly distractions, that we may employ ourselves immediately in his service ; that when the world makes enquiry after us, we may say, as our Saviour did before us, Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business ?

50 And they understood not the saying which he spake unto them.

51 And he went down with them, and came to Nazareth, and was subject unto them ; but his mother kept all these sayings in her heart.

52 And Jesus increased in wisdom and stature, and in favour with God and man.

The most material passage of our Saviour's life for the first twelve years is here recorded : namely, his disputing with the doctors in the temple : how he spent the next eighteen years ; namely, till he was thirty, the scripture doth not mention. It is here said, that he lived with, and was subject to his parents, obeying their commands, and, as it is believed, following their employment, working upon the trade of a carpenter, as was observed, Mark vi. 3. Doubtless he did not live an idle life ; and why should he that did not abhor the virgin's womb, a stable, and a manger, be supposed to abhor the works of an honest vocation ? Observe farther, What a singular pattern is here for children to imitate and follow, in their subjection to their parents : if the greatest and highest of mortals think themselves above their parents' commands, our Saviour did not so ; he paid homage to the womb that bare him, and to his supposed father that provided for him. Let a person be ever so high above others, he is still below and inferior to his parents. Jesus dwelt with his parents, and was subject to them. Observe lastly, A further evidence of our Saviour's humanity, with respect to his human nature, which consisted of body and soul : he did grow and improve, his body in stature, his soul in wisdom ; and he became every day a more eminent and illustrious person in the eyes of all, being highly in favour both with God and man. Vain then is the conclusions of the Socinians from this text, that Christ could not be God : because God cannot wax strong in spirit, or increase in wisdom, as Christ is here said to do ; for God's perfections are infinite and will admit of no increase. Whereas it is plain that this increase, here attributed to Christ in age and stature, respects his humanity ; the wisdom and endowments of his human mind were capable of increase, though his divine perfections were absolutely perfect. So glad are these men of the least shadow of a text, that may cloud the divinity of the Son of God.

CHAP. III.

NOW in the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius Cæsar, Pontius Pilate being governor of Judea, and Herod being tetrarch of Galilee, and his brother Philip tetrarch of Iturea, and of the region of Trachonitis, and Lysanias the tetrarch of Abilene.

2 Annas and Caiaphas being the high priests, the word of God came unto John the son of Zacharias, in the wilderness.

The two foregoing chapters gave us an account of the birth of our Saviour Christ and of John the Baptist. The evangelist now leaving the history of our blessed Saviour for eighteen years, namely, till he was thirty years old (the Holy Ghost having thought fit to conceal that part of our Saviour's private life from our knowledge) he begins this chapter with a relation of the Baptist's ministry, acquainting us with the time when, and place where, and the doctrine which the Baptist taught. Observe, 1. The time described when St. John began his public ministry, namely, when Tiberius was emperor, and Annas and Caiaphas high priests. Observe, 2. In the fifteenth year of Tiberius, when the Jews were entirely under the power of the Romans, who set four governors over them, called tetrarchs, so named from their ruling over a fourth part of the kingdom. From hence the Jews might have observed, had not prejudice blinded their eyes, that the sceptre being thus departed from Judah, according to Jacob's prophecy, Gen. xlix. Shilo, or the Messiah, was now come. Again, the time when St. John began his ministry was, when Annas and Caiaphas were high priests. Under the law there were three sorts of ministers that attended the service of the temple, namely, Priests, Levites, and Nethinims; over these the high priests was chief, who, by God's command, was to be the first-born of Aaron's family. But how came two high priests here, seeing God never appointed but one at a time? In answer to this, say some, the power and covetousness of the Romans put in high priests at pleasure to officiate for gain. Say others, The high priest was allowed his assistant or deputy, who, in case of his pollution or sickness, did officiate in his place. But that which we may profitably observe from hence, is this, the exactness and faithfulness of this historian St. Luke, in relating the circumstances of our Saviour's nativity, and the Baptist's ministry. That the truth might evidently appear, he is exact in recording the time.

3 And he came into all the country about Jordan, preaching the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins:

4 As it is written in the book of the words of Esaias the prophet, saying, the voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight.

5 Every valley shall be filled, and every mountain and hill shall be brought low; and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough way shall be made smooth;

6 And all flesh shall see the salvation of God.

Observe here, 1. The place where the Baptist exercised his ministry, in the wilderness of Judea, where were some cities and villages, though thinly inhabited. Note here, The great humility of the Baptist, in the preaching in an obscure place, to a small handful of people. Jerusalem some might think, was a fitter place for so celebrated a preacher; but God called him to preach in the wilderness, and there he opens his commission. Learn hence, That the most eminent of God's ministers must be content to execute their office, and exercise their ministry where God calls them, be the place ever so mean and obscure, and the people ever so rude and barbarous. In the place where God by his providence fixes us, we must abide, till he that called us thither, remove us thence. And this was the Baptist's case here. He leaves the wilderness at God's command, and comes to the more inhabited places; he came into the country about Jordan, preaching. It is not only lawful, but a necessary duty, for the ministers of God to remove from one place and people to another, provided their call be clear, their way plain, the good of souls their motive, and the glory of God their end. Observe, 2. The doctrine which the Baptist preached, namely, The baptism of repentance for the remission of sins: That is, the doctrine of baptism, which sealeth remission of sins to the party baptized. Learn hence, That the preaching of the doctrine of repentance is the indispensable duty of every gospel minister; John the Baptist preached it, our Saviour preached it, his apostles preached it: They went out every where preaching that men should repent. Till we are in a state of sinless perfection, the doctrine of repentance must be preached unto us, and practised by us. Observe, 3. The motive and inducement which prompted the Baptist to his duty, which was to fulfil the prophecies which went before him, "as it is written in the book of the prophecies, the voice of one crying in the wilderness, prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight; every valley shall be filled, &c." Where note, 1. The title given to John the Baptist, a voice, a crying voice. This implies both his vehemency and earnestness, and also his freedom and boldness in delivering of his message; when a minister's own heart is warmly affected with what he preaches, he may hope to affect the hearts of others. Note, 2. The sum and substance of what he cried, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, &c. that is, make yourselves ready to receive the Messiah, to embrace and entertain his doctrine. As loyal subjects, when their prince is coming near their city, remove every thing out of the way that may hinder his progress; all annoyances and all impediments; in like manner the preparatory work of the gospel upon the hearts of sinners, lies in pulling down mountains, and filling up valleys: that is, in humbling the proud hearts of sinners, puffed up, as the pharisees were, with a conceit of their own righteousness, who would be their own saviours, and not beholden to Christ, and his free grace, for salvation. Learn hence, 1. That man's heart is naturally very unfit to receive and entertain the Lord Jesus Christ, and his holy doctrine: we have naturally no fitness, no inclination, nor disposition to believe in him, or submit unto him. 2. That if ever we design to entertain Christ in our hearts, we must first prepare and make ready our hearts for the receiving and embracing of him. For though the Preparation of the heart be from the Lord, yet he requires the exercise of our faculties, and the use of our endeavours; he prepares our hearts, by enabling us to prepare our own hearts, by getting a sight of the evil of sin, and a sense of our misery without Christ; an hungering desire after him, and a lively faith in him. God does not work upon man, as masons' work upon stone; what he doth in us and for us, he doth it by us, he works by setting us to work; therefore, says the Baptist, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make, &c. The act of endeavour is ours, and the aid and assistance is God's. Observe lastly, the encouragement the Baptist gives to persons to prepare the way of the Lord; for, says he, all flesh shall see the salvation of our God; that is, now is the time that all persons, Jews and Gentiles, may see the author of salvation, whom God has promised to the world; and may by faith be made partakers of that salvation which the Messiah shall purchase for them, and in his gospel tender to them. The great end of Christ's coming into the world, was to purchase salvation for all flesh, willing to be saved by him.

7 Then said he to the multitude that came forth to be baptized of him, O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come?

8 Bring forth therefore fruits worthy of repentance, and begin not to say within yourselves, We have Abraham to our father. For I say unto you, that God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham.

St. Matthew, chap. iii. 7, 8, says, that the baptist spake these words to the pharisees and sadducees, whom he gives, first, a quick and cutting compellation, O generation of vipers; then a sharp and severe reprehension, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come? and, last of all, a seasonable exhortation; Bring forth therefore fruits meet for repentance. As if he had said, "O, ye pharisees, and worst of men! I perceive, by your coming hither, somebody hath alarmed you with the notice of that dreadful vengeance that is coming upon this generation; to prevent which, you pretend repentance of your sins; but let me see, by your actions, that you are not only demure, but sincere penitents; let me see the fruits of your repentance, in the daily course of your conversation." Learn here, 1. That the condition of proud pharisees, pretending and false-hearted hypocrites, though very dangerous, yet is not hopeless and desperate; and their salvation, though the worst of men, must not be despaired of. St. John reproves them for their sins, but yet encourages their repentance. 2. That sincere repentance is not a barren thing, but does constantly bring forth fruits answerable to its nature; as faith, without works, so repentance without fruits is dead also. The genuine fruits of repentance, are humility of heart, and holiness of life. Observe lastly, The cautionary direction which he gives to these hypocrites, not to rest in their external privileges; Think not to say within yourselves, We have Abraham to our father; glory not in this, that you are the only visible church that God has upon earth, for God can out of the obdurate Gentile world, raise up a people to himself, take them into covenant with himself, and cast you out. Learn hence, 1. That men are exceeding apt to boast of, and glory in, their external privileges, and to place religion in those things wherein God places it least. How did the Jews glory in their fleshly descent from Abraham, as if God were tied to Abraham's line, and could have no people, if he had not them for his people? 2. That it is a vain thing to expect exemption from the judgments of God, because of outward privileges enjoyed by us. If we be not born again of the Spirit, it will avail us nothing to be born of Abraham's flesh; if Abraham's faith be not found in our hearts, it will be no advantage to us, that Abraham's blood is running in our veins; Think not to say, We have Abraham to our father.

9 And now also the axe is laid unto the root of the trees: every tree therefore which bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down and cast into the fire.

St. John having preached the doctrine of repentance in the foregoing verses, he backs it with a powerful argument in this verse, drawn from the certainty and severity of that judgment which should come upon them, if they continued in their sins; Now is the axe laid to the root of the tree. Learn, 1. That it is not unsuitable for gospel-preachers to press repentance and holiness of life upon their hearers, from arguments of terror; John does it here, and Christ elsewhere. 2. That those whose hearts are not pierced with the sword of God's word, shall certainly be cut down and destroyed by the axe of his judgments. Observe farther, That forasmuch as the sin here specified is a sin of omission, every tree which bringeth not forth good fruit, as well as that which bringeth forth evil fruit, is hewn down and cast into the fire; we learn, That sins of omission are certainly damning, as well as sins of commission. The neglects of duty are as dangerous and damnable as the acts of sin. Such trees as stand in God's orchard, the church, and bring forth no good fruit, are marked out as fuel for the devil's fire.

10 And the people asked him, saying, What shall we do then?

11 He answereth and saith unto them, He that hath two coats, let him impart to him that hath none; and he that hath meat, let him do likewise.

The Baptist having pressed his hearers to bring forth fruits meet for repentance, here they enquire of him, what fruits they should bring forth? He tells them, first, The fruits of charity and mercy; He that hath two coats, let him give to him that hath none. This is not to be understood strictly, as if the command required us to give the clothes off our back to every one that wanted them; but it directs those that have the things of this life in abundance, to distribute and communicate to those that are in want. Learn hence, That an extensive liberality, and a diffusive charity, in distributing such things as we can well spare towards the relief of others' necessities, is an excellent fruit of repentance, a good proof and evidence of the truth and sincerity of it; Let him that hath two coats, impart to him that hath none. Note, That the Baptist here doth not make it unlawful for a man to have two coats; but means only, that he that has one coat, which his brother wants, and he at present doth not, should rather give it him, than suffer him to be in want of it. Teaching us, That it is not lawful to abound in those things, which our brother wants, when we have sufficient both to relieve his and our necessities.

12 Then came also publicans to be baptized, and said unto him, Master, what shall we do?

13 And he said unto them, Exact no more than that which is appointed you.

The publicans were persons employed by the Romans to gather the tax of tribute among the Jews, who were now tributaries to the Romans, and paid them a public revenue. These publicans were great oppressors, exacting more than was the emperor's due, therefore we find the publicans and sinners so often joined together in the gospel. These men, inquiring what fruits of repentance they should bring forth, St. John directs them to acts of justice: Exact not. Where note, 1. The acts of justice and righteousness, as well as of charity and mercy, are real fruits of sincere repentance. Observe, 2. John doth not condemn the office, but cautions the officer. If magistrates may impose taxes, they may doubtless appoint officers to collect those taxes: Christian charity then must always teach us to distinguish betwixt the calling and the crime. We must not censure any office, either in church or state, for the sake of their mal-administration, who are employed in that office.

14 And the soldiers likewise demanded of him, saying, And what shall we do? And he said unto them, Do violence to no man, neither accuse any falsely; and be content with your wages.

Observe here, What a general resort there was of all sorts of persons to John's ministry: pharisees, sadducees, publicans, soldiers: these last here inquire of him, What they should do to gain acceptance with God? He answers, Do no violence, defraud no man of his own by false accusation, but be content with the allowance assigned for your maintenance. Where it is, 1. Strongly supposed, that soldiers are insolent oppressors, making no conscience of injustice, false accusation, and violent oppression; yet, 2. The office and employment of a soldier is not condemned, but regulated; he does not bid them cast away their arms, abandon war, appear no more as military men in the field; but manage their employment inoffensively. Whence we learn, That in some cases, and under some circumstances, for Christians to make war, is both lawful and necessary. To make a war lawful, there is required a lawful authority, a righteous cause, an honourable aim and intention, and a just and righteous manner of prosecution, without vanity and ostentation, without cruelty and oppression. Courage and compassion on the one hand, and cowardice and cruelty on the other hand, do frequently accompany one another.

15 ¶ And as the people were in expect-tation, and all men mused in their hearts of John, whether he were the Christ or not?

16 John answered, saying unto them all, I indeed baptize you with water: but one mightier than I cometh, the latchet of whose shoes I am not worthy to unloose: he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire;

17 Whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor, and will gather the wheat into his garner; but the chaff he will burn with fire unquenchable.

Observe here, 1. How the extraordinariness of John the Baptist's person, the earnestness of his preaching, the acceptableness of his doctrine, and the exemplariness of his conversation, drew all persons to an admiration of him: inasmuch that they began to think within themselves, whether he were not the Messiah himself. He plainly tells them he was not, but only his servant, his harbinger and forerunner. Observe, 2. The high opinion which John had of Christ, He is mightier than I; that is, a person of greater authority, dignity, and excellency, than myself. From whence may be gathered, That though Christ was man, he was more than man, even very God equal with the Father: for John himself was the greatest of them that were born of women, Matt. xi. 11, yet says St. John, Christ is mightier than I. How so? In regard of the dignity of his person, being both God and man: He that cometh after me, is mightier than I. Observe, 3. The humble and low estimation that the holy Baptist had of himself, his shoe-latchet I am not worthy to unloose; a proverbial speech, implying, that he was unworthy to do the lowest offices, and meanest services, for Christ. Lord, how well does humility of mind, an humble apprehension, and a low opinion of themselves, become the messengers and ministers of Christ? John was a man of eminent abilities, yet of exemplary humility; he thought himself unworthy to unloose Christ's shoes. Observe, 4. John does not only declare the dignity of Christ's person, but the excellency of his office; He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire: As if he had said, "I only wash the body with water, but Christ cleanses the soul by the operation of his Holy Spirit, which is as fire in the effects of it, purifying the hearts of his people from sin, and consuming their lust and corruptions; yet at the same time having fiery indignation, and flaming judgments to destroy and burn up impenitent sinners like dry stubble. Observable it is in scripture, that Christ is represented by one and the same metaphor of fire, in a way of comfort to his children, and in a way of terror to his enemies; he is fire unto both. He sits in the hearts of his people as a refiner's fire; he is amongst his enemies as a consuming fire; a fire for his church to take comfort in, a fire for his enemies to perish by. Observe lastly, How the holy Baptist compares our Saviour to an husbandman, and the Jewish church to a barn-floor, the office of an husbandman is to thresh, fan, and winnow his corn, separating it from the chaff, preserving the one and consuming the other. Observe, 1. That the church is Christ's floor. 2. That this floor Christ will purge, and that thoroughly. 3. That the word of Christ is the fan in his hand, by and with which he will thoroughly purge his floor. The church is compared to a floor, upon the account of that mixture which is in the church. In a floor there is straw as well as grain, chaff as well as corn, tares as well as wheat, cockle and darnel as well as good seed. Thus in the church there has been, there is, and ever will be, a mixture of good and bad, saints and sinners, hypocrites and sincere Christians; but this floor Christ will purge, purge it, but not break it up: purge out its corruptions, but not destroy its essence and existence; and the fan in Christ's hand, with which he will purge his floor, is his holy word, accompanied with the wing of discipline. The fan detects and discovers the chaff, and the wind dissipates and scatters it; and by the help of both, the floor is purged; "His fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge, &c."

18 And many other things, in his exhortation, preached he unto the people.

19 ¶ But Herod the tetrarch, being reproved by him for Herodias, his brother Philip's wife; and for all the evils which Herod had done, 20 Added yet this above all, that he shut up John in prison.

Observe here, 1. In John the Baptist, the character of a zealous and faithful minister of the gospel, he is one that deals plainly, and durst tell the greatest persons of their faults. Herod, though a king, is reproved by him for his adultery and incest. The crown and sceptre of Herod could not daunt the faithful messenger of God. There ought to meet in the ministers of Christ both courage and impartiality; courage in fearing no faces, and impartiality in sparing no sins. Observe, 2. Who it was that imprisoned and beheaded the Holy Baptist; Herod a king. How sad is it, when kings, who should be nursing fathers to the Church, do prove the bloody butchers of the prophets of God. Many of the severest persecutions which the ministers of God have fallen under, have been occasioned by their telling great men of their crimes: men in power are impatient of reproof, and imagine that their authority gives them a license to transgress. Observe, 3. The heinous aggravations of this sin in Herod, "he added this to all his other sins, that he shut up John in prison." This evidenced him incorrigible and unreclaimable. John had preached before Herod, and Herod had heard John with some delight; but he had a darling lust, which occasioned his destruction. Learn hence, That hypocrites may hear the word with some pleasure, and do many things with some delight, but they have always some beloved lust that must be spared, they will neither part with it nor bear reproof for it: Herod sticks not to cut off that head whose tongue was so bold to reprove him for his lusts.

21 ¶ Now, when all the people were baptized, it came to pass, that Jesus also being baptized, and praying, the heaven was opened.

Observe, 1. The great condescension of Christ in seeking and submitting to the baptism of John. Christ, though John's lord and master, yet yields to be baptized of his servant and messenger. Observe, 2. The reasons why Christ would be baptized. 1. That by this rite he might enter himself into the society of Christians, as he had before by circumcision entered into the society of the Jews. 2. That he might by his own baptism sanctify the ordinance of baptism unto us. 3. That thereby he might fulfil the righteousness of the ceremonial law, which required the washing of the priests in water, before they entered upon their office, as appears, Exod. xxix. 4. Observe, 4. How the duty of prayer accompanied the ordinance of baptism: Jesus being baptized, and praying: Teaching us by his example to sanctify every ordinance, and every action with prayer. Christ, when he was baptized, he prayed; when he was tempted, he prayed; when he brake bread, he prayed; when he wrought miracles, he prayed; in his agony in the garden, he prayed; when he suffered on the cross, he prayed. What was the subject matter of our Lord's prayer at this time is not expressed, but by what followed, namely, the heavens opening, and the Holy Ghost descending, it is probably conjectured, that he prayed for some testimony to be given from heaven concerning himself, for it immediately follows:

22 And the Holy Ghost descended in a bodily shape, like a dove, upon him, and a voice came from heaven, which said, Thou art my beloved Son, in thee I am well pleased.

Observe here, The solemn investing of Christ into his office, as Mediator, is attended with a threefold miracle, namely, the opening of the heavens, the descending of the Holy Ghost, and God the Father's voice concerning his Son. The heavens were opened; to shew, that heaven, which was closed and shut against us for our sins, is now opened to us, by Christ's undertaking for us: next, The Holy Ghost descends like a dove upon our Saviour: Here we have a proof and evidence of the blessed Trinity: the Father speaks from heaven, the Son comes out of the water, and the Holy Ghost descends after the manner of a dove, hovering and overshadowing him. But why did the Holy Ghost now descend upon Christ? First, for the designation of his person, to shew that he was the person set apart for the work and office of a Mediator. Secondly, for the unction and sanctification of his person, for the performance of that office: now was he anointed to be the king, priest, and prophet of his church. Lastly, We have here the voice of God the Father, pronouncing, 1. The nearness of Christ's relation: This is my Son. 2. The endearedness of his person: This is my beloved Son. 3. The fruit and benefit of this near relation unto us: In thee I am well pleased. Learn hence, 1. That there is no possibility for any person to please God out of Christ: neither our persons, nor our performances, can find acceptance with God, but only in and through him, and for his sake. 2.

That the Lord Jesus Christ is the ground and cause of all that love, and good will, which God the Father sheweth to the sons of men. In Christ, God is well pleased with us as a reconciled father, out of him a consuming fire. "Thou art my beloved Son, in thee I am well pleased."

23 ¶ And Jesus himself began to be about thirty years of age, being (as was supposed) the son of Joseph, which was the son of Heli,

At thirty years of age, the priests under the law entered upon their public office; accordingly Christ stays the full time prescribed by the law, before he undertakes his public ministry, and he gives the reason for it, Matt. iii. 15. That he might fulfil all righteousness; that is, the righteousness of the ceremonial law, which required persons to be of that age, before they entered upon that office; and also enjoined them to be baptized or washed in water, when they undertook their office. See Exod. xxix. 4. Learn hence, That whatever the law required in order to perfect righteousness, that Christ fulfilled in the most absolute perfection, both in his own person, and also in the name of all believers. Observe farther, The title given to Joseph here, he is called the supposed father of Christ. Joseph was not his natural father, though supposed so by the Jews; but he was his legal father, being married to the virgin when our Saviour was born; and he was his nursing father that took care of him, and provided for him, though Christ sometimes shewed both his parents, that, if he pleased, he could live without any dependence of their care. See Luke ii. 49.

24 Which was the son of Matthat, which was the son of Levi, which was the son of Melchi, which was the son of Janna, which was the son of Joseph,

25 Which was the son of Mattathias, which was the son of Amos, which was the son of Naum, which was the son of Esli, which was the son of Nagge,

26 Which was the son of Maath, which was the son of Mattathias, which was the son of Semei, which was the son of Joseph, which was the son of Juda,

27 Which was the son of Joanna, which was the son of Rhesa, which was the son of Zorobabel, which was the son of Salathiel, which was the son of Neri,

28 Which was the son of Melchi, which was the son of Addi, which was the son of Cosam, which was the son of Elmodam, which was the son of Er,

29 Which was the son of Jose, which was the son of Eliezer, which was the son of Jorim, which was the son of Matthat, which was the son of Levi,

30 Which was the son of Simeon, which was the son of Juda, which was the son of Joseph, which was the son of Jonan, which was the son of Eliakim,

31 Which was the son of Mela, which was the son of Menan, which was the son of Mattatha, which was the son of Nathan, which was the son of David,

32 Which was the son of Jesse, which was the son of Obed, which was the son of Booz, which was the son of Salmon, which was the son of Naasson,

33 Which was the son of Aminadab, which was the son of Aram, which was the son of Esrom, which was the son of Phares, which was the son of Juda,

34 Which was the son of Jacob, which was the son of Isaac, which was the son of Abraham, which was the son of Thara, which was the son of Nachor,

35 Which was the son of Saruch, which was the son of Ragan, which was the son of Phalee, which was the son of Heber, which was the son of Sala,

36 Which was the son of Cainan, which was the son of Arphaxad, which was the son of Sem, which was the son of Noe, which was the son of Lamech,

37 Which was the son of Methusala, which was the son of Enoch, which was the son of Jared, which was the son of Maleleel, which was the son of Cainan, 38 Which was the son of Enos, which was the son of Seth, which was the son of Adam, which was the son of God.

We find the genealogy of our blessed Saviour recorded by two evangelists, St. Matthew and St. Luke. His pedigree is set forth by St. Matthew from his father Joseph, by St. Luke from his mother Mary: the design of both is to prove him lineally descended from Abraham and David, and consequently the true and promised Messiah. St. Matthew, intending his history primarily for the Jews, proves him to be the son of Abraham and David, for their comfort, St. Luke designing the information and comfort of the Gentiles, derives our Lord's pedigree from Adam the common parent of mankind: to assure the Gentiles of their possibility of an interest in Christ, they being sons of Adam. Neither of these evangelists are strict and accurate in enumerating every individual person; which should teach us not to be over curious in scanning the parts of this genealogy, much less captiously to object against it, because of some seeming contradictions in it. For if the evangelists were not nice and critical in composing this genealogy, why should we be so in examining of it? Let us rather attend the design of the Holy Ghost in writing of it, which was twofold. 1. For the honour of our Saviour as man, shewing who were his noble and royal progenitors, according to the flesh. 2. For the confirmation of our faith, touching the reality of our Saviour's incarnation. The scripture making mention of all his progenitors from the first man Adam to his reputed father Joseph, we cannot reasonably doubt either of the truth of his human nature, or of the certainty of his being the promised Messiah. Hence we may learn, That the wisdom of God has taken all necessary care, and used all needful means for satisfying the minds of all unprejudiced persons, touching the reality of Christ's human nature, and the certainty of his being the promised Messiah; for both these ends is our Saviour's genealogy, descent and pedigree, recorded in holy scripture.

CHAP. IV.

AND Jesus, being full of the Holy Ghost, returned from Jordan, and was led by the spirit into the wilderness.

At the twenty-second verse of the foregoing chapter, we find the Holy Ghost descending in a bodily shape, like a dove, upon our Saviour; in this verse we find the extraordinary effects and fruits of the Holy Ghost's descent upon our Saviour; he was filled with all the gifts and graces of the blessed Spirit, to fit and furnish him for that ministerial service which he was now entering upon. But observable it is, That before our Saviour undertook the ministerial office, He was led by the Spirit into the wilderness, and there furiously assaulted with Satan's temptations. Temptation, meditation, and prayer, says Luther, make a minister: great temptations from Satan, do fit us for greater services for God. And whereas it is said, that Christ was led by the Spirit into the wilderness, to be tempted of the devil: by the Spirit we must understand the Holy Spirit of God: for the devil, I think, is never called the Spirit, but has always a brand of reproach annexed, as the evil spirit, the unclean spirit and the like. By his being led by the Spirit (St. Mark says, he was drove by the Spirit) we may either understand a potent and efficacious persuasion, without any violent motion; or else, as the learned Dr. Lightfoot thinks, Christ was bodily caught up by the Holy Spirit into the air, and carried from Jordan, where he was baptized, into the wilderness where he was tempted. God had put great honour upon Christ at his baptism, declaring him to be his well-beloved Son, in whom he was well pleased; and the next news we hear, is the devil assaulting him with his temptations. Learn thence, that the more they are beloved of God, and dignified with more eminent testimonies of his favour, so much the more is the devil enraged, and maliciously set against them.

2 Being forty days tempted of the devil. And in those days he did eat nothing: and when they were ended, he afterward hungered.

Observe here, 1. How the divine power upheld Christ's human nature without food: what Moses did at the giving of the law, Christ doth at the beginning of the gospel, namely, fasted forty days and forty nights. Christ hereby intended our admiration rather than our imitation; or if our imitation of the action only, not of the time. From this example of Christ we learn, That it is our duty by fasting and prayer, to prepare ourselves for a conflict with our spiritual enemies. As Christ prepared himself by fasting, to grapple with the tempter, so should we.

3 And the devil said unto him, If thou be the Son of God, command this stone that it be made bread.

Observe here, 1. The occasion of the temptation. And 2. The temptation itself: the occasion of the temptation was our Saviour's hunger and want of bread. Learn thence, That when God suffers any of his children to fall into want, and to be straitened for outward things, Satan takes a mighty advantage thereupon to tempt and assault them. Observe, 3. What sin it is he tempts our Saviour to? it is the sin of distrust, to call in question his sonship, If thou be the Son of God; and then to distrust God's providence and care, Command that these stones be made bread: It is the grand policy of Satan, first to tempt the children of God to doubt of their adoption: next to distrust God's fatherly care and provision; and last of all, to use unwarrantable means to help themselves. Thus Satan dealt with Christ, and thus he deals with Christians; for to work a miracle at Satan's direction was not a lawful mean of providing food for himself.

4 And Jesus answered him, saying, It is written, That man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word of God.

Note first, That though the devil abused scripture, yet Christ uses it. Good things are never the worse for being abused by Satan and his instruments. Note, secondly, The weapon which our Saviour made use of to vanquish Satan, it was the word of God; It is written; says Christ. Learn thence, That the scripture, or the written word of God, is the sure weapon wherewith to vanquish Satan, and to beat back all his fiery temptations. The scripture is God's armoury; out of which all our weapons of war must be taken, for managing our conflict with sin and Satan.

5 And the devil, taking him up into an high mountain, shewed him all the kingdoms of the world in a moment of time.

6 And the devil said unto him, All this power will I give thee, and the glory of them; for that is delivered unto me; and to whomsoever I will, I give it.

7 If thou, therefore, wilt worship me, all shall be thine.

8 And Jesus answered and said unto him, Get thee behind me, Satan; for it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve.

Observe, 1. The next sin which Satan tempts our Saviour to, is the sin of idolatry, even to worship the devil himself. O thou impudent and foul spirit, to desire thy Creator to worship thee, an apostate creature! Doubtless there is no sin so black and foul, so horrid and monstrous, but the Christian may be tempted to it, when Christ himself was tempted to worship the tempter, even the devil himself. St. Matthew reads it, If thou wilt worship me; St. Luke, If thou wilt worship before me. From hence we may gather, that if to worship before the devil, be to worship the devil, then to worship before an image, is to worship the image: Dr. Lightfoot. Observe, 2. The bait which Satan makes use of to allure our Saviour to the sin of idolatry, representing to his eye and view all the glories of the world, in a most inviting manner, and that in a moment of time, that so he might affect him the more, and prevail the sooner. Learn thence, That the pomp and grandeur of the world is made use of by Satan, as a dangerous snare to draw men into a compliance with him, in his temptations unto sin; He shewed him all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them. Observe, 3. What an impudent liar and proud boaster the devil is: he was a liar from the beginning; All this will I give thee, for it is delivered unto me. An impudent untruth, for the dominion over the things of the world was never given to the angels, neither has the devil any power over the creatures, but by permission from God. The devil is a most impudent liar, he told the first lye, and by long practice has become a perfect master in the art of lying. Observe also, the devil's boasting as well as lying. All this will I give thee; and when he had not one foot of ground to dispose of. Great boasters are for the most part great liars, and such boasters and liars are like the devil. Observe, 4. How our Saviour declares the true and only object of religious worship: namely, God himself. Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve. Religious worship is to be given to none of the creatures, neither to angels nor men, how excellent soever, but to God alone. We read but of two creatures that ever desired in scripture to be worshipped with divine worship, namely, the devil and antichrist; but the command is peremptory, Thou shalt worship the Lord, and him only.

9 And he brought him to Jerusalem, and set him on a pinnacle of the temple, and said unto him, If thou be the Son of God, cast thyself down from hence:

10 For it is written, He shall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee:

11 And in their hands they shall bear thee up, lest at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone.

12 And Jesus, answering, said unto him, It is said, Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God.

13 And when the devil had ended all the temptation he departed from him for a season.

Observe here, 1. The power which Satan, by God's permission, had over the body of our blessed Saviour, he took him up, and carried his body through the air, from the wilderness to Jerusalem, and there set him upon one of the pinnacles of the temple. Learn hence, 1. That Satan, by God's permission, may have power over the bodies of men, yea, over the bodies of the best of men. 2. That this exercise of Satan's power over the bodies of men, is no argument that such persons do not belong to God. Our Saviour himself who was dear to God, is yet left for a time in Satan's hands. But though Satan had a power to set him upon a pinnacle of the temple, yet he had no power to cast him down; though Satan's malice be infinite, his power is limited and bounded, he cannot do all the mischief he would, and he shall not do all he can. Observe, 2. The sin which Satan tempts Christ to, the sin of self-murder. Cast thyself down. Learn, That self-murder is a sin which Christ himself was, and the best of children may be, solicited and tempted to; yet though Satan solicited Christ to the sin, he could not compel him to comply with the temptation. Thence note, That how much earnestness and importunity soever Satan uses in pressing his temptation, he can only persuade, he cannot compel; he may entice, but cannot enforce. Observe, 3. The argument which Satan uses to persuade Christ to the sin of self-murder: it is a scripture argument: he quotes a promise; He shall give his angels charge over thee: What a wonder is here, to see the devil with a bible under his arm, and with a text of scripture in his mouth! Christ had alledged scripture before to Satan; here Satan retorts scripture back again to Christ. It is written, says Christ, It is written, says Satan. Learn, That Satan knows how to abuse the most excellent and comfortable scriptures to the most horrid and pernicious ends and purposes; he that had profanely touched the sacred body of Christ with his hands, sticks not presumptuously to handle the holy scriptures with his tongue. Observe, 4. The text of scripture which Satan makes use of, Psal. xci. 11, 12, "He shall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee;" where the doctrine is good, but the application is bad. The doctrine is true, that God is pleased to employ his angels for the good of his servants, and particularly for their preservation in times of danger: and how falsely the devil perverts, misapplies, and wrests that sacred scripture. When God promises that his angels shall keep us, it is in all his ways, not in our own crooked paths. Learn, That although the children of God have the promise of the guardianship of his holy angels, yet then only may they expect their protection, when walking in the way of their duty. "He shall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways." Observe lastly, The issue of the combat, Satan is vanquished, and departs from our Saviour. St. Matthew says, "The devil left him, and angels came and ministered unto him:" Satan is conquered and quits the field. Teaching us, That nothing like a vigorous resistance of temptation, causes the tempter to flee from us. Satan is both a cowardly enemy, and a conquered enemy; resist him, and he will run.

14 ¶ And Jesus returned in the power of the Spirit into Galilee: and there went out a fame of him through all the region round about.

15 And he taught in their synagogues, being glorified of all.

16 ¶ And he came to Nazareth, where he had been brought up; and, as his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the sabbath-day, and stood up for to read.

17 And there was delivered unto him the book of the prophet Esaias; and when he had opened the book, he found the place where it was written,

18 The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath appointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised;

19 To preach the acceptable year of the Lord.

20 And he closed the book, and he gave it again to the minister, and sat down: And the eyes of all them that were in the synagogue were fastened on him.

21 And he began to say unto them, This day is this scripture fulfilled in your ears.

Our blessed Saviour being thus fitted and prepared by his baptism and temptations for the execution of his ministerial office, he now enters upon the great work of preaching the gospel, and St. Luke here declares the first place he preached at, namely, Nazareth; and the first text he preached upon, Isa. xli. I. Observe, 1. The place where our Saviour preached at; he bestowed his first sermon upon Nazareth, the place of his conception and education; for though Christ was born at Bethlehem, yet he was bred and brought up at Nazareth; there he had his poor but painful education, working on his father's trade, that of a carpenter. This prejudiced the Jews against him, who looked for a sceptre, not an axe in the hand of him that was born king of the Jews. Our Saviour's short and secret abode at Bethlehem, and his long and public living at Nazareth, occasioned him to be called Jesus of Nazareth; yet some conceive it was a nick name, fastened by the devil upon our Saviour, that he might disguise the place of Christ's nativity, and leave the Jews at a greater loss concerning their Messiah. Sure it is, that this name, Jesus of Nazareth, stuck upon our Saviour all his life; and at his death was fixed by Pilate on his cross. Yea, after his ascension, such as believed on him, were called, The sect of the Nazarenes, or the followers of Jesus of Nazareth. Observe, 2. The text which our Saviour preached upon at Nazareth: he takes it out of the prophet Esaias, chap. xli. 1. "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, and he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor;" that is, God the Father hath poured forth his Holy Spirit without measure upon me, in all the gifts and graces of it, to fit and furnish me for the work of a Mediator; and particularly, to preach the gospel to the poor in spirit, and to such as are poor in outward condition also, if meekened and humbled with the sight and sense of their sins. To bind up the broken hearted: that is, to comfort them with the glad tidings of the gospel. To preach deliverance to the captives; to let such sinners know who were slaves to sin and Satan, that a deliverer is come, if they be willing to be delivered by him. To preach the acceptable year of the Lord: or to proclaim a spiritual jubilee, in which God proffers pardon of sin and reconciliation with himself upon the terms of the gospel. Learn hence, 1. That God stirreth up none to take upon them the office of the ministry, whom he hath not fitted and furnished with gifts for the regular discharge of it. 2. That Christ himself did not undertake the office of a Mediator, but by the ordination of God the Holy Spirit; The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, and he hath sent me to preach the gospel. 3. That no creature, angel or man, could perform the office of a Mediator, but only Christ, who was consecrated to that office by an anointing from the Holy Spirit without measure; The Spirit of the Lord hath anointed me. 4. The preaching of the holy gospel is the great ordinance which Christ himself made use of, and recommended to his apostles and ministers, for enlightening blind sinners, for comforting broken hearts, and delivering captive souls from the slavery and dominion of sin and Satan: "He hath sent me to preach the gospel to the poor, to heal the broken hearted, to publish deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind." What enemies then are they to the souls of men who have low and mean thoughts of this high and honourable ordinance of God, the preaching of the everlasting gospel which is the power of God unto salvation? Observe, 3. The behaviour of our Saviour's auditors, the men of Nazareth, under his preaching; the eyes were fixed, and their minds intent upon him, and upon what was spoken by him: The eyes of all that were in the synagogue were fastened upon him; not closed with sleep, nor gazing about upon others; but fixed upon Christ the preacher. Fixing of the eye is a great help to the attention of the ear, and the intention of the mind;

a fastened eye is a mean to help us to a fixed heart; as a wandering eye is both a sign and a cause of a wandering heart. O that our hearers would imitate our Saviour's hearers under the word! They fastened their eyes upon him, as if they meant to hear him with their eyes as well as with their ears, and yet we have cause to suspect, that curiosity rather than piety caused this their attention; seeing, as you will find, ver. 29, that these very persons, who out of novelty were ready to eat his words; soon after out of cruelty were ready to devour the speaker; "For they thrust him out of the city, led him to the brow of the hill, and would have cast him down headlong." O blessed Saviour! What wonder is it, that the persons of thy ministers are despised, and their doctrine neglected, when thou thyself, the first of preachers of the gospel, and for thy first reason at Nazareth, wert thus ignominiously treated! Observe lastly, How Christ conforms to the ceremonies of the Jewish doctrine, who, in honour of the law and the prophets, stood up when they read them, and according to custom, sat down when they explained them. And although the synagogical worship was then loaded with rules and ceremonies of human invention, and also the lives and manners both of the priests and people were much corrupted; yet both our Saviour and his disciples went to the synagogue as members of the church of Nazareth, every sabbath-day, joining with them in the public worship. From whence we may seasonably infer, that such Christians as do quietly and peaceably comply with the practice of the church in whose communion they live, in the observation of such indifferent rites as are used by her, act most agreeably to our Saviour's practice and example.

22 And all bare him witness, and wondered at the gracious words which proceeded out of his mouth. And they said, Is not this Joseph's son?

23 And he saith unto them, Ye will surely say unto me this proverb, Physician, heal thyself: whatsoever we have heard done in Capernaum, do also here in thy country.

24 And he said, Verily I say unto you, No prophet is accepted in his own country.

Observe here, 1. The effect of our Saviour's ministry at Nazareth, it created wonder, but did not produce faith; they marvelled, but not believed; they admired the wisdom of his discourses, but will not own him to be the promised Messiah, because of the poverty and meanness of Christ's condition: Is not this Joseph's son? They expect the son of a prince, not the son of a carpenter, to be their Messiah. Thence note, That the poverty and meanness of Christ's condition was that which multitudes stumbled at, and which kept many, yea most, from believing on him. None but a spiritual eye can discern beauty in an humbled and abased Saviour. Observe, 2. Our Saviour wonders not that so few of his countrymen, among whom he had been bred and brought up, and with whom he had lived most part of his time, did despise his person, and reject his doctrine; he tells them, No prophet has honour in his own country; that is, very seldom has; teaching us, that usually the ministers of God are most despised where they are most familiarly known; sometimes the remembrance of their mean original and extraction, sometimes the poverty of their parents, sometimes the indecencies of their childhood, sometimes the follies of their youth, sometimes the faults of their families and relations are ript up, and made occasions of contempt; and therefore the prophet that comes from afar, and has not been much known, gains the greatest reputation amongst a people who being ignorant of his extraction, look upon his breeding as well as his calling to be divine. This good use ought to be made of our Saviour's observation, that his ministers be very wise and discreet in conversation with their people, not making themselves cheap and common in every company, nor light and vain in any company; for such familiarity will breed contempt, both of their persons and their doctrine. But our duty is by strictness and gravity of deportment to keep up an awe and esteem in the consciences of our people; always tempering our gravity with courtesy and a condescending affability. That minister which prostitutes his authority, frustrates the end of his ministry, and is the occasion of his own contempt.

25 But I tell you of a truth, Many widows were in Israel in the days of Elias, when the heaven was shut up three years and six months, when great famine was throughout all the land:

26 But unto none of them was Elias sent, save unto Sarepta, a city of Sidon, unto a woman that was a widow.

27 And many lepers were in Israel in the time of Eliseus the prophet: and none of them was cleansed, saving Naaman the Syrian.

Here our Saviour by a double instance confirms what he had last told his countrymen at Nazareth, namely, that prophets are most despised by their own countrymen and acquaintance, and that strangers oft-times have more advantage by a prophet than his own people. The first instance of this which our Saviour gives them, is in the days of Elias, though there were many widows then in his own nation, yet none of them were qualified to receive his miracles, but a stranger, a widow of Sarepta. The second instance was in the days of Elisha; when though there were many lepers in and about the neighbourhood, yet they being his countrymen, despised him, and none were qualified for a cure but Naaman the Syrian, a man of another country. Thus the prophets of God, like some fishermen, catch least in their own pond, and do more good by their ministry among strangers, than among their own countrymen, kinsfolk, and near relations: "No prophet is accepted in his own country."

28 And all they in the synagogue, when they heard these things, were filled with wrath, 29 And rose up and thrust him out of the city, and led him unto the brow of the hill (whereon their city was built) that they might cast him down headlong.

30 But he, passing through the midst of them, went his way.

Observe here, 1. The horrid impiety of the people of Nazareth, in thrusting our Saviour out of the city, and their barbarous and bloody cruelty in bringing him to the brow of the hill, with full intent to cast him down headlong. But Christ was to die a clean contrary way, not by throwing down, but by lifting up. O ungrateful and unhappy Nazareth! Is this the return you make that divine guest, which for thirty years had sojourned in your coasts! No wonder that the ablest preaching, and most exemplary living of the holiest and best of Christ's ministers, obtain no greater success at this day amongst a people, when the presence of Christ at Nazareth, for thirty years together, had no better influence upon the minds and manners of that people; but instead of receiving his message, they rage at the messenger; neither let any of the ministers of Christ think it strange, that they are ignominiously despised, when our Master before us was in danger of being barbarously murdered, and that for his plain preaching to his own people, the men of Nazareth. But observe, 2. The miraculous escape of our blessed Lord from the murdering hands of the wicked Nazarites; He passing through the midst of them, went his way. How and after what manner he escaped is not declared, and therefore cannot without presumption be determined. Although the Romanists, to make way for their doctrine of transubstantiation, positively affirm, that contrary to the nature of a body, he penetrated through the breasts of the people. But whether he struck them with blindness that they did not see, or smote them with fear that they durst not hold him, or whether by a greater strength than theirs (which his godhead could easily supply his human nature with) he escaped from them, it is neither prudent to enquire, nor possible to determine; we know it was an easy thing for him, who was God as well as man, to quit himself of any mortal enemies; and at the same time, when he rescued himself, could have ruined them, by frowning them into hell, or looking them into nothing.

31 And came down to Capernaum, a city of Galilee, and taught them on the sabbath-days.

32 And they were astonished at his doctrine: for his word was with power.

33 ¶ And in the synagogue there was a man which had a spirit of an unclean devil, and he cried out with a loud voice;

34 Saying, Let us alone; what have we to do with thee, thou Jesus of Nazareth? art thou come to destroy us? I know thee who thou art; the Holy One God.

35 And Jesus rebuked him, saying, Hold thy peace, and come out of him. And when the devil had thrown him in the midst, he came out of him, and hurt him not.

36 And they were all amazed, and spake among themselves, saying, What a word is this? for with authority and power he commandeth the unclean spirits, and they come out.

37 And the fame of him went out into every place of the country round about.

Our blessed Saviour, being driven out of Nazareth by the fury of his countrymen, departs to Capernaum, where he entered into their synagogues and taught. The people were astonished at his doctrine: the reason of which astonishment is added, For his word was with power; that is, there was majesty in his person, spirituality in his preaching, and powerful miracles accompanying both, and confirming both, of which the evangelist here gives us an account, namely, The casting out of a devil in one possessed, ver. 33. There was a man which had a spirit of an unclean devil, and he cried out; that is, the devil, that unclean spirit, did enter into him, and bodily possess him. Amongst many other calamities which sin has brought upon our bodies, this is one, to be bodily possessed by Satan. The devil has an inveterate malice against mankind, seeking to ruin our souls by his suggestions and temptations, and to destroy our bodies by some means or other. O! how much is it our interest, as well as our duty, by prayer, to put ourselves, morning and evening, under the divine care and protection, that we may be preserved from the power and malice of evil spirits! Observe, 2. The substance of the devil's outcry, Let us alone, What have we to do with thee? Art thou come to destroy us? that is, to restrain us from the exercise of our power; the devil thinks himself destroyed when he is restrained from doing mischief. Observe, 3. The title given by the devil to our Saviour, he styles him, The Holy one of God. How comes this acknowledgment out of the devil's mouth? Could an apostle make a profession beyond this? But how comes Satan to make it? For no good end and with no good intention, we may be sure; for the devil never speaks truth for truth's sake, but for advantage sake: probably, 1. He might make this profession, that so he might bring the truth profest into question; hoping that the truth, which received testimony from the father of lies, would be suspected: or, 2. It might perhaps be done to make the people believe, that our Saviour had some familiarity with Satan, and did work miracles by his help, because he did confess him, and seem to put honour upon him. "See the latter end of the note to Mark," chap. i. 24.

38 ¶ And he arose out of the synagogue, and entered into Simon's house: and Simon's wife's mother was taken with a great fever; and they besought him for her.

39 And he stood over her, and rebuked the fever; and it left her. And immediately she arose, and ministered unto them.

Here observe, 1. That St. Peter, a disciple, yea, an apostle, was a married man. Neither the prophets of the Old Testament, nor the apostles of the New did abstain from the marriage bed, nor did judge themselves too pure for an institution of their Maker. The church of Rome, by denying the lawfulness of priests' marriage, makes herself wiser than God, who says, Heb. xiii. 4. Marriage is honourable amongst all men. Observe, 2. Peter, though a good man, and his wife's mother probably a gracious woman, yet is his family visited with sickness: strength of grace, and dearness of respect, even from Christ himself, cannot prevail against diseases: God's own children are visited with bodily sickness as well as others. Observe, 3. Here was an ordinary distemper cured in an extraordinary manner, by a touch of Christ's hand, in an instant: Immediately the fever left her, and she arose, and ministered unto them: That she could arise, argued her cure miraculous; that she administered unto Christ and his disciples, argued her thankfulness. After Christ hath healed any of us, it ought to be our first care to administer unto him; that is, to employ our recovered strength in the service of Christ, and to improve our restored health to the honour and glory of Christ.

40 Now, when the sun was setting, all they that had any sick with diverse diseases, brought them unto him; and he laid his hands on every one of them, and healed them.

41 And devils also came out of many, crying out, and saying, Thou art Christ, the Son of God. And he, rebuking them, suffered them not to speak; for they knew that he was Christ.

The evangelist here declares several other cures wrought by our Saviour; he healed the sick and dispossessed the devils. In our Saviour's time we read of many possessed with devils, but of few either before or afterwards. Probably, 1. Because Satan, perceiving the Messiah to become in the flesh to destroy his kingdom, did rage the more, and discover the greater malice and enmity against mankind. 2. Perhaps Almighty God suffered Satan at that time to possess so many, that Christ might have occasion to manifest his divine power, by casting Satan out. It is added, "That he suffered not the devils to speak, because they knew him;" that is, Christ would not be made known to be the Son of God by the preaching of the devil, lest the world should from thence take occasion to think that our Saviour held a correspondence with those wicked spirits, and that the miracles which he wrought were performed by the devil's assistance, as being one in combination with him. Possibly from the devil's owning Christ to be the Holy One of God, the pharisees concluded that there was a compact and agreement betwixt them; and thereupon their affirmation was groundless, "He casteth out devils by Beelzebub the prince of devils."

42 And when it was day, he departed, and went into a desert place; and the people sought him, and came unto him, and stayed him, that he should not depart from them.

43 And he said unto them, I must preach the kingdom of God to other cities also; for therefore am I sent.

44 And he preached in the synagogues of Galilee.

Observe here, 1. The great work and business of our Saviour's life, to preach the gospel. "I must preach the kingdom of God, for therefore came I forth." Preaching was Christ's great work, it is undoubtedly his ministers. Christ omitted some opportunities of working miracles, that he might preach to other cities: this was his great work. Observe, 2. It being Christ's great design to plant and propagate the gospel, he would not confine his ministry to one particular place, no not to the great city of Capernaum, but resolve to preach the word in smaller towns and villages: leaving his ministers herein an instructive example, to be as willing to preach the gospel in the smallest villages, as in the largest and most populous cities, if God calls us thereunto. Let the place be ever so obscure and mean, and the congregation ever so small and little, if God sends us thither, the greatest of us must not think it beneath us to go and instruct a handful of people.

CHAP. V.

AND it came to pass, that as the people pressed upon him to hear the word of God, he stood by the lake of Gennesar,

2 And saw two ships standing by the lake: but the fishermen were gone out of them, and were washing their nets.

3 And he entered into one of the ships, which was Simon's, and prayed him that he would thrust out a little from the land: And he sat down, and taught the people out of the ship.

Here observe, 1. That our Saviour used the sea as well as the land in his passage from place to place to preach the Gospel; and the reason why he did so might probably be these: 1. To shew nature's intent in the making of the sea, namely, to be sailed upon, as the land to be walked upon. 2. That Christ might take occasion to manifest his deity, in working miracles upon the sea; namely, by calming of the waves and stilling of the winds. 3. It might be to comfort sea-faring men in their distresses, and encourage them to pray to such a Saviour as had an experimental knowledge of the dangers of the sea; it were well if sailors would consider this, and instead of inuring themselves to the language of hell, when they go down into the deep, would direct their prayer unto Christ, and look up to him: who now in heaven has the remembrance of what he himself endured and underwent here on earth, and on the sea. Observe, 2. The circumstance of time, when Christ used to put forth to sea: it was usually after he had wrought some extraordinary miracle, which set them on admiring and commending of him: as after he had fed so many thousands with a few barley loaves and fishes, presently he put forth to sea: shunning thereby all popularity and vain glorious applause from the multitude, which he was never ambitious of, but industriously avoided. Observe, 3. That after our Saviour's resurrection we never find him sailing any more upon the sea. For such a fluctuating and turbulent condition which necessarily attends sea voyages, was utterly inconsistent with the constancy, stability, and perpetuity of Christ's estate when risen from the grave. The firm land better agreeing with his fixed state, he keeps upon it till his ascension into heaven. Observe, 4. That Christ scruples not to preach to the people, in and out of the ship; He set down and taught the people out of the ship. Sometimes we find our holy Lord preaching upon a mountain, sometimes in a ship, sometimes in a house, as often as may be in a synagogue: he that laid hold of all seasons for preaching the gospel, never scrupled any place which convenience offered to preach in: well knowing, that it is the ordinance that sanctifies the place, and not the place the ordinance.

4 ¶ Now, when he had left speaking, he said unto Simon, Launch out into the deep, and let down your nets for a draught.

5 And Simon, answering, said unto him, Master, we have toiled all the night and have taken nothing: nevertheless, at thy word, I will let down the net.

6 And when they had this done, they inclosed a great multitude of fishes; and their net brake.

7 And they beckoned unto their partners, which were in the other ship, that they should come and help them. And they came and filled both the ships, so that they began to sink.

8 When Simon Peter saw it, he fell down at Jesus' knees, saying, Depart from me, for I am a sinful man, O Lord.

9 For he was astonished, and all that were with him, at the draught of the fishes which they had taken;

19 And so was also James and John, the sons of Zebedee, which were partners with Simon. And Jesus said unto Simon, Fear not; from henceforth thou shalt catch men.

11 And when they had brought their ships to land, they forsook all and followed him.

Observe here, 1. Our Saviour having delivered his doctrine to the people, confirms his doctrine with a miracle, and with such a miracle as did at once instruct and encourage his apostles; the miraculous number of fish which they caught did presage and prefigure their miraculous success in preaching, planting, and propagating the gospel. Observe, 2. Our Saviour's command to Peter, and his ready compliance with Christ's command; Let down your nets for a draught, says Christ; "We have toiled all night," says St. Peter, and caught nothing: nevertheless, at thy word, I will let down the net." This mystically represents to us, 1. That the fishers of men may labour all night and all day too, and catch nothing. This is sometime the fishermen's fault, but oftener the fishes. It is the fisher's fault that nothing is taken, if he doth only play upon the sands, and not launch out into the deep; deliver some superficial and less necessary truths, without opening to the people the great mysteries of godliness. If they fish with broken nets, either deliver unsound doctrine, or lead unexemplary lives. "If they do not cast the net on the right side of the ship;" that is, rightly divide the word, as workmen that need not be ashamed. And if they do not fish at Christ's command, but run a fishing unsent, it is then no wonder that they labour all their days and catch nothing. But very often it is the fishes fault, rather than the fisherman's; worldly men are crafty and cunning, they will not come near the net; hypocrites are slippery like eels, the fisherman cannot long hold them, but they dart into their holes; priding themselves in their external performances, and satisfying themselves with the round of duties. The great men of the world break through the net; the divine commands cannot bind them. Jer. v. 5. "I will go to the great men, and speak to them, but they have broken the yoke and burst the bonds." Observe, 3. The miraculous success which St. Peter had, when at Christ's command he let down the net: They enclosed such a multitude of fishes, that the net brake. Two things our Saviour aimed at in this miracle, 1. To manifest to his disciples the power of his godhead, that they might not be offended at the poverty and meanness of his manhood. 2. To assure them of the great success which his apostles and their successors might expect in planting and propagating of the gospel. If the ministers of Christ, whom he calls fishers of men, be faithful in the cast, his power shall be magnified in the draught. Some of our flesh will cleave eternally to the rocks, others play upon the sands, more will wallow in the mud, and continue all their days in the filth of sin, if our Master, at whose command we let down the net, doth not inclose them in it, as well as assist us in the casting of it. Observe, 4. What influence the sight of this miracle had upon St. Peter; it occasioned fear and amazement, and caused him to adore Christ, and declare himself unworthy of his presence. Depart from me, for I am a sinful man, O Lord! Not that the good man was weary of Christ's presence, but acknowledged himself unworthy of it. It is a great discovery of our holiness, to revere God, and fear before him, when he doth wonderful things before us, though they be wonders of love and mercy: here was a wonderful appearance of Christ's power and mercy to St. Peter, but it affects him with a reverential fear and awful astonishment. Observe, 5. How St. Peter and the rest of the apostles, at Christ's call, forsook all and followed him; they left their father and friends, ship and nets, and followed Jesus: whom Christ calls he calls effectually; he draws whom he calls, and works their hearts to a ready compliance with their duty. And although when they were first called to be disciples, they followed their trades of fishing for a time, yet upon a second call to the apostleship, they left off their trade and forsook all to follow the ministry: teaching the ministers of the gospel, that it is their duty to give themselves wholly up to their great work, and not to incur themselves with secular affairs and worldly business. Nothing but an indispensable necessity in providing for a family can excuse a minister's incumbering himself with worldly concerns and business; "They forsook all and followed Jesus."

12 ¶ And it came to pass, when he was in a certain city, behold, a man full of leprosy: who seeking Jesus, fell on his face, and besought him, saying, Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean.

13 And he put forth his hand, and touched him, saying, I will; be thou clean. And immediately the leprosy departed from him.

14 And he charged him to tell no man: but go, and shew thyself to the priest, and offer for thy cleansing, according as Moses commanded, for a testimony unto them.

15 But so much the more went there a fame abroad of him: and great multitudes came together to hear, and to be healed by him of their infirmities.

Observe here, 1. The petitioner, that in a very humble and submissive manner sues unto Christ for cure and healing; "A leper fell on his face, and besought him, saying; Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean. He doth not question Christ's power, but distrusts his willingness to help and heal him. Christ's divine power must be fully assented to, and firmly believed by all those who expect benefit by him, and healing from him. Observe, 2. The great readiness of Christ to help and heal the distressed person; Jesus touched him, saying, I will; be thou clean. By the ceremonial law, the leper was forbidden to be touched; therefore Christ touching this leper, shews himself to be above the law; that he was Lord of it, and might dispense with it: and his healing this leper, by the word of his mouth and touch of his hand, shewed him to be truly and really sent of God; for leprosy among the Jews was accounted an incurable distemper, called the finger of God; a disease of his sending, and of his removing. Our Saviour, therefore, as a proof of his being the Messiah, tells John's disciples, Matt. xi. 5, "The lepers were cleansed, and the dead raised by him;" which two being joined together, do imply, that the cleansing of the lepers is as much an act of divine power, as raising of the dead; and accordingly, 2 Kings v. 7. it is said, "Am I God, that this man sends unto me to cure a person of his leprosy?" Observe, 3. The certainty and the suddenness of the cure was a farther proof of Christ's divine power. Immediately the leprosy departed. Christ not only cured him immediately but instantaneously; not only without means, but without the ordinary time required for such a cure. Thus Christ shewed both power and will to cure him miraculously, who believed his power, but questioned his willingness. Observe, 4. A two-fold charge and command given by Christ to the leper, 1. To tell it to no man: here the great modesty, piety, and humility of our Saviour, is discovered, together with the prudent care he took of his own safety; his modesty in concealing his own praises; his humility in shunning all vain-glorious applause and commendation; his piety in referring all the honour and glory to God his Father; his care of his own safety appeared, lest the publishing of his miracles should create untimely danger from the pharisees. 2. The next part of the charge given to the recovered leper is, to go and shew himself to the priest, and to offer the gift that Moses commanded for a testimony unto them; that is, to testify to the Jews, that he did not oppose the ceremonial law, which required a thank-offering at his hand: and also that the miracle might testify that he was the true and promised Messiah. Learn hence, That our blessed Saviour would have the ceremonial law punctually observed, so long as the time of its continuance did endure; though he came to destroy that law, yet whilst it stood, he would have it exactly observed. See note on St. Matt. viii. 2.

16 ¶ And he withdrew himself into the wilderness and prayed.

The duty of private and solitary prayer is not more strictly enjoined by our Saviour's command, than it is recommended to us by his example. Observe, 1. The duty which our Lord performed, prayer: we have much more business with God in prayer than Christ had: he had no sins to be humbled for, nor beg pardon of; no need to pray for any sanctifying habits of grace, the Holy Spirit being given to him without measure; yet did our holy Lord spend much of his time in prayer! he took delight in paying homage to his heavenly Father. Observe, 2. What kind of prayer our Lord did eminently delight in, it was solitary and private prayer. He often went alone, even out of the hearing of his own disciples. The company of our best friends is not always seasonable and acceptable. There are times and seasons when a Christian would not be willing that his dearest relations upon earth should hear that intercourse which passes between him and his God. Observe, 3. The place our Lord withdraws to for private prayer, it is the desert; he withdrew into the wilderness and prayed, both to avoid ostentation, and also to enjoy communion with his Father. The modest Bridegroom of his church, says St. Bernard, will not impart himself so freely to his spouse before company. St. Mark i 35, adds, "That our Saviour rose up a great while before day, and went into the desert place to pray." Teaching us, That the morning is the fit season, yea, the best of seasons, for private duties; now are our spirits freshest, and our minds freest, before the distractions of the day break in upon us: it is certainly much better to go from prayer to business, than from business to prayer. Note, lastly, That our blessed Saviour had no idle hours here in the world; his time did not lie upon his hands as ours does; he was always preaching or praying, or working miracles; either paying homage to God, or doing good to man. Lord, help us to imitate this thy instructive example, by embracing all opportunities of glorifying God, and doing good to one another.

17 ¶ And it came to pass on a certain day, as he was teaching, that there were pharisees and doctors of the law sitting by, which were come out of every town of Galilee, and Judea, and Jerusalem; and the power of the Lord was present to heal them.

18 And, behold, men brought in a bed a man which was taken with a palsy: and they sought means to bring him in, and to lay him before him.

19 And when they could not find by what way they might bring him in because of the multitude, they went upon the house-top, and let him down through the tiling, with his couch, into the midst before Jesus.

20 And, when he saw their faith, he said unto him, Man, thy sins are forgiven thee.

21 And the scribes and pharisees began to reason, saying, Who is this that speaketh blasphemies? Who can forgive sins but God alone?

22 But when Jesus perceived their thoughts, he, answering, said unto them, What reason ye in your hearts?

23 Whether is easier to say, Thy sins be forgiven thee; or to say, Rise up and walk?

24 But that ye may know that the Son of man hath power upon earth to forgive sins (he said unto the sick of the palsy) I say unto thee, Arise, and take up thy couch, and go unto thine house.

25 And immediately he rose up before them, and took up that whereon he lay, and departed to his own house, glorifying God.

26 And they were all amazed, and they glorified God, and were filled with fear, saying, We have seen strange things to-day.

As the great end of our Saviour's miracles was to confirm his doctrine, so commonly after his preaching he wrought his miracles: the Scribes and Pharisees, though they had no love for our Saviour's person, nor value for his ministry, yet they frequently accompanied him wherever he went, partly to cavil at his doctrine, and partly out of curiosity to see his miracles; but observe the gracious condescension of our Saviour, although he well knew that the pharisees at this time attended upon him with no good intention, yet he puts forth his divine power in working miracles before them; The power of the Lord was present to heal; not that Christ's power was at any time absent, but it is said now to be present because it was now exerted and put forth at his will and pleasure. And accordingly at this time, before the pharisees' eyes, he miraculously cures a person sick of the palsy, as the paragraph before us does inform us. Wherein observe, 1. The diseased and distressed person, one sick of the palsy, which being a resolution and weakness of the nerves, enfeebles the joints, and confines a person to his bed or couch. As a demonstration of Christ's divine power, he was pleased to single out the palsy and leprosy, incurable diseases, to work a cure upon. Now this person was so great a cripple by reason of the palsy, that he could not go, nor be led, but was carried in his bed or couch. Observe, 2. As the grievousness of the disease, so the greatness of the people's faith. The man and his friends had a firm and full persuasion, that Christ was clothed with a divine power, and able to help him; and they hope in his goodness that he was willing as well as able. Accordingly, the roof of the Jewish houses being flat, they uncover some part of it, and let the bed down and the sick man in it, and lay him at the foot of Christ, in hopes of help and healing. Observe, 3.

no sooner did they exercise their faith in believing, but Christ exerts his divine power in healing; yet the object of their faith probably was not Christ's divine power as God, but they looked upon him as an extraordinary prophet, to whom God had communicated such a divine power as Elijah and Elisha had before him. Yet see the marvellous efficacy even of this faith, which obtained not only what was desired, but more than was expected. They desired only the healing of the body, but Christ heals the body and soul too, saying, Son, be of good cheer, thy sins are forgiven thee. Thereby our Saviour signifies to them, that sin is the meritorious cause of sickness, and consequently, that in sickness the best way to find ease and deliverance from pain, is first to seek for pardon; for the sense of pardon will in some degree take away the sense of pain. Observe, 4. The exception which the pharisees take against our Saviour for pronouncing that this man's sins were forgiven him; they charge him with blasphemy, urging that it is God's peculiar prerogative to pardon sin; indeed their proposition was true, but their application was false. Nothing more true, than that it is the highest blasphemy for any mere man to arrogate and assume to himself the incommunicable property of God, absolutely and authoritatively to forgive sin. But then their denying this power to Christ of forgiving sins, which he had as God from all eternity, and, as Mediator, God and man in one person, when here on earth: this was blasphemy in them; but the assuming and challenging of it, none in him. Observe, 5. To cure, if possible, the obstinacy and blindness of the pharisees, our Saviour gives them a twofold demonstration of his Godhead: 1. By letting them understand, that he knew their thoughts, Jesus perceived their thoughts, ver. 22. To know the thoughts, to search the hearts, and understand the reasonings of men, is not in the power of angels or men, but the prerogative of God only. 2. By assuming to himself a power to forgive sins; for our Saviour here, by taking upon him to forgive sins in his own name, and by his own authority, doth give the world an undeniable proof and a convincing evidence of his Godhead: For who can forgive sins, but God only? Observe, 6. The effect which this miracle had upon the minds of the people, they marvelled and were amazed, were filled with fear but not with faith: astonished, but did not believe. Learn hence, That the sight of Christ's own miracles is not sufficient to work faith in the soul, without the efficacious grace of God; the one makes us marvel, the other must make us believe.

27 ¶ And after these things he went forth, and saw a publican, named Levi, sitting at the receipt of custom; and he said unto him, Follow me.

28 And he left all, rose up, and followed him.

29 And Levi made him a great feast in his own house: and there was a great company of publicans, and of others that sat down with them.

30 But their scribes and pharisees murmured against his disciples, saying, Why do ye eat and drink with publicans and sinners?

31 And Jesus answering, said unto them, They that are whole need not a physician: but they that are sick.

32 I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance.

The number of our Lord's apostles not being filled up: Observe, 1. What a free and gracious, what an unexpected and undeserved choice Christ maketh. Levi, that is, Matthew (for he had both names) a grinding publican, who gathered the tax for the Roman emperor, and was probably guilty as others were, of the sins of covetousness and extortion, yet he is called to follow Christ, as a special disciple. Learn hence, That such is the freeness of divine grace, that it sometimes calls and converts sinners unto Christ, when they think not of him, nor seek unto him. Little did Levi now think of a Saviour, much less seek after him, yet is he here called by him, and that with an efficacious call; Matthew, a publican; Zaccheus, an extortioner; Saul, a persecutor; all these are effectually called by Christ, as instances and evidences of the mighty power of converting grace. Observe, 2. Levi, or Matthew's ready compliance with Christ's call: He presently arose and followed him; when the inward call of the Holy Spirit accompanieth the outward call of the word, the soul readily complies and yields obedience to the voice of Christ. Our Saviour, (says the pious bishop Hall,) speaks by his word to our ears, and we hear not, we stir not; but when he speaks by his Spirit efficaciously to our hearts, Satan cannot hold us down, the world shall not keep us back, but we shall with Levi instantly arise and follow our Saviour. Observe, 3. Levi, to shew his thankfulness to Christ, makes him a great feast. Christ invited Levi to a discipleship, Levi invites Christ to a dinner; the servant invites his Master, a sinner invites his Saviour; a better guest he could not invite, Christ always comes with his cost with him. We do not find that when Christ was invited to any table, that he ever refused to go; if a publican, if a pharisee invited him, he constantly went; not so much for the pleasure of eating, as for the opportunity of conversing and doing good: Christ feasts us when we feed him. Levi, to give Christ a pledge and specimen of his love, makes him a feast. Learn thence, That new converts are full of affection towards Christ, and very expressive of their love unto him. Levi's heart being touched with a sense of Christ's rich love, makes him a royal feast. Observe, 4. The cavil and exception which the scribes and pharisees made at our Lord's free conversation. They censure him for conversing with sinners; malice will never want matter of accusation. Our Saviour justifies himself, telling them he conversed with sinners as their physician, not as their companion: They that are whole need not a physician, but they that are sick; as if our Lord had said, With whom should a physician converse, but with sick patients? And is he to he accused for that? Now this is my case. I am come into the world to do the office of a kind physician unto men; surely then I am to take all opportunities of conversing with them, that I may help and heal them, for they that are sick need the physician; but as for you Scribes and Pharisees, who are well and whole in your opinion and conceit, I have no hopes of doing good upon you; for such as think themselves whole, desire not the physician's help. Now from this assertion of our Saviour, The whole need not a physician, but the sick; these truths are suggested to us, 1. That sin is the soul's malady, its spiritual disease and sickness. 2. That Christ is the physician appointed by God, for the cure and healing of this disease. 3. That there are multitudes of sinners spiritually sick, who yet think themselves sound and whole. 4. That such, and only such, as find themselves sin-sick, and spiritually diseased, are subjects capable of Christ's healing. They that are whole need not the physician, but they that are sick. I come not, says Christ, to call the (opinionatively righteous but the sensible) sinner to repentance.

33 ¶ And they said unto him, Why do the disciples of John fast often, and make prayers, and likewise the disciples of the pharisees; but thine eat and drink?

34 And he said unto them, Can ye make the children of the bride-chamber fast while the bridegroom is with them?

35 But the days will come, when the bridegroom shall be taken away from them, and then shall they fast in those days.

36 ¶ And he spake also a parable unto them, No man putteth a piece of a new garment upon an old: if otherwise, then both the new maketh a rent, and the piece that was taken out of the new, agreeth not with the old.

37 And no man putteth new wine into old bottles; else the new wine will burst the bottles, and be spilled, and the bottles shall perish.

38 But new wine must be put into new bottles: and both are preserved.

39 No man also having drunk old wine straight-way desireth new: for he saith the old is better.

An objection is here made against the disciples of our Saviour, that they did not fast so much and so often as John Baptist's disciples did. John's disciples imitated their master, who was a man of an austere life; Christ's disciples imitated him, who was of a more free conversation. Observe, therefore, our Saviour's defence, which he makes for the not fasting of his disciples: he declares, that at present it was neither suitable nor tolerable; not suitable, in regard of Christ's bodily presence with them, who being their bridegroom, and his disciples children of the bride-chamber; it was now a day of joy and rejoicing to them, and mourning and fasting would be very improper for them. But when the bridegroom shall be taken away, that is, Christ's bodily presence removed, then there will be cause enough for the disciples to fast and mourn. Learn hence, 1. That Jesus Christ is the bridegroom of his spouse the church. 2. That this bridegroom was to be taken away. 3. That because of the bridegroom's removal, the church did, shall and must fast: "The days will come when the bridegroom shall be taken away, and then shall they fast." Again our Saviour declares that this discipline of fasting was not at present tolerable for his disciples, for they were at present, but raw, green, and tender, unable to bear the severities and rigours of religion, any more than an old garment can bear a piece of new cloth to be set into it, or any more than old bottles can bear new wine to be put into them. The sense of our Saviour's words seems to be this, "My disciples at present are tender and weak, newly called and converted; they cannot, therefore, at present undergo the austerities of religion, fastings, weepings and watchings; but ere long I shall leave them, and go to heaven, from whence I will send down my Holy Spirit upon them, which shall enable them to do all the duties that the gospel enjoins." The lesson of instruction which we may probably gather from hence, is this, That it is hurtful and dangerous for young converts, for weak christians, to be put upon the severer exercises of religion; or to be urged to the performance of all such duties as are above their strength, but they ought to be treated with that tenderness which becomes the mild and gentle dispensation of the gospel. Our Saviour, says one, doth here commend prudence to his ministers, in treating their people according to their strength, and putting them upon duties according to their time and standing: we must consult what progress our people have made in christianity, and manage accordingly.

CHAP. VI.

AND it came to pass on the second sabbath after the first, that he went through the corn-fields; and his disciples plucked the ears of corn, and did eat, rubbing them in their hands.

2 And certain of the pharisees said unto them, Why do ye that which is not lawful on the sabbath-days?

3 And Jesus answering them, said, Have ye not read so much as this, what David did, when himself was an hungred and they which were with him;

4 How he went into the house of God, and did take and eat the shewbread, and gave also to them that were with him, which is not lawful to eat but for the priests alone?

5 And he said unto them, That the Son of man is Lord also of the sabbath.

In the former part of this chapter we find our blessed Saviour defending his disciples from the clamorous accusations of the pharisees for breaking the sabbath-day, because they plucked the ears of corn, and rubbed them in their hands in order to the satisfying of their hunger. Where note, 1. The great poverty, the low estate and condition of Christ's own disciples in the world. They wanted bread, and were forced to pluck the ears of corn to satisfy their hunger: God may, and sometimes does, suffer his dearest children to fall into straits, and to taste of want, for the trial of their faith and dependence upon his power and goodness. Note, 2. How the hypocritical pharisees blame this action of the disciples, namely, their plucking of the ears of corn, yet they did not charge them with theft for so doing; because to take in our great necessity so much of our neighbour's goods as we may reasonably suppose, that if he were present and knew our circumstances he would not deny us, is not theft. But it was the servile labours on the sabbath, in gathering the ears of corn, which the pharisees scruple and object against. Where note, how hypocrites expend their zeal in and upon lesser things of the law, whilst they neglect the greater; placing all holiness in the observation of outward ceremonies, whilst they neglect moral duties. Note, 3. The argument with which our Saviour defends this action of his disciples, it is taken from the example of David; necessity freed him from fault and blame in eating the consecrated bread, which none but the priests might lawfully eat; for in cases of necessity, a ceremonial precept must give place to a moral duty. Works of mercy, for the preserving our lives, and the better fitting us for sabbath services, are certainly lawful on the sabbath day. Note lastly, The argument which our Saviour uses to prove the sabbath's observation may be dispensed with in a case of absolute necessity, and that is drawn from that authority which Christ the Instructor and Lord of the sabbath, had over it: The Son of man is Lord also of the sabbath; that is, he hath authority and power as God, and as Mediator, to institute and appoint a sabbath, to alter and change it, to dispense with a breach of it upon a just and great occasion; and consequently, acts of mercy, which tend to fit us for works of piety, not only may, but ought to be done upon the sabbath day. This action of the disciples being of that nature, is without just cause censured and condemned by the pharisees; a sort of men who were resolved to cavil at, and quarrel with, whatever our Saviour or his disciples either did or said.

6 ¶ And it came to pass, also, on another sabbath, that he entered into the synagogue and taught. And there was a man whose right hand was withered.

7 And the scribes and pharisees watched him, whether he would heal on the sabbath-day; that they might find an accusation against him.

8 But he knew their thoughts, and said to the man which had the withered hand, Rise up, and stand forth in the midst: and he arose, and stood forth.

9 Then said Jesus unto them, I will ask you one thing; Is it lawful on the sabbath-days to do good, or to do evil? to save life, or to destroy it?

10 And looking round about upon them all, he said unto the man, Stretch forth thy hand: And he did so; and his hand was restored whole as the other.

11 And they were filled with madness; and communed one with another what they might do to Jesus.

Observe here, 1. The miraculous cure which our Saviour wrought upon the man which had the withered hand; and, 2. The effect which this miracle had upon the wicked pharisees. In the former, note, The place where our Saviour wrought this miracle, in the synagogue; the time when, on the sabbath-day; the manner how, by speaking of a word; the persons before whom, namely, the envious and malicious pharisees. These men were always slandering Christ's doctrine, and cavilling at his miracles, yet does our holy Lord go on with his work before their faces without discouragement. Learn thence, That the unjust censures and malicious cavils of wicked men against us, for well doing, must not discourage us from doing our duty, either towards God or towards our neighbour. Although the pharisees watched our Saviour wherever he went, and when they could find no occasion of quarrel, would invent and make one, yet such was our Lord's courage and resolution, that he bids the man who had the withered hand stand forth, to shew that he was resolved to heal him, notwithstanding their malicious purpose to accuse him for it as a breaker of the sabbath. Opposition met with in the doing our duty, must not discourage us from doing good, if we follow the example of our blessed Redeemer. Observe, 2. The influence and effect which this miracle had upon the wicked pharisees, they were filled with madness, and took council to kill him: instead of being convinced by this miracle, they conspire against him for it. The enemies of Christ and his holy religion, when arguments fail, fall to violence. It is a certain sign of a weak cause, that must be supported by passion; which is all tongue and no ear.

12 ¶ And it came to pass in those days, that he went out into a mountain to pray, and continued all night in prayer to God.

Observe here, 1. The duty which our holy Lord performed, The duty of prayer: we have much more business with God in prayer, than Christ had: he had no sins to confess, no want of grace to make known; yet did our Lord spend much time, even a whole night in this duty. Lord, what delight didst thou take in paying this homage to thy heavenly Father! O how does thy zeal and forwardness condemn our remissness and lukewarmness! Observe, 2. It was solitary prayer that our Lord did so exceedingly delight in: He went into the mountain alone to pray, not suffering his very disciples to be with him. There are times and seasons when a Christian would not be willing that his dearest relations upon earth should hear that intercourse which passes betwixt him and his God. Observe, 3. The place which our Lord withdraws to for privacy in prayer; He went into a mountain, as a place of retiredness, God delights to meet with his children alone. The modest bridegroom of the church, says St. Bernard, will not impart himself to his spouse before company. Observe, 4. The time when Christ retired into this mountain to pray, and to spend a whole night in prayer to God. If we look back to the former part of the chapter, we shall find that it was at a time when the pharisees were filled with rage and madness against him, and conspired to take away his life. Thence learn, That it is our duty, at such times, especially when enemies lie in wait to do us hurt, to give ourselves much unto prayer. Again, if we look forward, the next verse tells us that our Saviour was now about to send forth his twelve apostles to preach and propagate the gospel. Christ thought so great a work was not to be done without solemn and extraordinary prayer. Accordingly he spends a whole night in prayer to God upon that occasion, leaving herein a most instructive example to his church, to continue in prayer at all times; but then especially to abound in it, when persons are to be set apart for the momentous work of the ministry, that they may enterprize it with extraordinary dread and caution, not with aspiring, but tremendous thoughts; for who is sufficient for these things?

13 And when it was day, he called unto him his disciples: and of them he chose twelve, whom, also, he named apostles;

14 Simon, whom he also named Peter, and Andrew, his brother; James and John; Philip and Bartholomew;

15 Matthew and Thomas; James, the son of Alphaeus, and Simon, called Zelotes;

16 And Judas, the brother of James, and Judas Iscariot, which, also, was the traitor.

As the Jewish church arose from twelve patriarchs, so the Christian church became planted by twelve apostles. The person sending them forth was Christ: none may undertake the work and calling of the ministry, but those whom Christ appoints and calls, not immediately by himself, but immediately by the governors of his church; the persons commissioned were disciples before they were apostles; to teach us, that Christ will have such as preach the gospel, to be disciples before they are ministers; trained up in the faith and doctrine of the gospel, before they undertake a public charge. Observe next, How carefully the names of the twelve apostles, those laborious persons in the service of souls, are recorded and transmitted with honour to posterity. God will signally honour those who signally honour him, and are the special instruments of his glory. Of the twelve apostles, Peter is named first, and Judas last; Peter is first named, because probably elder than the rest, or because for order sake he might speak before the rest; from whence may be inferred a primacy, but no supremacy; a priority of order, but no superiority of degree; as a foreman of a grand jury has a precedency, but no pre-eminency; he is first in order before the rest, but has no authority over the rest; neither did St. Peter ever assume to himself a power of deciding controversies: but we find St. James in that first general council, mentioned Acts xv. 13, speaking somewhat definitively, This I judge, or determine the matter, and yet St. Peter was then and there present. Had the champions of the church of Rome such a passage in all the scripture for St. Peter's authority, it would make a louder noise than pasce oves, feed my sheep, John xxi. 16. Again, as St. Peter is named first, so Judas is mentioned last, with a brand of infamy upon him, the traitor; the person that betrayed his Lord and Master; from whence we may gather, that though the truth of grace be absolutely necessary to a minister's salvation, yet the want of it doth not disannul his office, nor hinder the lawfulness of his ministry. Judas, though a traitor, was yet a lawful minister; and a heart-hypocrite is no hypocrite in foro ecclesiae, before the church, though he should be damned for his hypocrisy before God.

17 ¶ And he came down with them, and stood in the plain; and the company of his disciples, and a great multitude of people out of all Judea and Jerusalem, and from the sea coast of Tyre and Sidon, which came to hear him, and to be healed of their diseases:

18 And they that were vexed with unclean spirits; and they were healed.

19 And the whole multitude sought to touch him: for there went virtue out of him, and he healed them all.

Observe here, 1. The great zeal and forwardness of the people in attending upon our Saviour's ministry; he had newly begun to preach in this place, and the people flock after him from all parts from Judea, from Jerusalem, from Tyre and Sidon, to hear his doctrine, and see his miracles. When our Saviour first began to preach, the people came unto him from every quarter. His ministers find it thus; at our first coming among a people, our labours are most acceptable, and they do most good. Our people's affections are then warmest, and perhaps our own too. 2. What sort of people were they that attended thus zealously on our Saviour's ministry; they were the common and ordinary people; the poor received the gospel; the learned scribes, the knowing pharisees, those wise men after the flesh, the mighty, the noble, the great and honorable, these despised our Saviour's person, alighted his ministry, yea, sought to take away his life. Thus from the first plantation of the gospel to this day, the poorer and meaner sort of the people have entertained the glad tidings of salvation; it is a sad but a certain truth, that heaven is a place where few, comparatively, but very few of the great men of the world are like to come; their temptations are many, their corruptions strong, and their great estates, through their own abuse, become fuel to their lusts: Lord! how rare is it to find those who are eminently great exemplarily good! Observe, 3. The nature of our Saviour's miracles. Moses' miracles were as great judgments as wonders, but Christ's miracles were as great miracles as wonders, they were salubrious and healing; "There went virtue out of him, and healed them all." Christ's miracles were like the author of them, full of goodness; yet would not the obstinate pharisees be convinced, either by the goodness that was in them, or by that omnipotent power which wrought them: all our Saviour's miracles were wonderful, but wonders of love and mercy.

20 ¶ And he lifted up his eyes on his disciples, and said, Blessed be ye poor: for yours is the kingdom of God.

As our Saviour's condition in this world was very poor, so was his disciples' condition also; therefore to relieve them against their poverty and low estate in this world, he thus bespeaks them; "Blessed be ye poor;" you that believe in me, and follow me, are in a happier condition than those that are rich, and have received their consolation; "for yours is the kingdom of heaven." Christ was the poor man's preacher, and the poor man's comforter; yet a bare outward poverty, or an avowed voluntary poverty, will entitle none to the blessing. It is not a poverty of possession, but a poverty of spirit, that makes us members of the kingdom of grace, and heirs of the kingdom of glory.

21 Blessed are ye that hunger now; for ye shall be filled. Blessed are ye that weep now; for ye shall laugh.

Hunger and thirst are not blessings in themselves, nor yet are they curses in themselves. Sanctified hunger is a far greater blessing than surfeiting fullness: St. Matthew therefore adds, chap. v. 6. "Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness." Learn thence, 1. That such as spiritually hunger and thirst after Christ and his righteousness, are certainly in a happy and blessed condition. 2. That the happiness of those who do hunger and thirst after righteousness, consists in being filled, "Blessed are ye that weep now, for ye shall laugh;" as if Christ had said, "You, my disciples, that are now in a sad, mournful, and afflicted state, are blessed; for there will come a time when ye shall be comforted, a time when God shall wipe away all tears from your eyes;" yet must we think that we have nothing to do but to mourn? there is a time to rejoice, as well as a time to mourn; not that bare mourning and weeping in itself and for its own sake, is acceptable unto God; but we mourn rationally for our sins, and the sins of others. God will comfort us in this world by his word and spirit, and in the world to come with the sight of himself.

22 Blessed are ye when men shall hate you, and when they shall separate you from their company, and shall reproach you, and cast out your name as evil, for the Son of man's sake:

23 Rejoice ye in that day, and leap for joy: for behold, your reward is great in heaven: for in the like manner did their fathers unto the prophets.

Observe here, 1. The sufferers described, the disciples; and their sufferings foretold, ye shall be hated, separated, and reproached. Hatred of Christ's disciples, is the bitter root from which persecution grows; where there is hatred in the heart, no wonder that reviling is in the lips. And as the disciples of Christ then were for his sake hated, reproached, and cast out of the Jewish church, so now such disciples as will cordially embrace and steadfastly hold fast, the faith delivered by our Saviour, must expect and prepare for hatred and persecution, to be separated from civil society, excommunicated from church fellowship; and all this by them who shall call themselves the guides and governors of an infallible church.

24 But woe unto you that are rich! for ye have received your consolation.

25 Woe unto you that are full! for ye shall hunger. Woe unto you that laugh now! for ye shall mourn and weep.

Observe here, 1. That though St. Luke omits divers of the beatitudes mentioned by St. Matthew, chap. v. yet he recited the woes which St. Matthew omitted. If we will understand our Saviour's doctrine fully, we must consult all the Evangelists thoroughly. Observe, 2. These woes are not to be understood absolutely, but restrainedly; the woe does not belong to men because they are rich, because they are full, because they do laugh; but because they place their happiness in these things, take up with them for their portions, and rejoice in them as their chief good; valuing themselves by what they have in hand, not by what they have in hope: he that is rich and righteous, he that is great and gracious, he that has his hands full of this world, and his heart empty of pride and vain confidence; he that laughs when God smiles, he that expresses himself joyfully when God expresses himself graciously, such a man is rich in grace, who is thus gracious in the midst of riches: for to be rich and holy, argues much riches of holiness.

26 ¶ Woe unto you when all men shall speak well of you! for so did their fathers to the false prophets.

Our Saviour's design in these words, is not to condemn any of his disciples or ministers; who have, by doing their duty, gained a fair reputation amongst the men of the world; but to let us understand how rarely and seldom it is attained; for usually the best of men are the worst spoken of: neither the prophets of the Old Testament, nor John Baptist, the prophet of the New Testament, nor Christ himself, nor his apostles, did ever gain either the good will, or good word, of the men of that generation in which they lived. The applause of the multitude, that contingent judge of good and evil, rather attends the vain than the virtuous. None have ever been so much reproached by man, as the faithful ministers of God, who have learned to take pleasure in reproaches: for though grace does not bid us invite reproaches, yet it teaches us to bid them welcome. The world has all along taken effectual care, by their cruel mockings, bitter reproaches, and sharp invectives, to free the ministers of God in all ages from the danger of our Saviour's woe here denounced; "Woe unto you when all men shall speak well of you."

27 ¶ But I say unto you which hear, Love your enemies, do good to them which hate you:

28 Bless them that curse you, and pray for them which despitefully use you.

29 And unto him that smiteth thee on the one cheek, offer also the other: and him that taketh away thy cloak, forbid not to take thy coat also.

Observe here, 1. The noble spirit, of christianity, and the large extent of christian charity; the Jewish kindness was limited and confined to those of their own religion, kindred, and nation, their charity began and ended at home; but our Saviour obliges his followers to the exercise of a more extensive charity, even to all mankind, even the worst of men, our enemies that seek our destruction. Christianity is so far from allowing us to persecute them that hate us, that it commands us to love them that persecute us. Observe, 2. The nature and quality of the duty enjoined: "Love your enemies;" there the inward affection is required. "Bless them that curse you;" there outward civility and affability is required. "Do good to them that hate you;" here real acts of kindness and beneficence are required to be done to the worst of enemies, though they be guilty of the worst of crimes, calumny and cruelty; striking both at our reputation and our life. Learn, That christianity obliges us to bear a sincere love to our most malicious enemies, to be ready at all times to pray for them, and upon all occasions to do good unto them. Thus to do, is an imitation of God our Maker, of Christ our Master: it is for the good of this lower world, and the way to a better; it is the ornament of our religion, and the perfection of our nature, and an high degree and pitch of virtue. To which may be added, the next duty, "not to revenge injuries;" where private revenge is the thing forbidden, and we are directed rather to suffer a double wrong, than to seek a private revenge. The truth is, revenge is a very troublesome and vexatious passion, the man's soul swells and boils, and it is in pain and anguish, and has no ease. Besides, by our avenging of one injury, we necessarily draw on another, and so bring on a perpetual circulation of injuries and revenges; whereas forgiveness prevents vexations to others, disquietment to ourselves.

30 Give to every man that asketh of thee; and of him that taketh away thy goods ask them not again.

These and the like precepts of our Saviour, are not to be taken strictly, but restrainedly; we are thereby obliged to charity according to others' necessities, and our own abilities; but not bound to give every one that has the confidence to ask for what we have. Indeed every man that really wants is the proper object of our christian charity; and we must, with a compassionate heart and open hand, relieve him according to his necessity, but answerable to our ability. Nor must the second part of the verse be understood as forbidding christians to seek the recovery of their just rights, by pursuing thieves, and following the law upon oppressors: but requiring us to forbear all acts of private revenge, as directly contrary to the spirit and temper of christianity. As jealousy is the rage of a man, so revenge is the rage of the devil, it is the very soul and spirit of the apostate nature.

31 And as ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise.

Here our Saviour lays down a most excellent rule of life, for all his disciples and followers to walk by, namely, always to do as we would be done by. The golden rule of justice and equity in all our dealings with men is this, "To do as we would be done unto." It is a full rule, a clear rule, a most just and equitable rule, which the light of nature, and the law of Christ binds upon us. St. Matthew, chap. vii. 12. adds that "This is the law and the prophets;" that is, the sum of the Old Testament, and the substance of the second table. The whole of the law is this, To love God above ourselves, and to love our neighbour as ourselves.

32 For if ye love them which love you, what thank have ye? for sinners also love those that love them.

33 And if ye do good to them which do good to you, what thank have ye: for sinners also do even the same.

34 And if ye lend to them of whom ye hope to receive, what thank have ye? for sinners also lend to sinners, to receive as much again.

35 But love ye your enemies, and do good, and lend, hoping for nothing again: and your reward shall be great, and ye shall be the children of the Highest: for he is kind unto the unthankful, and to the evil.

36 Be ye, therefore, merciful, as your Father also is merciful.

The design of our blessed Saviour in all and every of these precepts, is to recommend unto us all sorts and kinds of mercy and charity; namely, charity in giving, charity in forgiving, charity in lending; it is sometimes our duty, (if we have ability) to lend to such poor persons as we cannot expect will ever be in a capacity either to repay or requite us. This is to imitate the divine bounty, which does good to all, even to the unthankful and unholy. Love for love is justice; love for no love, is favor and kindness; but love and charity, mercy and compassion, to all persons, even the undeserving, and the ill-deserving, this is a divine goodness, a Christ-like temper, which will render us illustrious on earth, and glorious in heaven. St. Luke says here, "Be ye merciful, as your Father is merciful," St. Matthew says, chap. v. verse last, "Be ye perfect, as your Father in heaven is perfect;" implying, that love and mercy, charity and compassion, is the perfection of a christian's graces; he that is made perfect in love, is perfect in all divine graces in the account of God. Perfection in all graces, but especially in love and charity, ought to be our aim in this life, and shall be our attainment in the next.

37 Judge not and ye shall not be judged: condemn not, and ye shall not be condemned: forgive, and ye shall be forgiven:

This prohibition, Judge not, is not to be understood of ourselves, but our neighbour. Self judging is a great and necessary duty; rash judging of others is a heinous and grievous sin, which exposes to the righteous judgment of God: it is private judging and private condemning of persons which Christ forbids; it follows, "Forgive, and ye shall be forgiven; not that a bare forgiving of others, is all that God requires in order to our forgiveness, but it is one part of that obedience which we owe to God, without which it is in vain to expect forgiveness from God; "Forgive, and ye shall be forgiven." See note on St. Matt. vii.

38 Give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over, shall men give into your bosom. For with the same measure that ye mete withal, it shall be measured to you again.

I think there is not any one text of scripture that declares the bounty of God more fully in rewarding acts of charity and mercy than this before us. O how liberal a paymaster is God! how sure and bountiful are the returns Christ makes to us for the relief given to him in his members! He promises us here, 1. Not bare measure, but good measure. 2. "Pressed down, shaken together, and running over; nothing adds more to the measure, than the shaking of the bushel, the crowding and pressing of the corn, and heaping till the measure runneth over; now a measure will run over as long as you will pour. Learn, hence, That charities done in faith, in obedience to God, and with an eye to the glory of God, will produce a certain and plentiful increase. Liberality is the way to riches; giving is the best and surest way of thriving. A little charity from us; if we have but little, is looked upon by God as a great deal. But it is the greatest imprudence, as well as impiety, to do but a little when we have ability to do much; for he that soweth bountifully, shall reap bountifully; "good measure, pressed down and running over."

39 And he spake a parable unto them, Can the blind lead the blind? shall they not both fall into the ditch?

Our Saviour doubtless applied these words to the scribes and pharisees, the Jewish leaders, doctors and teachers, who being ignorant of the spiritual sense of the law (interpreting it only to the restraining of the outward man) were very unfit to instruct and lead others; for where one blind man leads another, both are in danger of the ditch; that is, to run into ruin and destruction. Learn, 1. That ignorant, erroneous, or unfaithful ministers, are the greatest plague and sorest punishment that can befall a people. 2. That Christ having forewarned us of such guides, to follow them will be an inexcusable sin and folly, and never free us from the danger of destruction, but rather be an aggravation of our condemnation, "If the blind lead the blind, both will," inevitably, yet inexcusably, "fall into the ditch."

40 The disciple is not above his Master: but every one that is perfect shall be as his Master.

The application of these words, no doubt, our Saviour intended to his own disciples, partly to comfort them under sufferings, and partly, to encourage them to obedience: did they suffer hard things from an unkind world? the remembrance of what their Master suffered before them may support them. Did they meet with hard and difficult duties, such as loving enemies, doing good to them that hate and persecute them? Their Lord's example may encourage and instruct them, who loved them when they were enemies, who prayed for his murderers, and offered up his blood to

God on behalf of them that shed it. Learn thence, That the perfection of a christian in this world, consisteth in his imitation of Christ Jesus, in being as our Master, in coming as near to his example as it is possible for persons clothed with flesh and blood to arrive at. "Every one that is perfect must be as his Master."

41 And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but perceivest not the beam that is in thine own eye?

42 Either how canst thou say to thy brother, Brother, let me pull out the mote that is in thine eye, when thou thyself beholdest not the beam that is in thine own eye? Thou hypocrite! cast first the beam out of thine own eye, and then shalt thou see clearly to pull out the mote that is in thy brother's eye.

By the mote in our brother's eye is meant some small and little sin discerned or suspected. By the beam in our own eye, some greater sin undiscerned: now, says our Saviour, there is no greater sign of hypocrisy than to be curious in spying out the smaller faults of others, and at the same time indulge greater in ourselves. Learn hence, There is no such way to teach us charity in judging of others, as to exercise severity in judging of ourselves. 2. That those who desire others should look upon their failings with a compassionate eye, must not look upon the failings of others with a censorious eye; "For with what measure we mete, it shall be measured to us again.

43 For a good tree bringeth not forth corrupt fruit; neither doth a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit.

44 For every tree is known by his own fruit; for of thorns men do not gather figs, nor of a bramble-bush gather they grapes.

45 A good man out of the good treasure of his heart, bringeth forth that which is good; and an evil man out of the evil treasure of his heart, bringeth forth that which is evil; for of the abundance of the heart his mouth speaketh.

Our Saviour here and elsewhere frequently compares persons to trees, the heart of man is as the root, the actions as the fruit; as the root is the principle from which the fruit springs, so the heart of man is the principle from which all human actions flow; an holy heart will be accompanied with an holy life; where there is a vital principle of grace within, there will be actings of grace without; a good conscience will be accompanied with a good conversation. Observe farther, A double treasure discovered in the heart of man. 1. An evil treasure of sin and corruption from whence flow evil things; but why should sin be called a treasure? Not for the preciousness of it, but for the abundance of it; a little doth not make a treasure; and also for the continuance of it; for though sin be perpetually overflowing in the life, yet doth the heart continue full. The treasure of original corruption in man's heart and nature, though by sanctifying grace it be drawn low, yet it is never in this life drawn dry. 2. Here is a good treasure of grace discovered in a sanctified and renewed man: which is the source and spring from whence all gracious actions do proceed and flow; namely, a sanctified and renewed heart and nature. When once the will of man is made conformable to the will of God, it doth will and desire, choose and embrace, take pleasure and delight in what God approves, commands, and loves, and it will lay an injunction upon all the members of the body to act conformably thereunto.

46 ¶ And why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?

47 Whosoever cometh to me, and hear-eth my sayings, and doeth them, I will show you to whom he is like:

48 He is like a man which built an house, and digged deep, and laid the foundation on a rock; and, when the flood arose, the stream beat vehemently upon that house, and could not shake it: for it was founded upon a rock.

49 And he that heareth, and doeth not, is like a man that, without a foundation, built an house upon the earth; against which the stream did beat vehemently, and immediately it fell; and the ruin of that house was great.

Our Saviour here concludes his sermon with an elegant similitude: he compares the faithful doer of the word to a wise builder, which founded his house upon a rock. Others he resembles to a foolish builder, that built his house upon the sand: The house is the hope of heaven and eternal life; the rock is Christ; the building upon the sand, is resting upon the bare performance of outward duties; the rain, the winds, and the floods, are all kinds of afflicting evils, sufferings and persecutions, that may befall us. The sum is, men's hopes of salvation built upon any other besides Christ, or built upon Christ without a sincere or uniform obedience to him, are vain hopes, deceitful hopes; for when the storm arises, when affliction or persecution comes, their confidence will fail them, their foundation will be shaken. Learn, 1. That the obedient believer is the only wise man that builds his hopes of heaven upon a sure and abiding foundation; Christ is the rock that he builds upon, and one Christ is before a thousand creatures, one rock better than millions of sands to build upon. 2. That such professors as rest in the bare performance of outward duties, are foolish builders; their foundation is weak and sandy, and all their hopes of salvation vain and deceitful. Lord! how does the carnal world build all their hopes upon the sand, on the wisdom of their flesh, on their policies, counsels, friends and riches: they bottom their very souls upon fancies, presumptions, delusions, and vain hopes: they expect to be happy without being holy, which is to expect to be easy, without being healthy. Woe to that man whose portion lies in the creature's hands, who builds all his hopes upon this earth; for when the earth is shaken, his hopes are shaken, and he is even at his wits end: whereas the christian that builds upon the rock, stands firm and sure; for if ever the christian falls, Christ must fall with him: he shall never be disappointed of his hopes, unless faithfulness can disappoint; he shall never be deceived, unless truth itself can deceive. If it be impossible for God to lie, then it is impossible for the obedient, holy, and circum-spect christian finally to miscarry.

CHAPTER VII.

The former part of this chapter relates to us a double miracle wrought by our blessed Saviour, the one in raising the centurion's servant from his bed, the other in raising the widow's son from his bier: both of them eminent acts and instances of his divine and almighty power. The history of the former stands thus:

NOW, when he had ended all his sayings in the audience of the people, he entered into Capernaum.

2 And a certain centurion's servant, who was dear unto him, was sick, and ready to die.

3 And when he heard of Jesus, he sent unto him the elders of the Jews, beseeching him that he would come and heal his servant.

4 And, when they came to Jesus, they besought him instantly saying, That he was worthy for whom he should do this.

5 For he loveth our nation, and he hath built us a synagogue.

6 Then Jesus went with them, And, when he was now not far from the house, the centurion sent friends to him, saying unto him, Lord, trouble not thyself; for I am not worthy that thou shouldst enter under my roof;

7 Wherefore neither thought I myself

(No. 16.)

worthy to come unto thee: but say in a word, and my servant shall be healed,

8 For I also am a man set under authority, having under me soldiers: and I say, unto one, Go, and he goeth: and to another, Come, and he cometh; and to my servant, Do this, and he doeth it.

9 When Jesus heard these things he marvelled at him, and turned him about, and said unto the people that followed him, I say unto you, I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel.

10 And they that were sent, returning to the house, found the servant whole that had been sick.

In our Saviour's miraculous cure of the centurion's servant, we have several particulars very observable; as 1. The person applying himself to our blessed Saviour for help and healing; he was a Gentile, an heathen, a Roman soldier, an officer and commander; yet he believes in, and relies upon the power of Christ. Note, That such is the freeness of divine grace, that it extends itself to all sorts and ranks, to all orders and degrees of men without exception; even the bloody trade of war yields worthy clients to Christ; he doth not so much regard what we are, and whence we are, as with what disposition and desires, with what purposes, and inclinations we come unto him. Observe, 2. The person whom the centurion came to Christ for; not for himself, not for his sons, but for his servant, His servant was sick; he doth not drive him out of doors, nor stand gazing by his bedside, but looks out for help and relief for him; a worthy example of humanity. Some masters have not so much regard for their sick servants as they have for their oxen and their swine. But he is not worthy of a good servant, that, in the time of sickness is not willing to serve his servant. Observe, 3. Unto whom the centurion seeks, and with what zeal and application; he seeks not to wizards and conjurers, but to the physician, for his sick servant; yea, to Christ the chief physician: and this not with a formal relation in his mouth, but with vehement aggravation of his disease, My servant lies sick of the palsy, grievously tormented. St. Matt. viii. 6. where the master's condolency, and tender sympathy with his afflicted servant, is both matter of commendation and imitation. Observe, 4. the happy mixture of humility and faith, which was found in this centurion. See his wonderful humility in not thinking himself worthy to come into Christ's presence, or that Christ should come under his roof. The best men have always the lowest thoughts of themselves; when we esteem ourselves unworthy of any favors, Christ accounts us worthy of all. See also, his faith in Christ's divine power; he believed that Christ was able at a distance, and by a single word, to command off the distemper of his servant; he tells him that diseases were as much at Christ's command, as his servants were at his command. Humility, we see, is both the fruit of faith and the companion of faith. An humble soul has even more an high esteem of Christ's power, and a low esteem of itself. Observe, 5. How our blessed Saviour exceeds not only the centurion's desires, but his expectations also. St. Matt. viii. 7. Jesus said unto him, I will come and heal him. O wonderful condescension! In St. John iv. 47 we read of a certain nobleman and ruler that twice entreated our Saviour to come to his house and heal his son, but our Lord refused. Here the centurion doth but barely tell Christ of his poor servant's sickness, and Christ, both unasked and undesired, says, I will come and heal him. O how far is Christ from seeming in the least to honor riches and despise poverty! He that came in the form of a servant, goes down to visit a sick servant upon his poor pallet-bed, who did not come near the rich couch of the ruler's son. Observe, 6. The notice and observation which our Saviour takes of the centurion's faith, he wondered at it from him: admiration agreed not to Christ as God, but as man it did. Christ wrought this faith as God, and wondered at it as man: what can be more wonderful than to see Christ wonder? We find not our Saviour wondering at worldly pomp and greatness; when the disciples wondered at the magnificence and stately buildings of the temple, Christ rather rebuked them than wondered with them: but when he sees the gracious acts and exercises of faith, he is ravished with wonder. Let it teach us to place our admiration where Christ fixes his; let us be more affected with the least measures of grace in a good man, than with all the gaities and glories of a great man; let us not envy the one, but admire and imitate the other. Observe lastly, Christ doth not only admire the centurion's faith, but publishes it: Verily, I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel; that is among the generality of the Jewish nation. For, as to particular persons, several had showed a greater faith than this, as Joseph and Mary. This expression lets us know, that where the means of faith are but small, the noble acts and exercise of faith are wonderful and soul amazing.

11 ¶ And it came to pass, the day after that he went into a city called Nain; and many of his disciples went with him, and much people.

12 Now, when he came nigh unto the gate of the city, behold, there was a dead man carried out, the only son of his mother, and she was a widow: and much people of the city was with her.

13 And when the Lord saw her he had compassion on her, and said unto her, Weep not.

14 And he came and touched the bier: And they that bare him stood still. And he said, Young man, I say unto thee, Arise.

15 And he that was dead sat up, and began to speak: and he delivered him to his mother.

16 And there came a fear on all: and they glorified God, saying, That a great prophet is risen up amongst us; and That God hath visited his people.

17 And this rumor of him went forth throughout all Judea, and throughout all the region round about.

There were three persons raised from death to life by the powerful word of Christ's mouth; namely, Jairus' daughter, mentioned by St. Matthew; Lazarus, recorded by St. John; and here the widow's son, only taken notice of by St. Luke. The place where the miracle was wrought, was the city of Nain; out of their cities and not within them, the Jews were wont to bury their dead. Our Saviour, at the gates of this city, meets with the sad pomp of a funeral, a sorrowful widow attended with her mournful neighbours, following her only son to the grave. Where note, 1. The doleful and distressed condition of the widow; there were many heart-piercing circumstances in her affliction: 1. It was the death of a son: to bury a child rends the heart of a parent, for what are children but the parent multiplied; but to lay a son in the grave, which continues the name, and supports the family, is a sore affliction. 2. This son was a young man, in the strength and flower of his age, not carried from the cradle to the coffin; had he died an infant, he had not been so much lamented; but then when the mother's expectations were highest, and the endearments greatest, even in the flower of his age; he is cut off. 3. He was not only a son, but an only son; one in whom all his mother's hopes and comforts were bound up. The death of one out of many, is much more tolerable, than of all in one. The loss of that one admits of no consolation. 4. Still to heighten the affliction, it is added, that she was a widow; she wanted the counsel and support of a loving yoke-fellow. Had the root been left entire, she might better have spared the branch; now both are cut down, and she has none left to comfort her in her comfortless state of widowhood. In this distressed condition, Christ, the God of comfort, meets her, pities her, relieves her. Observe, 2. The compassion of Christ towards this distressed widow; He saw her, and had compassion on her. Christ saw her, she did not speak to him: no tears, no prayers, can move Christ so much as our afflictions and his own compassion: Christ's heart pitied her, his tongue said to her, Weep not, his feet went to the bier, his hand touched the coffin, and the power of his God-head raised the dead. But how strange doth Christ's counsel seem! To bid a mother not weep for such a loss, was to persuade her to be miserable, and not feel it; to feel it, and not regard it; to regard it, and yet conceal and hide it. It is not the decent expression of our sorrow, then, which Christ condemns; but the undue excess and extravagancies of it, which our Saviour blames. And the lesson of instruction which we learn from hence, is this, That christians ought to moderate their sorrow for their dead relations, how many afflicting circumstances and aggravations soever do meet together in their death; here was a child, that child a son, that son an only son, that only son carried to the grave in the flower of his age; yet Christ says to the pensive mother, a sorrowful widow, Weep not. Observe, 3. The power of Christ, in raising the widow's son to life. The Lord of life arrests the serjeant death, and rescues the prisoner out of his hand. Christ says not, In the name of God, young man arise; but, I say unto thee, Arise. Christ had a power in himself, and of himself to command the dead to arise; and the same powerful voice which raised this young man, shall in the last day raise up our vanished bodies; for it is as easy for Omnipotency to say, Let them be repaired, as to say at first, Let them be made. The Socinians here own, that Christ raised this young man by a divine power, which God had communicated to him; yet deny him at the same time to be essentially God. But let them prove, if they can, that a divine power, which is proper to God alone, ever was, or ever can be, communicated to a creature, without the communication of the divine nature: true, we find St. Peter, Acts ix. 40, commanding Tabitha to arise; but we find all he did was by faith in Christ, and by prayers unto Christ, Acts ix. 34. Jesus Christ healeth thee, arise: but Christ here raised the widow's son without prayer, purely by his own power, which undeniably proves him to be God. Observe, 4. The reality of the miracle; he sits up, he begins to speak, and is delivered to his mother. Death has no power to hold that man down, whom the Son of God bids rise up: Immediately he that was dead, sat up: and the same power which raised one man, can raise a thousand, a million, a world; no power can raise one man, but an Almighty power, and that which is Almighty can raise all men. It was not so much for the child's sake, as the mother's sake, that the son was raised; it was an injury to the son, though a kindness to the mother, for he must twice pass through the gates of death, to others once; it returned him from rest to labor, from the peaceful harbour back again to the tempestuous ocean. Observe, lastly, What effects this miracle had upon the multitude: seeing the divine power thus manifestly exerted, they are filled with astonishment and amazement; they look upon our Saviour with awful and admiring looks; They glorify and praise God, for sending a great Prophet amongst them, accounting it a great act of favor that God had in this wonderful manner visited his people; yet a prophet was the highest name they could find for him, whom they saw like themselves in shape, but above themselves in power; A great Prophet is risen up amongst us, and God hath visited his people.

18 ¶ And the disciples of John showed him all these things.

19 And John calling unto him two of his disciples, sent them unto Jesus, saying, Art thou he that should come, or look we for another?

20 When the men were come unto him they said, John Baptist hath sent us unto thee, saying, Art thou he that should come? or look we for another?

21 And in that same hour he cured many of their infirmities and plagues, and of evil spirits: and unto many that were blind he gave sight.

22 Then Jesus, answering, said unto them, Go your way, and tell John what things ye have seen and heard; how that the blind see, the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, the deaf hear, the dead are raised, to the poor the gospel is preached.

23 And blessed is he, whosoever shall not be offended in me.

About the time of our Saviour's appearing in the world there was a general expectation of a great prince that should come out of Judea, and govern all nations; this prince the Jews called Messias, or the Anointed, and waited for his appearance. Accordingly, when John the Baptist appeared in the quality of an extraordinary prophet, the Jews sent to know of him whether he was the Messias or not, John i. 19. he answered that he was not, but only the harbinger and forerunner of the Messias; so that it was very evident that it was not for John's own information, that he sent two of his disciples to Christ, to know whether he was the Messias or not: for John was assured of it himself by a voice from heaven at our Saviour's baptism, Mat. iii. ult. but it was for his disciples' satisfaction that he sent to Jesus; because John's disciples were unwilling to acknowledge Christ to be the Messias, out of a great zeal for the honor of him their Master; they were not willing to own any person greater than John their Master, lest such an acknowledgment should eclipse and cloud him: from whence we may note, How the judgments of the best of men are very apt to be biassed and perverted by faction or interest: no doubt John's disciples were good men, and no doubt their master had often told them, as he did others, that he was not the Messias; yet they will not believe their own master, when they apprehend him to speak against their own interest; for they knew that they must rise and fall, in their reputation and esteem, as their master did; therefore, that John's disciples might receive full satisfaction from Christ, he sends two of his disciples to him, to hear his doctrine and see his miracles; for John perceiving his disciples to be ill affected towards our Saviour, and hearing them speak with some envy of his miracles, he sent them to him, that being eye witness of what he did, they might be convinced who he was. Observe, next, The way and means which our Saviour takes to convince and satisfy John's disciples that he was the true Messias: he appeals to the miracles wrought by himself, and submits those miracles to the judgment and examination of their senses; Go and show John the miracles which you hear and see: the blind receive their sight, the lame walk, the deaf hear. Christ was all this in a literal and spiritual sense also; he was an eye to the understanding of the ignorant, a foot of power to the weak, he opened an ear in deaf hearts to receive the word of life, and the poor receive and embrace the gospel. Miracles are the highest attestation, and the greatest external confirmation and evidence, that can be given to the truth and divinity of any doctrine. Now our Saviour's miracles, for their nature, were divine and God-like, they were healing and beneficial to mankind; freeing men from the greatest calamities of human life; for their number, they were many; for the manner of their operation, they were publicly wrought in the sight and view of multitudes of people: to free them from all suspicion of fraud and imposture, he wrought them before his enemies, as well as in the presence of his friends and followers. And this not done once or twice, or in one place, but at several times, and in several places, wherever he came, and this for a long time, even for three years and a half; so that our blessed Saviour had all the attestation that miracles can give, to evidence himself the true and promised Messias.

—To the poor the gospel is preached.

The poor hear and receive the gospel. See Matt. xi. 5. Note, That all along, in our Saviour's time and since, the poor of the world have been more disposed to hear and embrace the gospel than other men, and the reasons of it are these: 1. Because the poor have no worldly interest to engage them to reject Christ and his gospel. The high priests, the scribes and pharisees, had a plain worldly interest to engage them to oppose Christ and his doctrine; but the poor were free from these incumbences and temptations. They had nothing to lose, therefore our Saviour's doctrine went down more easily with them, because it did not contradict their interest, as it did the interest of those who had great possessions. 2. Those that are poor, and enjoy little of the good things of this life, are willing to entertain the glad tidings of happiness in another life. Such as are in a state of misery here, are glad to understand that it shall be well with them hereafter, and are willing to listen to the good news of a future happiness; whereas the rich, who have had their consolation here, are not much concerned what will become of them hereafter.

—And blessed is he, whosoever shall not be offended in me.

No doubt our Saviour uttered these words with particular respect and reference to John's disciples, who, out of an extraordinary zeal for the honor of their Master, were prejudiced against our Saviour: but the general import of the words doth show, that there are many to whom Christ is a rock of offence; the Jews were offended at the meanness of his extraction, at the poverty of his parents, at the lowliness of his breeding, at his suffering condition: from their traditions, they expected the Messias should be a temporal prince, whereas the prophets declared, he should be a man of sorrows, and acquainted with griefs; be despised and put to death. Thus at this day, many are offended at Christ; some are offended at the asserted divinity of his person, and the meritoriousness of his satisfaction; some are offended at the sublimity of his doctrine, others at the sanctity and strictness of his laws; some are offended at the free dispensation of his grace, others that the terms of christianity are very hard, and lay too great a restraint upon human nature: Blessed is he, says Christ, that shall not be offended in me; intimating, that such as, instead of being offended at Christ, do believe in him, and ground their expectations of heaven and salvation wholly upon him, are in a happy and blessed condition; Blessed is he that shall not be offended in me.

24 ¶ And when the messengers of John were departed, he began to speak unto the people concerning John; What went ye out into the wilderness for to see? A reed shaken with the wind?

25 But what went ye out for to see? A man clothed in soft raiment? Behold, they which are gorgeously apparelled, and live delicately, are in kings' courts.

26 But what went ye out for to see? A prophet? Yea, I say unto you, and much more than a prophet.

27 This is he of whom it is written, Behold, I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare thy way before thee.

Our Saviour having given, as we may suppose, full satisfaction to John's disciples, and sent them away, he enters upon a large commendation of John himself; where we have observable, 1. The persons whom he commended, John, not before his own disciples, but before the multitude; for John's disciples had too high an opinion of their Master already, insomuch, that they envied our Saviour for overshadowing their master; John vii. 26. Behold Christ baptizeth, and all men come unto him. It was a great eye sore to John's disciples, that Christ had more hearers and followers than their master; therefore, not before John's disciples, but before the multitude is John commended: for as John's disciples had too high, so the multitude had too low an opinion of John; possibly because of his imprisonment and sufferings: there was a time when the people had high thoughts of John's person and ministry; but being now clouded with sufferings, they disesteem and undervalue him. Learn hence, How vain it is for any men, but especially for the ministers of the gospel to value themselves by popular applause. The people condemn to-day what they admired yesterday; he who to-day is cried up, to-morrow is trodden down: the word and ministers are the same; but this proceeds from the fickleness and inconsistency of the people: nothing is so mutable as the mind of man; nothing so variable as the opinion of the multitude. Observe, 2. The time when our Saviour thus commended John; when he was cast into prison by Herod. Not when he was in prosperity, when the people flocked after him, when he after him, when he preached at court, and was revered by Herod; but when the giddy multitude had forsaken him; when he was disgraced at court, and had preached himself into a prison; now it is that Christ proclaims his worth, maintains his honor, and tells the people, that the world was not worthy of such a preacher. Learn thence, That Christ will evermore stand by, and stick fast unto, his faithful ministers, when all the world forsakes them; let the world slight and despise them at pleasure, yet Christ will maintain their honor and support their cause; as they bear a faithful witness to Christ, so Christ will bear witness to their faithfulness for him. Observe, 3. The commendation itself. Our Saviour commends John for four things; for his constancy, for his sobriety, for his humility, for his gospel-ministry. 1. For his constancy, he was not a "Reed shaken with the wind;" that is, a man of an unstable and unsettled judgement, but fixed and steady. 2. For his sobriety, austerity, and high degrees of mortification and self-denial; he was no delicate and voluptuous person, but grave, sober, and severe. He was mortified to the glory and honor, to the ease and pleasure of the world: John wrought no miracles, but his conversation was almost miraculous and as effectual as miracles to prevail upon the people. 3. For his humility John might once have been what he would, the people were ready to cry him up for the Messiah, the Christ of God; but John's humble and lowly spirit refuses all; "He confessed, and denies not; saying, I am not the Christ," but a poor minister of his, willing, but not worthy, to do him the meanest service. This will commend our ministry to the consciences of our people; when we seek not our own glory, but the glory of Christ. 4. Our Saviour commends John for his clear preaching, the gospel, and for his making known the coming of the Messiah to the people: "He was more than a prophet," because he pointed out Christ more clearly and fully than any of the prophets before him; the ancient prophets beheld Christ afar off, but John saw him face to face. They prophesied of him, he pointed at him, saying, "This is he," The clearer any ministry is in discovering of Christ, the more excellent and useful it is.

28 For I say unto you, Among those that are born of women, there is not a greater prophet than John the Baptist: but he that is least in the kingdom of God is greater than he.

Our Saviour having highly commended John in the former verses, here he sets bounds to the honor of his ministry; adding, that though John was greater than all the prophets that went before him, seeing more of Christ than all of them, yet he saw less than those that came after him. The meanest gospel minister that preaches Christ as come, is to be preferred before all the old prophets who prophesied of Christ to come. That minister who sets forth the life and death, resurrection; and ascension, of Christ, is greater in the kingdom of heaven, that is, has an higher office in the church, and a more excellent ministry, than all the prophets, yea, than John himself. The excellency of a ministry consists in the light and clearness of it; now though John's light did exceed all that went before him, yet it fell short of them that came after him; and thus he that was least in the kingdom of grace on earth, much more he that was least in the kingdom of glory in heaven, was greater than John. See note on Matt. xi. 11.

29 And all the people that heard him, and the publicans, justified God, being baptized with the baptism of John.

30 But the Pharisees and lawyers rejected the counsel of God against themselves, being not baptized of him.

These words are our Saviour's farther commendation of John the Baptist; he tells us, That John had two sorts of hearers. 1. The common people and publicans. 2. The pharisees and lawyers; and declares the different effects which John's ministry had upon these two different sorts of persons. As to the former, the common people and the publicans; the common people were accounted by the Jewish doctors as the dregs of mankind, an ignorant and rude mob; the publicans were esteemed notoriously wicked, guilty of great injustice, oppression and extortion; yet these vile persons were converted sooner than the knowing men of the time, the self-justifying pharisees and lawyers; for it is said, "The publicans were baptized of John, and justified God;" that is, they looked upon John as a prophet sent of God; they owned his ministry, received his message, and submitted to his baptism. Those who believe the message that God sendeth, and obey it, justify God; they that do not believe and obey, accuse and condemn God. But of the others it is said, namely of the pharisees and lawyers, That "they rejected the counsel of God against themselves;" That is, the revealed will of God, refusing to be baptized of him. This rejecting the counsel of God we are guilty of, when we have low and undervaluing thoughts of Christ and his gospel, when we are ashamed in times of persecution, to own and profess him, when we stop our ears to the voice of his ministers and messengers, when we submit not ourselves to the reasonable laws and commands of Christ; and this rejection of Christ at the great day, will render our condition worse than the condition of heathens, that never heard of a Saviour; yea, than the condition of devils, for whom a Saviour never was intended. Lord! where shall we appear, if we either reject or neglect thy great salvation? The chief thing then observable here, is this, That in rejecting John's baptism and ministry, they are said to reject the counsel of God towards themselves, that is, the gracious design of God in calling them to repentance by John's ministry, by which refusal they declared, that they approved not of God's counsel as just and righteous in calling them to repentance, who were such zealots for the law, and so unblameable in their conversation, that it became a proverb amongst them, That if two persons went to heaven one of them must be a pharisee. They therefore judged it an incongruous thing to call such righteous persons to repentance, as they took themselves to be, and to threaten them with ruin, who were so dear to God; but the publicans and common people, being conscious to themselves of their sin and guilt, did approve of this counsel which God sent them by his messenger, and submitted to this baptism of repentance, for the remission of sins, to which God by the Baptist now called them.

31 ¶ And the Lord said, Whereunto then shall I liken the men of this generation? and to what they are like?

32 They are like unto children sitting in the market-place, and calling one to another, and saying, We have piped unto you, and ye have not danced: we have mourned to you, and ye have not wept.

33 For John the Baptist came neither eating bread nor drinking wine; and ye say, He hath a devil.

34 The Son of man is come eating and drinking; and ye say, Behold a gluttonous man, and a wine-bibber, a friend of publicans and sinners!

35 But Wisdom is justified of all her children.

Our blessed Saviour in these words describes the perverse humour of the pharisees, whom nothing could allure to the embracing of the gospel, neither John's ministry nor Christ's. This our Saviour sets forth in two ways, allegorically and properly; by way of allegory he compares them to sullen children, whom nothing would please, neither mirth nor mourning; if their fellows piped before them, they would not dance! if they sang mournful songs to them, they would not lament: that is, the pharisees were of such a censorious and capricious humor, that God himself could not please them; although he used variety of means and methods in order to that end. Next, our Lord plainly interprets this allegory, by telling them, that John came to them neither eating nor drinking; that is, not so freely and plentifully as other men, being a very austere and mortified man, both in his diet and habit, all which was designed by God to bring the pharisees to repentance and amendment of life. But instead of this, they censure him for having a devil, because he delighted in solitude, and was not so free in conversation. "That he that delighteth in solitude is either an angel or a devil," either a wild beast or a God. John being thus rejected, Christ himself comes to them, who being of a free and familiar conversation, not shunning the society of the worst of men, no not of the pharisees themselves, but complying with their customs, and accompanying them innocently at their feasts, yet the freedom of our Saviour's conversation displeased them as much as John's reservedness of temper; for they cry, "Behold a man gluttonous, a friend of publicans and sinners;" Christ's affability towards sinners they account an approbation of their sins; and his social disposition, looseness and luxury. Learn hence, That the faithful and zealous ministers of Christ, let their temper and converse be what it will, cannot please the enemies of religion, and the haters of the powers of godliness; neither John's austerity, or Christ's familiarity could gain upon the pharisees: it is the duty of the ministers of God, in the course of their ministry, to seek to please all men for their good; but after all our endeavours to please all, if we strenuously oppose the errors and vices of the times, we shall please but very few. But if God and conscience be of the number of those few, we are safe and happy. Observe, 2. That it has been the old policy of the devil, that he might hinder the success of the gospel to fill the minds of persons with an invincible prejudice against the ministers and dispensers of the gospel. Here the pharisees are prejudiced unreasonably both against John and against Christ, that the success of both their ministers must be frustrated and disappointed. Observe, 3. That after all the scandalous reproaches cast upon the christian religion, and the ministers and professors of it, such as are wisdom's children, wise and good men, will justify religion, that is, approve it in their judgments, honor it in their discourses, and adorn it in their lives; "Wisdom is justified of all her children."

36 ¶ And one of the Pharisees desired him that he would eat with him. And he went into the Pharisee's house, and sat down to meat.

37 And, behold, a woman in the city which was a sinner, when she knew that Jesus sat at meat in the Pharisee's house, brought an alabaster-box of ointment, 38 And stood at his feet behind him weeping, and began to wash his feet with tears, and did wipe them with the hairs of her head, and kissed his feet, and anointed them with the ointment.

Observe here, 1. The pharisee's civility, and our Saviour's courtesy; the pharisee invites Christ to eat with him, Christ readily accepts the invitation, never refusing any opportunity for doing good. There is a duty of civil courtesy which we owe to the worst of men; none are so bad but we may soberly eat and drink with them; only let us take care, that if our converse do not make them better, their example may not make us worse. Observe, 2. What an opportunity our Saviour lays hold upon, in the pharisee's house, of doing good to a sinful woman; who coming to Christ bowed down in a sorrowful sight and sense of her sins, finds an hearty welcome to him, and is dismissed with comfort from him. The history runs thus: "Behold a woman in the city, which was a sinner;" that is, a Gentile, say some; a remarkable, notorious, and infamous sinner, say others; probably a lewd, unclean woman; she is led in with a note of admiration. "Behold a woman that was a sinner!" Learn, That to see a sensual and notorious sinner, out of true remorse of conscience, to seek unto a Saviour, is a rare and wonderful sight. Observe farther, It is not said, Behold a woman that sinned, but, "Behold a woman that was a sinner!" one action does not denominate a person a sinner, but an habit and trade of sin. Again, it is said, "Behold a woman in the city;" the place where she acted her lewdness, added to the heinousness of her sin, it was in the city; the more public the offence, the greater the scandal. Sin is sin, though in the desert, where no eye sees it, but the offence is aggravated by the number and multitude of beholders: yet observable it is, That there is no mention made, either of the woman's name, or of the city's name: and it is both presumption and injuriousness for any to name her, whose name God has been pleased to conceal; for this is not the same woman that anointed Christ's feet, Mat. xxvi. Mark xiv. and John xii. that was in Bethany, this is in Galilee; that in the house of Simon the leper, this of Simon the pharisee. Observe, 3. The behaviour and demeanour of this poor woman, she appears in the posture of a penitent: "She stood at Christ's feet behind him, weeping." Where note, 1. The great change wrought in this sinful woman, and the evident effects of it; her eyes, which had been formerly lamps of fire by lust, are now an holy fountain of penitential tears; her hair, which she had used as a net to catch her fond and foolish lovers, doth now become a towel for her Saviour's feet. Verily such a heart as has once felt the sting and smart of sin, will make plentiful expressions of the greatest of its sorrow. Again, 2. "She stands behind Christ and weeps;" this proceeded, no doubt, from an holy bashfulness; she that was wont to look boldly upon the faces of her lovers, dares not now behold the face of her Saviour; she that was wont to shed her alluring beams forth into the eyes of her wanton lovers, now casts her dejected eyes down upon the earth; and behold the plenty of her tears, they flow in such abundance, that she washes Christ's feet with them. "She began to wash his feet," says the text, but we read not when she ended; never were our Saviour's feet bedewed with more precious liquor than this of remorseful tears. Thus doth an holy penitent account no office too mean that is done to the honor of its Saviour.

39 Now when the Pharisee which had bidden him, saw it, he spake within himself, saying, This man, if he were a prophet, would have known who and what manner of woman this is that toucheth him; for she is a sinner.

40 And Jesus answering, said unto him, Simon, I have somewhat to say unto thee. And he saith Master, say on.

41 There was a certain creditor which had two debtors; the one owed five hundred pence, and the other fifty.

42 And when they had nothing to pay he frankly forgave them both. Tell me, therefore, which of them will love him most?

43 Simon answered, and said, I suppose that he to whom he forgave most. And he said unto him, Thou hast rightly judged.

Observe here, 1. How unreasonably the Pharisee was offended with Christ, for permitting this poor woman to come near him, and touch him. Admit that she had been the greatest of sinners, might not such come to Christ, when he was come from heaven to them? Oh blessed Saviour! there is merit enough in thy blood, and mercy enough in thy bowels, to justify and save the vilest sinners, which by repentance and faith do make a timely application to thee. Observe, 2. The parable which Christ makes use of for the Pharisee's conviction, and the woman's comfort; namely, the parable of two debtors, one of whom owed a greater sum, and the other a less, who both having nothing to pay, were both freely forgiven; and both upon their forgiveness loved their creditor much, but he most to whom most was forgiven. Now from this parable we gather these lessons of instruction; 1. That great is the debt which all mankind have contracted, and lie under to the justice of God; it is here expressed by "five hundred pence." Our debt is infinite, and had not miraculous mercy interposed, divine justice could never have been satisfied, but by undergoing an infinite punishment. 2. That yet all sinners stand not alike indebted to the justice of God; some owe more, and others less; all are guilty, but not all alike: some owe five hundred talents, others fifty pence. 3. That be men's debts greater or less, their sins more or fewer, it is utterly impossible for any person of himself to clear his debt, and make satisfaction; but they that owe least stand in need of mercy and forgiveness; "He forgave them both." 4. That the forgiveness that is in God is a free, gratuitous, and gracious forgiveness, he frankly forgave them both. "Gracious art thou, O Lord, in thy doings towards thy children, and thy tender mercy is over all thy works!"

44 And he turned to the woman, and said unto Simon, Seest thou this woman? I entered into thine house, thou gavest me no water for my feet: but she hath washed my feet with tears, and wiped them with the hairs of her head.

45 Thou gavest me no kiss: but this woman, since the time I came in, hath not ceased to kiss my feet.

46 Mine head with oil thou didst not anoint: but this woman hath anointed my feet with ointment,

47 Wherefore, I say unto thee, Her sins, which are many, are forgiven; for she loved much: but to whom little is forgiven, the same loveth little.

48 And he saith unto her, Thy sins are forgiven.

49 And they that sat at meat with him, began to say within themselves, Who is this that forgiveth sins also?

50 And he said to the woman, Thy faith hath saved thee: go in peace.

Observe here, 1. How our Saviour recounts and sums up the several particular instances of this woman's love and respect towards himself: she washed, wiped, kissed, and anointed his feet, according to the custom of those eastern countries. Love will creep where it cannot go, it will stoop to the meanest offices, and is ambitious of the highest services, for and towards the persons we sincerely love. Observe, 2. The words of comfort, given by our Saviour to this poor woman, "Thy sins, which are many, are forgiven thee." Thence learn, That the pardoning mercy is boundless and unlimited; it is not limited to any sort of sins or sinners; it is not limited to any degree of sins or sinners; "Thy sins, which are many, are forgiven thee;" and thy sins, which are heinous, are forgiven also. Observe, 3. What is the effect and fruit of pardoning mercy, it is great love; her sins, which are many, are forgiven, "for she loved much." Her love to Christ was the effect of his pardoning love to her, and not the cause of it: she did not first love much, and then Christ forgave her; but Christ first forgave her, and then she loved much. Her love was a love of gratitude, because she was pardoned, and not a love of merit to purchase and procure her pardon. The papists interpret this word (for) as if it were the antecedent cause of her forgiveness; whereas it is a consequential sign and evidence, that the free grace and mercy of Christ had forgiven her; her many and great sins were forgiven her, and therefore she loved much. The debt is not forgiven, because the debtor loves the creditor; but the debtor therefore loves, because the debt is forgiven. Forgiveness goes before, and love follows after. Hence learn, That much love will follow great forgiveness. Love will work in the heart towards God, in some proportion to that love, which we have experienced from God. Observe lastly, The very gracious dismissal this woman meets with from our blessed Saviour: what could she desire that is not here granted to her? Here is remission, safety, faith, and peace; all these here meet to make a contrite soul happy: remission is the ground of her safety, faith the ground of her peace, peace the fruit of her faith, and salvation the issue of her remission: O woman! great was thy sin, great was Christ's pardoning grace, and great was thy joy and comfort: "Thy sins are forgiven thee, thy faith hath saved thee, go in peace."

CHAPTER VIII.

AND it came to pass afterward, that he went throughout every city and village preaching, and shewing the glad tidings of the kingdom of God; and the twelve were with him;

Observe here, The great work and business, which not only the apostles, but Christ himself was engaged in and employed about, namely; preaching the gospel, those glad tidings of salvation to a lost world. Where note, That Christ himself labored in this work of public preaching; he did not send forth his apostles as his curates to work and sweat in the vineyard, whilst he himself took his ease at home; but he accompanied them himself, yea, he goes before them himself, in this great and excellent work: "Jesus went preaching the glad tidings of the gospel, and the twelve were with him." Learn hence, That preaching of the gospel is a great and necessary work, incumbent upon all the ministers of Christ, let their dignity and pre-eminence in the church be what it will, surely none of the servants are above their Lord and Master! Did he labor in the word and doctrine? well may they. Observe, 2. The places where Christ and his apostles preached, not only in populous cities, but in the poor country villages: "They went through every city and village preaching the gospel." Some will preach the gospel, provided they may preach at court, or in the capital cities of the nation; but the poor country villages are overlooked by them. Our Saviour and his apostles were not of this mind; it is true, they were itinerary preachers, we are settled: but be the place ever so mean and obscure, and the people ever so rude and barbarous, we must not think it beneath the greatest of us to exercise our ministry there, if God calls us thither: "Christ went through the villages, as well as cities, preaching."

2 And certain women, which had been healed of evil spirits and infirmities, Mary called Magdalene, out of whom went seven devils.

3 And Joanna, the wife of Chuza, Herod's steward, and Susanna, and many others, which ministered unto him of their substance.

Amongst the number of those that did accompany our Saviour and his apostles, mention is here made of certain women, who had been healed by Christ of evil spirits and infirmities; that is, of spiritual and corporal diseases, for the Jews were wont to call vices and evil habits, by the name of devils, as the devil of pride, the devil of malice, &c. Now as concerning these women's following of Christ, and administering to him, several circumstances are observable: as, 1. That women did make up a considerable number of Christ's followers, aye, and of his apostles' followers too, The devout women not a few, Acts xvii. 4. And verily it is no disgrace or shame, but matter of glory, and cause of thankfulness, if our ministry be attended by, and blest unto, the weaker sex. I believe in many of our congregations, and at most of our communions, are found two women for one man; God grant them knowledge answerable to their zeal, and obedience proportionable to their devotion. Observe, 2. One of these women that followed Christ was Joanna, the wife of Herod's steward. What! one of Herod's family transplanted into Christ's household! O the freeness of the grace of God! Even in the worst societies and places, God has a number to stand up for his name, and bear witness to his truth: we read of a Joseph in Pharaoh's court; of an Obadiah in Ahab's court; of a Daniel in Nebuchadnezzar's court; of a church in Nero's house; and of a Joanna here in bloody Herod's family, who had put John the Baptist to death. Observe, 3. The holy courage and resolution of our Saviour's female followers: no doubt they met with taunts and jeers, with scoffs and scorn enough, and perhaps from their husbands too, for following the carpenter's son, and a few fishermen; but this does not damp, but inflame their zeal. The Holy Ghost acquaints us with several instances of masculine courage, and manly resolution, in the women that followed Christ as his female disciples. At our Saviour's trial, the women clave to him, when his disciples fled from him; they accompanied him to his cross, they assisted at his funeral, they attended his hearse to the grave, they watched his sepulchre, fearing neither the darkness of the night, nor the rudeness of the soldiers. These feeble women had more courage than all the apostles. Learn, That courage is the special and peculiar gift of God; and where he gives courage, it is not in man to make afraid. Observe, 4. The pious and charitable care of these holy women, to supply the wants and outward necessities of our Saviour; They administered to him of their substance. Where note, 1. The great poverty of Christ; he lived upon the basket, he would not honor the world so far as to have any part of it in his own hand, but was beholden to others for what he ate and drank; yet we must not suppose that either Christ or his apostles were common beggars, but it is probable there was a bag or common purse amongst them, which upon occasion supplied their necessities; and there were certain sisters, or christian women, as the learned Dr. Hammond observes, who accompanied Christ and his apostles in their travels, and provided necessities for them, when they went up and down preaching the gospel. Note also, The condescending grace and humility of Christ; he was not ashamed either of these women's following of him, or administering to him, because of their former vicious course of life; it is not what we formerly were, but what now we are, that Christ considers; it is a glory to him to have great and notorious sinners brought to a closure and compliance with him. The reproach is not that they have been sinners, for Christ did not give himself for a people that were pure and holy, without spot or wrinkle, but to make them so by his word and Spirit, Ephesians v. 26. Christ is only ashamed of those that eat of his bread, and lift up the heel against him.

4 ¶ And when much people were gathered together, and were come to him out of every city, he spake by a parable:

5 A sower went out to sow his seed: and as he sowed, some fell by the wayside, and it was trodden down, and the fowls of the air devoured it.

6 And some fell upon a rock, and as soon as it was sprung up, it withered away, because it lacked moisture.

7 And some fell among thorns; and the thorns sprang up with it, and choked it.

8 And other fell on good ground, and sprang up, and bare fruit an hundred-fold. And when he had said these things, he cried, He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.

The design and scope of this parable is, to show what are the causes of men's improving or not improving under the hearing of the word, and to let us know that there are three sorts of bad hearers, and but one good one.—The care and inconsiderate hearer, is like the highway ground, where the seed is trodden down and trampled upon. Hard-hearted sinners, whom the mollifying word doth not soften, these are like stony ground, where the seed takes no root, the word makes no impression. Those whose beads and hearts are stuffed with the cares of the world, are like the thorny ground, in which the seed is choaked, which should fructify to an holy immortality: this is the scope of the parable. Now from the subject matter of it, learn, 1. That by the sower [you are to understand Christ and his apostles, and their successors, the ministers of the gospel. Christ the principal sower, they the subordinate seedsmen. Christ sows his own field, they sow his field: he sows his own seed, they his seed. Woe unto us if we sow our own seed and not Christ's. Learn, 2. The seed sown is the word of God: fabulous legends, and unwritten traditions, which the seedsmen of the church of Rome sow, are not seed, but chaff; or if seed, (for they fructify too fast in the minds of their people) their own, not Christ's. Our Lord's fields must be all sown with his own seed, with no mixed grain. Learn thence, That the word preached is like the seed sown in the furrows of the field. Seed, as a fructifying, growing, and increasing nature, has in it an active principle, and will spring up, if not killed by accidental injuries; such a quickening power has the word of God to regenerate and make alive dead souls, if we suffer it to take root in our hearts: yet is not this seed alike fruitful in every soil; all ground is not alike, neither doth the word fructify alike in the souls of men: there is a difference both from the nature of the soil, and the influence of the spirit; for though no ground is naturally good, yet ome is worse than other; nay, even the best ground doth not bring forth increase alike: some good ground brings forth an hundred fold, others but sixty, and some but thirty; in like manner a christian may be a profitable hearer of the word, although he doth not bring forth so great a proportion of fruit as others, provided he brings forth as much as he can.

9 And his disciples asked him, saying, What might this parable be?

10 And he said, Unto you it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of God: but to others in parables; that seeing they might not see, and hearing they might not understand.

Here we have the disciples' question, and our Saviour's reply; their inquiry is concerning the sense and signification of the parable; they own their ignorance, and desire better information; it is no shame for the best of ministers, yea, for the best of men, to acknowledge their own ignorance in the mysteries of religion, and to attend upon the means of instruction, in order to their farther information. In our Saviour's answer, "To you it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of God, &c." Observe, 1. That the doctrines of the gospel are great mysteries. 2. That it is an invaluable privilege rightly to understand and know gospel-mysteries. 3. That this privilege all are not sharers in, and partakers of, but only those to whom it is given. 4. That it is a righteous thing with God to give such persons over to farther blindness and ignorance in spiritual things, who wilfully reject the truth, and shut their eyes against the evidence of it. The pharisees had all along shut their eyes, and said, they would not see; and now Christ closes their eyes judicially, and says, they shall not see.

11 Now the parable is this: The seed is the word of God.

12 Those by the way-side are they that hear: then cometh the devil, and taketh away the word out of their hearts, lest they should believe and be saved.

13 They on the rock are they, which, when they hear, receive the word with joy; and these have no root, which for a while believe, and in time of temptation fall away.

14 And that which fell among thorns are they, which, when they have heard, go forth, and are choaked with cares and riches, and pleasures, of this life, and bring no fruit to perfection.

15 But that on the good ground are they which in an honest and good heart, having heard the word, keep it, and bring forth fruit with patience.

Here our Saviour applies himself to interpret and explain the foregoing parable to his disciples; he tells them, The seed is the word; the sower is the preacher; the soil or ground, is the heart and soul of man; some hearers be compared to the highway ground, in which the seed lies uncovered for want of the harrow of meditation; others to stony ground, in which the word has no root; no root in their understandings, no root in their memories, in their wills, or in their affections, but they are instantly offended, either at the depth or profoundness of the word, or at the sanctity and strictness of the word, or else at the plainness or simplicity of it. Again, some hearers our Lord compares to thorny ground. Worldly desires and inordinate cares for the things of this life choke the word, as thorns overshadow the corn, draw away the heart of the earth from it, hinder the influences of the sun from cherishing it; the like ill effects have worldly affections and desires in the soul of man, rendering the seed of the world unfruitful. But the good christian bears the word attentively, keeps it retentively, believes it steadfastly, applies it particularly, practises it universally, and brings forth fruit perseveringly. Learn hence, 1. That no hearers are in Christ's account good hearers of the word, but such as bring forth fruit answerable for their hearing. 2. That a person may be a good hearer of the word in Christ's account, if he bring forth the best fruit he can, though not in so great a proportion as others do; as some ground brings forth thirty, some sixty, some an hundred fold; in like manner do all the sincere hearers of the word, they all bring forth fruit, though not all alike; all in sincerity though not all equally, and none to perfection. Learn, 4. That it is not sufficient, that we do at present believe, approve, and practise the truth delivered to us, or that we are affected with the word, and receive it with some kind of joy, delight and pleasure; unless we persist and persevere in obedience to all its precepts, and continue to bring forth fruit with patience.

16 ¶ No man, when he hath lighted a candle, covereth it with a vessel, or putteth it under a bed: but setteth it on a candlestick, that they which enter in may see the light.

17 For nothing is secret that shall not be made manifest: neither any thing hid, that shall not be known and come abroad.

18 Take heed, therefore, how you hear: for whosoever hath, to him shall be given: and whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken even that which he seemeth to have.

In these words Christ declares his end and design in revealing unto his disciples the foregoing parable, and why he communicated to them the light of scripture knowledge and gospel-mysteries, namely, that they may communicate it to others, and not keep it close unto themselves; even as the candle in a house diffuses and disperses its light to all that come within the reach of it. Such as are enlightened by God in any measure, with the knowledge and understanding of his word, ought not to conceal and hide this knowledge within themselves, but communicate it to others, and improve it for the good and benefit of others. Observe also, The argument which our Saviour makes use of to quicken his disciples to communicate their knowledge, and improve the grace they have received, for the good and advantage of others. To him that hath shall be given, that is, such as improve their spiritual gifts, shall have them increased; such as improve them not, shall have them blasted. Learn hence, That there is no such way to thrive in grace, and increase in gifts, as to exercise and improve them; he that hides his talent, forfeits it, is in danger of losing it, and also of being punished for not improving of it. Observe lastly, How our Lord shuts up this parable of the sower and the seed, with a cautionary direction to all his auditors, to take heed how they hear the word. Take heed therefore how ye hear: such as would profit by hearing the word, must diligently attend to the matter of the doctrine which they hear, and also to the manner how they hear: such is the majesty and authority of the person that speaks to us in the word, such is the sublimity and spirituality of the matter, and so great is our danger if we miscarry under the word, that it nearly concerns us to take heed both what we hear, whom we hear, and how we hear.

19 ¶ Then came to him his mother and his brethren, and could not come at him for the press.

20 And it was told him by certain, which said, Thy mother and thy brethren stand without, desiring to see thee.

21 And he answered and said unto them, My mother and my brethren are these which hear the word of God, and do it.

Two things are here observable, 1. The truth and verity of Christ's human nature: he had affinity and consanguinity with men, persons near in blood to him by the mother's side, called here his kinsmen. Observe, 2. That Christ's spiritual kindred were much dearer to him than his natural. Alliance by faith is more valued by Christ, than alliance by blood: to bear Christ in the heart is a greater honor than to carry him in the womb. Blessed be God, this great and gracious privilege is not denied us even now. Although we cannot see Christ yet love him we may; his bodily presence cannot be enjoyed by us, but his spiritual presence is not denied to us. Though Christ be not ours in house, in arms, in affinity, and consanguinity, yet in heart, in faith, in love and service, he is or may be ours. Verily spiritual regeneration bringeth men into a more honorable relation to Christ, than natural generation ever did. O how dear are obedient christians to Christ! he prefers them in esteem before those of his own flesh and blood; My brethren are these which hear the word of God and do it.

22 ¶ Now it came to pass on a certain day, that he went into a ship with his disciples; and he said unto them, Let us go over unto the other side of the lake; and they launched forth.

23 But as they sailed he fell asleep; and there came down a storm of wind on the lake, and they were filled with water, and were in jeopardy.

24 And they came to him, and awoke him, saying, Master, Master, we perish! Then he arose, and rebuked the wind, and the raging of the water; and they ceased, and there was a calm.

25 And he said unto them, Where is your faith? And they, being afraid, wondered, saying one to another, What manner of man is this! for he commandeth even the winds and water, and they obey him.

Here observe, 1. Our Saviour and his disciples no sooner put forth to sea, but difficulty attends them, and danger overtakes them; a tempest arose, and that ship was covered with waves which Christ himself was in with his disciples. Learn hence, That the presence of Christ itself doth not exempt his disciples and followers from trouble and danger. Here was a great tempest about the disciples' ears, though Christ himself was in their company. Observe, 2. The posture our Saviour was in when this tempest arose, being wearied with the labors of the day, he was laid down to sleep; thereby showing himself to be truly and really man; and that he not only took upon him human nature, but the infirmities of that nature also; he was subject to pain and weariness, to hunger and thirst. Observe, 3. The disciples' application made to Christ; they awake him with a sad outcry, Master, master, we perish; here was faith mixed with human frailty. They believed that he could save them, but being asleep, they concluded he must be waked before he could save them; whereas though his human nature was asleep, yet his divine nature neither slumbered nor slept. Learn hence, that the prevalency of fear in a time of great and imminent danger, though it may evidence weakness of faith, yet it is no evidence of a total want of faith; in the midst of the disciples' fears, they believed Christ's power and ability to save them; Master, save us, we perish. Observe, 4. A double rebuke given by our Saviour, 1. To the winds. 2. To the fears of his disciples: Christ rebuked the winds, and instantly they were calm, when the sea was as furious as a madman, Christ with a single word calms it. Learn thence, That the most raging winds, and the outrageous seas, cannot stand before the rebukes of Christ: Christ as God lays a law upon the most lawless creatures, even when they seem to act most lawlessly. Observe farther, Christ rebukes his disciples' fears; and their want of faith, Why are ye fearful? Where is your faith? No sooner was the storm up, but their fears were up, and their faith was down. They forgot that the Lord High-admiral of the ocean was now on board their ship, and were as much overset with their boisterous passions, as the ship were with tempestuous winds: and accordingly Christ rebukes the tempest within before he calms the storm without: first he quickens their faith, then he quiets the seas. Note from hence, That great faith in the habit may appear but little in act and exercise. The disciples' faith, in forsaking all and following Christ, was great faith: but in this present act, their faith was weak, through the prevalency of their fear: Oh the imperfect composition of the best of saints! Faith and fear will take their turns, and act their several parts, while we are here: ere long our fears will be vanquished, and our faith swallowed up in vision, our hopes in fruition. Then shall we obey with vigor, praise with cheerfulness, love without measure, fear without torment, trust without despondency. Lord strengthen our faith in the belief of this desirable happiness, and set our souls a longing for the full fruition and final enjoyment of it.

26 ¶ And they arrived at the country of the Gadarenes, which is over against Galilee.

27 And when he went forth to land, there met him out of the city a certain man which had devils a long time, and ware no clothes, neither abode in any house, but in the tombs.

28 When he saw Jesus he cried out, and fell down before him, and with a loud voice said, What have I to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of God most high? I beseech thee torment me not.

29 (For he had commanded the unclean spirit to come out of the man. For oftentimes it had caught him: and he was kept bound with chains, and in fetters; and he brake the bands, and was driven of the devil into the wilderness.)

30 And Jesus asked him, saying, What is thy name? And he said, Legion: because many devils were entered into him.

31 And they besought him that he would not command them to go out into the deep.

32 And there was there an herd of many swine feeding on the mountain: and they besought him that he would suffer them to enter into them. And he suffered them.

33 Then went the devils out of the man, and entered into the swine: and the herd ran violently down a steep place into the lake, and were choked.

34 When they that fed them saw what was done, they fled, and went and told it in the city, and in the country.

35 Then they went out to see what was done; and came to Jesus, and found the man out of whom the devils were departed sitting at the feet of Jesus, clothed, and in his right mind: and they were afraid.

36 They also which saw it told them by what means he that was possessed of the devils was healed

37 Then the whole multitude of the country of the Gadarenes round about besought him to depart from them; for they were taken with great fear. And he went up into the ship, and returned back again.

38 Now the man out of whom the devils were departed, besought him that he might be with him: but Jesus sent him away, saying, 39 Return to thine own house, and shew how great things God hath done unto thee. And he went his way, and published throughout the whole city how great things Jesus had done unto him.

40 And it came to pass, that when Jesus was returned, the people gladly received him; for they were all waiting for him.

This piece of history gives us a very sad relation of a person that was possessed with a legion of devils; we read of few, if any, in the Old Testament, that were thus possessed, but of many in the New. Our Saviour came into the world to destroy the works of the devil; therefore he suffered satan to enter some human bodies, to shew his divine power in casting him out. Observe here, 1. That the evil angels, by their fall, lost their purity, but not their power; for, with God's permission, they have power not only to enter into men's bodies, and to possess them, but also to disemper their minds, and to drive them to frenzy and madness; such was the deplorable case here. Note, 2. That the reason why the evil angels do not oftener exert their power in doing mischief to the bodies and lives of men, is from the restraining power of God: the devil cannot do all the mischief he would, and he shall not do all he can. Observe, 3. The place where these evil spirits delighted to make their abode, amongst the tombs, or graves, places desolate, forlorn, and solitary, which are apt to breed horror of mind, and to give advantage to temptation: from whence I gather, That it is very dangerous and unsafe for persons, especially in whom melancholy prevails, to give themselves too much to solitariness, to frequent desolate places, and to affect being much alone: for it gives advantage to satan, to set upon them with powerful temptations. It is much better to frequent human society, especially to delight in the communion of saints, by means whereof we may be more and more strengthened against satan's temptations. Observe, 4. How the devils own Christ to be the Son of God, and pay, unwillingly, worship and homage to him, yielding subjection to him as his slaves and vassals, not a free and voluntary service: They cried out, and fell down before him, saying, What have we to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of God? Where, by calling him Jesus, they owned him to be a Saviour, but none of their Saviour; What have we to do with thee, Jesus? Oh! what an uncomfortable expression is this, to own Christ to be a Saviour, and at the same time to know and declare, that he is none of our Saviour! Quid est Deus, si non sit meus? What is God, if he be not my God? What comfort in a Saviour, if he be not my Saviour? Observe, 5. What a multitude of evil spirits do enter into one man. Oh! the extreme malice and enmity of the devil against mankind, in that so many evil spirits should at once afflict and torment a single person, even a legion, many thousands of them! Note likewise, The unity and agreement which is amongst these evil spirits in doing mischief; though there was a multitude of them in this one person, yet have they all but one name; we see the very devils have a sort of unity amongst themselves, and in their malicious and mischievous designs against mankind, they are as one. O! how happy were it, if good men were as united in their designs and endeavours for the glory of God, and the good of one another; as devils conspire and contrive against them! Observe, 6. The request which the devils make to Christ; We beseech thee, torment us not. From whence we may gather, 1. That there are torments appointed to the spiritual nature of evil angels. 2. That the evil angels, or devils, are not so full of torment as they shall be, although they are as full of sin and discontent as they can be, there will be a time when their torments shall be increased; therefore they pray, Torment us not before the time; that is, do not increase our torments before the appointed time of their increase. Observe, 7. The devil's request for permission and leave to go into the herd of swine. Where note, 1. The devil's malice, he will hurt the poor beasts, rather than not hurt at all. 2. His powerful restraint, he cannot hurt a poor pig without a permission, Suffer us to enter. Satan's malice indeed is infinite, but his power is bounded; it is potestas sub potestate, a power under a power: if he could not hurt the swine, much less can he afflict the children of men without leave. Observe, 8. How satan's request is yielded to by our Saviour, he suffered them to go into the swine, not to gratify their desire in doing mischief; but, first, hereby Christ showed his power over the devils, that they could not act without his permission and leave: next to show how great the malice and power of the devil is, if not restrained; and lastly, that the miracle of casting out so many devils might appear to be the greater. Learn hence, That sometimes Almighty God, for wise ends and just causes, doth suffer the devil to enjoy his desire, in doing mischief unto the creatures, Jesus said unto them, Go. Observe, 9. What a bad effect this miracle had upon the minds of the Gadarenes; instead of believing and owning Christ's divine power, the loss of the swine enrages them, and makes them desire Christ's departure from them. Learn, That carnal hearts prefer their swine before their Saviour, and would rather lose Christ's presence than their worldly profit. "They besought him to depart from them."

Sad is the condition of those from whom Christ departs; more sad the condition of such who say unto Christ, Depart: but most sad the condition of them who beseech and entreat Christ to depart from them: thus did the Gadarenes here, and we do not read that ever Christ returned more to them. Observe, 10. How desirous the possessed man was to continue with Christ, after he was come to himself, "he prayed that he might be with him:" this he might desire partly to testify his thankfulness to Christ, partly out of fear of being repossessed again by satan, or perhaps to have the opportunity of hearing Christ's doctrine, and seeing his miracles: for such as have once tasted that the Lord is gracious, and experienced the pleasure and profit of Christ's company, are very desirous of the continuance of it, and exceeding loath to part with it. However, our Saviour did not at this time think fit to suffer him, knowing that more glory would redound to God by publishing this miracle to his friends. Christ expects, after imminent deliverances wrought for us, that we should be publishers of his praises, and declare to all, far and near, the great and wonderful things which he has done for us. Observe, lastly, How Christ ascribes that power to God, by which he had wrought this miracle of healing; Show how great things God has done for thee; from whence the Socinians infer, that had he been God most high, and the author of that power by which he had wrought that miracle, he would have ascribed it to himself. Answer, Christ doth this as not seeking his own glory, but the glory of him that sent him: that is, as executing his prophetic office in his Father's name, and casting out devils by that Spirit which he had received from his Father.

41 ¶ And, behold, there came a man named Jairus, and he was a ruler of the synagogue: and he fell down at Jesus' feet, and besought him that he would come into his house:

42 For he had one only daughter, about twelve years of age, and she lay a dying. But as he went the people thronged him.

Observe here, 1. The person described who came to Christ on behalf of his sick daughter, by his name, Jairus; by his office, "a ruler of the synagogue;" by his gesture, "he fell down at Jesus' feet;" this gesture of his was not only a sign of tender affection in him towards his daughter, but also an evidence of his faith in our blessed Saviour; he believed him either to be God, or an extraordinary man, who had a miraculous power of healing. Observe, 2. How readily Christ complies with Jairus' request, "Jesus went with him." Although his faith was but weak, yet our Saviour doth not reject him, or deny his suit: O how ready should we be to go to Christ in all our distresses, who is so ready to hear, and so forward to help us, if we seek him in sincerity, though our faith be weak and feeble! Observe, 3. The great humility of our blessed Saviour in suffering himself to be thronged by poor people; much people followed him and thronged him. O humble and lowly Saviour! how free was thy conversation from pride and haughtiness! how willing to converse with the meanest of the people for their advantage! Christ did not only suffer them to come near him, but even to throng him. Let not then the greatest persons upon earth, despise or disdain the poorest of the people: but look upon some with an eye of favor, upon others with an eye of pity, upon none with an eye of contempt.

43 ¶ And a woman, having an issue of blood twelve years, which had spent all her living upon physicians, neither could be healed of any,

44 Came behind him, and touched the border of his garment: and immediately her issue of blood stanch'd.

45 And Jesus said, Who touched me? When all denied, Peter, and they that were with him, said, Master, the multitude throng thee, and press thee, and sayest thou, Who touched me?

46 And Jesus said, Somebody hath touched me: for I perceive that virtue is gone out of me.

47 And when the woman saw that she was not hid, she came trembling, and, falling down before him, she declared unto him, before all the people, for what cause she had touched him, and how she was healed immediately.

48 And he said unto her, Daughter, be of good comfort: thy faith hath made thee whole; go in peace.

As our Saviour was on the way to Jairus' house, a diseased woman cometh behind him, toucheth his clothes, and is presently healed. The virtue lay not in her finger, but in her faith; or rather in Christ, which her faith drew forth. Observe, 1. The diseased woman, one with a bloody flux; let the women here take notice of the miseries which the sin of the first woman brought upon all women; amongst which this is one, that it has made their bodies subject to preternatural issues and fluxes of blood. Observe, 2. The long continuance of this disease, twelve years; it pleases God to lay long and tedious afflictions upon some of his children in this life, and particularly to keep some of them a very long time under bodily weakness, to manifest his power in the supporting them, to magnify his mercy in delivering them. Observe, 3. This poor woman was found in the use of means: she sought to physicians for help, and is not blamed for so doing, although she spent all that she had upon them. The use and help of physic is by no means to be neglected by us in the times of sickness, especially in dangerous diseases of the body; to trust to means, is to neglect God, and to neglect the means, is to tempt God. The health of our body ought to be dear unto us, and all lawful means used both to preserve it, to recover it, and to confirm it. Observe, 4. The actings of this poor woman's faith: her disease was unclean by the ceremonial law, and she was to be separated from society: accordingly, she is ashamed to appear before Christ, but comes behind him to touch his clothes; being firmly persuaded, that Christ had a power communicated to him miraculously to cure incurable diseases: and see how our Saviour encouraged her faith: he saith, "Thy faith hath made thee whole." Learn hence, That faith oft-times meets with a better welcome from Christ, than it did or could expect: this poor woman came to Christ trembling, but went away triumphing. Observe, 4. Christ would have this miracle discovered; he therefore says, "Who toucheth me? For I perceive that virtue is gone out of me." Christ says, first, in reference to himself, to manifest his divine power, that by the touch of his clothes he could cure such an incurable disease. Secondly, in relation to the woman, that she might have opportunity to give God praise and glory for the cure. And, thirdly, with respect to Jairus, that his faith might be strengthened in his belief of Christ's power to raise his daughter.

49 ¶ While he yet spake, there cometh one from the ruler of the synagogue's house, saying to him, Thy daughter is dead: trouble not the Master.

50 But when Jesus heard it, he answered him, saying, Fear not: believe only, and she shall be made whole.

51 And when he came into the house, he suffered no man to go in, save Peter, and James, and John, and the father and the mother of the maiden.

52 And all wept, and bewailed her; but he said, Weep not; she is not dead, but sleepeth.

53 And they laughed him to scorn, knowing that she was dead.

54 And he put them all out, and took her by the hand, and called, saying, Maid arise.

55 And her spirit came again, and she arose straightway; and he commanded to give her meat.

56 And her parents were astonished; but he charged them that they should tell no man what was done.

Observe here, 1. The doleful news brought to Jairus' ear, "Thy daughter is dead." The Lord doth sometimes suffer the faith and patience of his children to be greatly exercised and tried. The loss of dear relations, particularly children, especially of an only child, is one of the greatest sorrows of human life; a trial which has often shocked an ordinary patience and constancy of mind. Observe, 2. Our Saviour's reasonable word of advice and comfort. "Fear not, only believe." Christ stands ready to comfort believers in the hour of their greatest trials and temptations. Observe, 3. Christ's application of himself, in order to the raising unto life Jairus' dead daughter. And here, 1. He goes into the house only with three of his disciples, and the father and the mother of the maid, which was sufficient to bear witness of the truth of the miracle. Our Saviour, to avoid all show of vain-glory, would not work this miracle publicly before all the people. 2. Our Saviour rebukes them for the show they made of immoderate grief and sorrow for the dead damsel: they wept and wailed greatly, with minstrels making a noise, say the other Evangelists, according to the custom of the heathens, who by a mournful sort of music sought to stir up the passions of grief at their funerals. To mourn immoderately for the dead, is an heathenish custom and practice; it is hurtful to the living, it is dishonorable to the dead; nor is it an argument of more love, but an evidence of less grace. 3. Christ adds a reason for this rebuke given by him, "for the damsel is not dead, but sleepeth:" Vobis mortua, mihi dormit; "She is dead to you, but asleep to me;" not so dead as to be beyond my power to raise her to life. Souls departed are under the conduct of angels to their several regions of bliss or misery: it is very probable, that the soul of this damsel was under the guard of angels, near her dead body, waiting the pleasure of God in order to its disposal, either to restore it again to the body, or to translate it to its eternal mansion. Observe farther, The nature of death in general, and of the saint's death in particular; it is a sleep. Sleep is a state of rest, sleep is a sudden surprisal; in sleep there is an insensible passage of our time, the person sleeping shall certainly awake. O how much it is wisdom to prepare for the bed of the grave; and so to live, that when we lie down in it, there may be nothing to disturb our rest! Observe farther, With what facility and ease our Saviour raises the dead damsel with a word speaking, and St. Mark tells us that the words were Talitha cumi,

Syrian words, to show the truth of the miracle; not like a conjurer, muttering a charm in an unknown tongue. The miracles which Christ wrought, were real miracles, and carried their own evidence along with them. Observe lastly, The charge given by our Saviour, not to publish this miracle; he charged them to tell no man what was done, that is, divulge it not imprudently to such of the scribes and pharisees as would not be convinced by it, but only cavil at it, and be the more enraged against him for it, and seek his death before his appointed time was come. Again, tell it to no man unseasonably, and all at once, but gradually, and by degrees: for it was the will of God, that the divine glory of Christ should not be manifested to the world all at once, and on the sudden, but by little and little, during his state of humiliation; for his resurrection was the time appointed by God for the full manifestation of Christ's Godhead: Rom. i. 4. "Declared to be the Son of God with power, by the resurrection from the dead."

CHAPTER IX.

THEN he called his twelve disciples together, and gave them power and authority over all devils, and to cure diseases.

2 And he sent them to preach the kingdom of God, and to heal the sick.

3 And he said unto them, Take nothing for your journey, neither staves, nor scrip, neither bread, neither money; neither have two coats a-piece.

4 And whatsoever house ye enter into, there abide, and thence depart.

5 And whosoever will not receive you, when you go out of that city, shake off the very dust from your feet for a testimony against them.

6 And they departed, and went through the towns, preaching the gospel, and healing every where.

We heard before, chap. vi. 13. of our Saviour's chusing his twelve apostles, and their several names, they were first chosen disciples, to be with Christ, to learn of him, and be instructed by him, and to be witnesses of what he said and did: now after some time thus spent in preparing and fitting them for public service, our Saviour sends them forth to preach the gospel, and gives them a power to confirm their doctrine by miracles. Observe here, 1. The person that sends the apostles forth to preach the gospel: it is Christ himself. Learn thence, That none ought to take upon them the office of preaching, or any other ministerial function of the church till thereunto called by Christ himself. The apostles were called by Christ, and immediately sent forth by himself. The ministers of the gospel are now called immediately and receive authority from Christ by the hand of the governors of the church. Observe, 2. The power given to the apostles by our Saviour to work miracles, for confirming that doctrine which they preached. "He gave them power over unclean spirits, &c." Now this miraculous power given to the apostles was necessary, partly to procure reverence to their persons, being poor and unlearned men; but principally to gain credit and authority to their doctrine; for the doctrine of faith in the Messiah as now come, and exhibited in the flesh, being a strange and new doctrine to the Jews, the truth and the certainty of it was to be extraordinarily ratified by miracles, which are the broad seal of heaven, to testify, that such a doctrine comes from God. Observe, 3. The charge here given by Christ to his apostles at the time of their sending forth; and this is threefold. First, Touching their preparation for their journey; he forbids them to take much care, or to spend much time in furnishing themselves with victuals, money, or clothes; because they were to finish their journey speedily, and to return again to Christ their Master.

This command of our Saviour to his apostles, not to encumber themselves, when going forth to preach the gospel, teaches his ministers their duty to free themselves as much as possibly they can from worldly incumbrances, which may hinder them in their ministerial services, 2 Tim. ii. 4. "No man that warreth, entangleth himself with the affairs of this life." Secondly, Touching their lodging in their journey; Christ advises them not to change it, during their stay in one place; "But into whatsoever house they entered, they should there continue till they departed out of that place," that so they might avoid all show of lightness and inconsistency, and testify all gravity and staydness in their behaviour; this being a special means to gain reverence to their persons, and authority to their doctrine. Thirdly, Christ gives a special charge to his apostles concerning their carriage towards such as should refuse to give entertainment to them and their doctrine; they were to denounce the judgments of God against such contemners, "by shaking off the dust of their feet for a testimony against them." This action was emblematical, signifying that Almighty God would in like manner shake them off, as the vilest dust; for where the word is preached, it is for a testimony, either a testimony for, or against a people; for if the dust of a minister's feet whilst alive, and the ashes of his grace when dead, do bear witness against the despisers of the gospel, their sermons much more.

7 ¶ Now Herod the tetrarch heard of all that was done by him: and he was perplexed, because that it was said of some, that John was risen from the dead;

8 And of some, that Elias had appeared: and of others, that one of the old prophets was risen again.

9 And Herod said, John have I beheaded; but who is this of whom I hear such things? And he desired to see him.

The history of the holy Baptist's beheading by Herod, is briefly here hinted at by St. Luke, but not so largely set forth by him, as we find it by St. Matthew, chap. xiv. and St. Mark, chap. vi. See the notes there. That which St. Luke takes particular notice of, is, That great perplexity of mind, which Herod's guilty conscience did occasion; he had murdered John, and now is afraid, his ghost haunted him; "Herod was perplexed." Learn hence, That guilt is naturally troublesome and uneasy, it disturbs the peace and serenity of the mind, and fills the soul with storms and thunder. Guilt is always full of fear; every thing affrights the guilty: a bad man is a terror to himself, and needs no farther disquietment, than what his own guilty conscience doth occasion him.

10 ¶ And the apostles, when they were returned, told him all that they had done. And he took them, and went aside privately into a desert place, belonging to the city called Bethsaida.

11 And the people, when they knew it, followed him; and he received them, and spake unto them of the kingdom of God, and healed them that had need of healing.

St. Luke here gives a short account of several material passages, as, 1. Concerning the apostle's return to Christ after their first mission and sending forth; they acquaint their master how they had executed their office, and discharged the trust he had reposed in them. 2. He withdraws privately into a desert place from the multitude, that he might enjoy himself and his disciples; but there the people find him out and flock after him; and Christ, whose meat it was by day, and sleep by night, to do good, embraces the opportunity, bestowing upon their souls instruction, reproof, and counsel; upon their bodies health and healing; teaching us by his example, to mix spiritual alms with bodily relief. We must be in fee with the body sometimes, that we may come at the soul. Happy is that christian whom God hath made both able and willing to intermix spiritual alms with corporeal, and know how to feed two at once, soul and body both! This is the duty of all, but especially of spiritual persons; the Lord give us wisdom and grace to manage it to advantage.

12 And when the day began to wear away, then came the twelve, and said unto him, Send the multitude away, that they may go into the towns and country round about, and lodge, and get victuals; for we are here in a desert place.

13 But he said unto them, Give ye them to eat. And they said, We have no more than five loaves and two fishes; except we should go and buy meat for all this people.

14 For they were about five thousand men. And he said to his disciples, Make them sit down by fifties in a company.

15 And they did so, and made them all sit down.

16 Then he took the five loaves, and the two fishes, and looking up to heaven he blessed them, and brake, and gave to the disciples to set before the multitude.

17 And they did eat, and were all filled: and there was taken up of fragments that remained to them, twelve baskets.

This miracle of our Saviour's feeding five thousand with five loaves and two fishes, is recorded by all the evangelists, and in the history of it, we have these observable particulars: 1. The seasonable expression of the disciples' pity towards the multitude, who had long fasted, and wanted now the ordinary comforts and supports of life; it well becomes the ministers of Christ to have respect to the bodily wants, as well as to the spiritual necessities of their people. Observe, 2. The motion which the disciples make to Christ on the behalf of the multitude: Send them away, that they may go into the towns and comrny and get victuals. Here was a strong charity, but a weak faith; a strong charity in desiring the people's relief, but a weak faith in supposing that they could no other way be relieved, but by sending them away; forgetting that Christ, who had healed the multitude miraculously, could also feed them miraculously whenever he pleased; all things being equally easy to an Almighty power. Observe, 3. Our Saviour's strange reply to the disciple's request, They need not depart, give ye them to eat. Need not depart, why? The people must either feed or famish; victuals they must have, and a dry desert will afford none; yet, says Christ to his disciples, Give ye them to eat. Alas! poor disciples, they had nothing for themselves to eat, how then should they give the multitude to eat: When Christ requires of us what we of ourselves are unable to perform, it is to discover to us our own impotency and weakness, to provoke us to look up to him, and to depend by faith on his almighty power. Observe, 4. What a poor and slender provision the Lord of the whole earth has for himself and his family, Five barley loaves and two fishes; teaching us, that these bodies of ours must be fed, but not pampered: our belly must not be our master much less our God. The end of food is to sustain nature; we must not stifle her with a gluttonous variety. And as the quality of the victuals was plain, so the quantity of it was small, five loaves, and two fishes; well might the disciples say, What are these among so many? The eye of sense and reason sees an utter impossibility of those effects which faith can easily apprehend, and a divine power more easily produce. Observe, 5. How Christ the great Master of the feast, doth marshal his guests, He commands them all to sit down by fifties in a company. None of them reply, "Sit down! but to what? Here are the mouths, but where's the meat? We may soon be set, but when shall we be served!" Not a word like this, but they obey and expect. Lord! how easy is it to trust to thy providence, and rely upon thy power, when there is corn in the barn, bread in the cupboard, money in the purse; but when our stores are empty, when we have nothing in hand, then to depend upon an invisible bounty, is a noble act of faith indeed. Observe, 6. The actions performed by our blessed Saviour: He blessed and brake, and gave the loaves to his disciples, and they to the multitude. 1. He blessed them, teaching us by his example never to use or receive the good creatures of God, without prayer and praise; never to sit down to our food as a beast to his fodder. 2. Christ brake the loaves; he could have multiplied them whole. Why then would he rather do it in the breaking? Perhaps to teach us that we may rather expect his blessing in the distribution of his bounty, than in the reservation of it. Scattering is the way to increasing, liberality is the way to riches. 3. Christ gave the loaves thus broken to the disciples, that they might distribute to the multitude. But why did Christ distribute by the disciples' hands? Doubtless to gain respect to his disciples from the people; and the same course doth our Lord take in a spiritual distribution; He that could feed the world by his own immediate hand, chuses rather by the hands of his ministers to divide the bread of life amongst his people. 7. The certainty and greatness of the miracle, They did all eat and were filled; they did eat, not a crumb or bit, but to satiety and fulness? all that were hungry did eat, and all that did eat were satisfied: and yet twelve baskets of fragments remain; more is left than was at first set on. 'Tis hard to say, which was the greatest miracle, the miraculous eating or the miraculous leaving. If we consider what they left, we may wonder that they eat any thing; if what they ate, that they left any thing. Lastly, these fragments, Though of barley-loaves and fish bones, must not be lost, but at our Saviour's command gathered up; the great housekeeper of the world will not allow the loss of his orts. Lord! how tremendous will their accounts be, who having large and plentiful estates, do consume them upon their lusts! how will they wish they had been born to poverty and want, when they appear to make up their accounts before God!

18 ¶ And it came to pass, as he was alone praying, his disciples were with him: and he asked them, saying, whom say the people that I am?

19 They answering, said, John the Baptist: but some say Elias: and others say, that one of the old prophets is risen again.

20 He said unto them, But whom say ye that I am? Peter answering, said, The Christ of God.

21 And he straitly charged them, and commanded them to tell no man that thing.

22 Saying, The son of man must suffer many things, and be rejected of the elders, and chief priests, and scribes, and be slain, and be raised the third day.

These verses relate to us a private conference which our Saviour had with his disciples, touching their own and others opinion concerning himself. Where Observe, 1. Our Saviour's inquiry, what the generality of the people thought and said of him, Whom do men say I am? Not as if Christ were ignorant, or did vain-gloriously inquire after the opinion of the multitude! but his intention and design was to settle and more firmly establish his disciples in the belief of his being the true and promised Messias. The disciples tell him, some took him to be John the Baptist, some Elias, some one of the prophets. 'Tis no new thing, it seems, to find diversity of judgments and opinions concerning Christ and the affairs of his kingdom. Observe, 2. Peter, as the mouth of all the apostles, and in their names, makes a full and open confession of Christ, acknowledging him to be the true and promised Messias; Thou art the Christ of God. Learn thence, That the veil of Christ's human nature did not keep the eye of his disciples' faith from discerning him to be truly and really God. Thou art the Christ of God. Observe, 3. The charge and special injunction given by Christ, to tell no man of him; that is, not commonly to publish, and openly to declare, him to be the Son of God, because, being in his state of humiliation, the glory of his divinity was to be concealed till his resurrection. He was then declared to be the Son of God with power. Rom. i. 4. Observe lastly, The great wisdom of our Saviour in acquainting his disciples with the near approach of his death and sufferings: The Son of man must suffer many things, &c. This our Saviour did, 1. To prevent that scandal and offence which otherwise they might have taken at his sufferings. 2. The better to fit and prepare them to bear that great trial when it did come. 3. To correct the error which they had entertained concerning the temporal kingdom of the Messias, and that he was to be a great and mighty prince here upon earth; for these reasons did Christ frequently acquaint his disciples with his sufferings.

23 ¶ And he said to them all, If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me.

24 For whosoever will save his life, shall lose it: but whosoever will lose his life for my sake, the same shall save it.

Observe here, 1. How our Saviour recommends his religion to every person's election and choice, not compelling any one by force and violence to embrace or entertain it: If any man will be my disciple, that is, if any man chooses and resolves to be a Christian. Observe, 2. Our Saviour's terms propounded; namely, self-denial, gospel-sufferings, and gospel-service. 1. Self-denial, let him deny himself; by which we are not to understand either the denying of our senses in matters of faith, or the renouncing of our reason in matters of religion; but a willingness to part with all our earthly comforts and temporal enjoyments for the sake of Christ, when called thereunto. They to whom we bear the greatest natural affection, even the wife of our bosom, and the offspring of our bowels, and those to whom we yield the highest reverence, and to whose commands we owe most entire obedience, as our fathers and mothers; if the authority of natural, civil, or ecclesiastical superiors should combine to tempt us to do what Christ forbids, yet Christ must be loved more than these, and obeyed before all these; yea, all these must be comparatively hated in respect of him. Farther, this precept requires us to deny our honour and reputation, our wealth and outward estate, our whole substance, and all our temporal good things, even life itself, when the interest of Christ and religion calls for it; otherwise we cannot be his disciples. 2. Gospel-sufferings; he must take up his cross daily: an allusion to a Roman custom, when a malefactor was to be crucified, he took his cross upon his shoulder, and carried it to the place of execution. Here note, That not the taking of the cross, but patient bearing of it, when God has made it, and laid it upon our shoulder, is the duty enjoined; let him take up his cross. 3. Gospel-service; let him follow me, says Christ; That is, obey my commands, and imitate my example: he must set my life and doctrine continually before him, and be daily correcting and reforming of his life by that rule and pattern. Observe, 4. The arguments urged by our Saviour to induce men to a willingness to lay down their lives for the sake of Christ and his holy religion; "He that will save his life, shall lose it; and he that is willing to lose his life for the sake of the gospel, shall find it;" intimating to us, 1. That the love of this temporal life is a great temptation to men to deny Christ, and to renounce his holy religion. 2. That the surest way to attain eternal life, is to lay down cheerfully our temporal life, when the glory of Christ, and the honour of religion, requires it at our hands.

25 For what is a man advantaged, if he gain the whole world, and lose himself, or be cast away?

Here our Saviour goes on to shew the folly of those that for saving their temporal lives will expose their eternal life, or the life of their souls, to hazard and danger; yea, sometimes by refusing to lay down our temporal life for Christ, we lose that also; which renders it the greatest folly in the world to refuse to part with any enjoyment, even life itself, at the call and command of Christ.

62 For whosoever shall be ashamed of me and of my words, of him shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he shall come in his own glory and in his Father's, and of the holy angels.

That is, Whosoever shall deny and disown me, either in my person, in my doctrine, or my members, for any fear or favour of man, he shall with shame be disowned by me, and rejected of me, at the great day. There are two passions which cause men to disown Christ in the day of temptation; namely, fear and shame. Many good men have been overcome by the former, as St. Peter and others; but we find not any good man in scripture guilty of the latter, namely, that denied Christ out of shame; this argues a rotten, unsound, and corrupt heart: if any man thinks it beneath his honour and quality to own the opposed truths, and despised members of Christ, Christ will think it beneath him to own such persons at the great day. Learn hence, 1. That such as are ashamed of Christ's doctrine, or members, are in God's account ashamed of Christ himself. 2. That such as either for fear dare not, or for shame will not, own the doctrine and members of Christ now, shall certainly find Christ ashamed to own and confess them at the great day.

27 But I tell of you of a truth, there be some standing here which shall not taste of death till they see the kingdom of God.

There is a threefold sense and interpretation of these words given by expositors. Some refer the words to the times of the Gospel after Christ's resurrection and ascension, when the gospel was propagated far and near, and the kingdom of God came with power. Learn thence, That where the gospel is powerfully preached, and cheerfully obeyed, there Christ cometh most gloriously in his kingdom. 2. Others understand these words, of Christ's coming and exercising his kingly power, in the destruction of Jerusalem, which some of the apostles, then standing by, lived to see. 3. Others (as most agreeable to the context) understand the words with reference to our Saviour's transfiguration; as if he had said, "Some of you, meaning Peter, James, and John, shall shortly see me upon mount Tabor, and that in such splendor and glory, as shall be a prelude, a shadow and representation of that glory which I shall appear in, when I shall come with power to judge the world at the great day." And whereas our Saviour saith not, there are some standing here which shall not die, but which shall not taste of death, till they have seen this glorious sight; this implies two things. 1. That after they had seen this transfiguration, they must taste of death as well as others. 2. That they should but taste of it, and no more. From whence learn, 1. That the most renowned servants of Christ, for faith, holiness, and service, must at length, in God's appointed time, taste and have experience of death, as well as others. 2. That although they must taste, yet they shall but taste of death; they shall not drink of the dregs of that bitter cup; though they fall by the hand of death, yet shall they not be hurt by it, but in the very fall be victorious over it.

28 ¶ And it came to pass about eight days after these sayings, he took Peter, and John, and James, and went up in a mountain to pray.

29 And, as he prayed, the fashion of his countenance was altered, and his raiment was white and glistering.

30 And, behold, there talked with him two men, which were Moses and Elias;

31 Who appeared in glory, and spake of his decease, which he should accomplish at Jerusalem.

32 But Peter, and they that were with him, were heavy with sleep: and when they were awake, they saw his glory, and the two men that stood with him.

33 And it came to pass, as they departed from him, Peter said unto Jesus, Master, it is good for us to be here; and let us make three tabernacles; one for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias: not knowing what he said.

34 While he thus spake, there came a cloud and overshadowed them; and they feared as they entered into the cloud.

35 And there came a voice out of the cloud, saying, This is my beloved Son, hear him.

36 And when the voice was past, Jesus was found alone: And they kept it close, and told no man in those days any of those things which they had seen.

Here we have recorded the history of our Saviour's transfiguration; when he laid, as it were, the garments of our frail humanity aside for a little season, and put on the robes of his divine glory, to demonstrate and testify the truth of his divinity; for this divine glory was an evidence of his divine nature, and also an emblem of that glory which he and his disciples, and all his faithful servants and followers, shall enjoy together in heaven. Observe, 1. The design of our Saviour in this his transfiguration, namely, to confirm his disciples' faith in the truth of his divine nature; he was therefore pleased to suffer the rays of his divinity to dart forth before their eyes, so far as they were able to bear it; his face shined with a pleasing brightness, and his raiment with such a glorious lustre, as did at once both delight and dazzle the eyes of his disciples. Observe, 2. The choice which our Saviour makes of the witness of his transfiguration; his three disciples, Peter, James, and John: but why disciples? why three disciples? and why these three? 1. Why disciples? Because this transfiguration was a type of heaven: Christ vouchsafes therefore the earnest and first fruit of that glory only to saints upon earth, on whom he intended to bestow the full crop in due time. Why three disciples? Because three were sufficient to witness the truth of this miracle. Judas was unworthy of this favour, yet, lest he should murmur or be discontented, others are left out as well as he. 3. But why these three, rather than others? Probably, 1. Because these three were more eminent for great zeal and love towards Christ; now the most eminent manifestation of glory are made to those that are most excellent in grace. 2. Because these three disciples were to be witnesses of Christ's agony and passion, to prepare them for which, they are here made witnesses of his transfiguration. This glorious vision upon mount Tabor, fitted them to abide the terror of mount Calvary. Observe, 3. The glorious attendants upon our Saviour at his transfiguration; they were two men, Moses and Elias. This being but a glimpse of heaven's glory, and not a full manifestation of it, only two of the glorified saints attended it, and these two attendants are not two angels but two men, because men were more nearly concerned than angels in what was done; but why Moses and Elias more than any other men? 1. Because Moses was the giver of the law, and Elias the greatest of the prophets: now both these attending upon Christ, did shew the consent of the law and the prophets with Christ, and their accomplishment and fulfilling in him. 2. Because these two men were the most laborious servants of Christ; both adventured their lives in God's cause, and therefore were highly honoured by him; for they that honour him, he will honour. Observe, 4. That carriage and behaviour of the disciples upon this great occasion: 1. They supplicate Jesus; they do not pray to Moses or Elias, but to Christ; Master, it is good being here: O what a ravishing comfort and satisfaction, is the communion and fellowship of the saints! but the presence of Christ amongst them, renders their joys transporting. 2. They proffer their service to further the continuance of what they did enjoy. Let us make three tabernacles: saints will stick at no cost or pains for the enjoyment of Christ's presence, and his people's company. Learn hence, that a glimpse of heaven's glory is sufficient to raise a soul into extasy, and to make it of love with worldly company. 2. That we are apt to desire more of heaven upon earth, than God will allow us: we would have the heavenly glory to come down to us, but unwilling by death to go up to that. Observe, 5. How a cloud was put before the disciples' eyes, when the divine glory was manifested unto them; partly to allay the lustre and resplendency of that glory, which they were swallowed up with: the glory of heaven is insupportable in this imperfect state, we cannot bear it unveiled: and partly did this cloud come to hinder their looking and prying farther into this glory: we must be content to behold God through a cloud darkly here, ere long we shall see him face to face. Observe, 6. The testimony given out of the cloud by God the Father concerning Jesus Christ the Son; This is my beloved Son, hear him. Where note, 1. The dignity of his person, he is my Son, for nature co-essential, and for duration co-eternal, with his Father. 2. The endeared of his relation, He is my beloved Son, because of his conformity to me, and compliance with me: Likeness is the cause of love, and an union or harmony of wills, causes a mutual endearing of affections.

3. The authority of his doctrine, Hear ye him: "not Moses and Elias, who were servants, but Christ my Son, whom I have authorized and appointed to be the great prophet and teacher of my church, therefore adore him as my Son, believe in him as your Saviour, and hear him as your Law-giver." The obedient ear honours Christ more than either the gazing eye, the adoring knee, or the applauding tongue.

37 ¶ And it came to pass, that on the next day, when they were come down from the hill, much people met him.

38 And, behold, a man of the company cried out, saying, Master, I beseech thee, look upon my son, for he is mine only child:

39 And, lo, a spirit taketh him, and he suddenly crieth out, and it teareth him that he foameth again, and, bruising him, hardly departed from him.

40 And I besought thy disciples to cast him out, and they could not.

41 And Jesus, answering, said, O faithless and perverse generation! how long shall I be with you, and suffer you? Bring thy son hither.

42 And as he was yet a coming, the devil threw him down, and tare him: And Jesus rebuked the unclean spirit, and healed the child, and delivered him again to his father.

Observe here, 1. The person brought to Jesus for help and healing, one bodily possessed by Satan, who rent, and tore him, but rather to torment than to dispatch him: O how does Satan delight to do hurt to the bodies, as well as the souls of mankind! Lord! abate his power, since his malice will not be abated. Observe, 2. The person who represented his sad condition to our Saviour: his compassionate father, who kneeled down and cried out, Need will make a person both humble and eloquent; every one has a tongue to speak for himself, happy he that keeps a tongue for others. Observe, 3. The physician which this distressed person is brought unto, first to the disciples, and then to Jesus: we never apply ourselves importunately to the God of power, till we despair of the creature's help. But what hindered the disciples, that they could not cast this evil spirit out? Why it was their unbelief; O faithless generation! Learn thence, That the great obstacle and obstruction of all blessings, both spiritual and temporal, coming to us, is our wretched infidelity and unbelief. Observe, 4. The sovereign power and absolute authority which Christ had when on earth over the devil and his angels! Jesus re- buked him, cast him out, and charged him to return no more into him. This was a proof and demonstration of the god-head of Christ, that in his own name, that is, by his own power and authority, he could and did cast the devils out.

43 And they were all amazed at the mighty power of God; but while they wondered every one at all things which Jesus did, he said unto his disciples, 44 Let these sayings sink down into your ears: for the Son of man shall be delivered into the hands of men.

45 But they understood not this saying, and it was hid from them, that they perceived it not: and they feared to ask him of that saying.

Observable it is, How frequently our Saviour forewarned his disciples of his approaching sufferings, and as the time of his sufferings drew nearer, he did more frequently warn them of his death. But all was little enough to arm them against the scandal of the cross; and to reconcile them to the thoughts of his suffering condition; how an ordinary prophet should be delivered into the hands of men; they could easily understand, but how the Messiah should be so treated they could not apprehend; for the disciples had take up the common opinion, That the Messiah was to be a temporal prince, and should conquer and reign here upon earth; and how to reconcile this with being killed, they could no ways apprehend; and they were afraid to be too particular in their enquiries about it. Now, from Christ's so frequently warning his disciples of his approaching sufferings, we may gather, That we can never hear, either too often or too much, of the doctrine of the cross, nor be too frequently instructed in our duty to prepare for a suffering state; as Christ went from his cross to his crown, from a state of abasement to a state of exaltation, so must all his disciples and followers expect likewise.

46 ¶ Then there arose a reasoning among them, which of them should be greatest.

47 And Jesus perceiving the thought of their heart, took a child, and set him by him.

48 And said unto them, Whosoever shall receive this child in my name receiveth me: and whosoever shall receive me, receiveth him that sent me: for he that is least among you all, the same shall be great.

And it may justly seem a wonder, that when our blessed Saviour discoursed so frequently with his disciples about his sufferings, that they should at the same time be disputing amongst themselves about precedence and pre-eminency, which of them should be the greatest, the first in place, and the highest in dignity and honour; but from this instance we may learn, That the holiest and best of men are too prone to ambition, ready to catch at the bait of honour, to effect a precedence before, and superiority over others: here the apostles themselves were touched with the itch of ambition; to cure this, our Saviour sets before them a little child, as the proper emblem of humility; shewing that they ought to be as free from pride and ambition as a young child, which effects nothing of precedence. Such as are of the highest eminency in the church, ought to be singularly adorned with the grace of humility, looking upon themselves as lying under the greatest obligation to be most eminently useful and serviceable to the Church's good.

49 ¶ And John answered and said, Master, we saw one casting out devils in thy name; and we forbade him, because he followeth not with us.

50 And Jesus said unto him, Forbid him not: for he that is not against us, is for us.

Observe here, 1. St. John's relation of a matter of fact to our Saviour, namely, his forbidding one to cast out devils in Christ's name, that did not follow Christ as they did: for though only the disciples which followed Christ had a commission to work miracles, yet were there others, no enemies to Christ, who, in imitation of the disciples, did attempt to do the like; and God was pleased, for the honour of his son, in whose name they cast out devils, to give them sometimes success. Observe, 2. The action of the disciples towards this person: we forbade, because he followeth not with us; where is observable, Their rashness in forbidding him of their own heads, before they had consulted Christ about it; and their envy and emulation in that they were grieved and discontented that good was done, because they did not do it: it is as hard a matter to look upon the gifts of others without envy, as it is to look upon our own without pride. Observe, 3. Our Saviour's reply, Forbid him not. Because our Saviour knew, that this action of casting out devils in his name would someway redound to his glory, although he undertook the matter without direction from Christ: we ought not to censure and condemn those who do that which is good in itself, though they fail in the manner of their doing it.

51 ¶ And it came to pass, when the time was come that he should be received up, he stedfastly set his face to go to Jerusalem.

The time now drew on, wherein our Saviour was to be received up into heaven, and accordingly he sets his face to go to Jerusalem, that he might there suffer, and from thence ascend. Now here we have observable, 1.

That although Jerusalem was the nest of his enemies, the stage upon which his bloody sufferings were to be acted, the fatal place of his death, yet, nothing terrified with danger, he sets his face for Jerusalem; that is, come what will, he will go with an invincible courage and resolution. Learn thence, That although Christ had a perfect and exact knowledge of all the bitter sufferings he was to undergo, for and on behalf of his members, yet it did not in the least dishearten him in, or discourage him from, that great and glorious undertaking. Observe, 2. That though Christ was first to suffer before he did ascend, and to be lifted up upon the cross, before received up into heaven, yet is there no mention of his death here, but of his ascension only; as if all thoughts of death were swallowed up in his victory over death; teaching us, by his example, to overlook our sufferings and death, as not worthy to be named or mentioned with that glory which we are received into, after death. The Evangelist does not say the time was come when he should suffer, but when he should be received up.

52 And sent messengers before his face: and they went and entered into a village of the Samaritans, to make ready for him.

53 And they did not receive him, because his face was as though he would go to Jerusalem.

Our Saviour was now going from Galilee to Jerusalem, and being to pass through a village of Samaria, he sent messengers before him to prepare entertainment for him. The Son of God, who was heir of all things, sends to, and sues for, a lodging in a Samaritan cottage. O blessed Saviour, how can we be abased enough for thee, who thus neglected thyself for us! It was thy pleasure to appear, not in the figure of a prince, but in the form of a servant, yet the people in the Samaritan village would not receive him. Strange! to hear the Son of God sue for a lodging, and be denied; but the reason was, the difference of religion which was between the Jews and Samaritans: the Jews worshipped at the temple in Jerusalem, the Samaritans at a temple of their own, built upon mount Gerizim. Upon the building of this new temple, there arose so great a feud between the Jews and Samaritans, and in process of time such an implacable hatred, that they would not shew common civility to one another. A Samaritan's bread to a Jew, was no better than swine's flesh: They would rather thirst than drink a draught of Samaritan water. Hence we learn, That no enmity is so desperate, as that which arises from matters of religion.

54 And when his disciples, James and John saw this, they said, Lord, wilt thou that we command fire to come down from heaven, and consume them, even as Elias did?

Here observe, 1. The crime which these men were guilty of: no affront must be accounted little, no indignity light, that is offered to the Son of God. But these Samaritans did not revile Christ, nor any of his retinue, that we read of; they did not violently assault him, they did not follow him with stones in their hands, or blasphemies in their mouths, but the wrong and injury was only negative, They received him not; they denied him a night's lodging, and this not out of any dislike to his person, but from an antipathy against his nation. Observe, 2. The carriage of the disciples upon this occasion; it was thus far commendable, that from the endeared love which they bore to their master, they did highly resent the churlish denial of an act of kindness towards him. A gracious heart is holily impatient at the sight of any indignity offered to Christ; but their fault was, that they were too far transported with passion and revenge, even to desire the death and destruction of the uncivil Samaritans; Wilt thou that we command fire to come down from heaven and consume them? They do not say Master, will it please thee, who art Lord of the creatures, to command fire to come down? Nor did they say, If it be thy pleasure, command us to call down fire; but Wilt thou that we command fire? This savours too much of pride, cruelty, and revenge; so dangerous is a misguided zeal.

55 But he turned, and rebuked them, and said, Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of.

56 For the Son of man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them. And they went to another village.

Here we have our Saviour's censure of the rash and hot motion of his disciples, which proceeded first from ignorance of themselves, Ye know not what spirit ye are of; ye are not now under the rough and sour dispensation of the law, but under the calm and gentle institution of the gospel, which designs universal love, peace, and good-will to all mankind. Hence learn, first, That a cruel and revengeful spirit is directly contrary to the design and temper of Christianity. Secondly, That no difference in religion, no pretence of zeal for God, can warrant and justify such a spirit and temper. Again, This rashness in the disciples proceeded from their ignorance of Christ their Lord and Master, as well as of themselves; The Son of man did not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them; that is, the proper intent and design of my coming was to save and not destroy, though the accidental event of it may be otherwise, through the malice and perverseness of men. Learn, That it was the design of Christ, and his holy religion, to discountenance all fierceness, rage, and cruelty, in men, one towards another, and to inspire them universally with a spirit of love and unity. Christ is so far from allowing us to persecute them that hate us, that he forbids us to hate them that persecute us.

57 ¶ And it came to pass, that as they went in the way, a certain man said unto him, Lord, I will follow thee whithersoever thou goest.

58 And Jesus said unto him, Foxes have holes, and birds of the air have nests, but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head.

Observe here, 1. A person resolving to follow Christ : a good resolution, if made deliberately and wisely, not for sinister ends, or secular advantages, which it is to be feared was the case here, by our Saviour's answer ; For, says he, foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of man has not where to lay his head : as if Christ had said, " My condition in the world is very poor, I have no house of residence that I call my own, the birds of the air have their fixed nests, and the beasts of the earth have their dens and holes, but I have no fixed habitation ; therefore if you think to follow me for the sake of worldly advantage, you will find yourself greatly disappointed." Learn hence, That such men will find themselves miserably mistaken, and greatly disappointed, who expect to gain any thing by following of Christ, but their souls salvation. It was a common opinion among the Jews, that the disciples of the Messiah should get wealth and honour by following of him. 'Tis likely what this person said, proceeded from this opinion : accordingly, Christ discourages him from such expectation, by laying before him, his mean, poor, and low condition, in which he was to be followed by his disciples : as if Christ had said, " If you expect temporal advantages by following of me you will be much mistaken, for I have nothing I can call my own."

59 And he said unto another, Follow me : But he said, Lord suffer me first to go and bury my father.

60 Jesus said unto him, Let the dead bury their dead ; but go thou and preach the kingdom of God.

We are not to suppose by this prohibition, that Christ disallows or disapproves of any civil office from one person to another, much less of a child to a parent, either living or dying ; but he lets us know, 1. That no office of love and service to man must be preferred before our duty to God, to whom we owe our first and chief obedience. 2. That lawful and decent offices become sinful, when they hinder greater duties. 3. That such as are called by Christ to preach the gospel, must mind that alone, and leave inferior duties to inferior persons : as if Christ had said, " Others will serve well enough to bury the dead, but thou that art called to minister unto God, must do that unto which thou art called." Under the law, the priests might not come near a dead corpse, nor meddle with the interment of their own parents, unto which our Saviour here probably alludes.

61 And another also said, Lord, I will follow thee : but let me first go bid them farewel which are at home at my house.

62 And Jesus said unto him, No man having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God.

Here we have another person that promiseth to follow Christ, but desireth leave first to settle the affairs of his family, and to take leave of his friends : Our Saviour tells him. If he would be one of his ministers, he must be like a ploughman, who looks forward, and not backward, or he will never make his furrows right : they will either be too deep or too narrow ; he must mind his plough, and nothing else. Thus must they that are called to the work of the ministry, mind it wholly, attend to that alone ; their whole time, their whole strength, must be devoted to it ; the things of the world are things behind them, they must not look back upon them : nothing can justify a minister concerning himself with the incumbrances of worldly business, but only perfect necessity for the support of himself and his family. Again, ploughing work is hard work, a strong and steady hand is required for it ; he that ploughs, must keep on, and make on balks of the hardest ground he meets with ; verily, no difficulties must discourage either ministers or people in the way of their duty.

CHAP. X.

AFTER these things, the Lord appointed other seventy also, and sent them two and two before his face into every city, and place, whither he himself would come.

The Captain-general of our salvation, Christ Jesus, having called, commissioned, and sent forth his twelve apostles, as great commanders, to subdue his native kingdom of Israel to himself, at the sixth chapter of his gospel in this chapter he sendeth after them a band of seventy auxiliary forces to aid and assist them ; After these things, the Lord appointed other seventy disciples, and sent them two and two before his face. Where note, 1. The person commissioning and sending them forth ; Christ himself. Thence learn, That none ought to take upon them the office of preaching, or other ministerial functions in the church, till thereunto called by Christ himself. The twelve apostles, and seventy disciples, had an immediate mission from Christ himself ; all his ministers now are called mediately, and receive their authority from Christ by the hands of the governors of his church. Note, 2. The manner of their sending, two and two in a company, partly to make their message of more authority, partly to testify their mutual consent in the doctrine they taught, and partly to comfort and encourage, to assist and support each other. In imitation of this example, the Jesuits send forth their emissaries by pairs, Jesuitæ semper sunt bini, &c. Learn hence, That the ministers of the gospel do stand in great need of the mutual help and comfort of the united assistance and encouragement of each other, in the weighty duties of their calling and function. Our Saviour, in the next verse, compare his ministers to harvest labourers, who are to help and assist one another, the strong endeavouring to strengthen the hand of the weak. But, Lord ! what tears are sufficient to bewail the want of love and unity, yea, the prevalence of that envy and malignity, which is found too often among the ministers of the gospel ! So that instead of going forth two by two, happy is he that is alone in a place. Well might Melancthon bless God, when he lay a dying, that he was going to a place where he should be freed from the implacable hatred of divines ; this is, and ought to be, for a lamentation.

2 Therefore said he unto them, the harvest truly is great, but the labourers are few : pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he would send forth labourers into his harvest.

Note here, 1. That God's church is an harvest field. 2. That the ministers of God are labourers in his harvest, under God the Lord of the harvest. 3. That to God alone doth it belong to send forth labourers into his harvest, and none must thrust themselves in, till God sends them forth ; Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that he would send forth labourers. 4. That the number of faithful labourers is comparatively small and few : the scribes and pharisees in the Jewish harvest field are many ; yet, says Christ, The labourers are few. 5. That it is the church's duty to pray, and that earnestly and incessantly, to God the Lord of the harvest, to increase the number of faithful labourers ; and to send forth more labourers into his harvest.

3 Go your ways : behold, I send you forth as lambs among wolves.

4 Carry neither purse, nor scrip, nor shoes : and salute no man by the way.

Our Saviour, 1. Arms his disciples against the difficulties, dangers, and discouragements, which they might meet with in the course of their ministry, by telling them, he sent them forth as lambs among wolves ; thereby intimating, that the enemies of the gospel have as great an inclination, from their malicious nature, to devour and destroy the ministers of Christ, as the wolves have, from their natural temper, to devour lambs ; Behold, I send you forth as lambs among wolves. Our Saviour directs them, in this their first expedition to preach the gospel, to commit themselves to the gracious care and good providence of God, both for provision and protection ; Carry neither purse, nor scrip, nor staff, says St. Matthew ; as if he had said, Trust God with the care of your lives, rely upon his providence both for protection and provision ; yet must we take notice, that this was only a temporary command, given to the disciples for this particular journey, which they were quickly to dispatch ; for in the general, Christ allows his ministers, as well as others, to exercise a prudent and provident care for themselves, and their families. And as it is the minister's duty to trust God in the use of prudential means for their maintenance, so it is the people's duty to take care for their minister's comfortable subsistence. The workman is worthy of his meat, says our Saviour ; that is, of all necessary supplies ; he is worthy of a comfortable subsistence, and, where it may be had, of an honourable maintenance.

5 And in whatsoever house ye enter, first say, Peace be to this house.

6 And if the son of peace be there, your peace shall rest upon it : if not, it shall turn to you again.

Here our blessed Saviour directs his disciples how to manage themselves in the executing of their office, Into whatsoever house ye enter, first say, Peace be to this house, they must wish peace to the sons of peace, yea to the enemies of peace also ; and as their peace shall rest upon the one, so shall it return from the other. Peace be to this house is a fit salutation for them to use, who were the disciples and ambassadors of the Prince of Peace ; and very agreeable to the gospel they were to preach, which was a gospel of peace : and 't was a prayer as well as a salutation : the disciples were to speak it not from the mouth only, but from the heart also. Peace is the music which both men and angels are delighted with, and the Christian religion is the greatest promoter and preserver of it, that commands us to pray for peace, to follow after peace, to part with our coat and cloak ; that is, with our civil rights, for peace ; and, if it be possible, to live peaceably with all men. Observe, 2. As the injunction given by our Saviour to his disciples to deliver a message of peace, first say, Peace be to this house ; so the prediction of what should befall them in the delivery of this their message. Their salvation, though it be peace, yet will not find a welcome and entertainment with all persons, but only with the sons of peace, If the sons of peace be there, your peace shall rest upon it. Observe, 3. An encouragement not to be afraid of delivering their message, though it wanted success, If your peace rest not, it shall return to you again. Learn, 1. That as there was at the first preaching of the gospel, so there is, and always will be, some that are sons of peace, and others that are enemies of peace. 2. That this peace will rest on none but those that are fit to receive it. That though it doth not rest, yet it shall not be lost, but return again to those that publish it. Ministers can but say, Peace be to this house, they cannot make it, rest there ; we can offer terms of peace to a lost world, but cannot compel men to accept them ; and, if they finally refuse them, We shall be a sweet savour unto God, as well as in them that perish, as in them that are saved.

7 And in the same house remain, eating and drinking such things as they give : for the labourer is worthy of his hire. Go not from house to house.

8 And into whatsoever city ye enter, and they receive you, eat such things as are set before you.

9 And heal the sick that are therein, and say unto them, The kingdom of God is come nigh unto you.

10 But into whatsoever city ye enter, and they receive you not, go your ways out into the streets of the same, and say, 11 Even the very dust of your city which cleaveth on us, we do wipe off against you: notwithstanding be ye sure of this, that the kingdom of God is come nigh unto you.

12 But I say unto you, that it shall be more tolerable in that day for Sodom, than for that city.

Here our Saviour gives his disciples sundry directions, how to manage themselves in this expedition for preaching the gospel. He enjoins them, 1. To observe the rules of decency in going from place to place, having entered an house to continue there, not changing their lodging, and going from house to house, thereby avoiding all shew of lightness and inconstancy, and testifying all gravity and stayedness in their behaviour; this being a special mean to win authority to their persons and ministry. 2. He gives them a power to work miracles for the confirming of the doctrine which they preached; Heal the sick that are therein. This was necessary, partly to procure reverence to their persons, being poor and unlearned men: and partly to gain credit and authority to their doctrine: for the doctrine of faith in the Messias, as now come and exhibited in the flesh, being a strange and new doctrine to the Jews, the truth and certainty of it was to be extraordinarily ratified and confirmed by working miracles: one sort of which was, healing of diseases in an extraordinary manner. Observe, 3. How Christ encourages his disciples against the want of success; he bids them denounce the judgments of God against such contemners of their doctrine, by shaking off the dust of their feet; which action was emblematical, and signified, that God in like manner would shake off them, and esteem them no better than the vilest dust. Learn hence, That those which despise the message that the ministers of the gospel bring, shall hereafter find the dust of their feet, and the ashes of their graves, to give a judicial testimony against them in the day of Christ; wherever the word is preached, it is for a testimony, either a testimony for, or against a people. For, if the dust of a minister's feet bear witness against a people, their sermons much more. Observe lastly, The dreadful judgment denounced by our Saviour against the contemners of his disciples' doctrine; Verily it shall be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment than for that city. Where note, 1. That there shall be a day of judgment. 2. That in the day of judgment some sinners shall fare worse than others. 3. That of all sinners, the condition of such shall be saddest at the day of judgment, who, living under the gospel, die after all in their impenitency and infidelity; It shall be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrah than for that city.

13 Woe unto thee, Chorazin: woe unto thee, Bethsaida: for if the mighty works had been done in Tyre and Sidon, which have been done in you, they had a great while ago repented, sitting in sackcloth and ashes.

14 But it shall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon at the Judgment than for you.

15 And thou, Capernaum, which art exalted to heaven, shalt be thrust down to hell.

These cities in Galilee, Chorazin, Bethsaida, and Capernaum, having been the places where Christ preached and wrought his miracles, they have a woe denounced here against them, for their contempt of Christ, and the offers of his grace, Woe unto thee, Chorazin, &c. The higher a people rise under the means, the lower they fall if they miscarry. They that have been nearest to conversion, being not converted, shall have the greatest condemnation when they are judged: Capernaum's sentence will exceed Sodom's for severity, because she exceeded Sodom in the enjoyment of means and mercy. Observe here, 1. Capernaum's privilege enjoyed. She was lifted up to heaven: that is, enjoyed privileges above all other places, namely, the presence, preaching, and miracles, of our Saviour. Observe, 2. Capernaum's doom denounced, Thou shalt be thrust down to hell; that is, thy condition shall be sadder than those that never heard of a Saviour, even Tyre and Sidon, Sodom and Gomorrah; those rude and barbarous nations, out of the pale of the church, shall be in an easier state and condition, than those that have enjoyed gospel-ordinances and church-privileges, but not improved them. Learn hence, 1. That gospel-ordinances enjoyed are a mighty honour and advancement to the poorest persons and obscurest plagues. Thou, Capernaum, art exalted to heaven. 2. That gospel-ordinances, and church-privileges enjoyed, but not improved, provoke Almighty God to inflict the sorest judgments upon a people. Thou that art exalted to heaven, shalt be thrust down to hell.

16 He that heareth you, heareth me: and he that despiseth you, despiseth me: and he that despiseth me, despiseth him that sent me.

Here our Saviour encourages his ministers to faithfulness in their office, by assuring them, that he should reckon and esteem all the kindness shewn to them, as done unto himself: He that receiveth you, receiveth me:

he that despiseth you, despiseth me. Where note, That all the offices of love and respect, of kindness and charity, which we shew to the ministers or members of Christ, for his sake, Christ reckons it has done unto himself. Note farther, That the contempt of the message and messengers of the gospel, runs much higher than men are aware of. They think it no great matter to slight or neglect the messengers of Christ: but verily, that contempt lies in the face and authority of Christ himself, who gave them their commission; yea, in the very face of God the Father, who gave Christ his commission; and accordingly they are called God's mouth, Jer. xv. 19. their message and their mission being both from him: nay farther, this sin strikes at our own souls, and we are injurious to them as well as unto Christ, he that despiseth you, despiseth me: yet certainly no age was never deeper drenched in the guilt of this sin, than the present age is.

17 ¶ And the seventy returned again with joy, saying, Lord, even the devils are subject unto us through thy name.

18 And he said unto them, I beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven.

Observe here, 1. The seventy disciples return to give Christ an account of the success of their expedition: they return as victors, with joy and triumph, shewing Christ the trophies of their conquest, Lord, even the devils are subject unto us through thy name; the weapons of their warfare were not carnal, but spiritual and mighty through Christ; the powers of darkness cannot stand, but must fall before the power of Christ; the devils are no match for Christ, no, not for the meanest of the ministers of Christ, who go forth in his name, armed with his authority and power. Observe, 2. Our Saviour's reply to the seventy disciples upon this occasion: I beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven. A twofold interpretation is given of these words: 1. Some look upon them as a secret rebuke given by our Saviour to the seventy for that excess of joy, and mixture of vain-glory, which was found with them upon the account of those extraordinary gifts and abilities of casting out devils, and healing diseases, which were conferred upon them. I beheld Satan, says Christ, falling like lightning from heaven: as if Christ had said, "take heed of being puffed up with pride, upon the account of those endowments which I have bestowed upon you: remember Lucifer, the prince of pride, how he fell down from heaven by his arrogancy, and labour you to ascend thither by humility." The words in this sense afford this instruction: That those whom Christ has bestowed the greatest measure of spiritual graces, ministerial gifts, and temporal blessings upon, ought to be very watchful against that hateful sin of pride, which has ruined and destroyed so many thousands of angels and men. 2. Some understand this fall of Satan not literally, but figuratively, and mystically, of his ruin by the power and preaching of the gospel; as if Christ had said, I know that this is no vain boast of yours, no vaunt nor brag of your valour, that devils are conquered by your courage, for when I first sent you forth to preach the gospel, and armed you with divine power, I easily foresaw that the devil's kingdom would shake about his ears, and that his power would be ruined by the power of the gospel, and that wherever you preached, Satan's strength and power should vanish like a flash of lightning suddenly and irrecoverably. Learn hence, That the powerful and efficacious preaching of the gospel is the special means ordained and appointed by Christ, for the ruin and subversion of Satan's kingdom in the world; as the gospel is the power of God unto salvation to them that believe and obey it; so it is the power of God unto destruction to Satan, and all that fight under his banner against it.

19 Behold, I give unto you power to tread on serpents and scorpions, and over all the power of the enemy; and nothing shall by any means hurt you.

Our Lord finding that his seventy ambassadors had managed their former commission so well, he here enlarged it, adding thereunto a promise of divine protection, Behold, I give you power to tread on serpents, and nothing shall hurt you: as if Christ had said, Go forth again in this armour of power, with which I have girt you, and I warrant you sword-free and shot-free, nothing shall by any means hurt you, neither strength nor stratagem shall overcome you. Neither the power, the presence, nor protection of God shall be wanting to any of Christ's ministers or members, who go forth in his strength against the spiritual enemies of their salvation: as we have a promise of power in this text to enable us to resist the devil, so we have a promise of success elsewhere upon our resisting him: Resist the devil and he will fly from you. St. James iv. 7.

20 Notwithstanding, in this rejoice not, that the spirits are subject unto you: but rather rejoice, because your names are written in heaven.

In these words of our Saviour, there is something corrective and something directive; the corrective part lies in the first word, wherein Christ checks the suspected excesses of their joy for victories gained over evil spirits, In this rejoice not: that is, let not your hearts too much overflow with joy upon this occasion. The negation is not absolute, but comparative only. Christ doth not forbid, but only qualify and moderate their joy, that the spirits are subject to you, that is, the devils. Where note, 1. That though the evil angels by their fall have lost their happy condition, yet not their original constitution; their honour, but not their nature: they are spirits still. 2. The subjection of those evil spirits to the power of Christ, is not a free and professed, but an involuntary and imposed subjection, like that of a slave to his lord, whether he will or no. Learn hence, 1. That evil spirits are subject to the power of Christ, not only to his personal but to his ministerial power. 2. That it is matter of great joy to see evil spirits brought into subjection by the power of Christ: to see the evil spirit of pride and contention, of envy and malice, of error and falsehood, of jealousy and self-love, of animosity and division, not only chained but changed; to see not only an unwilling subject, but a subjection of the will, given to Christ, is matter of great joy and unspeakable rejoicing. The directive part of our Saviour's words lies in the latter part of the verse, but rather rejoice that your names are written in heaven: There are no literal records in the court of heaven, no pen or ink, paper or parchment, but to be written in heaven, is to have a title to eternal life, and to be made meet for the inheritance of the saints in light. Learn, 1. That God has in heaven a book of life; a book written with the golden rays and beams of his own eternal love. 2. That there are names written in this book. 3. That persons may know that their names are written in that book, otherwise they could not rejoice, for no man can rejoice in an unknown good. 4. That it is greater matter of joy and rejoicing, to know that our names are written in heaven, than to have a power to cast out devils here on earth. A man may have power to cast forth devils out of others, and yet at the same time the devil may have power in and over himself. "Therefore in this rejoice not, that the devils are subject unto you, but rather rejoice, that your names are written in heaven." If you say, With what spectacles shall we read at such a distance? Who will ascend up into heaven, to see whether his name be written there? Or who can send a messenger thither to search the records? I answer, Turn thine eyes inward: if the name of God be written in thy heart, thy name is certainly written in heaven; if you in your daily actions write out a copy of God's book (the blessed bible) here below, assure yourselves the hand of God has written your names in his book above; that is, you shall certainly be saved.

21 ¶ In that hour Jesus rejoiced in spirit, and said, I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, that thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes; even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight.

22 All things are delivered to me of my Father: and no man knoweth who the Son is but the Father: and who the Father is, but the Son, and he to whom the Son will reveal him.

Here we find our Saviour glorifying his Father, and magnifying himself. 1. He glorifies his Father for the wise and free dispensation of his gospel-grace to the meanest and most ignorant persons, whilst the great and learned men of the world undervalued and despised it; "I thank thee, Father, that thou hast revealed these things to babes." Learn hence, 1. That till God reveals himself, his nature and will, no man can know either what he is, or what he requires; Thou hast revealed. 2. That the wise and knowing men in the world, have in all ages despised the mysteries of the gospel, and have therefore been judiciously blinded by God: Thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent. When men shut their eyes against the clearest light, and say, they will not see, God closes their eyes, and says, they shall not see. 3. That the most ignorant, if humble, and desirous of spiritual illumination, are in the readiest disposition to receive and embrace the gospel revelation; thou hast revealed them unto babes. 4. That this is not more pleasing to Christ than it is the pleasure of his Father; Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight. Observe, 2. Our Saviour magnifies himself, 1. His authority and commission, All things are delivered unto me; that is, all power is committed to me as Mediator from God the Father. 2. His office, to reveal his Father's will to a lost world: No man knoweth the Father but the Son, or the Son but the Father: that is, no man knoweth their essence and nature, their will and pleasure, their council and consent, their mutual compact and agreement betwixt themselves, for saving a lost world, but only themselves, and those to whom they have revealed it. Learn thence, That all saving knowledge of God is in, by, and through Christ; he, as the great Prophet of his church, reveals unto us the mind and will of God for our salvation; "None knoweth, but he to whom the Son revealeth."

23 ¶ And he turned him unto his disciples, and said privately, Blessed are the eyes which see the things that ye see.

24 For I tell you, that many prophets and kings have desired to see those things which ye see, and have not seen them; and to hear those things which ye hear, and have not heard them.

From the very first giving out of the promise of Christ to Adam after the fall, Gen. iii. 15, there was in all good men a longing desire and expectation to see that person who should be so great a blessing to mankind, prophets and kings desire to see the promised Messiah. Now, says our Saviour to his disciples, Blessed are you, for you have seen with the eyes of your body, what others only saw with the eyes of their mind: with your bodily eyes you have seen the promised Messiah coming in the flesh, and also the miracles to confirm you that I am He, have been wrought before your eyes; therefore blessed are the eyes of your body, which have beheld me corporeally. A sight of Christ, by a believing eye, much more by a glorified eye, is a blessed sight. Blessed are those eyes which see Christ in his dispensations of glory hereafter.

25 ¶ And, behold, a certain lawyer stood up, and tempted him, saying, Master, what shall I do to inherit eternal life?

26 He said unto him, What is written in the law? How readest thou?

27 And he answering, said, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbour as thyself.

28 And he said unto him, Thou hast answered right: this do, and thou shalt live.

Here we have a lawyer, that is, an interpreter and expounder of the law of Moses, tempting our Saviour; that is, making trial of him, whether he would deliver any doctrine contrary to the law of Moses; he propounds therefore a question, What should he do to inherit eternal life? Where note, 1. He believed the certainty of a future state. 2. He professes his desire of an eternal happiness in that state. 3. He declares his readiness to do something in order to the obtaining of that happiness. Hence learn, That all religion both natural and revealed, teaches men that good works are necessary to salvation, or that something must be done by them, who desire to enter into life, What shall I do to inherit eternal life? It is not talking well, and professing well, but doing well, that entitles us to heaven and eternal salvation, and this the very light of nature teaches. Observe, 2. Our Saviour's answer, What is written in the law? How readest thou? intimating to us, That the word and law of God, is the rule and measure of our duty; our guide to direct us in the way of eternal life: The man replies, That the law of God requires, "that we love God with all our heart, soul, and strength, and our neighbour as ourselves." Where note, 1. That the favour of all our affections, and particularly the supremacy of our love, is required by God as his right and due. Love must pass through and possess all the powers and faculties of our souls. The mind must meditate upon God, the will must choose and embrace him, the affections must take complacency and delight in him, the measure of loving God is to love him without measure. Note, 2. That the best evidence of our sincere love to God, is, the unfeigned love of our neighbour; love to man, is both a fruit and testimony of our love to God. For he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen? Note, 3. That as it is every man's duty to love himself, so is he to love his neighbour as himself; not as he does love himself, but as he ought to love himself; not with the same measure and degree of love, but in the same manner and kind of love, that we love ourselves. Do we love ourselves freely and readily, sincerely and unfeignedly, tenderly and compassionately, constantly and perseveringly? So should we love our neighbour also: though we are not required to love our neighbour as much as we love ourselves, yet are we commanded to love him like as we love ourselves. Observe lastly, Our Lord's reply, Thou hast answered right. This do and thou shalt live. Where note, That Christ intimates to him, that the law considered in itself could give life, but then a person must keep it perfectly and exactly, without the least deficiency, which is impossible to man in his fallen state; for the law is not weak to us, but we are weak to that, Rom. viii. 3. the law becomes weak through the weakness of our flesh: such as seek salvation by the works of the law, must keep the law perfectly and exactly: which being impossible in our fallen estate, Christ has obtained of his father, that for his sake our sincere, though imperfect obedience, shall find acceptance with God, and be available to our salvation.

29 But he, willing to justify himself, said unto Jesus, And who is my neighbour?

30 And Jesus answering, said, A certain man went down from Jerusalem to Jerico, and fell among thieves, which stripped him of his raiment, and wounded him, and departed, leaving him half dead.

31 And by chance there came down a certain priest that way; and when he saw him, he passed by on the other side.

32 And likewise a Levite, when he was at the place, came and looked on him, and passed by on the other side.

33 But a certain Samaritan, as he journeyed, came where he was; And when he saw him, he had compassion on him.

34 And went to him, and bound up his wounds, pouring in oil and wine, and set him on his own beast, and brought him to an inn, and took care of him.

35 And on the morrow, when he departed, he took out two-pence, and gave them to the host, and said unto him, Take care of him; and whatsoever thou spendest more, when I come again, I will repay thee.

36 Which now of these three, thinkest thou, was neighbour unto him that fell among the thieves?

37 And he said, he that shewed mercy on him. Then said Jesus unto him, Go and do thou likewise.

The design of our Saviour, in this parable, is to convince the lawyer, who put that question to him, Who is my neighbour? v. 29. that every one is, and ought to be accounted our neighbour, to whom God affords us an opportunity of doing good; contrary to the strait notion of the pharisees, that by the word neighbour, understood friends and kinsfolk, brethren by blood, neighbours by habitation, and persons of the same religion. Our Saviour by this parable taught him, that even strangers and professed enemies, every one that needeth our help and relief, is to be accounted our neighbour. To convince him hereof, Christ propounds this parable of a Jew that fell among thieves, who was neglected by his own countrymen, but relieved by a Samaritan, who though a professed enemy upon the score of religion, yet was so exceeding kind and charitable, that he became physician, surgeon, and host, and a real neighbour, to the unknown traveller, wounded by thieves in his journey to Jericho. From the whole, learn, 1. That every person in misery is the object of our mercy, our neighbour, and capable of our charity. 2. That no difference in religion, much less in some doubtful opinion, will excuse us from exercising acts of charity and compassion towards such as are really in want, and need our assistance: our holy and merciful religion makes all persons the objects of our compassion, who are indigent and helpless; though they be strangers and foreigners, heathens, or heretics, friends or enemies; yea, be they good or bad, holy or wicked, as we "have opportunity, we must do good unto all, and imitate the example of our merciful God, who is kind to the unthankful, and to the evil." 3. That real charity is an active, operative thing; it consists not in good words given to the distressed, nor in a compassionate beholding of them, nor in a pitiful mourning over them, but in positive acts of kindness towards them. The Samaritan here is an example of real and thorough charity: he turns his face towards the forlorn man, his feet hasten to him, his hand pours in wine and oil into his wounds, after which he sets him upon his own beast, brings him to the inn, stays with him all night, and the next day, because his recovery would be a work of time and expence, he leaves him; but first leaves money with the host, and a special charge to take care of him; with a punctual promise, that whatever was expended more should be repaid. Behold here an instance and pattern of a complete charity, managed with as much discretion as compassion; well might our Lord say to this person, and in him to every one of us, Go, and do thou likewise.

38 ¶ Now it came to pass, as they went, that he entered into a certain village: and a certain woman, named Martha, received him into her house.

Observe here, 1. The great work and business of our Saviour's life: it was to go about preaching the gospel. 2. The nature of the place which Christ at this time preached in, it was a poor village, Bethany, as some think. Christ did not only take care of populous cities, and great towns, but private villages and obscure places enjoyed also the blessing of his ministry. Our Saviour's example herein is instructive to his ministers, not to affect great auditories, and to preach only in populous cities, but to scatter the seed of the word in country villages, where are alike precious souls to be taken care of, and provided for; as Christ was sent himself, so he sends his ministers to preach the gospel to the poor. Observe 3. The party that entertained him in the village, Martha received him into her house; Martha is named, because she was probably the owner of the house. Though Christ had no house of his own, yet he had as many as pleased at his command; for wherever he had an heart, he was sure to have an house; Martha received him into her house.

39 And she had a sister called Mary which also sat at Jesus' feet, and heard his word.

Observe, 1. Both these sisters were holy and devout women, both had an honour and reverence for Christ, and both are forward to entertain him; these were sisters by grace as well as by nature; yea, they both for a time attended upon Christ's preaching. Mary (also) sat at Jesus' feet, implying, that Martha sat there too, till household occasions called her away: O how happy is that family, where all parties are agreed to receive and entertain the Lord Jesus Christ! Observe, 2. No sooner is Christ entered into Martha's house, but he falls a preaching; whilst they provide bodily food for him, he prepares spiritual bread for them; O that in our place and measure we might all imitate Christ in this! Can we come into any house or company, and find nothing to say or do for God? Observe, 3. The holy and humble deportment of Mary upon this occasion She sat at Jesus' feet, and heard his word. When Christ was speaking, Mary was hearing, and little things could not take her off. Lord! how carefully should we take the present opportunity for our souls, to hear and learn of thee, as Mary did: she was not sure of another opportunity, therefore hears humbly, attentively, affectionately, as if it were her last hearing season.

40 But Martha was cumbered about much serving, and came to him, and said, Lord, dost thou not care that my sister hath left me to serve alone? bid her, therefore, that she help me.

Observe here, 1. Martha's behaviour. She was cumbered about much serving; That is, much taken up with providing for the entertainment of Christ and his friends; all which considered in itself, was no miscarriage, but a token of Martha's endeared respect to her best friend. A person that sincerely loves Christ as Martha did, thinks, he can never shew enough of respect unto him. Martha having such a guest to honour her house, puts forth herself all she can, yea, more than she was able, to give him entertainment; She was cumbered about much serving. Observe, 2. Martha's complaint to Christ, concerning her sister's not joining with her in the work that lay so hard upon her; "Lord, dost thou not care that my sister hath left me to serve alone? Bid her, therefore that she help me," as if Martha had said, Is it a fit thing that the burden of all this company should lie upon me, whilst Mary sits still, and does not touch the least household business with one of her fingers? Lord! what infirmity and weakness intermixes and mingles with the virtues and graces of the best of thy servants, especially when they give way to their distempered passions! This good woman, at this time, did not attend upon Christ's preaching herself, but interrupts him with a frivolous complaint about her sister; Bid her that she help me. But why did not Martha speak to her sister herself, and whisper in her ear, and acquaint her how she wanted her help, but makes her moan to Christ? Answer, 'Tis like she thought her sister was so tied by the ear with those adamant chains of Christ's heavenly doctrine, that until Christ was silent she had no power to stir; doubtless, she believed that Mary would not move, unless Christ spake to her so to do. Observe, 3. That all this while Mary speaks not one word for herself; no doubt it troubled her, good woman, to hear her sister complain of her to Christ, and to find herself blamed for her piety, and implicitly condemned for laying hold upon such a sweet opportunity of hearing the beloved of her soul, whose lips dropped as the honeycomb; however, she speaks not a word in her own vindication, but leaves her answer to her Saviour. Learn thence, that when we are complained of for well doing, it is our duty, and may be our prudence to seal up our lips in silence, and to expect our vindication from above. Mary says nothing, but Christ speaks for her in the next verses.

41 And Jesus answered, and said unto her, Martha, Martha, thou art careful, and troubled about many things;

42 But one thing is needful: And Mary hath chosen that good part, which shall not be taken away from her.

As if Christ had said, Martha, Martha, I well know thou dost all this in love to me, and it is no more than thy duty in its proper season, but thou hadst now an opportunity to hear my word, which thou canst not have every day, and it would have pleased me better, to whom it is meat and drink to feed souls if I had seen thee sitting with thy dear sister at my feet, and yielding an attentive regard to my holy doctrine, than to find thee performing a necessary civility to my person. Thou hast not made a bad choice, but Mary has made a better; she has laid all aside to attend upon my ministry, and the fruit of it continue with her to all eternity; "It is that good part which shall never be taken away from her." Note here, 1. The unexpectedness of our Saviour's answer to Martha, how contrary it was to her expectation; she thought that her sister should have been sent away with a check, and herself with thanks, but she is quite mistaken; for all the good cheer that she had prepared for Christ, he spares not to tell her of her fault; Martha, Martha, thou art troubled about many things. Learn thence, That no obligations to any particular persons should so enthrall us, but that our tongues should be at liberty to reprove them. Martha, though a pious and good woman, though a friendly and kind woman, though a woman greatly beloved of Christ, yet she is reprov'd by Christ. Note, 2. The reproof given to Martha, Thou art troubled about many things; where Christ condemns not her hospitality, but her solicitude and superfluity, her distraction and perplexity. O how prone are we to exceed in things lawful and necessary and to go beyond our bounds in them! When we are satisfied in the matter, we are prone to exceed in the measure. Martha's entertainment of Christ was a noble service, but she was too anxious and solicitous about it: she was cumbered, she was careful, she was troubled. Note, 3. Our Saviour's admonition, But one thing is needful; that is, there is one thing which ought first and principally to be regarded by us, and is of the greatest concernment to us; namely, the business of religion, and the care of our soul's salvation is the one thing necessary, and that which every man is concerned in the first place, and above all other things to regard and mind. Note, 4. Our Saviour's justification of Mary's choice, Mary hath chosen that good part; Non tu malam, sed illa meliorem. Christ did not tell Martha she had chosen a bad part, but her sister had chosen the better. Martha's entertainment of Christ was good, but Mary's attendance upon Christ's ministry was better and more pleasing unto Christ. Christ was better pleased to see Mary in the chapel, than Martha in the kitchen; though he doth not condemn the one, yet he extols the other; Mary had chosen the good part, and it being once chosen by us, it shall never be taken away from us; "One thing is needful, and Mary hath chosen that good part, which shall never be taken away from her."

CHAP. XI.

AND it came to pass, that, as he was praying in a certain place, when he ceased, one of his disciples said unto him, Lord, teach us to pray, as John also taught his disciples.

The learned Mr. Mede upon this place apprehends, that it was the custom of the Jewish doctors to deliver some certain form of prayer to their disciples to use, at least that John the Baptist had done so to his disciples: thereupon our Saviour's disciples besought him that he also would give them in like manner some form of his own composing, that they might pray with their Master's spirit, as John's disciples did with his. Accordingly our Saviour gives them here a form of his own, and commands them when they pray to use it. Indeed he had given them this prayer, about a year and a half before, in his sermon upon the mount, Matt. vi. 9. After this manner pray ye; where it is probable, that the disciples looked upon it only as a pattern of prayer and not as a form; for had they thought that Christ had given them a form of prayer before, they had not asked him for one now: therefore, says Christ, When ye pray, say. Certainly this gives us to understand, that our Saviour intended and commended it for a set form of prayer unto his church. Learn hence, That the Lord's Prayer is both a pattern and platform, according to which all our prayers ought to be framed; and also an exact form of prayer, which ought to be used by us in our addresses to the throne of grace; After this manner pray ye, says St. Matthew; When ye pray, say, says St. Luke.

2 And he said unto them, When ye pray, say,

Observe here, The favour which Christ does us in prescribing a form of prayer to us; a great favour, no doubt, though the world grows weary of it; we know not, alas! what to ask, but he himself teaches us, and frames our supplication for us, that it may be accepted. Should a king's son draw a petition for a poor subject, to be put up to his father, what ground of hope would there be, that whatever is desired would be obtained? If any of us then think meanly of our Lord's Prayer, O how meanly may he think of us, and of our prayers.

—Our Father which art in heaven;
Hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done, as in heaven, so in earth.

3 Give us day by day our daily bread.

4 And forgive us our sins; for we also forgive every one that is indebted to us. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil.

The sense and signification of this best of prayer, is this —“ O Thou our Father in Jesus Christ! who remainest in thy throne in heaven, and there perpetually praised and perfectly obeyed by glorious angels and glorified saints. Grant that thy name may be glorified, thy throne acknowledged, and thy holy will obeyed here on earth below, by us thy sons and servants, as readily, as cheerfully and sincerely, and in some degree of proportion to what is done in heaven above. And because, by reason of the frailty of our natures, we cannot subsist without the comforts and supports of life, we crave our daily bread at thy bountiful hand; even such a proportion of the good things of this life as thy wisdom shall see convenient for us. And knowing that thy holiness and justice doth oblige thee to punish sin and sinners, we plead with thee for the sake of thy Son's satisfaction, to forgive us our daily trespasses; for it is our desire and endeavour, heartily to forgive those that have offended us; and this wicked world wherein we live is so full of snares and temptations of all sorts, we pray that by the power of thy grace, and the concurrence of our own careful endeavours, we may be kept from Satan's temptations, from the world's allurements, and from our own evil inclinations: and be preserved unblameable to thine everlasting kingdom; and in testimony of our desires and assurance to be heard, we say, Amen, so be it, so let it be, even so, O Lord, let it be for ever.” Learn, 1. That God is the Father of all his people; as a father he knows all his children, he loves them and takes care of them: as his children, it is our duty to honour him, to obey him, to imitate him, to cast our care upon him, and to long for the enjoyment of him. 2. From the word Our, learn, That it is our duty to pray for others, as well as for ourselves; we cannot pray acceptably for ourselves, if we pray only for ourselves. 3. That the hallowing, honouring, and sanctifying of God's name, as it is the first thing we are to pray for, so it ought to be preferred before all other things whatsoever: we pray for it before we pray for our own salvation: we say, Hallowed be thy name, before we say, Forgive us our debts. 4. Learn,

That sins are debts, and sinners indebted to divine justice. Sin is an infinite debt, a multiplied debt, an inexcusable debt, and if not discharged by our surety, we must lie in prison to all eternity, for non-payment of this debt. 5. That God has made our forgiveness of others the condition of his forgiving us: the word As, is not a note of equality, but of similitude; we cannot equal God in forgiving, but we must imitate him. 6. No sooner is sin pardoned, but Satan will be busy with his temptation. Forgive us our sins, and lead us not into temptation. 7. That it is a greater mercy to be delivered from the evil of temptation, than from temptation to evil. The evil of temptation is the evil of sin, but the temptation to evil is at most but the evil of punishment. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil; suffer us not to be led into temptation, or, if so, leave us not when we are tempted.

5 And he said unto them, Which of you shall have a friend; and shall go unto him at midnight, and say unto him,
Friend, lend me three loaves;

6 For a friend of mine in his journey is come to me, and I have nothing to set before him.

7 And he from within shall answer, and say, Trouble me not: the door is now shut, and my children are with me in bed; I cannot rise and give thee.

8 I say unto you, Though he will not rise and give him because he is his friend:
yet because of his importunity, he will rise and give him as many as he needeth.

The design of our blessed Saviour in these and the following verses, is to excite and stir up his disciples to fervency, importunity, and constancy, in the duty of prayer, and to this purpose he makes use of a double argument, the one of a friend, and the other of a father. 1. He lays before them the parable of a friend, coming to his friend at midnight, and by his importunity obtaining that of him which otherwise he must have gone without. From whence our Lord leaves us to infer, that if an imprudent proud beggar can obtain so much from man, what cannot an humble, earnest, and daily petitioner obtain from God? What friend so faithful and helpful to his dearest friend, as God is to us his children? From the whole, note, 1. That a man must be brought into a state of friendship and reconciliation with God, if he hopes his prayers shall be accepted. 2. That when any of the friends of God are in necessities and straits, he allows them the liberty at all hours to call upon him, and pray unto him; at midnight as well as at mid-day, God's ear is open to his praying friends. 3. That Almighty God takes pleasure in being urged in prayer by the holy importunity of his friends; never is he better pleased, than when his people, with holy Jacob, “wrestle with him, and "I will not let him go till he hath blessed them." 4. That such holy and humble importunity shall not only obtain what we desired, but more than we expected; only three loaves were desired here, but because of importunity, he had as many as he needed; more is given in the concession, than was desired in the supplication. The original word here rendered importunity, signifies impudence; according to that saying among the Jews, The imprudent man overcomes the modest and the bashful; how much more God who is goodness itself?

9 And I say unto you, Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you.

10 For every one that asketh, receiveth; and he that seeketh, findeth; and to him that knocketh, it shall be opened.

Our Saviour here goes on, to urge us to importunity and constancy in prayer; he bids us ask, seek, and knock, and assures us we shall be accepted, heard, and answered. Here note, 1. That man is a poor indigent creature, full of wants, but unable to supply them. As man is an indigent and insufficient creature, so God is an all-sufficient good, able to supply the wants, and relieve the necessities of his creatures. 3. That Almighty God stands ready to supply all our wants, not temporal only, but spiritual also, affording his grace and the assistance of his Holy Spirit to them that ask it. 4. If therefore we want the grace of God, and the assistance of his Holy Spirit, it is our own fault, and not God's; it is either for want of seeking or for want of earnestness in asking; for our Saviour expressly assures us, that God denied it to none; 'but every one that asketh receiveth.'

11 If a son shall ask bread of any of you that is a father, will he give him a stone? or if he ask a fish, will he for a fish give him a serpent?

12 Or, if he shall ask an egg, will he offer him a scorpion?

13 If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children; how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him?

The second parable which our Saviour makes use of, is that of a father to his children; Christ represents the care and kindness of God towards us by the affections which earthly parents bear to their natural children, who though they be many times evil themselves, yet are not wont to deny their children necessary good things, when they dutifully and decently beg them at their hands: "If ye being evil—how much more shall your heavenly Father give his Holy Spirit;" that is, the continual presence and influence of his Holy Spirit, to all the purposes of guidance and direction, of grace and assistance, of comfort and support, in our Christian course. Learn hence, That the presence and assistance of God's Holy Spirit to enable us to do what God requires shall never be wanting to those that desire it, and endeavour after it. But we must always remember, that the assistance of God's Holy Spirit, though it be offered and tendered to us, yet it is not forced upon us; for if we beg the Holy Spirit and his assistance, but refuse to make use of it; or if we cry to him for his help to mortify our lusts, but do not put forth our own endeavours, we forfeit the divine assistance, and God will certainly withdraw his Holy Spirit from us.

14 ¶ And he was casting out a devil, and it was dumb. And it came to pass, when the devil was gone out, the dumb spake: and the people wondered.

15 But some of them said, He casteth out devils through Beelzebub the chief of the devils.

16 And others tempting him, sought of him a sign from heaven.

17 But he, knowing their thoughts, said unto them, Every kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation: and a house divided against a house, falleth.

18 If Satan also be divided against himself, how shall his kingdom stand? because ye say that I cast out devils through Beelzebub.

19 And if I by Beelzebub cast out devils, by whom do your sons cast them out? therefore shall they be your judges.

20 But if I with the finger of God cast out devils, no doubt the kingdom of God is come upon you.

A relation is here given of a famous miracle wrought by our Saviour in casting a devil out of a possessed man: it is called a dumb devil, because of the effect upon the poor possessed person, in restraining the use of his tongue. Learn here, 1. That among the many calamities which sin has rendered human nature liable and obnoxious to, this is one, to be bodily possessed by Satan. 2. That one demonstration of Christ's divine power, and a convictive evidence of his being truly and really God, was his casting out devils by the word of his power. Observe, 3. What a sad and contrary effect this miracle had upon the wicked pharisees, through their own blindness, obstinacy, and malice; instead of magnifying his divine power, they maliciously accuse him for holding a correspondence with the devil, and acting by a power derived from him; as if Satan should lend our Saviour a power against himself, and that for the destruction of his own kingdom. Lord, how dangerous is a wilful opposition against the truth! It provokes the Almighty to deliver persons up to the most unreasonable infidelity, and obstinate obduracy. Observe, 4. Our Saviour, knowing their thoughts, makes a just apology for himself, by shewing how improbable and unlikely, how unreasonable and absurd, it is once to imagine or suppose, that Satan should cast out himself, and any way seek to oppose or destroy his own kingdom: Now if I have received (says Christ) my power from Satan, for casting out of Satan, then is the devil like a family divided within itself, and divided like a kingdom against itself, which can never stand, but must be brought to destruction. Observe lastly, Our Saviour tells the pharisees that they might with as much reason attribute all other miracles to the power of the devil, as those wrought by himself; for there were certain Jews among them that cast out devils in the name of the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; now our Saviour asks them by what power these their children cast them out? They acknowledged what they did was by the power of God, and there was no cause, but their malice, why they should not acknowledge that what he did was by the same power. "If I by Beelzebub cast out devils, by whom do your sons cast them out? But if I with the finger of God cast them out, no doubt the kingdom of God is come upon you;" that is, the long expected kingdom of the Messias is certainly come, and I having wrought these miracles by my own power, is a demonstrative proof that I am the promised Messias.

21 When a strong man armed keepeth his palace, his goods are in peace:

22 But when a stronger than he shall come upon him, and overcome him, he taketh from him all his armour wherein he trusted, and divideth his spoils.

23 He that is not with me is against me: and he that gathereth not with me scattereth.

24 When the unclean spirit is gone out of a man he walketh through dry places, seeking rest: and, finding none, he saith, I will return unto my house, whence I came out:

25 And when he cometh he findeth it swept and garnished.

26 Then goeth he, and taketh to him seven other spirits, more wicked than himself; and they enter in, and dwell there: and the last state of that man is worse than the first.

Our Saviour having sufficiently shewn, that he did not work his miracles by the power of the devil, he next informs the pharisees from whence he had that power, even from God himself; accordingly, he compares Satan to a strong man armed with weapons to defend his house, and himself clothed with divine power, he compares to one that is stronger than the strong man; so that the argument runs thus: the devil is very strong and powerful, and there is no power, but only God's, that is stronger than his: if then, says Christ, I were not assisted with a divine power, I could never cast out this strong man, who reigns in the bodies and souls of men, as in his house; for it must be a stronger than the strong man, that shall bind Satan; and who is he but the God of strength? Learn hence, That only Christ's divine power is superior to Satan's strength: he only can vanquish and over-rule him at his pleasure, and drive him out of that possession which he holds either in the bodies or souls of men; "The strong man armed keeps the house, till a stronger than he comes upon him, and overcomes him. When the unclean spirit goeth out of a man, he walketh through dry places, seeking rest and findeth none." Note here, 1. That Satan is an unclean spirit, he hath lost his original purity, his holy nature in which he was created; and is by sin become universally sinful and impure: no means being allowed him by God for the purging of his filthy and impure nature; yes, he is a perfect enemy to purity and holiness; maligning all that love it, and would promote it. 2. That Satan is a restless and unquiet spirit, being cast out of heaven, he can rest no where; when he is gone out either of a man by policy, or cast out by power, he has no content or satisfaction, till he returns into a filthy heart, where he delights to be, as the swine in miry places. 3. That wicked and profane sinners have this unclean spirit dwelling in them; their hearts are Satan's house and habitation, and the lusts of pride and unbelief, malice and revenge, envy and hypocrisy, these are the garnishings and furniture of Satan's house; man's heart was God's house by creation, it is now Satan's by usurpation and judiciary tradition. 4. That Satan, by the preaching of the gospel, may seem to go out of persons, and they become sober and civilized; yet may he return again to his old habitation, and the latter end of that man is worse than the beginning.

27 ¶ And it came to pass, as he spake these things, a certain woman of the company lifted up her voice, and said unto him, Blessed is the womb that bare thee, and the paps which thou hast sucked.

28 But he said, Yea, rather blessed are they that hear the word of God, and keep it.

Observe here, 1. How ready we are to admire persons for their external privileges, and the favours of divine providence, and to pronounce such blessed: Blessed is the womb that bare thee. 2. That Christ makes another judgment of persons, and pronounces them more blessed, that bear him in their hearts by faith, than his own mother, who bear him in her womb by sense. The blessedness of being an obedient believer, is far greater than that of being the mother of our blessed Saviour. Blessed be God, this great and gracious privilege is not denied unto us now. Although we cannot see Christ, yet love him we may; his bodily presence cannot be enjoyed by us, but his spiritual, gracious presence, is not denied us; though Christ be not ours in house, in arms, by affinity, by consanguinity; yet in heart, in faith, in love, in service, he is or may be ours; verily, spiritual regeneration, and an obediential doing of God's will, bringeth men into a more honourable relation to Christ, than natural generation ever did; "Yea, rather blessed are they that hear the word of God and keep it."

29 ¶ And, when the people were gathered thick together, he began to say, This is an evil generation: they seek a sign, and there shall no sign be given it but the sign of Jonas the prophet.

30 For as Jonas was a sign unto the Ninevites, so shall also the Son of man be to this generation.

31 The queen of the south shall rise up in the judgment with the men of this generation, and condemn them: for she came from the utmost parts of the earth to hear the wisdom of Solomon: and behold a greater than Solomon is here.

32 The men of Nineveh shall rise up in the judgment with this generation, and shall condemn it: for they repented at the preaching of Jonas: and, behold, a greater than Jonas is here.

The sign which the pharisees here desired of our Saviour, was a miracle wrought by him: now our Saviour, though he was very ready to work miracles, to encourage and confirm his hearers' faith, yet not to satisfy the unbelieving pharisees' curiosity; and accordingly he tells them, they should have no other sign than that of his resurrection, which Jonas was a type of. Next he threatens them for their obstinacy and infidelity, which he aggravates from the example of the queen of the south, and the men of Nineveh. From thence learn, That the sins of infidelity and impenitency are exceedingly heightened, and their guilt aggravated, from the means afforded, by God to bring men to faith and obedience. The sin of the pharisees was infinitely greater in rejecting the evidence of Christ's miracles, than the sin of the Ninevites would have been in refusing to hearken to Jonas's ministry; therefore the Ninevites shall condemn the pharisees.

33 No man, when he hath lighted a candle, putteth it in a secret place, neither under a bushel, but on a candlestick, that they which come in may see the light.

34 The light of the body is the eye;

therefore, when thine eye is single, thy whole body also is full of light; but when thine eye is evil, thy body also is full of darkness.

35 Take heed, therefore, that the light which is in thee be not darkness.

36 If thy whole body, therefore, be full of light, having no part dark, the whole shall be full of light, as when the bright shining of a candle doth give thee light.

Our Saviour in these words does these two things: 1. He declares, that although his ministry had no effect upon the proud and obstinate pharisees, yet he would not hide the light which he came into the world to bring, nor conceal that heavenly doctrine which his father had committed to him to communicate to the children of men; teaching us, That such as are enlightened by God with the knowledge of his word and will, ought not to conceal and hide this knowledge within themselves, but communicate it to others, and improve it for the good and benefit of others; "No man that lighteth a candle, putteth it under a bushel." 2. Our Saviour here discovers the reason why the pharisees continued blind under so clear a light as that of his ministry; namely, because, the eye of their understanding was darkened, not so much with ignorance as with prejudice, whereby they oppose Christ and his holy doctrine: for if the mind be clearly enlightened by the word and Spirit of God, that light will diffuse and spread itself in the soul, as the bright shining of a candle doth in the house; enlightening all the inward faculties, and directing all the outward actions, and communicating its light also to the enlightening of others.

37 ¶ And, as he spake, a certain pharisee besought him to dine with him: and he went in, and sat down to meat.

38 And, when the pharisee saw it, he marvelled that he had not first washed before dinner.

39 And the Lord said unto him, Now do ye pharisees make clean the outside of the cup and the platter; but your inward part is full of ravining and wickedness.

40 Ye fools! did not he that made that which is without, make that which is within also?

Observe here, 1. The free conversation of our blessed Saviour, how readily he complies with the pharisee's invitation to dine with him. I do not find that when Christ was invited to any table, that ever he refused to go; if a pharisee, if a publican invited him, he constantly went, not so much for the pleasure of eating, as for the opportunity of conversing and doing good. Christ feasts us when we feed him: he says of himself, that he came eating and drinking, that is, allowing himself a free though innocent conversation with all sorts of persons, that he might gain some. Observe, 2. The exception which the pharisee takes at our Saviour's not washing his hands before dinner. This they made (but without any warrant for it) a religious act, abounding in external washings, but neglecting the inward purgation of their hearts and consciences from sin and uncleanness: Thus pharisaical hypocrisy puts God off with outward cleansing, instead of inward purity; regarding more the outward cleanness of the hand, than the inward purity of the heart. Observe, 3. Our Saviour does not condemn any external decency and cleanliness in conversation; but his design is, to shew the vanity of outward purity without inward sanctity, and to convince them of the necessity of cleansing the heart, in order to the purifying and reforming the life. The pharisee washed his hands clean, but left his soul full of uncleanness; not considering that he that made the soul as well as the body, requires that both should be kept pure; all the impiety of men's lives proceeding from the impurity of their hearts and natures.

41 But rather give alms of such things as you have: and, behold, all things are clean unto you.

As if Christ had said, The way to purify your meats and drinks, and estates, from all pollution cleaving to them, and to have them sanctified blessings to you, is (in conjunction with other graces) by doing works of mercy, and by liberal almsgiving, according to your ability. Learn, That charity and almsgiving, according to our ability and opportunity, is a special mean to sanctify our estates to us, and to cause us holily and comfortably to enjoy whatever we do possess; "Give alms of such things as ye have, and behold all things are clean unto you." As if Christ had said, Your temporal enjoyments are unclean, that is, unlawful to be used by you till you have sanctified them by some act of charity, which will procure a blessing upon your substance.

42 But woe unto you, pharisees: for ye tithe mint and rue, and all manner of herbs, and pass over judgment and the love of God: these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone.

Our Saviour here denounces a woe against the pharisees, for their strict and scrupulous observing the lesser things of the law, as tithing mint and rue, whilst they were regardless of the principal and substantial duties, which they owe both to God and man. Learn hence, That although some duties are of greater moment and importance than others, yet a good man will omit none, but make conscience of all, both great and small, in obedience to the command of God; there is no duty so little as to be neglected, no command so small as to be disobeyed; but yet there is a difference in duties, and our first regard ought rather to be to the greater, than to the less. Christ doth not condemn them for tithing mint and rue, but for passing over judgment and the love of God.

43 Woe unto you, pharisees; for ye love the uppermost seats in the synagogues, and greetings in the markets.

The next woe denounced against the pharisees, is for their ambition, pride, and popularity, affecting the uppermost seats in the synagogues, and salutations in the markets; where there fault was, not in taking, but in affecting, these uppermost places: God is the God of order: there may and ought to be a precedence amongst persons. Honour is to be given to whom honour is due, and that by God's command. But pride and ambition are detestable vices, especially in such as are preachers, and ought to be patterns of humility.

44 Woe unto you, scribes and pharisees, hypocrites: for ye are as graves which appear not, and the men that walk over them are not aware of them.

Another woe is here denounced against the pharisees, for cheating and deceiving the people with an outward shew and appearance of piety and religion. They were like graves and sepulchres grown over with grass, which, though they held dead men's bones, yet the putrefaction not outwardly appearing, men walked unawares over them, and so were polluted by them; intimating, that the inward rottenness and filthy corruptions of the pharisees not appearing unto men, the people were easily deceived by outward shews of pharisaical sanctity, and so fell into a dangerous imitation of them. Learn hence, That the great design of hypocrites is, to cheat the world with an empty shew of piety; the hypocrite's ambition is to be thought good, not to be so. Learn, 2. That nothing is more fatally dangerous, to the souls of men, and draws persons to an admiration and imitation of hypocritical professors, like their outward shews of sanctity, and their extraordinary appearances of devotion and piety. This it was that gained the pharisees such veneration, and esteem among the people, that it became a proverb amongst them, "If but two men went to heaven, the one must be a pharisee." But their counterfeit piety being double iniquity, they did receive for it double damnation.

45 ¶ Then answered one of the lawyers, and said unto him, Master, thus saying, thou reproachest us also.

46 And he said, Woe unto you also, ye lawyers: for ye lade men with burdens grievous to be borne, and ye yourselves touch not the burdens with one of your fingers.

The former woes were denounced by our Saviour against the pharisees, who had their names from the Hebrew word, which signifies to separate, because they were persons separated and set apart for studying the law of God, and teaching it to others. The next woe is here denounced against the lawyers, that is the scribes of the law, of which there were two sorts, the civil scribe, and the ecclesiastical scribe. The civil scribe was a public notary, or a register of the synagogue, employed in writing bills of divorce, and sentences in the phylacteries. The ecclesiastical scribe was an expounder of the scriptures, an interpreter of the law; men of learning and knowledge, whose decrees and interpretations the pharisees strictly observed. This lawyer here insolently calls our Saviour's reproof a reproach; however Christ who never feared the face, or regarded the person of any man, gives them their portion, and lets them know wherein they were faulty, as well as the pharisees, and accordingly pronounces a woe unto them also, for a threefold crime; for their laying heavy burdens upon others' shoulders, which they would not touch with one of their fingers. These burdens, in general, were a rigid exaction of obedience in the whole ceremonial law, and in particular, the burden of traditions, certain austerities and severities, which they imposed upon the people, but would not undergo any part of them themselves. In vain do we hope to oblige our hearers to follow those rulers of life, which we refuse or neglect to put in practice ourselves.

47 Woe unto you: for ye build the sepulchres of the prophets, and your fathers killed them.

48 Truly ye bear witness that ye allow the deeds of your fathers: for they indeed killed them, and ye build their sepulchres.

49 Therefore also said the wisdom of God, I will send them prophets and apostles, and some of them they shall slay and persecute.

50 That the blood of all the prophets, which was shed from the foundation of the world, may be required of this generation;

51 From the blood of Abel unto the blood of Zacharias, which perished between the altar and the temple: verily I say unto you, it shall be required of this generation.

The second crime which Christ reproves in these men, is their grand hypocrisy, in pretending great honour to the saints departed, building their tombs, and garnishing their sepulchres, declaring against their fathers' impiety, that had they lived in their days, they would not have been partakers with them in their sins. Now their hypocrisy appeared in three particulars: 1. In that they continued in their own wickedness, and yet commended the saints departed; they magnify the saints, but multiply their sins; and instead of imitating their virtues, they contented themselves with garnishing their sepulchres. 2. In professing great respect to the dead saints, and at the same time persecuting the living. Palpable hypocrisy! and yet, as gross as it is, it prevails to this day. The church of Rome who magnifies martyrs, canonizes saints departed, have yet added to their number by shedding of their blood. 3. In taking false measures of their love to the saints departed, from their building their tombs, and garnishing their sepulchres. Whereas the best evidence of our love to them is the imitating their virtues, and cherishing their followers. 'Tis gross hypocrisy to pay respect to the relics of saints, and veneration to their images, and at the same time to persecute and hate their followers. From the whole, note, 1. That the world has all along loved dead saints better than living ones, Mortui non mordent: the dead saints example, how bright soever, is not so scorching and troublesome at a distance, and he himself stands no longer in other men's light; whereas the living saints' example is a cutting reproof to sin and vice. Note, 2. That there is a certain civility in human nature, which leads men to a just commendation of the dead, and to a due estimation of their worth. The pharisees here, though they persecuted the prophets whilst alive, yet did they pretend to a mighty veneration for their piety and virtue after they were dead, and thought no honour too great to be done unto them. Note, 3. That it is the greatest hypocrisy imaginable to pretend to love goodness, and at the same time to kill the prophets. Note, 4. That the highest honour we can pay to the saints departed, is not by raising monuments and building tombs to their memory, but by a careful imitation of their piety and virtue, following the holiness of their lives, and their patience and constancy at their death. Lastly, learn, That it is a righteous thing with God to punish children for the impiety of their parents, when they walk in their ungodly parents' footsteps; "Upon you shall come the blood of all the prophets, from the blood of Abel to the blood of Zacharias;" yet by this must be understood of temporal evils, not to eternal punishments; no man for his father's sins shall lie down in everlasting burnings; as our father's faith will not let us into heaven, so neither will their impiety shut us into hell: at the day of judgment every man shall be separately considered according to his own deeds.

52 Woe unto you, lawyers: for ye have taken away the key of knowledge: ye entered not in yourselves, and them that were entering in, ye hindered.

The last woe pronounced by our Saviour against the scribes and pharisees, is for perverting the holy scriptures, and keeping the true sense and knowledge of them from the people: this St. Luke here calls, The taking away the key of knowledge from men, alluding to a custom of the Jews, in admission to their doctors; those who had authority given them to interpret the law and the prophets, were solemnly admitted into that office, by delivering to them a key and a table-book; so that by the key of knowledge is meant the interpretation and understanding of the scriptures; and by taking away that key, is signified. 1. That they arrogate to themselves the sole power of understanding and interpreting the holy scriptures. 2. That they kept the true knowledge of the scriptures from the people, especially the prophecies which concern the kingdom and coming of the Messiah; and so they hindered men from embracing our Saviour's doctrine, who were otherwise well enough disposed for it. Learn, 1. That the written word is the key whereby an entrance into heaven is opened upon men. 2. That the use of this key, or the knowledge of the word of God, is absolutely and indispensably necessary in order to salvation. 3. That great is the guilt, and inexcusable the fault, of those who deny the people the use of this key, and deprive them of the knowledge of the holy scriptures, which alone can make them wise unto salvation. 4. That such as do so, shut the kingdom of heaven against men, endeavouring what in them lies to hinder their salvation; men may miscarry with their knowledge, but they are sure to perish for lack of knowledge.

53 And, as he said these things unto them, the scribes and pharisees began to urge him vehemently, and to provoke him to speak of many things:

54 Laying wait for him, and seeking to catch something out of his mouth, that they might accuse him.

Observe here, 1. How our blessed Saviour's plain and faithful dealing with these men, enrages, instead of reforming them: they are filled with anger and indignation. 2. Their wrath sets their wits on work to ensnare him. Lord! when any of thy faithful ministers and ambassadors meet with the like usage and treatment from a wicked world; when any lie in wait to catch something out of our mouth, that therewith they may ensnare us, give us thy prudence and thy patience, that we may cut off occasion, from those that seek occasion against us, and disappoint them of their purpose; or else furnish us with such measures of meekness and patience, as becomes persons of our holy character and profession, that we may glory in reproaches, in persecutions and distresses for Christ's sake, and that the Spirit of glory and of God may rest upon us.

CHAPTER XII.

IN the mean time, when there were gathered together an innumerable multitude of people, insomuch that they trode one upon another, he began to say unto his disciples first of all, Beware ye of the leaven of the pharisees, which is hypocrisy.

2 For there is nothing covered, that shall not be revealed; neither hid, that shall not be known.

3 Therefore, whatsoever ye have spoken in darkness, shall be heard in the light: and that which ye have spoken in the ear in closets, shall be proclaimed upon the house-tops.

In this chapter our blessed Saviour furnishes his disciples with many instructions for the worthy discharge of their function in preaching the gospel; particularly he recommends unto them two gracious qualifications, namely, uprightness and sincerity, verses 1, 2, 3. Secondly, courage and magnanimity, verses 4, 5.—1. He recommends unto them the grace and virtue of sincerity. "Beware of the leaven of the pharisees, which is hypocrisy." Learn hence, That hypocrisy is a dangerous leaven, which ministers and people are chiefly and especially to beware of, and to preserve themselves from. Hypocrisy is a vice in vizard, the face is vice, the vizard is virtue; God is pretended, self intended; hypocrisy is resembled to leaven; partly for its sourness, partly for its diffusiveness. Leaven is a piece of sour dough, that diffuses itself into the whole mass or lump of bread with which it is mixed. Thus hypocrisy spreads over all the man: all his duties, parts, and performances are leavened with it. Again, Leaven is of a swelling as well as of a spreading nature; it puffs up the dough, and so doth hypocrisy the heart. The pharisees were a sour and proud sort of people; they were all for pre-eminence, chief places, chief seats, chief titles, to be called rabbi, rabbi; in a word, as leaven is hardly discerned from good dough at first sight, so is hypocrisy hardly discerned and distinguished from sincerity. The pharisees outwardly appeared righteous unto men, but within were full of hypocrisy and iniquity. Observe next, the argument which Christ uses to dissuade men from hypocrisy; "There is nothing covered that shall not be revealed;" as if he had said, The day is coming, when a rotten and corrupt heart shall no longer pass under the vizard and disguise of a demure look. In the day of judgment hypocritical sinners shall walk naked; God, angels, and men, shall see their shame. Learn hence, That God will certainly, ere long, wash off all the varnish and paint which the hypocrite has put upon the face of his profession, and lay him open to the terror of himself, and the astonishment of the world.

4 And I say unto you, my friends, Be not afraid of them that kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do:

5 But I will forewarn you whom you shall fear: Fear him which, after he hath killed, hath power to cast into hell: Yea, I say unto you, Fear him.

The second duty which our Saviour presses upon his disciples, is that of holy courage and resolution: as if Christ had said, The preaching of the gospel will stir up many enemies against you; which will malign and oppose you; vex and persecute you; but I say unto you, fear them not who can only kill the body; but fear him, who, if you fail in your duty, can cast both body and soul into hell. Here note, 1. An unwarrantable fear condemned, and that it is the sinful, servile, slavish fear of man; 2. Fear not them that kill the body." 2. An holy, awful, and prudential fear of the omnipotent God commended; "Fear him that is able to kill both body and soul." 3. The persons whom this duty of fear is recommended to, and bound upon; disciples, ministers, ambassadors, all the friends of Christ. They not only may, but ought to fear him; not only for his greatness and goodness, but upon the account of his punitive justice, as being able to cast both body and soul into hell. Such a fear is not only lawful but laudable, not only commendable but commanded, and not misbecoming the friends of Christ. The ministers of God may use arguments from fear of judgments, both to dissuade from sin, and to persuade to duty. It is not unsuitable to the best of saints, to keep in heaven's way, for fear of hell; it is good to bid a friend fear, when that fear tendeth to his good.

6 Are not five sparrows sold for two farthings, and not one of them is forgotten before God?

7 But even the very hairs of your head are all numbered. Fear not, therefore: ye are of more value than many sparrows.

Observe here, 1. The doctrine which our Saviour preaches to his disciples, and that is the doctrine of the divine Providence, which concerns itself for the meanest of creatures. Even the birds of the air, and the hairs of our head, do fall within the compass of God's protecting care. Observe, 2. The use which our Saviour makes of this doctrine, namely, to fortify his disciples' spirits against all distrustful fears, and distracting cares. Learn hence, 1. That the consideration of the divine care and gracious providence of God over us and ours, ought to antidote our spirits against all distrustful fears whatsoever. If an hair from the head falls not to the ground without a Providence, much less shall the head itself: if the very excrescences of the body (such are the hairs) be taken care of by God, surely the more noble parts of the body, but especially the noblest part of ourselves, our soul, shall fall under his peculiar regard.

8 Also I say unto you, Whosoever shall confess me before men, him shall the Son of man also confess before the angels of God.

9 But he that denieth me before men, shall be denied before the angels of God.

Note here, 1. That not to confess Christ is in his account to deny him, and to be ashamed of him. 2. That whosoever shall deny or be ashamed of Christ, either in his person, in his gospel, or in his members, for any fear or favor of man, shall with shame be disowned, and eternally rejected by him at the dreadful judgment of the great day. Christ may be denied three ways; doctrinally, by an erroneous and heretical judgment; verbally, by oral expressions; vitally, by a wicked and unpholy life; but woe to that soul that denies Christ any of these ways.

10 And whosoever shall speak a word against the Son of man, it shall be forgiven him: but unto him that blasphemeth against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven.

11 And when they bring you unto the synagogues, and unto magistrates, and powers, take ye no thought how or what thing ye shall answer, or what ye shall say, 12 For the Holy Ghost shall teach you in the same hour what ye ought to say.

Although never man preached or lived as Christ did, yet there were those that spake against him; the person of Jesus was contemned and reproached, for the meanness of his birth, for the poverty of his condition, for the freedom of his conversation; but this sin did not exclude the hope of pardon; "Whosoever shall speak a word against the Son of man, it shall be forgiven him;" all the reproaches cast upon Christ as man, were pardonable: "But whosoever speaketh a word against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him;" that is whoever affirms that divine power by which I do all my miracles, to be the power of the devil, such blasphemy will be unpardonable, because it is to resist the last remedy, and to oppose the best means of men's conviction.

13 ¶ And one of the company said unto him, Master, speak to my brother, that he divide the inheritance with me.

14 And he said unto him, Man, who made me a judge, or a divider over you?

Whilst our Saviour was thus instructing his disciples, and the rest of his auditors, in things appertaining to the kingdom of heaven, one of the company being more intent, as it seems, upon his temporal than his eternal concerns desired him to speak to his brother to divide the inheritance with him. Christ tells him he would neither be judge nor arbitrator in any civil affairs, or secular concerns. This work, as if Christ had said, belongs to the civil magistrate, to divide inheritances, and decide controversies betwixt man and man; but my work is of another nature, namely, to preach the gospel to a lost world, and to direct men how to secure an inheritance in heaven: not to divide inheritances here on earth: teaching us, that matters of civil justice do not belong to those whom Christ sends forth to preach the gospel: that work alone is sufficient for them; the proper work of a minister is work enough; one branch of which is, to manage a persuading task betwixt neighbour and neighbour, to prevent differences, and to compose them; but as Christ's commissioners and ministers of the gospel, they have no authority to intermeddle in civil judgments; "Who made me a judge over you?" said our great Master: that is, a judge in civil affairs and beware of covetousness; for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth.

15 And he said unto them, Take heed,

Our Saviour, upon the occasion given him in the foregoing verses, admonishes all his disciples and followers to take heed and beware of the sin of covetousness, assuring them, that neither the comfort nor continuance of man's life doth consist in an abundance: for though something of this world's goods is necessary to the comfort and happiness of life, yet abundance is not necessary. Here observe, 1. The manner of our Lord's caution; he doubles it; not saying, Take heed alone, or beware only; but, Take heed and beware both: this argues, that there is a strong inclination in our natures to this sin: the great danger we are in of falling into it, and of what fatal consequence it is to them, in whom this sin reigns. Observe, 2. The matter of the caution of the sin which our Saviour warns his hearers against, and that is covetousness; "Take heed and beware of covetousness:" where, under the name and notion of covetousness, our Saviour doth not condemn a provident care for the things of this life, nor a regular industry and diligence for obtaining of them, nor every degree of love and affection to them; but by covetousness is to be understood an eager and insatiable desire after the things of this life, or using unjust ways and means to get and increase an estate; seeking the things of this life, with the neglect of things infinitely better, and placing their chief happiness in riches. Observe, 3. The reason of this caution; "Because a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth." Human life is sustained by a little; therefore abundance is not necessary either to the support or comfort of it. 'Tis not a great estate and vast possession that makes a man happy in this world, but a mind suited to our condition whatever it be.

16 And he spake a parable unto them, saying, The ground of a certain rich man brought forth plentifully.

17 And he thought within himself, saying, What shall I do, because I have no room where to bestow my fruits?

18 And he said, this will I do: I will pull down my barns, and build greater; and there will I bestow all my fruits and my goods:

19 And I will say to my soul, Soul thou hast much goods laid up for many years: take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry.

20 But God said unto him, Thou fool! this night thy soul shall be required of thee: then whose shall those things be which thou hast provided?

21 So is he that layeth up treasure for himself, and is not rich towards God.

The design and scope of our Saviour in this parable is, to show men the vileness and vanity of the sin of covetousness, or an eager and insatiable desire after the things of this world; when men heap up riches, and lay up treasures in this life, taking no care to be rich towards God in faith and good works. Our Saviour illustrates this by the parable of a rich man, whom God had blessed with great plenty, yet his desire of more wealth was never satisfied, but he is projecting how he may lay up goods in store for many years. Where note, 1. That the parable doth not intimate any indirect and unjust ways of gain which this man used to increase his estate, but condemns his insatiable desire and thirst after more. So that hence we may learn, That an eager and inordinate desire after the things of this world, though it be free from injustice, and doing wrong to others, is one species, or kind, of the sin of covetousness. Observe, 2. How this rich man looked no farther than himself, not looking upon himself as God's steward, but his own carver, he cries out, "What shall I do, because I have no room where to lay my fruits?" Not considering that the houses of the poor should have been his granaries for the abundance of his increase. Charity to the necessitous, is the best way of bestowing our abundance, God's extraordinary bounty is to be laid out for the relief of other's necessities, nor for the gratifying of our own luxurious desires. Observe, 3. The brand of infamy which the wise God fixes upon this covetous rich man; "Thou fool," says God. Learn thence, That it is an act and instance of the most egregious folly imaginable, for persons to spend their time and strength in getting and laying up treasure upon earth; and in the mean time neglecting to be rich towards God in faith and good works; "Thou fool," Observe, 4. The doleful tidings and threatening news brought unto him; "This night shall thy soul be required of thee." Learn hence, 1. That all man's wealth is not able to preserve his life, much less to save his soul; and if wealth cannot save a man's life, why should men endanger their lives, nay, hazard their souls, to get or increase wealth? Learn, 2. That God takes away men's lives when they least suspect it; "This night," says God; "many years," says he: God will not have us think of rest in a place of disquiet, nor of certainty in a condition of inconstancy; we are dependent creatures, and our time is in God's hand; "This night shall thy soul be taken from thee." Learn, 3. That the souls of ungodly men are taken from them by force and compulsion; "Thy soul shall be required of thee." Good men have the same reluctances of nature which others have, yet they sweetly resign their souls into the hands of God in a dying hour; whereas a wicked man, though he sometimes dies by his own hand, yet he never dies with the consent of his own will; he chooses rather to eat dust (with the serpent) than to return to dust. Observe, 5. The expostulatory question, "Whose then shall these things be, which thou hast provided?" intimating, 1. That they should not be his; a man's wealth lasts no longer than his life, neither has he any longer the comfort of it; lay up gold, and it perishes with thee, but treasure up grace, and it shall accompany thee.

“Whose shall those things be?” Not thine, undoubtedly. 2. As these things shall not be thine, when thou art gone, so thou knowest not whose they shall be after thou art gone; whether they shall fall into the hands of a child or a stranger; of a wise man or a fool; the wealthiest man cannot be certain who shall be his heir, and whose his goods shall be. Observe lastly, The application which our Saviour makes of this parable to his disciples; “So is every one that layeth up treasure for himself, and is not rich towards God.” Learn hence, That such as are not rich in grace, rich in good works, shall find no benefit by, and take no comfort in all their worldly riches, in the time of their greatest need, at the hour of death, and in the day of judgment. Learn farther, How brutish and unworthy of a man it was, for this person to cheer up his soul with the hopes of worldly provisions, to bid his soul eat, drink, and be merry: alas! the soul can no more eat, drink, and be merry, with carnal things, than the body can with spiritual and immaterial things; it cannot feed upon bread that perisheth; but bring it to a reconciled God in Christ, to the covenant of grace, and sweet promises of the gospel; set before it the joys and comforts of the Spirit! and if it be a sanctified and renewed soul, it can make a rich feast upon these. Spiritual things are proper food for spiritual souls; deservedly then is this person branded with the name of fool, for saying, “Soul, thou hast goods laid up for many years, eat, drink, and be merry.”

22 ¶ And he said unto his disciples, Therefore I say unto you, Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat; neither for the body, what ye shall put on.

23 The life is more than meat, and the body is more than raiment.

24 Consider the ravens; for they neither sow nor reap; which neither have storehouse nor barn; and God feedeth them. How much are ye better than the fowls.

25 And which of you, with taking thought, can add to his stature one cubit?

26 If ye then be not able to do that thing which is least, why take ye thought for the rest?

27 Consider the lilies how they grow: they toil not, they spin not: and yet I say unto you, That Solomon in all his glory, was not arrayed like one of these.

28 If then God so clothe the grass, which is to-day in the field, and to-morrow is cast into the oven: how much more will he clothe you, O ye of little faith?

29 And seek not ye what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink, neither be ye of doubtful mind.

30 For all these things do the nations of the world seek after: and your Father knoweth that ye have need of these things.

There is a two-fold sense and interpretation given of these verses. 1. Some take them as spoken only to the apostles, directing them absolutely to cast off all care, for the things of this life, that so they might attend upon Christ's person, and wholly give up themselves to that work to which he had called them: and therefore St. Luke here takes notice, that after he had cautioned his hearers in general against covetousness, he applies himself particularly to his disciples, and tells them that he would have them so far from this sin of covetousness, that they should not use that ordinary care and common industry, about the things of this life, which is not only lawful, but necessary for men in all ordinary cases, ver. 22. “And he said unto his disciples, therefore I say unto you, take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat or drink.” But if we understand the words in this sense, we must look upon it only as a temporary command given to the apostles for that time only; like that in St. Matthew x. 9. “Provide neither gold, nor silver, nor brass, in your purses, neither coat nor scrip;” which no man ever understood as a general law to all christians, but as a particular precept to the apostles at that time. 2. Others understand these injunctions of our Saviour to be consistent with a prudent and provident care for the things of this life, not forbidding a regular industry and diligence for the obtaining of them, but condemning only an anxious, vexatious, tormenting care, and an over-solicitous diligence for the things of this life; and taking our Saviour's words for a general and standing rule to all christians, they only forbid distrustful thoughtfulness, distracting cares, which drive a man's mind this way and that way (like meteors or clouds in the air, as the word signifies.) Now against this vexatious care and solicitous thoughtfulness, our Saviour propounds many weighty arguments or considerations; four especially. He tells us, such cares are needless, fruitless, heathenish, and brutish. 1. ‘Tis needless; “Your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of these things,” and will certainly provide for you; and what need you take care, and God too? Cast your care upon him. 2. ‘Tis fruitless; “Which of you by taking care can add one cubit to his stature?” We may sooner by our carping care add a furlong to our grief, than a cubit to our comfort. All our own care, without God's help, will neither feed us when we are hungry, nor nourish us when we are fed. 3. ‘Tis heathenish; “After all these things do the Gentiles seek,” Mat. vi. 32. The ends and the objects of a christian's thoughts ought to be higher and more sublime than that of heathens. Lastly, ‘Tis brutish, nay, worse than brutish. The birds of the air, the beasts of the field, the ravens of the valley, all are fed and sustained by God, without any care of their own, much more shall his children. Has God a breakfast ready for every little bird that comes chirping out of its nest, and for every beast of the field that comes leaping out of his den! and will he not much more provide for you? Surely, that God that feeds the ravens when they cry, will not starve his children when they pray.

31 ¶ But rather seek ye the kingdom of God; and all these things shall be added unto you.

As if Christ had said, "Let your first and chief care be to promote the kingdom of grace in this world, and to secure the kingdom of glory in the next, and then fear not the want of these outward comforts; they shall be added in measure, though not in excess; to satisfy, though not to satiate; for health though not for surfeit." Learn, 1. Christians ought not to be so solicitous about the necessities and conveniences of this life, as about the happiness of the next; "rather seek ye the kingdom of God." 2. That heaven, or the kingdom of God; must be sought in the first place: that is, with our principal care, and chief endeavours. 3. That heaven being once secured by us, all earthly things shall be super-added to us as God sees needful and convenient for us. But few men like our Saviour's method: they would seek the things of this world in the first place, and have heaven thrown in without their seeking; but this will not be granted; if we make religion and the salvation of our souls, our first and chief care, "all other things shall be added unto us," so far as the wisdom of God sees them fit and convenient for us.

32 Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom.

That is, fear not the want of any of these outward comforts, and be not over-solicitous for them; for your Father, which has provided a kingdom for you hereafter, will not suffer you to want such things as are needful for you here. Learn, 1. That the disciples of Christ are very subject to disquieting and perplexing fears, but must by no means cherish, but oppose them; a fear of present wants, a fear of future sufferings, a fear of death approaching, a fear that they shall not find acceptance with God, a fear lest they should fall fully or finally from God; the fear of all these evils doth oftentimes disturb them and discompose them. Learn, 2. That Jesus Christ is the great Shepherd of his church; the love and care, the compassion and tenderness, the prudence and providence, the guidance and vigilance, of a good shepherd; are found with him. 3. As Christ is the church's Shepherd, so the church is Christ's flock, though a little flock in opposition to the huge herds and droves of the men of the world. 4. That God the Father has a kingdom in store for his little flock, his church and children. 5. That the good will and gracious pleasure of God is the original spring, and formal cause, from whence all divine favors do proceed and flow; "It is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom."

(No. 19.)

33 Sell that ye have, and give alms: provide yourselves bags which wax not old, a treasure in the heavens that faileth not, where no thief approacheth, neither moth corrupteth.

34 For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also.

The next duty which our Saviour exhorts his disciples to, is the duty of almsgiving; that they should be so far from distrusting God's provision for themselves, that they should be always forward to a ready distribution towards others; yea, in cases of necessity, to be willing to sell their goods to relieve others; yet this precept is not to be taken as if it concerned all persons, at all times, and in all places, but respects only cases of extreme necessity; we should be found willing to part with any thing we have, for the relief of Christ in his members. Observe also, The argument used to excite to this duty of almsgiving; hereby we lay up our treasure in a safe hand, even in God's, who will reward us openly. The bellies of the poor are bags that wax not old; what is lodged there is laid up securely out of the reach of danger. We imitate the wise merchant in transmitting our estates into another world, by bills of exchange, where we are sure to receive our own with usury.

35 Let your loins be girded about and your lights burning.

26 And ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their lord, when he will return from the wedding, that, when he cometh and knocketh, they may open unto him immediately.

The next duty Christ exhorts his disciples to, is that of watchfulness, with reference to his second coming. "Let your loins be girded, and your lights burning;" these words may be understood two ways; spoken either in a martial phrase, as to soldiers; or in a domestic, as to servants: if as to soldiers, then let your loins be girded, and your lights burning, is as much as that we should be always ready for a march, having our armor on, and our match lighted, ready to give fire at the first alarm of temptation. If the words are spoken as to servants, then our master bids us carefully expect his second coming, like a lord's returning from a wedding-supper (which used to be celebrated in the night) that they should not put off their clothes, nor put out their lights, but stand ready to open, though he comes at midnight.—When Christ comes, that soul only shall have his blessing whom he finds watching.

37 Blessed are those servants, whom the lord, when he cometh, shall find watching: verily I say unto you, that he shall gird himself, and make them to sit down to meat, and will come forth and serve them, 38 And if he shall come in the second watch, or come in the third watch, and find them so, blessed are those servants.

39 And this know, that if the good man of the house had known what hour the thief would come, he would have watched, and not have suffered his house to be broken through.

40 Be ye, therefore, ready also; for the Son of man cometh at an hour when ye think not.

Here our Saviour makes use of several arguments to enforce the duty of watchfulness upon his disciples, the first is drawn from the transcendent reward Christ will bestow upon his watchful disciples. "He will gird himself, make them sit down to meat, and will come forth and serve them;" a very high metaphorical expression; as if a master should be so transported with the diligence and faithfulness of his servant, as to vouchsafe not only to let him sit down to meat in his presence, but to take the napkin upon his arm, and wait upon himself at his table. Lord! how poor and inconsiderable is that service, which the best of us do for thee, and yet thou speakest of it, as if thou wert beholden to us for it. Thou dost not only administer to us a supper, but thou ministerest and waitest upon us at supper; "he will gird himself and serve them." The argument to excite us to watchfulness, is drawn from the benefit which we shall receive by watching in this life; that let the Lord come when he will, whether in the second or in the third watch, they shall be found ready, and in a blessed condition, who are found diligent in his service, and waiting for his appearance. Note here, 1. The Son of man will certainly come at one hour or other. 2. At what hour the Son of man will come, cannot certainly be known. 3. That there is no hour that we can promise ourselves that the Son of man will not come. 4. Very joyful will the coming of the Son of man be, if we be found upon our watch, and ready for his coming; "Be ye therefore ready also, for the Son of man cometh at an hour when ye think not."

41 ¶ Then Peter said unto him, Lord, speakest thou this parable unto us, or even to all?

42 And the Lord said, Who then is that faithful and wise steward, whom his lord shall make ruler over his household, to give them their portion of meat in due season?

43 Blessed is that servant, whom his lord, when he cometh, shall find so doing.

44 Of a truth I say unto you, That he will make him a ruler over all that he bath.

These words may be applied these two ways: First, to all the faithful servants of God in general: and then the note is this, That for a christian to spend and end his days in the service of Christ, and doing his will, gives good assurance of a happy and blessed condition. Blessed is that servant. Secondly, These words may be applied to the ministers of the gospel in special; and then observe, 1. The character and duty of a gospel-minister, he is the steward of Christ's household, to give them their meat in due season. 2. A double qualification is requisite in such stewards; namely, prudence and faithfulness. Who then is that faithful and wise steward? 3. The reward insured to such stewards, with whom are found these qualifications; blessed is that servant Learn hence, 1. That the ministers of the gospel are in a spiritual sense stewards of Christ's household. 2. That faithfulness and prudence are the indispensable qualifications of Christ's stewards. 3. That where these qualifications are found, Christ will graciously and abundantly reward them. Our faithfulness must respect God, ourselves, and our flock; and includes integrity of heart, purity of intention, industry of endeavour, and impartiality in all our administrations. Our prudence must appear in the choice of suitable subjects, in the choice of fit language, in exciting our own affections in order to the moving of our people's. Ministerial prudence also must teach us, by the strictness and gravity of our deportment, to maintain our authority, and keep up our esteem in the consciences of our people; it will also assist us to bear reproach, and direct us to give reproof. He that is silent cannot be innocent; reprove we must, or we cannot be faithful; but prudently, or we cannot be successful.

45 But, and if that servant say in his heart, My lord delayeth his coming: and shall begin to beat the men-servants, and maidens; and to eat and drink, and to be drunken:

46 The lord of that servant will come in a day when he looketh not for him, and at an hour when he is not aware, and will cut him in sunder, and will appoint him his portion with the unbelievers:

47 And that servant which knew his lord's will, and prepared not himself, neither did according to his will, shall be beaten with many stripes.

48 But he that knew not, and did commit things worthy of stripes, shall be beaten with few stripes. For unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall much be required; and to whom men have committed much, of him they will ask the more.

Our Lord in these verses describes a negligent and unfaithful steward of his household, and then declares that dreadful sentence of wrath which hangs over him. The unfaithful steward, or negligent minister of the gospel, is described, 1. By his infidelity, he believed not Christ's coming to judgment, though he preaches it to others: "He sayeth in his heart, My lord delayeth his coming." 2. He is described by his hatred, envy, and malignity against his fellow-servants, that were more faithful than himself; "He begins to smite them," at least with the virulence of his tongue, if not with the violence of his hand. 3. He is farther described by his associating with the wicked, and strengthening their hands by his ill example, "He eateth and drinketh with the drunken;" that is, their associate and fellow companion. Thus the negligent steward and unfaithful minister is described: next his sentence is declared. 1. Christ will surprise him in his sin and security, "by coming in an hour when he looketh not for him." 2. He will execute temporal vengeance upon him, "he will cut him in pieces, as the Jews did their sacrifices, dividing them in two parts" Hence some observe, That God seldom suffers slothful sensual ministers to live out half their days. 3. Christ will punish them with eternal destruction also, "Appoint them their portion with unbelievers;" teaching us, That such ministers as neglect the service of God, and the souls of their people, as they are ranked amongst the worst sort of sinners in this life, so shall they be punished with them in the severest manner in the next. When satan destroys the souls of men, he shall answer for it as a murderer only, not as an officer that was entrusted with the care of souls. But if the steward doth not provide, if the shepherd doth not feed, if the watchman doth not warn, they shall answer, not only for the souls that have miscarried, but for an office-neglected, for a talent hidden, and for a stewardship unfaithfully managed. Woe unto us, if at the great day we hear distressed souls roaring out their complaints, and howling out that doleful accusation against us, saying, "Lord! our stewards have defrauded us, our watchmen have betrayed us, our guides have misled us," ver. 48.—"For unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall much be required. And to whom men have committed much, of him they will ask the more." Here we learn, 1. That whatever we receive from God, is both a gift and a talent. 2. That every one has some gift or talent from God to be improved for God. 3. That God's gifts or talents are not given to all in the same measure. 4. That whether we receive little or much, all is in order to an account. 5. That answerable to our present talents will be our future accounts. The greater opportunities a man has of knowing his duty, and the greater abilities he has for doing good, if he do it not the greater will be his condemnation; because the neglect of his duty in this case, cannot be without a great deal of wilfulness and contempt, which is an heinous aggravation. If thy gifts be mean, the less thou hast to account for: if greater than others, God expects thou shouldest do more good than others, "For where much is given, much will be required."

49 I am come to send fire on the earth, and what will I, if it be already kindled?

50 But I have a baptism to be baptized with, and how am I straitened till it be accomplished?

51 Suppose ye that I am come to give peace on earth; I tell you, Nay, but rather division,

52 For, from henceforth there shall be five in one house divided, three against two, and two against three,

53 The father shall be divided against the son, and the son against the father: the mother against the daughter, and the daughter against the mother: the mother-in-law against her daughter-in-law, and the daughter-in-law against the mother-in-law.

Our Saviour in these verses declares what will be the accidental event and effect, but not the natural tendency of his religion; so that we must distinguish between the intentional aim of Christ's coming, and the accidental event of it. Christ's intentional aim, was to plant, propagate, and promote peace in the world; but through the lusts and corruptions of men's natures, the issue and event of his coming is war and division; not that these are the genuine and natural fruits of the gospel; but occasional and accidental only. Hence learn, That the preaching of the gospel, and setting up the kingdom of Christ, though it be not the genuine and natural cause, yet it is the accidental occasion of all that war and tumult, of all that dissension and division, of all that distraction and confusion, which the world abounds with; "I am come to send fire on the earth." He is said to send the fire of dissension, because he foresaw this would be the certain consequence, though not the natural effect of the preaching of the gospel. There was another fire of Christ's sending, the Holy Spirit; this was a fire to warm to not burn; or if so, not men's persons, but corruptions; but that seems not to be intended in this place. Observe farther, the metaphor by which Christ sets forth his own sufferings. He styles them a baptism; "I have a baptism to be baptized with." There is a threefold baptism spoken of; a baptism with water, a baptism of the Spirit: both these Christ had been baptized with; but the third was the baptism of blood, he was soon to be drenched and washed in his own blood, in the garden, and on the cross; and was straitened or pained with desire, like the woman in travail, till his sufferings were accomplished.

54 ¶ And he said also to the people, When ye see a cloud arise out of the west, straightway ye say, There cometh a shower; and so it is.

55 And when ye see the south wind blow, ye say, There will be heat; and it cometh to pass.

56 Ye hypocrites, ye can discern the face of the sky, and of the earth; but how is it that ye do not discern this time?

57 Yea, and why even of yourselves judge ye not what is right?

Our Saviour in these words does at once upbraid the stupid ignorance of the Jews in general, and the obstinate infidelity of the pharisees in particular, in that they could make a judgment of the weather by the sight of the sky, by the appearance of the heavens, and the motion of the winds, but could not discern this time of the Messiah, though they had so many miraculous signs and evidences of it, and for this he upbraids them with hypocrisy; "Ye hypocrites, ye can discern the face of the sky, but you do not discern this time." Learn thence, That to pretend either more ignorance, or greater uncertainty in discerning the signs of the gospel times (the time of our gracious visitation) than the signs of the weather is great hypocrisy; "Ye hypocrites, can ye not discern this time?" Observe farther, That Christ does not here condemn the study of nature, or making observations of the state of the weather by the face of the sky: for Almighty God, by natural signs, gives us warning of a change in natural things, and in like manner by his providential dispensations, he gives us warning of a change in civil things. "He that is wise will observe both," and by their observation will come "to understand the pleasure of the Lord."

58 ¶ When thou goest with thine adversary to the magistrate, as thou art in the way, give diligence that thou mayest be delivered from him; lest he hale thee to the judge, and the judge deliver thee to the officer, and the officer cast thee into prison.

59 I tell thee thou shalt not depart thence, till thou hast paid the very last mite.

In these words our Saviour advises persons to use the same prudence in divine matters, which they use in worldly affairs, and the same endeavours to seek reconciliation with God, which they put forth in order to their being reconciled unto men; for in such a case, when they see an action bringing against them, wherein they are sure to be cast, their best way is presently to seek to reconcile their adversary, and make their peace with him, that so they may escape the threatening danger: in like manner should they do here, lay hold of the present opportunity of mercy now offered to them; because it is a fearful thing to die without reconciliation with God. Note here; 1. That God and man were once friends. 2. That God and man are now adversaries. 3. That man, and not God, is averse to reconciliation and agreement. 4. That it is the wisdom, the duty, and interest of fallen man, speedily to accept of terms of peace and reconciliation with God. 5. That an eternal prison will be their portion, who die in their enmity against God.

CHAPTER XIII.

THERE were present at that season, some that told him of the Galileans, whose blood Pilate had mingled with their sacrifices.

2 And Jesus answering, said unto them, Suppose ye that these Galileans were sinners above all the Galileans, because they suffered such things?

3 I tell you, Nay; but, except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish.

There were two eminent sects among the Jews in our Saviour's time, namely, the Herodians and Galileans: The former stood stiffly for having paid tribute to the Roman emperor, whose subjects the Jews now were: but the Galileans (so called probably from Judas of Galilee, mentioned Acts v. 37.) opposed this tribute, and often raised rebellion against the Roman power: Pilate takes the opportunity, when these Galileans were come up at the passover, and sacrificing in the temple, to fall upon them with soldiers, and barbarously mingled their own blood with the blood of the sacrifices which they offered: neither the holiness of the place (the temple) nor the sacredness of the action (sacrificing) could divert Pilate from his barbarous impiety. Our Saviour understanding that some of his hearers then present concluded these persons to be the greatest sinners, because they were the greatest sufferers, he corrects their error in this matter, and assures them, that the same or like judgment did hang over all sinners, as well as these, if timely and sincere repentance prevented not. Learn hence, 1. That a violent and sudden death is no argument of God's disfavor. 2. That notwithstanding, persons are exceeding prone to pass rash censures and an uncharitable judgment upon such as die suddenly, especially if they die violently. 4. That none justly can conclude such persons to have been the greatest sinners, who have been in this world the most signal sufferers. 5. That the best use we can make of such instances and examples of God's severity, is to examine our own lives, and by a speedy repentance to prevent our own perdition, I tell you, nay, &c.

4 Or those eighteen, upon whom the tower in Siloam fell, and slew them, think ye, that they were sinners above all men that dwelt in Jerusalem?

5 I tell you, Nay: but except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish.

Another instance our Saviour gives of persons that fell by a sudden death; even eighteen that were slain by the fall of a tower in Jerusalem: he takes occasion from thence to caution the Jews, that they do not rigidly censure the sufferers, or conclude that those have wrought the most sin, who are brought to most shame. Oh! how ready are we to judge of men's eternal condition, by their present visitation; and to conclude them the greatest offenders, upon whom God inflicts the most visible punishments! Our Saviour forbids this and advises every one to look at home, telling the whole body of the Jews, that if they did not repent, they should all likewise perish, and that two ways: 1. Certitudine Pœnæ, by as certain a punishment as these did. 2. Similitudine Pœnæ, by the same kind of punishment; shall perish by the ruin of your whole city, as they did by the downfall of that tower, if a timely and sincere repentance doth not intervene. Learn hence, that we must judge of persons by their conversation towards God, not by God's dispensation towards them, all things here fall alike to all. A sudden death, yea, a violent death, as it comes upon many men, so it may come upon the best of men, as well as others: Think not says Christ, that those eighteen were sinners above all that dwell in Jerusalem, because they suffered such things; "I tell you, Nay; but except ye repent ye shall all likewise perish;" teaching us, that repentance is the only way and means to prevent punishment here, and perishing hereafter: "Except ye repent, ye shall perish."

6 ¶ He spake also this parable: A certain man had a fig-tree planted in his vineyard; and he came and sought fruit thereon, and found none.

7 Then said he unto the dresser of his vineyard, Behold, these three years I come seeking fruit on this fig-tree, and find none: cut it down; why cumbereth it the ground?

Our blessed Saviour, that he might excite the Jews to the practice of the last-mentioned duty of repentance, sets forth his long-suffering with them, and forbearance towards them, by the parable of the fig-tree, which the master of the vineyard had long expected fruit from, but found none. Where note, 1. The great care that God takes to make poor sinners happy; he plants them in his church, as in a vineyard; that by the cultivating care of his ministers, and the fructifying influence of his Spirit, they may be fruitful in good works. Note, 2. That God keeps an exact account of reckoning, what means and advantages every place and people have enjoyed, "These three years" have I come seeking fruit, alluding to the three years of his own ministry among them. God keeps a memorial how many years the gospel has been amongst a people, how many ministers they have had, and how long with them; what pathetic exhortations, what pressing admonitions, what cutting reproofs, all are upon the file, and must be accounted for. Learn, 3. That God expects suitable and proportionable fruit from a people according to the time of their standing in his vineyard, and answering to the cost and culture, which his ministers have expended upon them, and the pains they have taken with them. Note farther, 4. That although God doth, and justly may expect fruit from such as are planted in his vineyard, to wit, the christian church, yet he expects it with much patience and forbearance, waiting from year to year, to see if time will work amendment; "These three years I have come seeking fruit, and found none." Lastly, If after all the cost that God has bestowed upon a people by his ministers and ordinances, they continue unfaithful, there is nothing to be expected but excision and final destruction; "Cut it down, why cumbereth it the ground?"

(No. 19.)

8 And he, answering, said unto him, Lord, let it alone this year also, till I shall dig about it, and dung it:

9 And if it bear fruit, well: and if not, then, after that, thou shalt cut it down.

Observe here, 1. The vine-dresser's petition and request: "Lord, let it alone this year also." This points out unto us, the office and duty of the ministers of God who are laborers in his vineyard, to be intercessors with God for sparing a barren and unfaithful people. Lord! spare them a little longer; "Let it alone this year also." If they cannot absolutely prevent judgment coming upon an unfruitful people, yet they endeavour to respite it, and delay its coming, all they can. Observe, 2. The condition upon which the vine-dresser's petition is grounded, "till I shall dig about it, and dung it;" phrases which intimate unto us the nature and quality of the ministerial work and service, signifying it to be a very difficult and laborious service. Digging is a painful work, and a spending work; and such is our ministerial work, if followed as it ought to be. We deal in mysteries, in the deep things of God, which are not received without much digging. Observe, 3. A double supposition here made by the vine-dresser: first, of future fruitfulness; "If it bear fruit, well?" secondly, of future incorrigibleness; "If not, after that thou shalt cut it down." 1. Here is a supposition of future fruitfulness; "If it bear fruit, well;" that is, it will be well for the master of the vineyard; herein is he glorified, when his fig-tree bears much fruit; well for the dresser of the vineyard; it rejoices the ministers of God to see their people bring forth fruit unto God: well for the vineyard and the rest of the trees that are in it: but more especially well for the tree itself, thereby avoiding the punishment of barrenness; and procuring the reward of fruitfulness; thus, "If it bear fruit, well" Here is a supposition of future incorrigibleness; "After that, thou shalt cut it down;" that is, after thou hast spared it, and I have pruned it; after thy patience and my pains; after thou hast forborn it and I have manured it, digged and dunged it; if after all this, it bear no fruit, then I have not a word more to say, "Thou shalt cut it down." Thou mayest cut it down, nobody will go about to hinder thee. From hence learn, That a people's continued unfruitfulness under the means of grace, doth in time take off the prayers and intercessions of the ministers of God for them, and provokes God to bring his judgments unavoidably and irrevocably upon them. "After that, thou shalt cut it down."

10 And he was teaching in one of the synagogues on the sabbath.

11 ¶ And, behold, there was a woman which had a spirit of infirmity eighteen years, and was bowed together, and could in no wise lift up herself:

12 And, when Jesus saw her, he called her to him, and said unto her, Woman, thou art loosed from thine infirmity.

13 And he laid his hands on her; and immediately she was made straight, and glorified God.

14 And the ruler of the synagogue answered with indignation, because that Jesus had healed on the sabbath-day, and said unto the people, There are six days in which men ought to work; in them, therefore, come and be healed, and not on the sabbath-day.

15 The Lord then answered him, and said, Thou hypocrite! doth not each one of you, on the sabbath, loose his ox or his ass from the stall, and lead him away to watering?

16 And ought not this woman, being a daughter of Abraham, whom satan hath bound, lo, these eighteen years, be loosed from this bond on the sabbath-day?

17 And, when he had said these things, all his adversaries were ashamed: and all the people rejoiced for all the glorious things that were done by him.

Observe here, 1. The afflicted person; a woman which had a sore disease inflicted upon her by the devil for eighteen years, which almost bowed her together: there is nothing that the devil delights more in, than the miseries and calamities of mankind. Satan is not satisfied barely to infect the mind, and poison the souls of men; but he delights to hurt and afflict the body, where and when he can obtain leave. Observe, 2. Christ's compassion towards her, and his miraculous healing of her; "Jesus called her to him," and with a word speaking healed her. Where note, That the inveterateness of the disease, and the instantaneousness of the cure, made the miracle evident. She that had been bowed down eighteen years, in an instant is made straight, and only by the word of Christ's mouth; such a miraculous operation was an evident testimony of his divine mission, that he was the Son of God. Observe, 3. How the heart of the poor woman is affected with Christ's hand: she glorified God; that is, she gave thanks to God, and attributed the miracle to him. As the chief end of all God's extraordinary works, either of power or mercy, is the exaltation of his own glory: so the only way that we can set forth his glory, is by celebrating his praises, and expressing our thankfulness; "He that offereth me praise and thanks, glorifies me." Psal. 1. ult. Observe, 4. The unreasonable anger, and unjust indignation, which was found with the ruler of the synagogue, against our Holy Lord, for working this miraculous cure on the sabbath-day: there is no person so holy, no action so innocent, but may fall under unjust censure, especially where ignorance and malice are combined. What a severe reflection doth this man make upon our blessed Lord, for performing a work of mercy on the sabbath-day! Observe, 5. Our Lord's vindication of himself from calumny and false accusation: 1. He charges his accuser with hypocrisy; "Thou hypocrite, doth not each of you loose his ox, or his ass, from the stall, on the sabbath-day, and water him?" It is one note of an hypocrite, to condemn that in another which he doth himself: the Jews held it lawful to loose and lead a beast to watering, on the sabbath-day, which was the work of servile labor, and yet would condemn Christ for healing a poor woman only with a word speaking. 2. Christ vindicates his own action by comparing it with theirs, which they judged lawful on the sabbath-day; Was their loosing and watering their beast, a work of necessity? much more was his. Was theirs a work of mercy? his much more; their compassion was to a brute beast, his to a rational creature, to a woman, and that not a stranger, an heathen woman; but one of their own, a Jewish woman, a daughter of Abraham: nay, farther, Christ's act was an act of far greater necessity, and more special mercy than theirs. The beast might live a day without water: the beast might not be sick: but this woman was in sore distress, and had been so for eighteen years: nay, she was in the hands of the enemy of mankind, bound by satan. Was it not then a greater act of mercy and compassion to loose her, than to lead a beast? Observe, 6. What effect our Lord's vindication of himself had upon the hearers of it: "His adversaries were ashamed, and the people rejoiced," verse 17. His accusers were ashamed, and probably convinced, perhaps silenced: but we read not that they confessed their error, or acknowledged their unjust censure, or craved Christ's pardon. When persons' judgments are under conviction of an error or mistake, it is very hard to bring themselves to confess and own their mistake, because all men stand very much upon the credit and reputation of their understandings, and look upon it as a reproach to own themselves mistaken; though it is really otherwise: but though our Saviour's adversaries were only ashamed, others rejoiced for all the glorious things that were done by him.

18 ¶ Then said he, Unto what is the kingdom of God like? and whereunto shall I resemble it?

19 It is like a grain of mustard-seed, which a man took, and cast into his garden, and it grew, and waxed a great tree: and the fowls of the air lodged in the branches of it.

20 And again he said, Whereunto shall I liken the kingdom of God?

21 It is like leaven, which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal, till the whole was leavened.

Our Saviour's design in both these parables, is to keep his disciples and followers from being offended at the small beginnings of his kingdom, and to foretel the future great success of the gospel, notwithstanding the present small appearance of the efficacy of it. To this purpose he compares the kingdom of God, that is, the gospel-church, "to a grain of mustard seed," which being one of the least seeds, yet in that country grew into so large a tree, that the birds roost and lodge in the boughs of it. He also likens it to leaven, which quickly diffuses itself through the whole mass or lump, instantly turning a great heap of meal into its own nature. Christ shows hereby of what a spreading nature the doctrine of the gospel would be, notwithstanding all the malice and opposition of wicked men. Learn hence, That how small beginnings soever the gospel had in its first plantation, yet by the fructifying blessing of God and the influence of the Holy Spirit, it has had, and shall have a wonderful increase.

22 And he went through the cities and villages teaching, and journeying towards Jerusalem.

23 ¶ Then said one unto him, Lord, are there few that be saved? And he said unto them, 24 Strive to enter in at the strait gate; for many, I say unto you, will seek to enter in, and shall not be able.

Observe here, 1. The unwearied pains and diligence of our holy Lord in preaching and publishing the glad tidings of the gospel to lost sinners; "He went through the cities and villages teaching;" not in great and populous cities only, but in poor and obscure villages also; not preaching by his exemplary life only, but by his holy doctrine likewise. -- Let such preachers, who look upon the work of preaching as the least part of their business, consider the indefatigable pains which our Lord took in that work: and how will his diligence shame our negligence? Observe, 2. A curious question put to our Saviour concerning the number of those that should be saved, whether they shall be few or many; "Lord, are they few that be saved?" Where note, How curiously inquisitive we naturally are after the knowledge of things that do not concern us, how forward to pry into unrevealed secrets, and to search into God's hidden counsel; it concerns us rather to understand what sort of persons shall be saved, than how many shall be saved, and to make sure that we be of that sort. Observe, 3. Our Saviour gives no direct answer to the curiosity of this inquirer, but turns his speech from him to the people: "Jesus said unto them, strive to enter in at the strait gate, &c." For the clearer understanding of which expression we must know, that Christ alludes to the feasts and marriage-suppers among the Jews; they that were invited did enter by a gate which was very straight and narrow, and as soon as the invited were once entered, the gate was shut and opened no more. Here Christ bids them strive to enter into the kingdom of heaven, before the gate is shut against them, and their entrance, by means of their coming too late, be made impossible to them: "Strive to enter, &c. for many will seek, &c." Where note, 1. The metaphor which Christ is pleased to set forth heaven and the happiness of a future state by; he compares it to a strait gate; to a gate, to denote the possibility of entering; to a strait gate, to denote the difficulty of entrance: a gate supposes the entrance possible, but a strait gate bespeaks the entrance difficult. 2. Here is a duty urged and enforced upon all those that expect the happiness of another life, and that desire to enter in at this strait gate; and that is, a diligent and industrious striving; "Strive to enter in at the strait gate. 3. We have a forcible argument and motive to excite and quicken us to the practice of this duty, drawn from the paucity, or small number of those that shall obtain salvation in a dying hour; "Many will seek to enter in, but shall not be able." Learn thence, 1. That heaven or the happiness of a future state is attainable. 2. That it is not attainable without labor and difficulty. 3. That all those difficulties may be happily overcome by a diligent and industrious striving.

25 When once the Master of the house is risen up, and hath shut to the door, and ye begin to stand without, and to knock at the door, saying, Lord, Lord, open unto us: and he shall answer, and say unto you, I know you not whence ye are.

26 Then shall ye begin to say, We have eaten and drunk in thy presence, and thou hast taught in our streets.

27 But he shall say, I tell you, I know you not whence ye are; depart from me, all ye workers of iniquity.

28 There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth, when ye shall see Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, and all the prophets, in the kingdom of God, and you yourselves thrust out.

29 And they shall come from the east and from the west, and from the north, and from the south, and shall sit down in the kingdom of God.

30 And, behold, there are last which shall be first, and there are first which shall be last.

Our Saviour having exhorted all his followers in the foregoing verses to make sure of heaven and salvation to themselves, whilst the door of hope and salvation is open to them, by this parable the master of a family inviting guests to his table, and waiting for their coming, and at last shutting the door against them, because they either denied or delayed coming: Christ hereby represented to the Jews the great danger they were in, if they neglected the present season of grace and salvation, which now they did enjoy; telling them farther, how little it would profit them at the day of judgment, to alledge that they had eaten and drunk in his presence, and that they had heard him preach in their streets, if they did not forsake their sins, and obey his gospel. Adding farther, that it would be an heart-piercing sorrow, a soul-rending grief, to them at the great day, to see not only the patriarchs and prophets, and other Jews, but even the despised Gentiles from all quarters and nations, whom they thought accursed, admitted into the kingdom of heaven, and themselves eternally shut out; "For the first shall be last, and the last first;" that is, the Gentiles who were afar off shall receive the gospel, when you for rejecting it shall be cast off. From the whole, note, 1. That there is a determinate time when souls must (if ever) accept of the offers of grace and salvation, which are made unto them; now is the door open, and persons invited in. 2. That ere long Jesus Christ, who now stands at every one of our doors waiting for our compliance with his gospel terms, will wait no longer upon us, nor strive any farther by the motions of his Spirit with us, "when once the Master of the house is risen up, and hath shut to the door." 3. That doleful is the condition of such miserable souls against whom the door is shut: the door of repentance, the door of hope, the door of salvation; all shut, eternally shut; and that by him, who shutteth, and none can open. 4. That all would be saved at last; all will cry for mercy; when it is too late, even such as now sinfully undervalue, and scornfully despise it; "ye shall stand without, and knock at the door, saying, Lord, Lord, open unto us." Note, 5. That it is no good plea for admittance into heaven, because we have been church-members here on earth; no outward privileges, though Christ has taught in our streets; no external acts of communion, though we have eaten and drank in his presence, and at his holy table, will justify our hopes of entering into heaven, when wedie, if we be workers of iniquity whilst we live; "Lord, we have eaten and drank in thy presence; but he shall say, I know you not, ye workers of iniquity." Note, 6. That as hell will be a second heaven to the glorified, so heaven will be a second hell to the damned. Hell will be a second heaven to the glorified, that is, it will add exceedingly to the happiness of the saints in heaven, to see and be sensible of that misery which they escaped, and the damned endure; and on the other hand, heaven will be a second hell to the damned; that is, it will increase their torments, and add to the vexation of the spirits, to see some in heaven whom they little expected to see there; some that never saw, nor heard, nor enjoyed, what they have done; strangers, yea heathens taken in, when the children of the kingdom, that is, the members of the visible church, are shut out: "They shall come from the east, from the west, from the north, and from the south, and sit down in the kingdom of God, but the children of the kingdom shall be cast into outer darkness."

31 The same day there came certain of the pharisees, saying unto him, Get thee out, and depart hence: for Herod will kill thee.

32 And he said unto them, Go ye and tell that fox, Behold, I cast out devils, and I do cures to-day and to-morrow, and the third day I shall be perfected.

33 Nevertheless, I must walk to-day and to-morrow, and the day following:

for it cannot be that a prophet perish out of Jerusalem.

It may seem strange, that the pharisees, who had no kindness for our Saviour, should come here and acquaint him with a danger that he was in from Herod: "Get thee hence, for Herod will kill thee." It is probable they had a design to drive him out of the country, because his reputation was so great amongst the people, who were admirers of his person, hearers of his doctrine, and witnesses of his miracles. But what intention soever they had in acquainting Christ with his danger, it is very evident, that our Saviour slighted it, by the message which he sent to Herod: go and tell that fox: where we must not suppose, that our Lord did fix this name of fox upon Herod as an opprobrious title, thereby reflecting the least dishonor upon him as a king; but it was as a prophet, to let him know, that being about his Father's work, he feared neither his power nor his policy; neither his cruelty nor his craft; and that nothing should take him off from finishing the work of man's redemption. Learn hence, That when God calls forth any of his servants to any special service for him, all the combined power and policy of the prince of darkness, and his instruments, shall never be able to hinder them, till they have finished their course, and done the service which God designed: "I must work to-day and to-morrow, and the day following;" as if Christ had said, "Let Herod know that my time is not in his hand; and as to this matter, I am not under his command or power, ere long my work will be finished, and then I shall be perfected." Observe here, That to impose this ignominious but suitable name of Herod, is not contrary to the command, not to speak evil of the ruler of the people; it being the office of a prophet, not to spare kings when they repore their offences. Accordingly Christ here uses his prophetic call and power, in giving this tyrant a name so suitable to his actions, Go and tell that fox from me, a prophet sent of God, and therefore authorised so to style him; that I am hastening to Jerusalem to lay down my life there, not fearing to be killed by him in the way; for it cannot be, that a prophet perish out of Jerusalem: where the sanhedrim sit, who are to pass judgment upon me.—Dr. Whitby.

34 O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, which killest the prophets, and stonest them that are sent unto thee: how often would I have gathered thy children together, as a hen doth gather her brood under her wings, and ye would not!

35 Behold, your house is left unto you desolate; and verily I say unto you, Ye shall not see me until the time come when ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord.

Our Lord concludes this chapter with a compassionate lamentation over Jerusalem, the place where he was to suffer. His ingemination, or doubling of the word, O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, shows the vehemency of his affection towards them, and the sincerity of his desires for their salvation. Observe, 1. The kindness and compassion of Christ to the Jews in general, and Jerusalem in particular, set forth by a lively metaphor and similitude, namely, that of a hen gathering her chickens under her wings; as the hen doth tenderly cherish, and carefully hide and cover her young from the eye of her destroyer, so would Christ have shrouded and sheltered this people from all those birds of prey, and particularly from the Roman eagle, by whose talons they were at last destroyed. Again, as the hen continueth her call to her young ones from morning till night, and holds out her wings for shelter to them all the day long, so did Christ wait for his people's repentance and conversion; for it was more than forty years after they had killed his prophets, and murdered himself, before they met with a final overthrow.— Observe, 2. The amazing obstinacy and wilfulness of this people, in rejecting the grace and favor, the kindness and condescension of the Lord Jesus Christ; I would have gathered you, but ye would not. Observe, 3. The fatal issue of this obstinacy. Behold, your house is left unto you desolate; is left, that is, certainly and suddenly will be left desolate (the present tense being put for the paulo post futurum) which denotes both the certainty and proximity of this people's ruin. Learn, 1. That the ruin and destruction of sinners is wholly chargeable upon themselves, that is, on their own wilfulness and impenitency, on their own obstinacy and obduracy; I would have gathered you, says Christ, but ye would not. Learn, 2. How deplorably and inexcusably will they perish, who perish by their own wilfulness and obduracy under the gospel. 3. That there is no desire like unto God's desire of a people's repentance, no longing like unto God's longing for a people's salvation. "O Jerusalem, how oft would I have gathered thee? When shall it once be?" Jer. xiii. 27.

CHAPTER XIV.

AND it came to pass, as he went into the house of one of the chief pharisees to eat bread on the sabbath-day, that they watched him.

2 And, behold, there was a certain man before him, which had the dropsy.

3 And Jesus, answering, spake unto the lawyers and pharisees, saying, Is it lawful to heal on the sabbath-day?

4 And they held their peace. And he took him, and healed him, and let him go:

5 And answered them, saying, Which of you shall have an ass or an ox fallen into a pit, and will not straightway pull him out on the sabbath day?

(No. 19.)

6 And they could not answer him again to these things.

Several particulars are here worthy of our observation and imitation. Note, 1. The freedom of our Lord's conversation with men: he delighted in human society, and was of a social temper; we do not find, that whenever he was invited to a dinner that he disdained to go, not so much for the pleasure of eating, as for the opportunity of conversing and doing good. Note, 2. The house he goes into, and is entertained in, one of the chief pharisees, who were some of his chiefest enemies; a great instance of our Lord's humanity, humility, and self-denial, in that he refuses not the conversation of those whom he knew did not affect him; teaching us to love our enemies, and not to shun conversing with them, that thereby we may gain an opportunity of being reconciled unto them. Note, 3. The day when our Saviour dined publicly at the pharisee's house, among the lawyers and pharisees, it was on the sabbath-day. Learn thence, That it is not simply unlawful for us to entertain our friends and neighbours with a plentiful meal on the Lord's day; it must be acknowledged, that feasting upon any day is one of those lawful things which is with difficulty managed without sin, but more especially upon that day, that it does not unfit us for the duties of the sabbath: however, our Lord's example in going to a public dinner amongst lawyers and pharisees, evidently shows the lawfulness of feasting on that day, provided we use the same moderation in eating and drinking that he did, and improve the opportunity as a reason for doing good, as he has taught us by his example. Note, 4. How contrary to the laws of behaviour, the decency of conversation, and the rules of hospitality, the pharisees watched him, making their table a snare to catch him, hoping they might hear something from him, or see something in him, for which they might accuse him; "He entered into the house of the pharisee to eat bread, and they watched him." Note, 5. Our Saviour chose the sabbath-day as the fittest season to work his miraculous cures in; in the pharisee's house he heals a man that had the dropsy, on the sabbath-day. Christ would not forbear doing good, nor omit any opportunity of helping and healing the distressed, though he knew his enemies, the pharisees, would carp and cavil at it, calumniate and reproach him for it; it being the constant guise of hypocrites, to prefer ceremonial and ritual observations, before necessary and moral duties. Note, 6. How our Saviour defends the lawfulness of his act in healing the dejected man, from their own act in helping a beast out of the pit on the sabbath-day: as if Christ had said, "Is it lawful for you on the sabbath-day to help a beast? and is it sinful to me to heal a man?" Note lastly, How the reason and force of our Saviour's argument silenced the pharisees; convinced them, no doubt, but we read nothing of their conversation; the obstinate and malicious are much harder to be wrought upon, than the ignorant and the scandalous; it is easier to silence such men than to satisfy them; to stop their mouths than to remove their prejudices: for obstinacy will hold the conclusion, though reason cannot maintain the premises; They could not answer him again to those things.

7 And he put forth a parable to those which were bidden, when he marked how they chose out the chief rooms; saying unto them,

8 When thou art bidden of any man to a wedding, sit not down in the highest room, lest a more honorable man than thou be bidden of him;

9 And he that bade thee and him, come and say to thee, Give this man place; and thou begin with shame to take the lowest room.

10 But when thou art bidden, go and sit down in the lowest room; that when he that bade thee cometh, he may say unto thee, Friend go up higher: then shalt thou have worship in the presence of them that sit at meat with thee.

11 For whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted.

It was observed before, that our blessed Saviour dined publicly on the sabbath-day with several pharisees and lawyers; that which is here worthy our notice is this; how holy and suitable our Lord's discourse was to the solemnity of that day: may be the matter of our imitation. It is not unlawful for friends to dine together on the Lord's day, provided their discourse be suitable to the day, such as our Lord's here; for observing how the company then at the table did affect precedence, and taking place one of another: he that before their eyes had cured a man of a bodily dropsy, attempts to cure the persons that dined with him of the tympany of pride. Where note, That it is not the taking, but the affecting of the highest place and uppermost rooms that our Saviour condemns. There may and ought to be a precedence amongst persons; it is according to the will of God. That honor be given to whom honor is due; and that the most honorable persons should sit in the most honorable places; for grace gives a man no exterior preference; it makes a man glorious indeed, but it is glorious within. Note farther, The way and course, the method and means, which our Saviour directs persons to, in order to their attaining real honor, both from God and men, namely, by being little in our own eyes, and in lowliness of mind, esteeming others better than ourselves; as God will abase, and men will despise, the proud and haughty, so God will exalt, and men will honor, the humble person; "Whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased, and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted."

12 ¶ Then said he also to him that bade him, When thou makest a dinner or a supper, call not thy friends, nor thy brethren, neither thy kinsmen, nor thy rich neighbours; lest they also bid thee again, and a recompence be made thee.

13 But when thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind;

14 And thou shalt be blessed; for they cannot recompense thee: For thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just.

Observe here, That this is not an absolute denial of calling brethren and kinsfolk and rich neighbours; but Christ forbids the inviting them alone, and requires that the poor be refreshed at or from our table: for when the rich feast one another, and let the poor fast and pine, this is very sinful. Accordingly our Saviour observing how the pharisee that bade him to dinner invited only the rich, overlooking and neglecting the poor, he exhorts him and the company, that whenever they make entertainments for the time to come, they should not only invite their rich neighbours and friends, who can and will invite them again, but remember the poor. Here note, 1. That civil courtesies, and hospitable entertainments, of kindred and friends, for maintaining and preserving love and concord, is not only lawful, but an expedient and necessary duty; Use hospitality one to another, says St. Peter, without grudging. 2. That though it be not unlawful to invite and feast the rich, yet it is most acceptable to God, when we feed and refresh the poor; When thou makest a feast, call rather the poor, and thou shalt be blessed. We must prefer the duties of christian charity before the acts of common civility: blessed are those peace-makers, who make the bowels of the hungry to bless them. 3. That God oft-times rewards our liberality to the poor very signally in this life; but if it be deferred, we shall not fail to receive it at the resurrection of the just; "The poor cannot recompense thee, but thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just."

15 ¶ And when one of them that sat at meat with him heard these things, he said unto him, Blessed is he that shall eat bread in the kingdom of God

16 Then said he unto him, A certain man made a great supper, and bade many:

17 And sent his servants at supper-time to say to them that were bidden, Come, for all things are now ready.

18 And they all with one consent began to make excuse. The first said unto him, I have bought a piece of ground, and I must needs go and see it: I pray thee have me excused.

19 And another said, I have bought five yoke of oxen, and I go to prove them: I pray thee have me excused.

20 And another said, I have married a wife, and therefore I cannot come.

21 So that servant came, and showed his lord these things. Then the master of the house being angry, said to his servant, Go out quickly into the streets and lanes of the city, and bring in hither the poor, and the maimed, and the halt, and the blind.

22 And the servant said, Lord, it is done as thou hast commanded, and yet there is room.

23 And the lord said unto the servant, Go out into the highways and hedges, and compel them to come in, that my house may be filled.

24 For I say unto you, that none of those men which were bidden, shall taste of my supper.

One of them that sat at meat with our Saviour in the pharisee's house, hearing Christ speak of being recompensed at the resurrection of the just, repeated that known saying among the rabbins, "Blessed is he that shall eat bread in the kingdom of God;" that is, who shall be partaker of the joys of heaven. Hereupon Christ utters the parable of the marriage-supper, recorded here by St. Luke, with small variation from what was delivered by St. Matthew, chap. xii. The first intention of our Saviour in that parable seems to be this, to set forth that gracious offer of mercy and salvation which was made by the preaching of the gospel unto the Jews, and to declare God's purpose of receiving the Gentiles into the fold of Christ, upon the Jews despising and rejecting that inestimable favor. But besides this, it has an aspect upon us christians, who have embraced the doctrine of the gospel. Here note, 1. That the gospel, for its freeness and fulness, for its varieties and delicacies, is like a marriage-supper; for 1. It does create the same relation between Christ and believers, that marriage doth between husband and wife. 2. It intitles to the same privileges that a conjugal relation doth; to the same endearing love and tenderness, to the same care and protection, to the same honor, and to the same happiness. 3. It obliges to the like duties, namely, unspotted love and fidelity, cheerful obedience to his commands, reverence to his person, submission to his authority. 4. It produceth the same effects; as the effect of marriage is increase of children, so the fruit of the gospel is "bringing many sons to God." Note, 2. That gospel invitations are mightily disesteemed: they made light of the invitation, and offered frivolous excuses for their refusal of it. Note, 3. That the preference which the world has in men's esteem, is a great cause of the gospel contempt; One had purchased a piece of ground, another had bought five yoke of oxen. Note, 4. The deplorable sadness of their condition who refuse, upon any pretence whatever to comply with the gospel-tender of reconciliation and mercy; The king was wroth, pronounced them unworthy of his favor, and resolved they should not taste of his supper; but sends forth his servants to invite others, to his supper. Note, 5. The notion under which the Gentiles are set forth unto us, such as were in lanes, streets, and highways: that is, a rude, rustic, and barbarous people, whom the Jews despised, yea, whom they held accursed; yet even these are called and accepted, whilst the Jews, the first intended guests, are excluded by means of their own contempt.

Note lastly, The means used to bring in the Gentiles to the gospel-supper; Go and compel them to come in; not by violence, but persuasion; by argumentation, not compulsion; the plain and persuasive, the powerful and efficacious preaching of the word, with the motions and influences of the Holy Spirit, are the compulsions here intended; not external force, nor temporal punishments, not outward violence, Non religionis est cogere religionem, says Tertullian; "No man ought by force and violence to be compelled to the profession of the true faith." Observe then, How vainly these words are brought to prove, that men may be compelled by the secular arm to embrace the christian faith. This appears, 1. From the nature of a banquet, to which none are compelled by force, but by persuasion only. 2. From the scope of the parable, which respects the calling of the Gentiles, who believed by the great power of God.

25 ¶ And there went great multitudes with him; and he turned, and said unto them,

26 If any man come to me, and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple

27 And whosoever doth not bear his cross, and come after me, cannot be my disciple.

Our Saviour by these expressions doth not condemn natural love and affection, either to our relations or our lives, but only regulates and directs it, showing, That our first and chief love must be bestowed upon himself; we may have, and ought to cherish, tender and relenting affections towards our near and dear relations; but then the consideration of Christ's truth and religion must take place of these; yea, of life itself; and when they stand in competition with these, we are to regard them no more than if they were objects of our hatred. Learn hence, 1. That no man can be a sincere disciple of Christ, who gives any relation or outward enjoyment, a preference to Christ in his heart and affections. Christ must be loved above all, or we love him not at all: less love he accounts and calls "hatred." That which we can leave for Christ, we hate in comparison of that love which we bear to Christ. It is both impious and impossible to hate father and mother, and ourselves, absolutely; it must then be under stood comparatively only: what we love less, we are comparatively said to hate. Learn, 2. That all the disciples of Christ must be ready and willing, whenever called to it, to quit all their temporal interests and enjoyments, even life itself, and submit to any temporal inconveniences, even death itself, and all this willingly and cheerfully, rather than disown their relation to Christ, and quit the profession of his holy religion: upon easier terms than these, can none of us be the disciples of Jesus.

28 For which of you, intending to build a tower, sitteth not down first, and counteth the cost, whether he have sufficient to finish it?

29 Lest haply, after he hath laid the foundation, and is not able to finish it, all that behold it, begin to mock him, 30 Saying, This man began to build, and was not able to finish.

31 Or what king, going to make war against another king, sitteth not down first, and consulteth, whether he be able with ten thousand to meet him that cometh against him with twenty thousand?

32 Or else, while the other is yet a great way off, he sendeth an ambassage, and desireth conditions of peace.

33 So likewise, whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple.

Our blessed Saviour, by these two parables, advises all his followers to sit down and consider, to weigh well, and cast up beforehand, what it is like to cost them to go through with their profession of religion; this, he tells us, common prudence will direct men to do in other cases; particularly when they either go to build or fight. As a man that intends to build, will consult whether he is able to defray the charges, and a king that goeth forth to war, will consider what strength he has to make opposition; in like manner should persons engage in religion; not rashly, but advisedly, with consideration and judgment: it is good to remember the issues of action before we act; before we engage in the spiritual combat, to consider the difficulty of the battle; what proud leviathans we have to conflict with, what mighty giants to contend and strive against, even the world, the flesh and the devil. But then we must take great care that our deliberation and consideration of difficulties and dangers, may not deter us from, but work in us a steady resolution for the combat, looking up to Christ for his auxiliary aid and strength to render us victorious, who, though of ourselves we can do nothing, yet "may do all things through Christ that strengthens us." Learn from hence, That such as take up a profession of christianity, without considering the dangers and difficulties, the trials and troubles, the afflictions and temptations, which may accompany, will never hold out in the spiritual warfare, but either fail in it, or run from it.

34 ¶ Salt is good, but if the salt have lost its savor, wherewith shall it be seasoned?

35 It is neither fit for the land, nor yet for the dunghil; but men cast it out. He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.

Our Saviour here compares his disciples to salt, thereby denoting their usefulness, salt being one of the most useful things in nature: and pointing also out their duty, which is to season themselves and others with sound doctrine. But hypocritical professors are like unsavory salt, they are neither savory in themselves nor serviceable to others. Our Saviour compares such christians, who have no savor of piety and goodness upon their spirits, to salt, that having lost its goodness, is neither fit for the land, nor yet for the dunghil; that is, being of a brackish nature, it is wholly unfit to manure the ground, and will rather occasion barrenness than any fruitfulness or increase. Learn hence, That sincere and serious christians are and will be as the salt of the earth; that is, good and savory in themselves, and endeavouring by exhortation and good example to season others; but hypocritical professors and apostatizing christians will be cast out, and trampled upon as unsavory salt.

CHAPTER XV.

This chapter consists of three parables: the design and scope of them all is this: to represent the great tenderness and compassion of God Almighty towards the vilest and worst of sinners upon their sincere repentance, and how highly pleasing it is to God when they do so. This is expressed by three parables; 1. Of a man seeking diligently a sheep that he had lost, and having found it, rejoiceth greatly, and inviteth his neighbours to partake of his joy. 2. Of a woman having lost a piece of silver, and seeking carefully till she had found it, and then in like manner rejoicing with her friends for her good success. 3. Of a prodigal son, who having spent his time, and consumed his estate in riot and excess, at length returns to his father's house, and is joyfully received.

THEN drew near unto him all the publicans and sinners for to hear him.

2 And the pharisees and scribes murmured, saying, This man receiveth sinners and eateth with them.

The publicans and sinners, as they had done several times before, came to hear our Saviour's instructions; he treated them very kindly and conversed familiarly with them: at this the pharisees were displeased and murmured, censuring our Saviour for too much familiarity with those men, whom they looked upon as scandalous to converse with; not considering that he conversed with them as their physician, not as their companion; and therefore his proper work and employment lay among his patients; and that he might give all possible encouragement to the repentance of the greatest sinners, he sets forth, at once, the tender care of God in recovering such lost sinners, and the inexpressible joy that is found in heaven at the welcome news of their recovery: for thus it follows in the parables.

3 And he spake this parable unto them, saying,

4 What man of you, having an hundred sheep, if he lose one of them, doth not leave the ninety and nine in the wilderness, and go after that which is lost, until he find it?

5 And when he hath found it, he layeth it on his shoulders, rejoicing,

6 And when he cometh home, he calleth together his friends and neighbours, saying unto them, Rejoice with me; for I have found my sheep which was lost.

7 I say unto you, That likewise joy shall be in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, more than over ninety and nine just persons, which need no repentance.

In this parable, Christ compares sinners to sheep going astray, and God the Father to a tender and careful shepherd, seeking his stray sheep; wherein he secretly taxes the pharisees for their uncharitableness in censuring him for conversing with publicans and sinners, and for their envy at the recovery of such sinners by repentance; assuring them, that they are far from the temper of the holy angels, who rejoice more at the news of one notorious sinner's conversion, than for many righteous persons who went not astray; like as a father is touched with a more sensible joy, for the recovery of one son who was dangerously sick, than for the health of all the rest who were in no such danger. From the whole, note, 1. That the creature's aberration may serve for our instruction: the sheep's straying away from us, should put us in mind of our wandering away from God. 2. That Christ, the great shepherd of his church, with vigilance and care seeketh up, and findeth out his lost sheep, and will never give over his search till he hath found them. 3. That the recovery of one lost sinner, by repentance, is matter of exceeding joy and rejoicing to Christ, the great shepherd, and to all the blessed company of heaven; "There is joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth," or changeth the whole course of his life, "more than over ninety and nine just persons that need no such repentance." The opening of a sinner's heart to Christ, makes joy in heaven, and occasions triumph in the city of our God above; as when a young prince is born, all the kingdom rejoiceth, and the conduits run wine; so when a soul is born to Christ under the gospel, O what a mighty satisfaction is it to the heart of Christ, and to all the angels and saints, that another soul is espoused to him. "O sinner, Christ never rejoiced over thee before: thou hast grieved him and wounded him a thousand times, but he never rejoiced in thee till now." And if there be such joy in heaven at the conversion of a sinner, Lord, what rejoicing must there be at the glorification of saints!

(No. 20.)

8 Either what woman, having ten pieces of silver, if she lose one piece, doth not light a candle, and sweep the house, and seek diligently till she find it.

9 And when she hath found it, she calleth her friends and her neighbours together, saying, Rejoice with me, for I have found the piece which I had lost.

10 Likewise, I say unto you, There is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth.

The scope of this parable is the same with the former. 1. To express the joy that is found with God and his holy angels at the recovery and conversion of a notorious sinner. 2. To justify Christ in conversing with such sinners, in order to their repentance and conversion, from the malicious reflections of the pharisees made upon our Saviour for so doing. The sense of the words seems to be this, "If you do all justify the diligence and care of a woman, using all possible means to recover the loss of a piece of silver that has Cæsar's image upon it, why (might our Saviour say) will you pharisees censure and condemn me for seeking to recover and save lost sinners, that have the image of an holy God stamped upon them?" Learn hence, 1. That the conversion of a sinner from a course and state of sin and wickedness, is highly acceptable and pleasing unto God. 2. That it is reasonable to suppose, that the holy angels in heaven do conceive a new joy at the notice and news of a sinner's repentance and conversion unto God: how the angels come by this knowledge, whether by virtue of their ministry here below, or whether God is pleased to reveal it to them above, as a thing extremely welcome and delightful to good spirits, 'tis neither material to inquire, nor possible to determine. But their happiness not being intensely infinite, it is certain they may be happier than they are. Note, 3. That God is not only willing to receive and embrace repenting and returning sinners, but the news of their repentance is entertained with so much joy in heaven, that if it be possible for the blessed inhabitants of that place to have any thing added to their happiness, this will be a new accession to it; for though the happiness of God himself be intensively infinite, and have nothing added to it; yet the happiness of angels and glorified spirits being but finite, is capable of addition: and as their knowledge and love do increase, so their felicity may be growing and improving to all eternity: so that it is reasonable enough to suppose, that there is really joy among the angels and spirits of just men made perfect, over every sinner that repenteth.

11 ¶ And he said, a certain man had two sons;

12 And the younger of them said to his father, Father, give me the portion of goods that falleth to me. And he divided unto them his living.

13 And not many days after, the younger son gathered all together, and took his journey into a far country, and there wasted his substance with riotous living.

14 And when he had spent all, there arose a mighty famine in that land; and he began to be in want.

15 And he went and joined himself to a citizen of that country; and he sent him into his fields to feed swine.

16 And he would fain have filled his belly with the husks that the swine did eat; and no man gave unto him.

17 And when he came to himself, he said, How many hired servants of my father's have bread enough and to spare, and I perish with hunger!

18 I will arise and go to my father, and will say unto him, Father, I have sinned against Heaven, and before thee, 19 And am no more worthy to be called thy son: make me as one of thy hired servants.

20 And he arose, and came to his father. But when he was yet a great way off, his father saw him, and had compassion, and ran, and fell on his neck, and kissed him.

21 And the son said unto him, Father, I have sinned against heaven, and in thy sight, and am no more worthy to be called thy son.

22 But the father said to his servants, Bring forth the best robe, and put it on him; and put a ring on his hand, and shoes on his feet:

23 And bring hither the fatted calf, and kill it: and let us eat and be merry.

24 For this my son was dead, and is alive again; he was lost and is found, And they began to be merry.

In the two former parables, of the lost sheep and lost groat, was represented to us, the great pains and care which Christ takes for the recovery of lost sinners. In this third parable of the prodigal son, is shadowed forth unto us, with what great readiness, joy and gladness, our heavenly Father receives repenting and returning sinners. In the face of this prodigal, as in a glass, we may behold, first, A riotous sinner's aversion from God. Secondly, A penitent sinner's conversion to God. Thirdly, A pardoned sinner's acceptance and entertainment with God. From the whole, learn, 1. What is the nature of sin, and the practice of sinners? Sin is a departing from God, and every sinner doth voluntarily and of his own accord depart from him, "he took his journey into a far country." Learn, 2. The great extravagance which sinners run into when they forsake God, and give up themselves to the conduct of their lusts and vile affections; he wasted all his substance "with riotous living;" that is, spent his time, and consumed his treasure, in riot and excess. Observe, 3. That sin will certainly bring men into straits, but straits do not always bring men off from sin; "he began to be in want," yet thinks not of returning to his father's house. 4. That sinners will try all ways, and go through the greatest hardships and difficulties before they will leave their sins, and return home to their heavenly Father: "he joined himself to a citizen of that country, and went into the fields to feed swine;" he chooses rather to feed at the hog's trough, than to feast in his father's house. Observe, 5. At last the happy fruits of a sanctified affliction; they put the prodigal upon serious consideration; "he came to himself;" upon wise consultation, "I perish with hunger;" and upon a fixed resolution; "I will arise and go to my Father." Serious consideration, and solid resolutions, are great steps to a sound conversion and thorough reformation. Observe, 6. The affectionate tenderness and compassion of the father towards the returning prodigal; though he had deserved to be sharply reprov'd, severely corrected, and finally rejected and shut out of doors; yet the father's compassion is above his anger; not a word of his miscarriages drops from his father's mouth, but as soon as ever the son looks back, mercy looks out, and the father expresses, 1. His speedy readiness to receive his son, "he ran unto him;" the son did only arise and go, but the father made haste and ran; mercy has not only a quick eye to spy out a penitent, but a swift foot, it runs to embrace a penitent. 2. Wonderful tenderness, "he fell upon his neck;" it had been much to have looked upon him with the eye, more to have taken him by the hand, but most of all to fall upon his neck. Divine mercy will not only meet a penitent, but embrace him also. 3. Strong affectionateness, "he kissed him;" giving him thereby a pledge and assurance of perfect friendship and reconciliation with him. Learn hence, That God is not only ready to give demonstrations of his mercy to penitent sinners, but also to give the seals and tokens of his special reconciled favor to them; they shall now have the kisses of his lips, who formerly deserved the blows of his hand; "The father ran unto him, fell on his neck, and kissed him: Observe lastly, The great joy that appeared in the whole house, as well as in the father's heart upon this great occasion, the prodigal's son returning, "they all began to be merry," there was music and dancing. Learn hence, That sincere conversion brings the soul into a joyful, into a very joyful state and condition. The joy that conversion brings is an holy and spiritual joy, a solid and substantial joy, a wonderful and transcendent joy, an increasing and never fading joy. Our joy on earth is an earnest of the joys of heaven, where there will be rejoicing in the presence of our heavenly Father and his holy angels to all eternity; "because we were dead, but are now alive again; we were lost, but are found."

25 Now, his elder son was in the field; and, as he came, and drew nigh to the house, he heard music and dancing.

26 And he called one of the servants, and asked what these things meant.

27 And he said unto him, Thy brother is come; and thy father hath killed the fatted calf, because he hath received him safe and sound.

28 And he was angry, and would not go in: therefore came his father out, and entreated him.

29 And he, answering, said to his father, Lo, these many years do I serve thee, neither transgressed I at any time thy commandment; and yet thou never gavest me a kid, that I might make merry with my friends:

30 But as soon as this thy son was come, which hath devoured thy living with harlots, thou hast killed for him the fatted calf.

31 And he said unto him, Son, thou art ever with me, and all I have is thine.

32 It was meet that we should make merry and be glad: for this thy brother was dead and is alive again: and was lost, and is found.

By the murmuring of the eldest son at the prodigal's returning to, and reception with, his father, some think the Jews in general are to be understood, whose peevishness to the Gentiles, and the repinings at the offer of salvation made unto them by the gospel, is very evident from many places of scripture; others understand it of the scribes and pharisees in particular, who presuming on their own righteousness, as if they had never transgressed God's commandments at any time, murmured at our Saviour for conversing with sinners, though it were in order to the bringing of them to repentance; which, instead of being frowardly discontented at, they ought to have rejoiced at. Learn hence, There is such an envious spirit in men, yea, even in the best of men, as inclineth them to repine at such dispensations in divine grace and favor as others receive, and they want. 3. That to indulge such a spirit and temper in ourselves, argues great sin, and great folly; great sin, in being dissatisfied with God's dispensations, and affronting his wisdom and justice, and great folly, in making another's good our grief; as if we had less because another has more; "The eldest son was angry and would not go in;" it follows, "therefore came the father out and intreated him." This shows the meekness of God in dealing with us under our frowardness; and the high satisfaction he takes in a sinner's conversion and returning to his duty. Lastly, This points out unto us our duty to imitate God, and be followers of him as dear children. Doth he rejoice at a sinner's return to his duty? so should we.—'Tis the devil's temper to regret and envy the good and happiness of others; he gnashes his teeth, when the prey he thought himself sure of, is snatched out of his jaws. But to God and all his holy angels, nothing is so agreeable as the repentance and conversion of a sinner from the error of his ways, and the saving of a soul from death; this is looked upon as a resurrection from the dead; and a ground of the greatest joy and rejoicing; "it was meet that we should make merry and be glad, for this thy brother was dead, and is alive again; he was lost and is found." Whence note, That regeneration is the term from which all true pleasure commences. We never live a merry day till we begin to live unto God: when the prodigal son returned to his father, then, and not till then, they began to be merry.

CHAPTER XVI.

AND he said also unto his disciples, There was a certain rich man which had a steward; and the same was accused unto him that he had wasted his goods.

2 And he called him, and said unto him, How is it that I hear this of thee? give an account of thy stewardship; for thou mayest be no longer steward.

3 Then the steward said within himself, What shall I do, for my lord taketh away from me the stewardship! I cannot dig; to beg I am ashamed.

4 I am resolved what to do, that, when I am put out of the stewardship, they must receive me into their houses.

5 So he called every one of his lord's debtors unto him, and said unto the first, How much owest thou unto my lord?

6 And he said, An hundred measures of oil. And he said unto him, Take thy bill, and sit down quickly, and write fifty.

7 Then said he to another, And how much owest thou? And he said, An hundred measures of wheat. And he said unto him, Take thy bill, and write fourscore.

Our Lord begins this chapter with the parable of a rich man's steward, who being called upon by his master to give up his accounts, in order to his being discharged from his office, cast about with himself what course he had best take to provide for his subsistence, when he should be turned out of his employment; at last he resolves upon this course: that he will go to his lord's debtors, and take a favorable account of them, writing down fifty for an hundred, that by this means he might oblige them to be kind to him in his necessity; this is the sum of the parable. Now the scope and design of it is this: to exhort all men that are entrusted by God here, with estates, honors, and authority, to make use of all these unto spiritual ends, the glory of God, and the benefit of others; for we are not proprietors and owners, but stewards only, of the manifold gifts of God, and must be accountable unto him for all at last; but in the mean time, to use, employ, and improve, our Lord's goods to the best advantage for ourselves, whilst we are entrusted with them; this is the scope of the parable; now the observations from it are these: 1. That all persons, even the highest and greatest of persons, are but stewards of the good things of God. 2. That our stewardship must and shall have an end; we shall not be always, nay, we shall not be long stewards. 3. That when we are put out of our stewardship, we must give an account of our carriage therein; and the greater our trust was, the heavier will our reckoning be. 4. That therefore it will be our highest prudence, whilst we are entrusted with our master's goods, so to use and improve them, as may make most for our comfort and advantage, when we give up our account.

8 And the Lord commended the unjust steward, because he had done wisely; for the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light.

Wisely, that is, discreetly, according to the wisdom of the men of this world, whose concern is only for the good things of this life. Christ commands him, not absolutely as a fit example to be followed in wasting his master's goods, but comparatively, as being worthy to be so far imitated by the children of light, as to take the same care to secure heaven as others do to get the world. Christ commends him no farther than we do a person, when we say such a one is a shrewd man for the world. In a word the steward is here commended, not for his dishonesty, but for his policy, shrewdness, and sagacity, having done cunningly for himself, though knavishly for his master, from whence our Saviour draws this conclusion, "That the children of this world, are in their generation wiser than the children of light." Hence note, That the generality of men are not so wise and provident for the soul, and the concerns of another world, as worldly men are for the interests and concerns of this life. It is seldom seen, that good men are so wise for the concerns of their souls, as worldly men are for their worldly interests.

9 And I say unto you, Make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness:

that, when ye fail, they may receive you into everlasting habitations.

Here our Saviour makes application of the foregoing parable to his disciples. Where note, 1. The title given by our Saviour to wealth and riches; he calls it mammon, and mammon of unrighteousness: mammon was the name given by the heathens to the god of riches; the mammon of unrighteousness is riches unrighteously gotten. 2. The advice given by our Saviour, to the men of wealth, "Make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness:" that is, make God your friend by a charitable distribution, that he may bless you; make the poor your friends, that they may unitedly engage their prayers for you; make your own consciences your friends, that they may not reproach and shame you, sting and torment you. Observe, 3. The argument used to excite the rich to this improvement of their wealth, "That when ye fail, they may receive you into everlasting habitations;" When ye fail, that is, when ye die, and your riches fail you, and can stand you in no farther stead. They may receive you; what they? Some understand it of the Holy Trinity, others of the blessed angels, whose office it is to convey the charitable and good man's soul to heaven, its eternal habitation. Some understand it of riches themselves, They may receive you; that is, your estates, laid out for God in works of piety and charity, may enter before you into heaven, and open the gates of eternal life for you, not in a way of merit, but in a way of means. Lastly, They may receive you: some understand it of the poor themselves, whose bowels our charity hath refreshed, that they will welcome us to heaven, and receive us with joyful acclamations into the eternal mansions, which are prepared for the merciful. Others say, the words, They may receive you, are personally put, for, That you may be received into heaven when you die. This is to imitate the wise merchant in sending over our money into another country by bills of exchange.

10 He that is faithful in that which is least, is faithful also in much: and he that is unjust in the least, is unjust also in much.

11 If therefore ye have not been faithful in the unrighteous mammon, who will commit to your trust the true riches?

12 And if ye have not been faithful in that which is another man's, who shall give you that which is your own?

Our blessed Saviour having declared to his followers, in the foregoing verses, the great advantage they shall reap by the charitable distribution of temporal good things, he acquaints them in these verses with a great detriment and disadvantage that will redound to them if they do otherwise. 1. If they be not faithful in right employing temporal riches, they must not expect that God will entrust them with spiritual and heavenly, which are the true riches: God will deal with his servants, as we deal with ours, never trust them with much, whom we find unfaithful in a little. 2. If they be not faithful in the improvement of these outward things, which God entrusts them with but for a time, and must shortly leave them to others; how can they expect that God should give them those spiritual good things, which shall never be taken away from them to whom they are given? Where note, 1. That the riches we have are called not our own, but another man's. "If ye have not been faithful in that which is another man's;" because God hath not made us proprietors, but dispensers; not owners, but stewards of these things; we have them for others, and must leave them to others; we are only trustees for the poor; if much be put into our hands, it is to dispense to others according to our Master's orders; let us be faithful then in that which is another man's; that is, with what God puts into our hand for the benefit of others. Note, 2. That though our gifts are not our own, yet grace or spiritual goods are our own; others may have all the benefit of our gifts, but we shall have the benefit and comfort of our own grace: this treasure we cannot leave to others, and it shall never be taken away from ourselves. Note, 3. That God is just, and will be eternally justified in denying his special grace to those, who do not make use of his common gifts: would men be faithful in improving a little, God would entrust them with more; did they not abuse the trust of his common gifts, he would not deny them the treasure of his saving grace, called here, "The true riches."

13 ¶ No servant can serve two masters; for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon.

Observe here, A twofold master spoken of, God and the world: God is our Master by creation, preservation, and redemption; he has appointed us our work, and secured us our wages: the world is become our master by intrusion, usurpation, and a general estimation; too many esteeming it as their chief good, and delighting in it as their chief joy. Observe, 2. That no man can serve these two masters, who are of contrary interests, and issue out contrary commands; when two masters are subordinate, and in their commands subservient to each other, the difficulty of serving both is not great; but where commands interfere, and interests clash, it is impossible: no man can serve God and the world, but he may serve God with the world; we may be served of riches, and yet serve God; but we cannot serve riches, but we must disserve God; we cannot serve God and the world both, and seek them as our chief good, and ultimate end, because no man can divide his heart betwixt God and the world. Learn hence, That to love the world as our chief good, to seek it as our highest interest, and to serve it as our chief commander, cannot stand with the love and service which we bear and owe to God our Maker. The world's servants, while such, can be none of God's freemen.

(No. 20.)

14 And the pharisees also, who were covetous, heard all these things; and they derided him.

The pharisees were notoriously addicted to the sin of covetousness, accounting no man happy but them that were rich; and because the promises made to the Jews were generally (though not only) of temporal blessings, they looked upon poverty as a curse, and esteemed the poor accursed, John vii. 49. The pharisees hearing their covetousness reproved, and the doctrine of charity and alms preached and enforced by our Saviour, they derided him in the shamefullest manner, with the highest degree of contempt and scorn, wringing the nose, and making mouths at him, as the original words seem to import. Learn hence, 1. That sinners grow very angry and impatient under the ministry of the word, when they hear their darling sin, their beloved lust, struck at and sharply reproved. 2. That covetous men, who make wealth their idols, when they hear the doctrine of an holy contempt of the world preached, and the great duty of almsgiving urged and enforced, they make it the matter of their contempt and derision; "The pharisees heard and derided him."

15 And he said unto them, Ye are they which justify yourselves before men; but God knoweth your hearts; for that which is highly esteemed amongst men, is abomination in the sight of God.

Here our Saviour sharply reproves the pharisees for their horrible pride, their self-justification, and vain affectation of the opinion and esteem of others; as if Christ had said, "You bear up yourselves, and take a pride in this, that men know no ill by you, that no man can say, black is your eye; but God can see, that black is your heart. You think, that because you glory in your own excellencies, that God glories in you too; but who is highly esteemed by you, is abominated by God." Learn, That no man ought to think himself approved of God, barely, because he is approved by himself; for all who justify themselves upon the goodness of their works are not good.

16 The law and the prophets were until John; since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it.

17 And it is easier for heaven and earth to pass, than one tittle of the law to fail.

18 Whosoever putteth away his wife, and marrieth another, committeth adultery; and whosoever marrieth her that is put away from her husband, committeth adultery.

Our Saviour in these words gives the pharisees to understand that their contempt of his person and doctrine was the more inexcusable, because they lived in and under the clearest light of the gospel: the preaching of the law and the prophets continued but till John the Baptist came amongst you: since which time the gospel has been clearly preached, both by him, and myself, unto you; and it hath pleased God to give my doctrine great acceptance in the world. Though you pharisees reject it; yet every one, that is, very many pass into it: so that the doctrine which you mock, the holy doctrine of the gospel, others will embrace. Yet lest, while Christ spake thus highly of the gospel, the pharisees should reproach him as a destroyer of the law, he shows that the obligation of the moral law was of eternal force, and that heaven and earth should sooner pass, than the obligation of that law cease: which yet the pharisees most shamefully violated, particularly the seventh commandment; which they brake, by permitting and practising divorces, upon unjustifiable grounds. Learn hence, That the moral law, in all the branches of it, which is summarily comprehended in the ten commandments, is an eternal rule of life and manners, which is to stand in force as long as the world stands, and the frame of heaven and earth endures.

19 ¶ There was a certain rich man, which was clothed in purple and fine linen, and fared sumptuously every day:

20 And there was a certain beggar, named Lazarus, which was laid at his gate full of sores.

21 And desiring to be fed with the crumbs which fell from the rich man's table: moreover, the dogs came and licked his sores.

Our Saviour, in his parabolical history of Dives and Lazarus, instructs us concerning the right use of riches, which is, to capacitate us to do good to others, declaring, That in the life to come, the pious poor man shall be eternally happy, whilst the unmerciful rich man shall be intolerably miserable. Hence observe, 1. The different state and condition of good and bad men in the other world from what they are in this; here the wicked prosper, grow rich and great, and the good and virtuous are in calamity, suffer poverty and distress; which has staggered many men, yea, the best of men, in the belief of a Divine Providence. Observe, 2. That our Saviour did not censure the rich man for being rich, but for being sensual; not for wearing costly apparel, and keeping a plentiful table (which if managed according to men's qualities and estates is a commendable virtue) but his sensuality and luxury, and forgetting to feed the hungry with the superfluities of his table; these are the things for which he is censured. From whence we may learn, That pride and luxury, intemperance and sensuality, are such abuses of worldly riches, as worldly men are very prone and incident to. Rich men too often make their back and their belly their God: sacrificing and devoting all they have to the service of those idols. Observe, 3. That a poor and mean condition is the lot of many good men, nay, perhaps, of the most in this world. 4. That a man may be poor and miserable in this world, and yet be very dear to God; the grace of sanctification is sometimes bestowed most eminently, where the gifts of Providence have been dispensed more sparingly: consequently, from the present state of men in this world, we can make no judgment of their future condition in the world to come.

22 And it came to pass that the beggar died, and was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom: the rich man also died, and was buried;

23 And in hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torments, and seeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom.

Observe here, 1. That our Saviour represents all men, both good and bad, passing immediately out of this life into a state of happiness or misery; Lazarus "died and was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom." Thence note, 1. That the souls of men survive in sensibility and activity, after the dissolution of their bodies, and do not sleep with the body till the day of the resurrection. 2. That all holy souls, and amongst the rest the godly poor, are instantly after death, conveyed by angels to their place of rest and blessedness. "The rich man also died;" this is added, to let us know, that riches, for all men's confidence in them, will not deliver from death; the rich man might be surfeited by faring deliciously every day, whilst Lazarus was famished. "And was buried;" here is no mention of Lazarus' burial; probably he had none, but was flung out of the way into some hole or pit; or if he had a burial, a very mean one, which is passed over in silence: all the advantage which a rich man has by a great estate, after he is dead, is only to have a pompous funeral, which yet signifies nothing to him, because he is not sensible of it. "And in hell he lifted up his eyes, &c." He feels at once, both his own misery, and sensibly perceives Lazarus' happiness. Thence note, That the souls of wicked men, whilst their bodies lie in the grave, are in a state of the greatest misery; which is aggravated by the sense they have at the same time of the saints' happiness. For probably the blessed shall see the torments of the damned, and the damned probably shall see the glory of the blessed.

24 And he cried, and said, Father Abraham, have mercy on me, and send Lazarus, that he may dip the tip of his finger in water, and cool my tongue; for I am tormented in this flame.

Observe here, 1. The place where the rich man suffers, it is in hell; the souls of wicked men, when they leave their bodies, do certainly go into a place of torment, which is not only beyond expression, but our apprehension also; "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, nor has it entered into the heart of man, to conceive those dreadful things which God hath prepared for them that hate him." Observe, 2. The sin for which he suffers, it is the sin of unmercifulness. Thence learn, That uncharitableness and unmercifulness to the poor is a very great sin, and such a sin as alone, and without any other guilt, is sufficient to ruin a man for ever; there is found in this sin great impiety towards God, and great inhumanity towards our own nature. Observe, 3. The nature and quality of his sufferings, they are exquisitely painful, and void of the least degree of comfort; not a drop of water is granted to cool an inflamed tongue. Learn thence, That the least refreshments are impatiently desired by damned souls in hell, but righteously denied and withheld from them: a drop of water was desired, but not granted. No cup of water, no bowls of wine in hell; there is but one full cup in hell, and that is the cup of God's wrath, without any mixture of mercy or pity. That throat will be for ever parched with thirst then, which is drenched and drowned with excess now: the songs of the drunkard here will be turned into howlings and lamentations there.

25 But Abraham said, Son, remember that thou in thy life-time receivedst thy good things, and likewise Lazarus evil things: but now he is comforted, and thou art tormented.

Observe, 1. The title given to the rich man by father Abraham, Son; he doth not revile him, though a very bad man; if we revile the good, we are unjust, they deserve it not; if we revile the bad, we are unwise, we shall get nothing by it: a wise man knows not what it is to give bad language. Observe, 2. The admonition given, "Remember, that thou in thy life-time receivedst thy good things;" thy good things in which thou placedst all thy happiness; thy good things which thou lookedst upon thyself as the proprietor and not as the dispenser of; now remember what thou hadst, and what thou abusedst. Learn hence, That the outward blessings which are afforded to wicked men on earth, will be sadly remembered in hell: "Son, remember that thou in thy life-time receivedst thy good things." 2. That no man ought to measure his happiness hereafter by his temporal felicity here; we may receive our good things here, and yet be tormented hereafter. 3. That no man ought to be excessively troubled if he meets with hardships here, because those for whom God designs good things hereafter, may have their evil things here; "Son, thou hadst thy good things, and also Lazarus evil things." 4. The word (Remember) implies that human souls, in their state of separation, do exercise memory, thought and reflection, on the past occurrences and actions of their lives; and consequently, that they do not sleep and fall into a state of insensibility and inactivity at death till the resurrection.

26 And besides all this, between us and you there is a great gulph fixed: so that they which would pass from hence to you cannot; neither can they pass to us that would come from thence.

The meaning is, there neither is nor can be any commerce or intercourse betwixt glorified saints and damned sinners; but the state of souls at death is unalterably fixed and stated. Learn, That the miserable condition of damned souls in the next world, and the blessed condition of glorified souls is unchangeably and unalterably such: the power of God is irresistible, and the will of God is invariable, and the oath of God is immutable: "I have sworn that they shall never enter into my rest."

27 Then he said, I pray thee, therefore, father, that thou wouldest send him to my father's house:

28 For I have five brethren; that he may testify unto them, lest they also come into this place of torment.

Here the rich man is represented as retaining, even in hell, some tenderness for his relations on earth; yet others think, that the kindness intended, was rather to himself than to his relations; fearing that their sinning by his example should be an aggravation of his own torments. Note thence, That the presence of sinful relations and companions in hell, may be supposed to make a considerable addition to the miseries of the damned; the sight of those whom they have sinned with, is a fresh revival of their own guilt; all the circumstances of their past and profligate lives are, upon this occasion, continually in their remembrance. Note farther, This miserable wretch is convinced that he could not get out of hell, therefore desires that no friend of his might come in. He knew well enough that if they were once there, they would come out no more. Indeed, God will at the great day, send forth his writ to the grave, to bring out the bodies of the wicked that are shut up there; and will send out his writ to hell, to bring forth the spirits that are shut in there: but it is in order to this, that both soul and body together may receive an eternal sentence for an everlasting imprisonment with the devil and his angels, and there will be no more opening for ever.

29 Abraham saith unto him, They have Moses and the prophets; let them hear them.

That is, they have the inspired writings of Moses and the prophets, which sufficiently declare the mind and will of God to mankind: and therefore it is unreasonable to expect any farther revelation. Learn thence, That a standing revelation of God is evidence sufficient for divine things; it is a more certain way of conveyance, and more secure from imposture. Secondly, That there is sufficient evidence that Moses and the prophets, or the writings of the holy scriptures, are of divine authority, and therefore to be read and heard, to be believed and assented to, They have Moses, &c.

30 And he said, Nay, father Abraham; but if one went unto them from the dead they will repent.

As if he had said, they have always had Moses and the prophets in their hands, but yet their hearts remain impenitent; but if a special messenger be sent to them from the dead, this will not fail to awaken them, and bring them to repentance. Learn hence, How prone we are to dislike God's method and means which he has appointed to reclaim us from our sins; and imagine some methods of our own would be more successful. The scriptures read, the word preached, the sacraments administered; these are the ordinary means which the wisdom of God has appointed for man's conviction; and if we think a messenger from the dead would be a more conducive means, the next verse will confute us, and thoroughly satisfy us, that whom the scripture convinces not, probably nothing will; for thus it follows:

31 And he said unto him, If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead.

A very awakening text is this, which speaks dreadfully to persons sitting all their days under the ministry of the gospel, and yet find not their understandings enlightened, their judgments convinced, their wills subdued, and their lives reformed by it. Were it possible for such persons to see one come from the dead, yea, from the damned, with the flames of hell about his ears, wringing his hands, and gnashing his teeth, bewailing his misery, beseeching them to take warning by his example, and in time to acquaint themselves with God, and be at peace; all this would have no farther effect upon them, than to move their passion a little for the present, whilst the dreadful sound is in their ears; the ordinances of God, and not his providences, are the instituted and appointed means for men's conversion and salvation. Note then, 1. That no visions or apparitions, no new revelations concerning eternal rewards and punishments, are to be expected from the other world, in order to men's conversion and salvation. Note, 2. That the word of God dispensed to us, and the ordinary means of grace enjoyed by us, are more conducive and effectual means to persuade men to repentance, than if one should arise from the dead and preach unto us. A messenger from the dead cannot bring with him either a more necessary doctrine, or a more certain and infallible doctrine, nor bring with him better arguments for our conviction, than what the scriptures do propound to our consideration: nor can we expect a greater co-operation of the Holy Spirit, or a greater concurrence of divine power, to render a message from the dead more effectual, than doth ordinarily attend the ministry of the word. Henceforward then, let us not wonder, if when a drunkard drops down dead upon the spot, the companions say one to another, "Drink on;" if sinners daily tumble one another into the grave, without considering the operation of God's hand; this to those that consider this text, will not seem strange; "For if they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be converted," though hundred of sinners, before their eyes drop down dead: nay, "If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one arose from the dead."

CHAPTER XVII.

THEN said he unto his disciples, It is impossible but that offences will come: but woe unto him through whom they come!

2 It were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he cast into the sea, than that he should offend one of these little ones.

Two things are here observable: 1. The necessity of scandalous offences; It must needs be that offences come; if we consider men's corruptions, satan's malice, God's permission and just judgment. Observe, 2. The misery and mischief which comes by these scandals; "Woe unto the world because of offences:" woe to such as give the scandal, this is rae indignantis, the woe of one denouncing: and woe to such as stumble at offences given, this is rae dolentis, the woe of one lamenting. From the whole note, 1. That scandals or offensive actions in the church of Christ, will certainly happen, and frequently fall out, amongst those that profess religion and the name of Christ: "It is impossible but that offences will come." Secondly, That scandalous and offensive actions, from such as profess religion and the name of Christ, are baneful and fatal stumbling-blocks to wicked and worldly men. Thirdly, That the offences which wicked men take at the falls of the professors of religion, to the hardening of themselves in their wicked and sinful practices, is matter of just and great lamentation: "Woe unto the world because of offences." Mat. xviii. 7.

3 ¶ Take heed to yourselves; If thy brother trespass against thee, rebuke him; and if he repent, forgive him

4 And if he trespass against thee seven times in a day, and seven times in a day turn again to thee, saying, I repent: thou shalt forgive him.

The doctrine of forgiving an offending brother, is pressed upon us with many forcible arguments in the New Testament, which speaks it to be a duty of indispensable necessity. This place is to be understood of private offences, and personal wrongs and injuries, done by one man to another; which we must first reprove and then remit; and although it be said, "If he repent, forgive him" that is not to be understood, as if we needed not to pardon our brother, if he neglects to repent and asks forgiveness: but whether he acknowledges his offence or not to us, our hearts must stand ready to forgive the wrong done to us, and to pray for forgiveness on his behalf at the hands of God; laying aside all thoughts and desires of revenge in our own cause, and standing ready to do any office of love and service to our offending brother. Learn hence, 1. That to fall often into the same offence against our brother, is a great aggravation of our offence; "If thy brother trespass against thee seven times in a day:" that is, very often. 2. That as the multiplication of offences is a great aggravation of offences, so the multiplying the forgiveness is a great demonstration of a God-like temper in us: he that multiplieth sin, doth like satan, sin abundantly: and he that multiplieth pardon, doth like God, pardon abundantly.

5 And the apostles said unto the Lord, Increase our faith.

Observe here, 1. The supplicants, The apostles. 2. The person supplicated, The Lord. 3. The supplication itself, Increase our Faith. 4. The occasion of this supplication, our Saviour urging the duty of forgiving injuries. Learn, 1. That as all graces in general, so the grace of faith in particular, is weak and imperfect in the best of saints. 2. That the most eminent saints (apostles not excepted) are very sensible of the imperfection of their faith, and very importunate with God daily for the increase of it: Lord, increase our faith. 3. That faith strengthened enables the soul to the most difficult duties of obedience, and particularly helps to the practice of that hard duty of forgiving injuries. When our Saviour had preached the doctrine and duty of forgiveness, the apostles instantly pray, Lord, increase our faith.

6 And the Lord said, If ye had faith as a grain of mustard-seed, ye might say unto this sycamine tree, Be thou plucked up by the root, and be thou planted in the sea; and it should obey you.

Here our Saviour tells his disciples, that if they have the smallest degree of true faith, lively operative faith, it will enable them to perform this difficult duty of forgiving injuries, and all other duties, with as much facility and ease as a miraculous faith would enable them to remove mountains and transplant trees. Learn, That there is nothing which may tend to the glory of God, or to our own good and comfort, but may be obtained of God by a firm exercise of faith in him; all things are possible to him that believeth.

7 But which of you, having a servant ploughing, or feeding cattle, will say unto him by and by, when he is come from the field, Go and sit down to meat.

8 And will not rather say unto him, Make ready wherewith I may sup, and gird thyself, and serve me, till I have eaten and drunken; and afterward thou shalt eat and drink!

9 Doth he thank that servant because he did the things that were commanded him? I trow not.

10 So likewise ye, when ye shall have done all those things which are commanded you, say, We are unprofitable servants: we have done that which was our duty to do.

(No. 20.)

The design and scope of this parable is to show, that Almighty God neither is nor can be a debtor to any of his creatures, for the best service which they are able to perform unto him; and that they are so far from meriting a reward of justice, that they do not deserve a return of thanks. Three arguments our Saviour makes use of to evidence and prove this: 1. In respect to God, who is our absolute Lord and Master; and the argument lies thus: if earthly masters do not owe so much as thanks to their servants, for doing that which is commanded them; how much less can God owe the reward of eternal life to his servants, when they are never able to do all that is commanded them, in a perfect and sinless manner? 2. In respect to ourselves, who are his bond servants, his ransomed slaves, and consequently we are not our own men, but his who hath redeemed us; and accordingly do owe him all that service, yea, more than all, that we are able to perform unto him: and therefore, whatever reward is either promised or given, it is wholly to be ascribed to the master's bounty, and not to the servant's merit. 3. To merit any thing by our good works is impossible, in regard to the works themselves; because all that we can do, although we do all that is commanded us, is but our duty. The argument runs thus: "To bounden duty belongs no reward of justice; but all the service we do perform, yea more than we can perform, to God, is bounden duty; therefore is due no reward of justice, but of free mercy." From the whole, note, 1. That we are wholly the Lord's both by right of creation, and redemption also. 2. That as his we are, so him we ought to serve, by doing all those things which he hath commanded us. 3. That when we have done all, we are to look for our reward, not of debt but of grace. 4. That were our service and obedience absolutely perfect, yet it could not merit any thing at the hand of justice: When ye have done all, say, &c.

11 ¶ And it came to pass, as he went to Jerusalem, that he passed through the midst of Samaria and Galilee.

12 And as he entered into a certain village, there met him ten men that were lepers, which stood afar off:

13 And they lifted up their voices, and said, Jesus, Master, have mercy on us.

Observe here, 1. Though the Samaritans were bitter enemies to the Jews, and had been guilty of great incivility towards our Saviour, in his journey to Jerusalem, he balks them not, but bestows the favor of a miracle upon them. Civil courtesy and respect ought to be paid to those that are the professed enemies of us, and our holy religion. Observe, 2. Though the leper by the law of God was to be separated from all other society (God thereby signifying to his people, that the society of those that are spiritually contagious, ought to be avoided) yet, the law of God did not restrain them from conversing with one another: accordingly these ten lepers get together, and are company for themselves. Fellowship is that we all naturally affect, though even in leprosy, lepers will flock together; where shall we find one spiritual leper alone? Drunkards and profane persons will be sure to consort with one another! Why should not God's children delight in an holy communion, when the wicked join hand in hand? Observe, 3. Though Jews and Samaritans could not abide one another, yet here in leprosy they accord: here was one Samaritan leper with the Jewish: common sufferings had made them friends, whom religion had disjoined: O what virtue is there in affliction, to unite the most alienated and estranged hearts! Observe, 4. These lepers apply themselves to Christ, the great physician; they cry unto him for mercy, with respect to their afflictions: they jointly cry, they all lifted up their voices with fervent importunity. Teaching us our duty, to join our spiritual forces together, and set upon God by troops. O holy and happy violence, that is thus offered to heaven! How can we want blessings, when so many cords draw them down upon our heads?

14 And when he saw them, he said unto them, Go, show yourselves unto the priests: and it came to pass, that, as they went, they were cleansed.

Observe here, 1. The preventing grace and mercy of Christ; their disease is cured ere it can be complained of; Go, show yourselves to the priests, says Christ, and in their going they were cleansed, they were healed before they could come at the priests; that as the power that healed them was wholly Christ's so might the praise be also. Observe, 2. A twofold reason, why Christ commanded them to go to the priests. 1. In compliance with the ceremonial law, which required the leper to be brought to them, to judge whether healed or not; and if so, to receive the offering prescribed in token of thankfulness. 2. For the trial of their obedience: had they stood upon terms with Christ, and said, alas! to what purpose is it to show ourselves to the priests; what good can their eyes do us? We should be glad to see ourselves cured: but why should we go to them to see ourselves loathed? Had they thus expostulated, they had not been healed; what command soever we receive from Christ we must rather consider the authority of the commander, than the weight of the thing commanded, for God delights to try our obedience by small precepts; happy for these lepers, that in obedience to Christ, they went to the priests, for as they went they were healed.

15 And one of them, when he saw that he was healed, turned back, and with a loud voice glorified God, 16 And he fell down on his face at his feet, giving him thanks: and he was a Samaritan.

Observe here, 1. All were healed, but only one was thankful; the cure was wrought upon the bodies of all. Thankfulness is found but in the heart of one; the will makes the difference in men, but he makes the difference in wills, who at first made the will. All these lepers were cured, all saw themselves cured; their sense was alike, their hearts were not alike. Observe, 2. The person that made this return of thankfulness to Christ, "He was a Samaritan:" that is, none of the Jewish nation, but one that was a stranger to the commonwealth of Israel; neither place nor parentage can block up the way, or stop the current of God's free mercy, which reaches the unworthy and ill-deserving. Observe, 3. How singly he returns his thanks; he gets away from his fellows, to make his acknowledgment; there are cases wherein singularity is not only lawful, but laudable; instead of subjecting ourselves to other's examples, it is sometimes our duty to resolve to set an example to others: for it is much better to go the right way alone, than to err with company. Observe, 4. How speedily he returns his thanks; no sooner doth he see his cure, but he hastes to acknowledge it; a noble pattern of thankfulness. What speed of retribution is here! late payments of our thankfulness savor of ingratitude; it were happy for us christians, did we learn our duty of this Samaritan.

17 And Jesus answering, said, Were there not ten cleansed? but where are the nine.

18 There are not found that returned to give glory to God, save this stranger.

19 And he said unto him, Arise, go thy way; thy faith hath made thee whole.

In the face of these ten lepers, we may, as in a glass, behold the face and complexion of all mankind: how few are there, O Lord! scarce more than one in ten, who, after signal mercies, return suitable thanks. Men how! to God upon their beds, but run away from God as soon as they are raised up by him. Observe farther, What an exact account Christ keeps of his own dispensed favors; "Were there not ten cleansed?" He forgets our sins, but records his own mercies: it is one of his glorious titles, a God forgiving and forgetting iniquity, but his mercies are over all his works, and deserve everlasting remembrance. God keeps a register of his mercies towards us. O shall we not record the favors received from him, at once declare his bounty towards us, and our thankfulness towards him? Observe lastly, The thankful leper was a Samaritan, but the nine that were unthankful were Israelites. Learn thence, That the more we are bound to God, the more shameful is our ingratitude towards him; where God may justly expect the greatest returns of praise and service, he sometimes receiveth least. God has more rent, and better paid him, from a smoky cottage, than he has from some stately palaces.

20 ¶ And when he was demanded of the pharisees when the kingdom of God should come; he answered them, and said, The kingdom of God cometh not with observation,

21 Neither shall they say, Lo here! or lo there! for, behold, the kingdom of God is within you.

The generality of the Jews, and particularly the pharisees, expected that the promised Messiah should be a temporal prince, and deliver them from the Roman yoke, under which they groaned. Accordingly the pharisees here demanded of our Saviour, When the kingdom of God, of which he had so often spoken, should come? Christ answers them, That his kingdom cometh not with observation; that is, with pomp and splendor, which men may observe and gaze upon; but he tells them The kingdom of God was now among them, by the ministry of John the Baptist and himself: and was already set up in the hearts of his people, by the secret operations of his Holy Spirit. Learn hence, That the false notion which the Jews had of the Messiah and his kingdom—That he himself was to be a temporal prince, and his kingdom a secular kingdom, to be set up with a great deal of noise, pomp, and splendor, did hinder the generality of them from believing in him. Secondly, That the kingdom which Christ designed to set up in the world, was altogether spiritual, not obvious to human senses, but managed in the hearts of his people by the sceptre of his Spirit. “My kingdom cometh not with observation, but is within you.”

22 And he said unto the disciples, The days will come when ye shall desire to see one of the days of the Son of man, and ye shall not see it.

23 And they shall say to you, See here! or see there! go not after them, nor follow them.

24 For as the lightning that lighteneth out of the one part under heaven, shineth unto the other part under heaven: so shall also the Son of man be in his day

25 But first must he suffer many things, and be rejected of this generation,

In the remaining part of this chapter, our Saviour acquaints his disciples with what days of tribulation and distress were coming on the Jewish nation in general, and on Jerusalem in particular. “Days of suffering (as if our Saviour had said) are not far off, when you will wish for my bodily presence again among you, to support and comfort you; and when many seducers will rise up pretending to be deliverers; “but go not you after them;” for after this generation have rejected and crucified me, my coming (says Christ) to execute vengeance upon mine enemies and murderers at Jerusalem, by the Roman soldiers, will be sudden, and like the lightning that shines in an instant from one part of the heavens to the other.” From this coming of Christ to judge Jerusalem, which was an emblem of the final judgment, may we gather this instruction: that the coming and appearance of the Lord Jesus Christ, to the judging of wicked and impenitent sinners, will be a very certain, sudden, and unexpected appearance.

26 And as it was in the days of Noe, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of man.

27 They did eat, they drank, they married wives, and they were given in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the ark: and the flood came, and destroyed them all.

28 Likewise also, as it was in the days of Lot; they did eat, they drank, they bought, they sold, they planted, they builded:

29 But the same day that Lot went out of Sodom, it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them all.

30 Even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of man is revealed.

In these verses our Saviour declares, that Jerusalem's destruction, and the world's final desolation at the great day, would be like the destruction of the old world in the days of Noah; and like the destruction of Sodom in the days of Lot, and that, both in regard of unexpectedness, and in regard of sensuality and security; as they before the flood were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, that is, wholly given up to sensuality and debauchery; and did not know, that is, did not consider the flood's coming, till it swept them away: thus was it before the destruction of Jerusalem, and thus it will be before the end of the world. Hence we learn, That as the world perished by infidelity, security, and sensuality, so will the same sins be prevailing before the destruction of this present world. “As it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be in the days of the Son of man.”

31 In that day, he which shall be upon the house-top, and his stuff in the house, let him not come down to take it away: and he that is in the field, let him likewise not return back.

32 Remember Lot's wife.

Here our Saviour advises them, That when they shall see the judgments of God breaking out upon Jerusalem, that they make all possible speed to get out of it, as Lot and his family did out of Sodom; and to take heed of imitating Lot's wife, who looking back became a pillar of salt. Gen. xix. Where observe, 1. Her offence, “She looked back.” 2. The punishment of her offence, “She became a pillar of salt.” Her offence in looking behind her was manifest disobedience to the divine command, which said, “Look not behind thee;” and proceeded either from carelessness, or from covetousness, or from curiosity, or from compassion to those that she left behind her, and was undoubtedly the effect of great infidelity, she not believing the truth of what the angel had declared, as touching the certainty and suddenness of Sodom's destruction. The punishment of her offence was exemplary, "She became a pillar of salt;" that is, a perpetual monument of divine severity for her infidelity and disobedience. Where note, 1. The suddenness of her punishment; the justice of God surprises in the very act of sin, with a present revenge. 2. The seeming disproportion betwixt the punishment and the offence, her offence was a forbidden look. From whence carnal reason may plead, "Was it not sufficient for her to lose her eyes, but must she lose her life?" But the easiness and reasonableness of the command aggravated her disobedience; and though her punishment may seem severe, it was not unjust. Now, says our Saviour, Remember Lot's wife; that is, let her example caution all of you against unbelief, disobedience, worldly mindedness, contempt of God's threatenings, and lingerings after the forbidden society of lewd and wicked persons.

33 Whosoever shall seek to save his life, shall lose it: and whosoever shall lose his life, shall preserve it.

34 I tell you, in that night there shall be two men in one bed; the one shall be taken, and the other shall be left.

35 Two women shall be grinding together: the one shall be taken, and the other left.

36 Two men shall be in the field; the one shall be taken and the other left.

In this hour, when judgment is come upon Jerusalem, Christ declares, That whosoever shall take any unchristian course to preserve his life, by denying him and his holy religion, he shall lose eternal life; but he that for Christ's sake shall lose his natural life, instead of a mortal, shall enjoy an immortal life in bliss and glory. Here we learn, 1. That the love of temporal life is a great temptation to men, to deny Christ and his holy religion, in a day of trial. 2. That the surest way to attain eternal life, is cheerfully to lay down our temporal life, when the glory of Christ, and the honor of religion requires it of us. Christ farther adds, That in this terrible night of Jerusalem's calamity, when destruction comes upon her, the providence of God will remarkably distinguish between one person and another; true believers, and constant professors, shall be delivered, and none else; such shall escape the danger, others shall fall by it.

37 And they answered, and said unto him, Where Lord? And he said unto them, Wheresoever the body is, thither will the eagles be gathered together.

The disciples hearing our Saviour speak of such tremendous calamities, inquire, Where these judgments should fall? He answers them figuratively, and by a proverbial speech,

That "where the carcass is, there will the eagles be gathered together;" signifying, that Jerusalem and the obdurate nation of the Jews, was the carcass which the Roman armies, whose ensign was the eagle, would quickly find out and feed upon; and that Judea in general, and Jerusalem in particular, would be the theatre and stage of those tragical calamities. Learn thence, That the appointed messengers of God's wrath, and the instruments of his vengeance, will suddenly gather together, certainly find out, and severely punish an impenitent people, devoted to destruction. Where the carcass is, (that is, the body of the Jewish nation) there will the eagles (that is, the Roman soldiers) be gathered together.

CHAPTER XVIII.

AND he spake a parable unto them to this end, that men ought always to pray, and not to faint.

2 Saying, there was in a city a judge which feared not God, neither regarded man;

3 And there was a widow in that city; and she came unto him saying, Avenge me of mine adversary.

4 And he would not for a while; but afterward he said within himself, Though I fear not God, nor regard man;

5 Yet because this widow troubleth me, I will avenge her, lest by her continual coming she weary me.

6 And the Lord said, Hear what the unjust judge saith.

7 And shall not God avenge his own elect, which cry day and night unto him, though he bear long with them?

8 I tell you that he will avenge them speedily. Nevertheless, when the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?

There is no duty in christianity, the practice of which our Saviour presseth upon us more frequently, than this duty of prayer. To encourage his disciples (and us in them) to fervency, importunity, and perseverance in this duty, he propounds here the parable of an unjust judge, who was overcome by an importunate widow, to do her justice contrary to his own inclinations: from whence our Saviour argues, That if importunity will prevail with a sinful man, to grant petitions offered to him; how much more prevalent will such importunity be with the infinitely good God, to relieve the necessities of such as devoutly implore his help? And the force of the argument lies thus:—"The judge in the parable was an inferior and subordinate judge, was an unrighteous and unjust judge, was a merciless and hard-hearted judge; and yet, upon her importunity, he avenged her; how much more will the sovereign and supreme judge, the holy and righteous, the merciful and compassionate judge of all the earth, hear and help his praying people, and be the just Avenger of those that fear him?" From the whole note, 1. That prayer, or a liberty of making our requests known to God, is an inestimable favor and privilege. He that considers the nature of God, and the nature of man, cannot question it; God is a being of infinite fulness and perfection; a self-sufficient, and an all-sufficient good; and man an indigent, helpless, dependant creature, full of want, and obnoxious to dangers. 2. That prayer is not only an inestimable privilege, but an indispensable duty. So solicitous is God for our welfare and happiness, that he makes our privilege our duty, by the authority of his command; so that we are at once ungrateful to God and unjust to ourselves, in the most exalted degree, if we do not pray unto him, and spread our wants before him. 3. That this duty of prayer is not an occasional, but a constant duty; Men ought always to pray; that is, 1. At all seasonable times and fit opportunities: we are said to do a thing continually, when we do it seasonably: now the seasons for prayer are morning and evening. As the morning and evening sacrifice was constant among the Jews, and the fire was always upon the altar, and never went out; so he that prays morning and evening, may be said to be "instant in prayer, and to pray without ceasing." 2. Always to pray, is an endeavour always to keep the heart in a praying frame, and to be very frequent in offering up pious ejaculations, and short mental prayers to God, as occasion shall offer: when in the field, in the shop, in the bed, when sleep departs, in the journey, when alone, this may be done advantageously without loss of time, and acceptably without danger of hypocrisy, which too often mingles itself with our more set prayers. Observe, 4. We must not only pray constantly, but pray fervently; yea, importunately, if we would pray successfully; we must cry to God, as the widow to the judge; vehemency and importunity are both helps and ornaments to prayer; they both fortify and beautify our prayers; they pierce the heavens, and offer an holy violence to God: Oratio vincit invincibilem & ligat omnipotentem hæc vis Deo grata est, says Tertullian, "God delights in such importunity, 8.—"Nevertheless, when the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" If by the Son of man's coming, we understand Christ's coming in judgment against Jerusalem, then the sense is this: "That when he comes to take vengeance on the obstinate Jews, and to destroy their city, he will find but little faith, and patient waiting for help from God in the land of Judea, and consequently little importuning him, with incessant cries and supplications, as this poor widow did the unjust judge." 2. If by the Son of man's coming we understand Christ's coming to judge the world at the last day, then the sense is, "When he cometh, he will find but few faithful ones, comparatively speaking; he will find but few sincere and serious christians in whom the genuine effects and fruits are found." Learn, That when Christ shall come to judgment, he will find comparatively very few whose hearts have not fainted; and very many, who, through the power that temptation has upon the frailty of human nature, are fallen away: "When the Son of man cometh, will he find faith on the earth?" Verily, but little faith, and few faithful ones.

(No. 20.)

9 ¶ And he spake this parable unto certain which trusted in themselves that they were righteous, and despised others;

10 Two men went up into the temple to pray: the one a pharisee, and the other a publican.

11 The pharisee stood, and prayed thus with himself, God, I thank thee, that I am not as other men are, extortioners, unjust, adulterers, or even as this publican.

12 I fast twice in the week, I give tithes of all that I possess.

13 And the publican standing afar off, would not lift up so much as his eyes unto heaven, but smote upon his breast, saying, God be merciful to me a sinner.

14 I tell you, This man went down to his house justified rather than the other; for every one that exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted.

The design and scope of our Saviour, in this parable, is to reprove and condemn the pharisees, and in them all other self justiciaries, who having an high opinion of, and trusting in their own righteousness, despised others, as vile persons, whose religion is not accompanied with ostentation, and who pretend not to such extraordinary degrees of sanctity as themselves. And the parable further shows, than an humble, self-condemned sinner, who, though he has been wicked, is now sensible of it, and with shame and sorrow confesses it before God, is more acceptable than he that vaunts of his virtue, and rests in the outward duties of religion; his pride and exaltation of himself shall abase him, while the other's humility shall exalt him. This is the general scope of the parable; the particular observations from it are these: 1. The pharisee and the publican both pray, they both pray together, apud se, with and within themselves. Where the duty and action is the same, there may be a vast difference in the purpose and intention; doth an humble saint pray? so may an haughty hypocrite; Two men went up into the temple to pray, the one a pharisee, and the other a publican." Observe, 2. The pharisee's prayer, "He stood and prayed with himself, God I thank thee, &c. Where note, his gesture; He stood and prayed; standing and kneeling are praying gesture, but sitting is a rude indecency, except in case of necessity. "In prayer," says pious Bishop Hall, "I will either stand as a servant to my Master, or kneel as a subject to my Prince." Note farther, It is said, He prayed: but there is not one petition, but thanksgiving; God, I thank thee, &c. Whence learn. That thanksgiving is a part of prayer; Hannah's prayer, as it is called, I Sam.

ii. is a canticle, or a song of praise: we then pray best, when we praise God most. Again, see the pharisee's pride in this his prayer: this proud beggar shows not his wounds, but his worth; not his rags, but his robes; not his misery, but his bravery; he brings God Almighty in a reckoning of his services; "I fast twice a week, I give alms of all that I possess;" and thanks God more that others were bad, than that himself was good. Had the pharisee with an humble mind thanked God for his retaining grace, that though he was not so good as he should be, that yet he was not so vile and bad as some others, this had been no fault; but when he comes before God with a proud and scornful mind, inwardly pleased that others were so bad, and so much worse than himself; giving thanks rather for others' badness, than his own goodness; this is a wickedness incident to none but devilish dispositions. Learn hence; That whatsoever shows of goodness an hypocrite may make, yet he is inwardly glad of, and takes a secret delight in others' badness. "God, I thank thee, that I am not as this publican;" which was a kind of triumph and proud insultation over the poor publican: he would seem to thank God he was not so bad as the publican, when indeed he was glad that the publican was not so good as himself. Observe, 3. The publican's behaviour; in an humble sight and sense of his own sinfulness and unworthiness, he stood afar off, probably in the court of the Gentiles, where all sorts of sinners might come: acknowledging thereby that he was unworthy to come near the holy Majesty of God: not presuming to lift up his eyes to heaven, that place of perfect holiness and purity; but, like a true, self-condemned penitent, smote upon his breast, and, in bitter remorse of soul, said, God, be merciful to me a sinner.—Hence learn, That a truly humble temper of mind well becomes us in all our approaches and addresses to God, and is more acceptable to him than all pompous performances whatsoever. For, observe lastly, The publican, being thus condemned of himself, departs justified by God; "He went down to his house justified rather than the pharisee;" the pharisee justified himself, but the publican was justified by God. Thence learn, That a penitent sinner, who is indeed poor in spirit, is far more esteemed of God than he that makes long prayers, fasts often, tithes all his substance, and prides himself in all this. Without humility all is vain glory and hypocrisy: and the seeming most sanctified person, that has it not, is like a painted sepulchre, beautiful without, but full of rottenness within.

15 ¶ And they brought unto him also infants; that he would touch them: but when his disciples saw it, they rebuked them.

16 But Jesus called them unto him, and said, Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God

17 Verily I say unto you, Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, shall in no wise enter therein.

Observe here, 1. A solemn action performed; children, infants, sucking children, as the word signifies, are brought to Christ, that he might bless them; the parents, looking upon Christ as a prophet, as a great and extraordinary prophet, persuade themselves, that by his prayers, and laying his hands on their children, they should be preserved from bodily diseases and from satan's power, and that he would confer upon them all needful blessings. Learn, 1. That infants are capable of benefit by Jesus Christ. 2. That it is the best office that parents can perform unto their children, to bring them unto Christ, that they may be made partakers of that benefit. 3. That if infants are capable of benefit by Christ, if capable of his blessing on earth, and presence in heaven, if they be subjects of his kingdom of grace, and heirs of his kingdom of glory, then may they be baptized; for they that are within the covenant, Acts ii. 39, have a right to the privileges of the covenant, and to baptism, the seal of the covenant; and if Christ denies not infants the kingdom of heaven, which is the greater; what reason have his ministers to deny them the benefit of baptism, which is the less? Learn, 4. That Christ will have all his disciples and followers to resemble little children in such properties wherein they may be patterns to them, viz. in humility and innocence, in freedom from malice and revenge, in docility and teachableness in cleaving to, and depending upon, their parents, and in contentedness with their condition; "Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, shall in no wise enter therein."

18 And a certain ruler asked him, saying, Good Master, what shall I do to inherit eternal life?

We have here a considerable person, a ruler, coming to Christ, with an important question in his mouth, What must I do to inherit eternal life? Where note, 1. He believes the certainty of a future state. 2. He professes a desire of an eternal happiness in that state. 3. He declares his readiness and willingness to do some good thing in order to the obtaining of that happiness. Hence learn, That the light of nature or natural religion, teaches men, that good works are necessary to salvation: or that some good thing must be done by them, who at death expect eternal life; it is not talking well and professing well, but living well, that entitles us to heaven and eternal life.

19 And Jesus said unto him, Whom callest thou me good? none is good save one, that is God.

Our Saviour here reproves this person for calling himself good, when he did not own him to be God; saying, Thou art in none good; that is, essentially and originally good, absolutely and immutably good, but God only: nor any derivatively good, but he that receives his goodness from God also.

20 Thou knowest the commandments, Do not commit adultery, Do not kill, Do not steal, Do not bear false witness, Honour thy father and thy mother.

Note here, That the duties directed to by our Saviour, are the duties of the second table; nothing being a better evidence of our unfeigned love to God, than a sincere performance of our duty to our neighbour: love to man is a fruit and testimony of our love to God. Learn thence, That such as are defective in the duties of the second table, charity and justice towards man, do make but a counterfeit show of religion, though they pretend to the highest degree of holiness and love towards God.

21 And he said, All these have I kept from my youth up.

This assertion might be very true, according to the pharisee's sense and interpretation of the law, which condemned only the gross outward act, not the inward lusts and motions of the heart. An external obedience to the letter of the law this man might possibly have performed; this made him think well of himself, and conclude the goodness of his own condition. Learn hence, How prone men are to think the best of themselves, and to have too high an opinion of their own goodness and righteousness before God; this is very natural, but dangerous and fatal.

22 Now, when Jesus heard these things, he said unto him, Yet lackest thou one thing: sell all that thou hast, and distribute unto the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come, follow me.

Here observe, 1. Our Lord's admonition, "Yet lackest thou one thing;" which was true self-denial, in renouncing the sin of covetousness, and the inordinate love of worldly wealth. We ought, in the midst of our abundance, to maintain a readiness of disposition, to part with all for God's sake, that is dear unto us in this world. Observe, 2. Our Lord's injunction, "Sell all that thou hast, and give to the poor." This was not a common, but a special precept, given particularly to this rich man for trial; like that given to Abraham, Gen. xxii. and to convince him of his corrupt confidence in riches; yet is the precept thus far of general use to us all, to teach us so to contemn worldly possessions, as to be willing to part with them all at God's pleasure, and when they prejudice our salvation.

23 And when he heard this, he was very sorrowful; for he was very rich.

Here note, The effect which our Saviour's admonition had upon this person, "He was sorrowful." Learn thence, That carnal men are exceeding sorrowful when they cannot win heaven in their own way. 2. That such as are wedded to the world, will renounce Christ rather than the world, when the world and Christ stand in competition. "He went away sorrowful (St. Mark x. 22.) for he was very rich."

24 And when Jesus saw that he was very sorrowful, he said, How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God!

25 For it is easier for a camel to go through a needle's eye than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God.

26 And they that heard it said, Who then can be saved?

27 And he said, The things which are impossible with men, are possible with God.

Our holy Lord takes occasion from the rich man's departure from him, to discourse concerning the danger of riches, and the difficulties that attend rich men in their way to heaven: From whence we may collect and gather, 1. That rich men do certainly meet with more difficulties in their way to heaven than other men; it is difficult to withdraw their affections from riches, to place their supreme love upon God in the midst of their riches, and to depend entirely upon God in a rich condition; "For the rich man's wealth is his strong tower." 2. That the reposing their confidence in riches, renders their salvation difficult, if not an impossibility. 3. Our Saviour's proverbial speech of "a camel's going through the eye of a needle," implies thus much, That it is not only a great difficulty, but impossibility, for such as abound in worldly wealth, and place their confidence therein, to be saved, without an extraordinary grace and assistance from God. It is hard for God to make a rich man happy, because he thinks himself happy without God. 4. That as difficult and impossible as this may seem to men, yet nothing is impossible with God; he can change the heart of the rich, by the rich and powerful influences of his holy spirit. "That which is impossible with men, is possible with God."

28 Then Peter said, Lo, we have left all and followed thee.

It was well done, and wisely done of Peter, to leave all and follow Christ; it was the best bargain he ever made in all his life. But observe, How he magnifies that little he had left for Christ, and ushers it in with a note of admiration; "Lo! we have left all and followed thee." Learn hence, That though it be very little that we suffer for Christ, and have to forsake upon his account, yet we are prone to magnify and admire it, as if it were some great matter. "Lord," says Peter, "we have left all." "What all, man, hadst thou to leave? A few ragged nets and a tattered fisher-boat; a great all indeed, next to nothing at all, scarce worth mentioning, and yet how is it magnified!" "Behold, we have left all, and followed thee."

29 And he said unto them, Verily I say unto you, There is no man that hath left house or parents, or brethren, or wife, or children, for the kingdom of God's sake.

30 Who shall not receive manifold more in this present time, and in the world to come life everlasting.

Observe here, The lenity and kindness of our Lord's gracious answer; he tells his disciples, That they who had left all and followed him, should be no losers by him; that is, in this world they shall receive manifold. St. Mark, chap. x. 30. says, "An hundred fold;" But how so? Non formaliter, sed eminenter; non in specie, sed in valore: Not in kind but in equivalency; not an hundred brethren, and sisters, and possessions, in kind; but he shall enjoy all that in God, which all creatures would be to him, if they were multiplied an hundred times. O the sanctifying gifts and saving graces, the supporting comforts and ravishing consolations of the Holy Spirit, are a sufficient compensation for any thing, for all, yea, for more than all, that we can part with for the sake of Christ.

31 ¶ Then he took unto him the twelve, and said unto them, Behold we go up to Jerusalem, and all things that are written by the prophets concerning the Son of man shall be accomplished.

32 For he shall be delivered unto the Gentiles, and shall be mocked, and spitefully entreated, and spitted on;

33 And they shall scourge him and put him to death: and the third day he shall rise again.

34 And they understood none of these things: and this saying was hid from them, neither knew they the things that were spoken.

We find our blessed Saviour very frequently acquainting his disciples with his approaching sufferings to prevent the offence that they might take at them, when the providence of God brought them on: his design was to arm them with expectation of his sufferings; and to quicken them to preparation for their own; yet it is here said, "That the disciples understood none of these sayings;" Why so? were not the words easy enough to be understood? Yes, but they could not reconcile them to the notion of the Messiah, which they had drank in; they concluded he should be a temporal prince, and subdue their temporal enemies, but could not conceive how he that should redeem Israel, should die, and be thus barbarously used. We had great need to consider well what notions we have concerning the things of God, before we entertain them; for false notions, once taken up, are not without great difficulty laid down.

35 ¶ And it came to pass, that as he was come nigh unto Jericho, a certain blind man sat by the way side begging:

36 And hearing the multitude pass by, he asked what it meant?

37 And they told him, that Jesus of Nazareth passed by.

38 And he cried, saying, Jesus, thou Son of David, have mercy on me.

39 And they which went before, rebuked him, that he should hold his peace: but he cried so much the more, thou Son of David, have mercy on me.

40 And Jesus stood, and commanded him to be brought unto him: and, when he was come near, he asked him, 41 Saying, What wilt thou that I shall do unto thee? and he said, Lord, that I may receive my sight.

42 And Jesus said unto him, Receive thy sight: thy faith hath saved thee.

43 And immediately he received his sight, and followed him, glorifying God: and all the people, when they saw it, gave praise unto God.

This chapter concludes with the recital of a famous miracle, wrought by our Saviour upon a blind man, whom St. Mark calls Bartimeus. Where we have observable, 1. The blind man's faith in acknowledging Christ to be the Messiah; for so much the title of Son of David did import. 2. Observe his fervency as well as his faith; he cried to Christ for the mercy of healing, "Have mercy on me, thou Son of David." A true sense of want, either bodily or spiritual, will cause a soul to cry to Christ with earnestness and importunity. Observe, 3. The great compassion and condescension of Christ towards this blind man; "he stood still, he called him, and enlightened his eyes." Observe, 4. Before Christ would restore the blind man to sight, he must sensibly complain of the want of sight, and cry unto him for it. Christ knows all his creatures' wants, but takes no notice of them, till they make them known to him by prayer. Observe, 5. How much Christ magnifies faith; what he attributes to it, and how he rewards the least exercise of it; "Jesus said, thy faith hath saved thee." Christ himself was the efficient cause of the blind man's healing, but he exerted his divine power upon the exercise of the blind man's faith; and accordingly says, "thy faith hath saved thee." Note, 6. In what way and manner the blind man doth express his thankfulness to Christ for his recovered sight, "he followed him glorifying God." Mercy received from Christ is then well improved, when it engages us to follow Christ; this should be the effect of all salvations wrought for us. He praises God best, that serveth him most. The life of thankfulness consists in the holiness of the life.

CHAPTER XIX.

AND Jesus entered and passed through Jericho.

2 And, behold, there was a man named Zaccheus, which was the chief among the publicans, and he was rich.

The history which relates the calling and conversion of Zaccheus the publican, is ushered in with a note of wonder: Behold, there was a man named Zaccheus! It is both great and good news to hear of a soul converted unto God: especially such a remarkable sinner as Zaccheus was; For, 1. He was by profession, a publican; a calling that carried extortion in its face, and bade defiance to his conversion; yet, behold, from the toll-booth is Zaccheus called to be a disciple, and Matthew an apostle; such is the freeness of divine grace, that it often calls the greatest sinners, and triumphs in their powerful conversion. 2. He was a chief publican, and probably one of the chief of sinners; yet behold him among the chief of saints. Lord! what penitent need despair of thy mercy, when he sees a publican, nay the chief of publicans, go to heaven? 3. It is added as a further circumstance, that he was rich; his trade was not a greater obstacle to his conversion than his wealth; not that there is any malignity in riches, considered in themselves, but they become a snare, through the corruption of our natures. Zaccheus had not been so famous a convert, if he had not been rich; if more difficulty, yet was there more glory in the conversion of rich Zaccheus. To all these might be added a fourth circumstance, namely, that Zaccheus was converted in his old age, after a long habit of sin contracted. Such instances, though few, has God left upon record in scripture, Abraham and Manasse in the Old Testament, Zaccheus and Paul in the New.

3 And he sought to see Jesus who he was; and could not for the press, because he was little of stature.

4 And he ran before, and climbed up into a sycamore tree to see him; for he was to pass that way.

Zaccheus desired to see Jesus; this was a sight that few rich men desire to see; the sight of Cesar's face upon their coin is more pleasing to them than to see the face of Christ in his ordinances: yet it was not faith, but fancy and curiosity, that made Zaccheus climb the sycamore to see Jesus; but the curiosity of the eye gave occasion for the belief of the heart; he that desires to see Jesus is in the way to enjoy him. It is good to be near the place where Christ is, whatever principles bring us thither.

5 And when Jesus came to the place, he looked up and saw him, and said unto him, Zaccheus, make haste, and come down, for to-day I must abide at thy house.
(No. 21.)

6 And he made haste, and came down, and received him joyfully.

What an instance is here of Christ's preventing grace and mercy! Zaccheus climbs up into the sycamore to see Jesus: Jesus first sees him; little did Zaccheus think that Jesus should cast up his eyes to him; Christ's looks are converting looks; there went a divine power along with them, to change the heart of him whom he looked upon; he that could heal a disease by the hem of his garment, could change an heart with the glance of his eye. Observe farther, Christ doth not only note, but name Zaccheus; "He bids him come down, for he must abide at his house; what sweet familiarity was here! Though the distance be infinitely great betwixt our Saviour and ourselves, yet he treats us not with a majestic stateliness, but with a gracious affability. Some note, that Zaccheus was the first man we read of, to whose house Christ invited himself. Observe lastly, With what speed Zaccheus hastens down, and with what alacrity he entertains our blessed Saviour—most joyfully: but alas! it was but for a few hours. Lord! how great is the happiness of that man who receives and entertains thee, not for a day or a year, or for millions of years, but for everlasting ages? O let us welcome thee into our hearts by faith whilst we are here on earth, and then thou wilt make us welcome with thyself everlastingly in thy kingdom.

7 And when they saw it, they all murmured, saying, That he was gone to be guest with a man that is a sinner.

That is, the pharisees who were here, were highly discontented that Christ went to a publican's house, whom they looked upon as the worst of men; their eyes were evil; because Christ's was good. Withers should the physician go, but to the sick? The whole need him not. However, the envious pharisees censure and condemn him for it. Lord! who can hope to escape the aspersions of censorious tongues, whilst spotless innocence, and perfect holiness, falls under the lash of them? It is sufficient for the servant to be as the master.

8 And Zaccheus stood, and said unto the Lord, Behold, Lord, the half of my goods I give to the poor: and if I have taken any thing from any man by false accusation, I restore him four-fold.

Two things are here observable. The greatness of his charity, and the justness of his restitution. As to his charity, Observe, 1. the freeness of it; not I lend, but I give. 2. The readiness of it: not I will, but I do give. 3. The justness and honesty of it; my goods, not my spoils; what is my own, and not rent from others by rapine or extortion. 4. The largeness and extensiveness of his charity. Half of my goods, not an inconsiderable pittance. 5. The fitness of his charity, To the poor, not to the rich; not to his rich heirs, but to his poor neighbours. Again, as his charity was large, so his restitution was just; as he gave half to the poor, so he restored four-fold to the wronged. What an evidence was here of a true penitent! confession and satisfaction are both found with him. Whenever repentance is sincere and saving, there is not only an hatred of former sins, but a vigorous exercise of graces contrary to those sins.

9 And Jesus said unto him, This day is salvation come to this house, forasmuch as he also is the son of Abraham.

That which Zaccheus gave to the poor, was nothing to what Christ gave to him; it was but dross he gave to them, it was salvation Christ gave to him. Where is the man that can say, God is in his debt for acts of charity and mercy? Where is he that will not own God the best and quickest paymaster? "This day is salvation come to thine house," it is thine in title, and ere long it shall be thine in possession: "Forasmuch as he also is the son of Abraham;" that is, either a natural son of Abraham, a Jew; or a spiritual son, a believer; the heir of Abraham's faith, which was also imputed to him for righteousness. O happy Zaccheus! thou hast climbed up from thy sycamore to heaven, and by thy charity and justice hast purchased to thyself a kingdom that fadeth not away.

10 For the Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost.

Observe here, 1. A description of man's deplorable state, and undone condition; he is lost. 2. The care of Christ to seek and recover man out of that lost state; "The Son of man is come to seek and to save that which is lost." Learn, 1. That man's condition is a lost condition, and every unregenerate man is a lost man; he has lost his God, his soul, his happiness, his excellency, his liberty, his ability. 2. The great errand that Christ came into the world upon; it was to seek and to save lost sinners; this he does by his blood, by his word, by his spirit, and by his rod.

11 ¶ And as they heard these things, he added and spake a parable, because he was nigh to Jerusalem, and because, they thought that the kingdom of God should immediately appear.

12 He said, therefore, A certain nobleman went into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom, and to return.

13 And he called his ten servants, and delivered them ten pounds, and said unto them, Occupy till I come.

14 But his citizens hated him, and sent a message after him, saying, We will not have this man to reign over us.

15 And it came to pass, that, when he was returned, having received the kingdom, then he commanded these servants to be called unto him, to whom he had given the money, that he might know how much every man had gained by trading.

16 Then came the first, saying, Lord, thy pound hath gained ten pounds.

17 And he said unto him, Well, thou good servant; because thou hast been faithful in a very little, have thou authority over ten cities.

18 And the second came, saying, Lord, thy pound hath gained five pounds.

19 And he said likewise to him, Be thou also over five cities.

20 And another came, saying, Lord, behold, here is thy pound, which I have kept laid up in a napkin;

21 For I feared thee, because thou art an austere man: thou takest up that thou laidest not down, and reapest that thou didst not sow.

22 And he saith unto him, Out of thine own mouth will I judge thee, thou wicked servant. Thou knewest that I was an austere man, taking that I laid not down, and reaping that I did not sow:

23 Wherefore then gavest not thou my money into the bank, that at my coming I might have required mine own with usury?

24 And he said unto them that stood by, Take from him the pound, and give it to him that hath ten pounds.

25 (And they said unto him, Lord, he hath ten pounds.)

26 For I say unto you, That unto every one which hath, shall be given; and from him that hath not, even that he hath shall be taken away from him.

27 But those mine enemies, which would not that I should reign over them, bring hither, and slay them before me.

For the better understanding of this parable, we must, 1. Consider the occasion of it; 2. The design and scope of it: 3. The lessons of instruction which our Saviour intended us by it. As to the former, the occasion of our Saviour's uttering this parable seems to be this; he was now going up to Jerusalem to die; some of the company were of opinion, that he would immediately enter upon his kingdom, and act as a temporal prince, delivering them from the Romans, and destroying his and their enemies; he lets them understand the quite contrary; that he must die and rise again, and ascend into heaven, and then return again and receive the kingdom; and that he was now taking his last journey to Jerusalem in order to that end. The design and scope of the parable, together with the interpretation of it, is this; The nobleman here mentioned is our Saviour himself, who in his state of great humiliation was but like a nobleman; his going into a far country, signifies his return from earth to heaven; his coming back again, signifies his coming to judgment; his calling his servants, and delivering them their talents, intimates to us, the various gifts which he bestows upon the sons of men, all of which are to be employed in his service, and improved to his glory; his "calling his servants to an account," plainly signifies, that when Christ comes to judgment, he will have an account of every individual person, how they used the gifts, and improved the talents, entrusted with them; and that they may expect to be impartially rewarded according to their works; for God will appear a righteous God, and will condemn sinners out of their own mouths, and a most certain and final ruin will be their portion, whilst those that were faithful in his service, shall be crowned with his reward. Now, from the whole we may learn these lessons of instruction: 1. That our Lord's state of humiliation and great abasement on earth being passed over, a glorious state of exaltation he is now arrived at in heaven. God has exalted him with great triumph to his kingdom in heaven, 2. That, clothed with infinite majesty and power, and attended with an innumerable host of glorious angels and saints, this exalted Saviour will come to judge angels and men. 3. That, in the mean time, Christ variously dispenses to his servants particular talents, to be employed and improved for his own glory and his church's good. 4. That there will most certainly be a reckoning-day, or a time when our Lord will take an account of men's improving those gifts and graces, which were given them as so many talents to be improved by them. 5. That there will be degrees of happiness and misery in the other world, according to men's degrees of faithfulness or negligence in this. 6. That it is abominably false and impious to charge God as being rigid and severe with men, and requiring impossibilities at their hands; "For out of their mouths will God condemn them." Lastly, That the condition of God's faithful servants will be unspeakably happy; and that of the unprofitable servants intolerably miserable, both in this world, and in the next. The righteous shall enter into the joy of their Lord, and be confirmed therein, with an utter impossibility of losing that happiness; the wicked, who would not submit to Christ's authority, shall not be able to resist his power. They that would not suffer Christ to reign over them, shall, at the last day, be brought forth and slain before him; "Those mine enemies, that would not that I, &c."

28 ¶ And when he had thus spoken, he went before, ascending up to Jerusalem.

29 And it came to pass, when he was come nigh to Bethphage and Bethany, at the mount called the mount of Olives, he sent two of his disciples, 30 Saying, Go ye into the village over against you; in the which, at your entering, ye shall find a colt tied, whereon yet never man sat; loose him, and bring him hither.

31 And if any man ask you, Why do ye loose him? thus shall ye say unto him, Because the Lord hath need of him.

32 And they that were sent went their way, and found even as he had said unto them.

33 And, as they were loosing the colt, the owners thereof said unto them, Why loose ye the colt?

34 And they said, the Lord hath need of him.

35 And they brought him to Jesus; and they cast their garments upon the colt, and they set Jesus thereon.

36 And as he went, they spread their clothes in the way.

37 And when he was come nigh, even now at the descent of the mount of Olives, the whole multitude of the disciples began to rejoice and praise God with a loud voice, for all the mighty works that they had seen, 38 Saying, Blessed be the King that cometh in the name of the Lord; peace in heaven, and glory in the highest.

39 And some of the pharisees, from among the multitude, said unto him, Master, rebuke thy disciples.

40 And he answered and said unto them, I tell you, that if these should hold their peace, the stones would immediately cry out.

Our Lord (as is noticed before) was now upon his last journey to Jerusalem, where he was to shed his blood, and lay down his life, for the redemption and salvation of a lost world; and it is observable, what a double demonstration he gives of his great willingness and forwardness to go up to Jerusalem, there to die. 1. Both St. Luke here, and St. Mark, chap. x. 32, tells us, That "he went before" the company, leading the way, when he went to suffer: Lord! with what alacrity and holy cheerfulness didst thou manage the great work of man's redemption! None ever went so willingly to a crown, as thou to thy cross. 2. Our Saviour, who all his life travelled like a poor man on foot, now he goes up to Jerusalem to die for us, he will ride, to show his great forwardness to lay down his life for us; but what was the beast he rode upon? An ass' colt: to fulfil that prophecy, Zech. ix. 9. Tell ye the daughter of Sion; behold thy king cometh, riding upon an ass; yea, it was a colt upon which never man rode before: to let us see, how the most unruly and untamed creatures become obedient and obsequious to Christ, and render themselves serviceable to him at his pleasure. It was also a borrowed ass, whereby our Saviour's right to all the creatures was manifested; and accordingly he bids his disciples to tell the owner, That the Lord hath need of him; not your lord, or our lord, but the Lord, that is, he that is Lord of all the earth, whose are the cattle upon a thousand hills. Here note, what a clear and full demonstration Christ gave of his divine nature: of his omniscency in foreseeing and foretelling the event; of his omnipotency in inclining the heart, and overruling the will of the owner to let the colt go; and of his sovereignty, that as he was Lord of the creatures, he could command and call for their service whenever he needed them. The colt being brought, and our Saviour set thereon: Observe next, The actions of the multitude in acknowledging Christ to be our king; they spread their clothes in the way, casting their garments on the ground for him to ride upon, according to the custom of princes when they ride in state: yea, the multitude do not only disrobe their backs, but expend their breath in joyful acclamations, and loud hosannas, wishing all manner of prosperity to their meek, but mighty prince. In this princely, yet poor and despicable pomp, doth our Saviour enter the famous city of Jerusalem. O how far was our holy Lord from affecting worldly greatness and grandeur; he despised that glory, which worldly hearts fondly admire; yet, because he was King, he would be proclaimed such; and have his kingdom confessed, applauded, and blessed; but that it might appear, that his kingdom was not of this world, he abandons all worldly magnificence. O glorious, yet homely pomp! O meek and mighty Prince! Observe lastly, The peevish envy of the wicked pharisees, who were then in company; they grudge our Saviour this poor honor, they envy him this small triumph of coming into the city upon an ass' colt, attended by a company of poor people, strewing the way with boughs of trees, with hosannas and joyful acclamations in their mouths; these poor people's mouths they would have stopped; Master, rebuke thy disciples; they did not like the music. Christ tells them, that they labor in vain to suppress the testimony given him by his disciples, for if they should be silent, the stones would cry out: yea, cry out shame of them for neglecting their duty; as if Christ had said, The speechless stone will speak, and give witness to me if men will not. Learn hence, They that are owned of God, shall not want ownings and witnessings from man at one time or other, in one way or other; though the envy and malice of men do ever so much gainsay and oppose it.

41 ¶ And when he was come near, he beheld the city, and wept over it,

No sooner did our Saviour come within the sight and view of the city of Jerusalem, but he burst out into tears, at the consideration of their obstinacy, and wilful rejecting of the offers of grace and salvation made unto them; and also he wept to consider the dreadful judgments that hung over their heads for those sins, even the utter ruin and destruction of their city and temple. Learn hence, 1. That good men ever have been, and are, men of tender and compassionate dispositions, sorrowing not only for their own sufferings, but others calamities. 2. That Christ shed tears as well as blood for the lost world; Christ wept over Jerusalem, as well as bled for her. 3. That Christ was infinitely more concerned for the salvation of poor sinners, than for his death and sufferings; not the sight of his own cross, but Jerusalem's calamities made him weep.

42 Saying, If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace! but now they are hid from thine eyes.

By the things belonging to their peace, we are to understand the presence of Christ amongst them, the preaching of the gospel to them? She did not know, that is, she did not consider, she did not prize and improve her privileges, as she ought, but stopped her ears against the word of Christ, and closed her eyes against the miraculous works of Christ, till at last they were hidden from her eyes. Learn hence, 1. That the time of a people's enjoying the light and liberty of the gospel, is a limited day, it is a short day. If thou hadst known in this thy day. 2. That it is the sad and usual lot of the gospel, not to be embraced and entertained by a people to whom it is in mercy sent, till it be too late, and the time of their visitation be past and over: O that thou hadst known, but now thou shalt never know, now they are hid from thine eyes. But how hid? Was there no more preaching in Jerusalem; no public ministry of that day? Yes, behold the patience and mercy of Christ in waiting upon this people. After this, Christ sent the whole college of apostles, and they preached there the things belonging to their temporal and eternal peace; but they wanted hearts to consider, and their ruin was unavoidable.

43 For the days shall come upon thee, that thine enemies shall cast a trench about thee, and compass thee round, and keep thee in on every side;

44 And shall lay thee even with the ground, and thy children within thee: and they shall not leave in thee one stone upon another: because thou knewest not the time of thy visitation.

Here we have a prophetic prediction of the total and final destruction of the city of Jerusalem by the Roman armies, who girt the city round, burnt the temple, starved the people, and brought such ruin and destruction upon the place, as no history could ever parallel: the reason is assigned, because they knew not the time of their visitation; that is, the time when God visited them with his gospel—first by the ministry of John, then by the preaching of Christ himself, and afterwards by his disciples and apostles. Hence learn, 1. That when God gives his gospel to a people, he gives that people a merciful and a gracious visitation. 2. That for a people not to know, but neglect the time of their gracious visitation, is a God-provoking, and a wrath-procuring sin: Because thou knowest not the time of thy visitation, therefore the time shall come, that thine enemies shall lay thee even with the ground, and not leave one stone upon another; which, history tells us, was literally fulfilled, when Turnus Rufus, with his plough, ploughed up the very foundation-stones upon which the temple stood. Lord! how has sin laid the foundation of ruin in the most flourishing cities and kingdoms.

45 ¶ And he went into the temple, and began to cast out them that sold therein, and them that bought.

46 Saying unto them, It is written, My house is the house of prayer: but ye have made it a den of thieves.

47 And he taught daily in the temple, But the chief priests and the scribes, and the chief of the people, sought to destroy him;

48 And could not find what they might do: for all the people were very attentive to hear him.

No sooner had our blessed Saviour entered Jerusalem, but his first walk was to the temple, and his first work was to purge and reform it from abuses, not to ruin and destroy it, because it had been abused. But what was the profanation of the temple, that so offended our Saviour? Ans. In the court of the gentiles, the outward court of the temple, there was a public mart or market kept, where were sold oxen, sheep, and doves, for sacrifice, which otherwise the people must have brought up along with them from their houses: as a pretended ease, therefore, to the people, the priests ordered these things to be sold hard by the altar; but our blessed Saviour, being justly offended at this profanation of his Father's house, cast the buyers and sellers out of the temple.—Teaching us, that there is a special reverence due to God's house, both for the owner's sake, and the service sake; nothing but holiness can become the place where God is worshipped in the beauty of holiness: the reason is added, My house is the house of prayer: where, by prayer, is to be understood, the whole worship and service of God, of which prayer is an eminent and principal part. That which gives denomination to an house, is most certainly the chief work to be done in that house; now God's house being called an house of prayer, implies that prayer is a chief and principal work to be performed in this house, yet take we heed, that we set not the ordinances of God at variance one with another: we must not idolize one ordinance, and vilify another, but reverence them all, and pay an awful respect to all divine institutions. Our blessed Saviour here, in his house of prayer, preached daily to the people, as well as prayed with them; and all the people were as attentive to hear his sermons, as he was constant at their prayers. Prayer sanctifies the word, and the word fits us for prayer. If we would glorify God and edify ourselves, we must put honor upon all the ordinances of God, and diligently attend them upon all occasions.

(No. 21.)

CHAPTER XX.

AND it came to pass that on one of those days, as he taught the people in the temple, and preached the gospel, the chief priests and the scribes came upon him, with the elders:

2 And spake unto him, saying, Tell us, By what authority doest thou these things? or who is he that gave thee this authority?

3 And he answered and said unto them, I will also ask you one thing: and answer me:

4 The baptism of John, was it from heaven, or of men?

5 And they reasoned with themselves, saying, If we shall say, From heaven: he will say, Why then believed ye him not?

6 But and if we say, Of men: all the people will stone us: for they be persuaded that John was a prophet.

7 And they answered, That they could not tell whence it was.

8 And Jesus said unto them, Neither tell I you by what authority I do these things.

The pharisees having often quarrelled at our Saviour's doctrine before, they call in question his mission and authority now; although they might easily have understood his divine mission by his divine miracles: for Almighty God never empowered any to work miracles that were not sent by him. Our blessed Saviour, understanding their design, gives them no direct answer, but replies to their question, by asking them another; The baptism of John, was it from heaven or of men? that is, was it of divine institution, or of human invention? plainly implying, That the calling of them who call themselves the ministers of God, ought to be from God: No man ought to take that honor upon him, but he that is called of God; as was Aaron, Heb. v. 8. The pharisees reply, That they could not tell whence John had his mission and authority: which was a manifest untruth; they knew it, but durst not own it. By refusing to tell the truth, they fall into a lie against the truth: thus one sin ensnares and draws men on to the commission of more; such as will not speak exact truth, according to their knowledge, they fall into the sin of lying against their knowledge and their conscience. Our Saviour answers them, Neither tell I you by what authority I do these things. He doth not say, I cannot, or I will not tell you, but I do not, I need not tell you: because the miracles which I work before you, are a sufficient demonstration of my divine commission; that I am sent of God among you; because God never set the seal of his omnipotency to a lie, nor empowered any impostor to work real miracles.

9 ¶ Then began he to speak to the people this parable: A certain man planted a vineyard, and let it forth to husbandmen, and went into a far country for a long time.

10 And at the season, he sent a servant to the husbandmen, that they should give him of the fruit of the vineyard: but the husbandmen beat him, and sent him away empty.

11 And again he sent another servant: and they beat him also, and entreated him shamefully, and sent him away empty.

12 And again he sent the third; and they wounded him also, and cast him out.

13 Then said the Lord of the vineyard, What shall I do? I will send my beloved son: it may be they will reverence him when they see him.

14 But when the husbandmen saw him, they reasoned among themselves, saying, This is the heir: come, let us kill him, that the inheritance may be ours.

15 So they cast him out of the vineyard, and killed him. What therefore shall the lord of the vineyard do unto them?

16 He shall come and destroy these husbandmen, and shall give the vineyard to others. And when they heard it they said, God forbid.

17 And he beheld them, and said, What is this then that is written, The stone which the builders rejected, the same is become the head of the corner?

18 Whosoever shall fall upon that stone, shall be broken: but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder.

19 ¶ And the chief priests and the scribes the same hour sought to lay hands on him: and they feared the people; for they perceived that he had spoken this parable against them.

In the parable before us, the Jewish church is compared to a vineyard, God the Father to an householder, his pruning and fencing his vineyard, denotes his care to furnish his church with all needful helps and means to make it fruitful; his letting it out to husbandmen, signifies the committing the care of his church to the priests and Levites, the public pastors and governors of his church; his servants, are the prophets and apostles, whom he sent from time to time, to admonish them to bring forth fruits answerable to the cost which God had expended on them: his son is Jesus Christ, whom the rulers of the Jewish church slew and murdered. So that the design and scope of the parable is, to discover to the Jews, particularly to the pharisees, their obstinate impenitency under all the means of grace, their bloody cruelty towards the prophets of God, their tremendous guilt in crucifying the Son of God; for all which God would unchurch them finally, ruin their nation, and set up a church among the Gentiles, that should bring forth much better fruit than the Jewish church ever did. From the whole note, 1. That the church is God's vineyard; a vineyard is a place inclosed, a place well planted, well fruited, and exceeding dear and precious to the planter, and the owner of it. 2. That as dear as God's vineyard is unto him, in case of barrenness and unfruitfulness, it is in great danger of being destroyed and laid waste by him. 3. That the only way and course to engage God's care over his vineyard, and to prevent its being given to other husbandmen, is to give him the fruits of it; it is but a vineyard that God lets out; it is no inheritance; no people ever had so many promises of God's favor as the Jews; nor ever enjoyed so many privileges, whilst they continued in his favor, as they did; but for rejecting Christ and his holy doctrine, they are a despised, scattered people, throughout the world. See the note on Matt. xxi. 39, 44.

20 And they watched him, and sent forth spies, which should feign themselves just men, that they might take hold of his words, that so they might deliver him unto the power and authority of the governor.

21 And they asked him, saying, Master, we know that thou sayest and teachest rightly, neither acceptest thou the person of any, but teachest the way of God truly.

22 Is it lawful for us to give tribute unto Cesar, or no?

23 But he perceived their craftiness, and said unto them, Why tempt ye me?

24 Show me a penny: whose image and superscription hath it? They answered and said, Cesar's.

25 And he said unto them, Render therefore unto Cesar the things which be Cesar's, and unto God the things which be God's.

26 And they could not take hold of his words before the people: and they marvelled at his answer, and held their peace.

Both St. Matthew and St. Mark tell us, That these spies, sent forth to ensnare our Saviour about paying tribute to Cesar, were the pharisees and Herodians; the former were against paying tribute, looking upon the Roman emperor as an usurper; the latter were for it: these two opposite parties concluded, That, let our Saviour answer how he would, they should entrap him; if, to please the pharisees, he denied paying tribute, then he is accused of sedition; if, to gratify the Herodians, he voted for paying tribute, he then is pronounced an enemy to the liberty of his country, and exposed to popular odium. But observe, with what wisdom and caution our Lord answers them; he calls for the Roman penny, and asks them, Whose superscription it bare? they answer, Cesar's: then says he, Render to Cesar the things that are Cesar's; as if he had said, "Your admitting the Roman coin amongst you, is an evidence that you are under subjection to the Roman emperor; because the coining and imposing of money is an act of sovereign authority; therefore, you having owned Cesar's authority over you, by accepting of his coin amongst you, give unto him his just dues, and render to Cesar the things which are Cesar's." Learn hence, 1. That our Saviour was no enemy to magistracy and civil government; there was no truer paymaster of the king's dues, than he that was the King of kings; he preached it, and he practised it, Matthew xvii. 27. 2. Where a kingdom is in subjection to a temporal prince, whether by descent, election, or conquest, he derives the title, the subjects ought, from a principle of conscience, to pay tribute to him. 3. That as Christ is no enemy to the civil rights of princes, and his religion exempts none from paying their civil dues, so princes should be as careful not to rob him of his divine honor, as he is not to wrong them of their civil rights. Christ requires all his followers to render to Cesar the things that are Cesar's, &c.

27 ¶ Then came to him certain of the sadducees (which deny that there is any resurrection), and they asked him, 28 Saying, Master, Moses wrote unto us, If any man's brother die, having a wife, and he die without children, that his brother should take his wife, and raise up seed unto his brother.

29 There were therefore seven brethren: and the first took a wife, and died without children.

30 And the second took her to wife, and he died childless.

31 And the third took her; and in like manner the seven also. And they left no children, and died.

32 Last of all the woman died also.

33 Therefore in the resurrection, whose wife of them is she? for seven had her to wife.

34 And Jesus, answering, said unto them, The children of this world marry, and are given in marriage:

35 But they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage.

36 Neither can they die any more: for they are equal unto the angels, and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection.

37 Now that the dead are raised, even Moses showed at the bush, when he calleth the Lord, the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob.

38 For he is not a God of the dead, but of the living: for all live unto him.

Our blessed Saviour having put the pharisees and Herodians to silence in the foregoing verses, here the sadducees encounter him; this sect denied the immortality of the soul, and the resurrection of the body, and as an objection against both, they propound a case to our Saviour, of a woman that had seven husbands; they demanded whose wife of the seven this woman shall be at the resurrection? As if they had said, "If there be a resurrection of bodies at the great day, surely there will be a resurrection of relations too, and the other world will be like this, in which men will marry as they do here; and if so, Whose wife of the seven shall this woman be?" they all having an equal claim to her." Now our Saviour, for resolving of this question, first shows the different state of men in this and the other world: The children of this world, says Christ, marry, and are given in marriage; but in the resurrection they do neither: as if our Lord had said, "After men have lived a while in this world, they die, and therefore marriage is necessary to maintain a succession of mankind; but in the other world, men shall become immortal, and live for ever; and then the reason of marriage will wholly cease: for when men can die no more, there will be no need of any new supplies of mankind." Secondly, Our Saviour having got clear of the sadducees' objection, by taking away the ground and foundation of it, produces an argument for the proof of the soul's immortality, and the body's resurrection, thus: "Those to whom Almighty God pronounces himself a God, are alive; but God pronounces himself a God to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob many hundred years after their bodies were dead ; therefore their souls are yet alive, otherwise God could not be their God." For he is not the God of the dead, but of the living. From the whole note, 1. That there is no opinion so absurd, no error so monstrous, that having had a mother, will die for lack of a nurse : the beastly opinion of the mortality of the soul, and of the annihilation of the body, finds sadducees to profess and propagate it. Learn, 2. The certainty of another life after this, in which men shall be eternally happy, or intolerably miserable, accordingly as they behave themselves here ; though some men live like beasts, they shall not die like them, neither shall their last end be like theirs. Note, 3. The glorified saints, in the morning of the resurrection, shall be like unto the glorious angels ; not like them in essence and nature, but like them in their properties and qualities, namely, in holiness and purity, in immortality and incorruptibility ; and also like them in their way and manner of living. They shall no more stand in need of meat or drink than the angels do ; but shall live the same heavenly and immortal lives that the angels live. Note, 4. That all those that are in covenant with God, whose God the Lord is, their souls immediately pass into glory, and their bodies, at the resurrection, shall be sharers in the same happiness with their souls. If God be just, the soul must live, and the body must rise ; for good men must be rewarded, and wicked men punished. God will most certainly, one time or other, plentifully reward the righteous, and punish the evil doers : but this being not always done in this life, the justice of God requires it to be done in the next.

39 ¶ Then certain of the scribes answering, said, Master, thou hast well said.

40 And after that, they durst not ask him any question at all.

41 And he said unto them, How say they that Christ is David's son.

42 And David himself saith, in the book of Psalms, The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand.

43 Till I make thine enemies thy footstool.

44 David therefore calleth him Lord, how is he then his son ?

The design of our blessed Saviour, in propounding this question to the pharisees (how Christ could be David's Son, when David by inspiration called him Lord) was two-fold : 1. To confute the people's erroneous opinion, touching the person of the Messiah, who they thought should be a mere man, in the stock and lineage of David only, and not the Son of God. 2. To strengthen the faith of his disciples, touching his godhead, against the time that they should see him suffer and rise again : the place Christ alludes to, is psalm cx. 1. The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand. The Lord, that is, God the Father, said to my Lord, that is, to God the Son, who was to be incarnate, whom David calleth his Lord, both as God, and as Mediator, his Lord by a right of creation and redemption also : now the question our Saviour puts to the pharisees is this, How Christ could be both David's Lord and David's son ? no son being Lord of his own father ; therefore, if Christ were David's sovereign, he must be more than man, more than David's son. As man, he was David's son ; as God-man, he was David's Lord. Note hence, 1. Though Christ was truly and really man, yet he was more than a mere man ; he was Lord unto, and the salvation of, his own forefathers. Note, 2. That the only way to reconcile the scriptures which speak concerning Christ, is to believe and acknowledge him to be both God and man in one person. The Messiah, as man, was to come forth out of David's loins ; but as God-man, was David's Lord, his Sovereign, and Saviour ; as man, he was David's son ; as God-man, he was Lord of his own father.

45 ¶ Then in the audience of all the people, he said unto his disciples,

46 Beware of the scribes, which desire to walk in long robes, and love greetings in the markets, and the highest seats in the synagogues, and the chief rooms at feasts :

47 Which devour widow's houses, and for a show make long prayers ; the same shall receive greater damnation.

Observe here, What it is that our Saviour condemns : not civil salutations in the market-place, not the chief seats in the synagogues, not the uppermost rooms at feasts ; but their fond affecting of these things, and their ambitious aspiring after them : it was not their taking, but their loving the uppermost rooms at feasts, which our Saviour condemns. God is the God of order ; there may and ought to be a precedency among persons ; God commands us to give honor to whom honor is due ; but pride and ambition are detestable and hateful vices, especially in such as are teachers, and ought to be patterns of humility. Observe, 2. How our Saviour condemns the pharisees for their gross hypocrisy, and coloring over their abominable covetousness with a specious pretence of religion, making long prayers in the temple and synagogues for widows, and thereupon persuading them to give bountifully to corban, that is, the common treasury for the temple ; some part of which was employed for their maintenance. Whence we learn, That it is no new thing for designing hypocrites to cover the foulest transgressions with the cloak of religion ; thus the pharisees made their prayers a cloak and cover for their covetousness.

CHAPTER XXI.

AND he looked up and saw the rich men casting their gifts into the treasury,

2 And he saw also a certain poor widow, casting in thither two mites.

3 And he said, Of a truth I say unto you, that this poor widow hath cast in more than they all.

4 For all these have of their abundance cast in unto the offerings of God: but she of her penury hath cast in all the living that she had.

At the door of the temple, through which all the people passed in and out, who came up three times a year at the solemn feasts, to worship Almighty God in his own house, there was a chest set (like the poor man's box in some of our churches) into which all persons cast their free-will offerings and oblations, which were employed either for the use of the poor, or for the service of the temple; and what was thus given, our Saviour calls an offering to God, ver. 4. These of their abundance have cast in unto the offerings of God. Thence learn, 1. That what we rightly give to the relief of the poor, or for the service, and towards the support of God's public worship, is consecrated to God; and as such is accepted of him, and ought to be esteemed by us. Observe, 2. with what pleasure and satisfaction our Saviour sets himself to view those offerings; He beheld the rich men casting their gifts into the treasury. Thence note, That our Saviour sees with pleasure, and beholds with delight, whatever we have hearts to give unto him: whether for the relief of his members, or for the support of his service. O blessed Saviour, while now thou sittest at thy Father's right hand in glory, thou seest every hand that is stretched forth for the relief of thy poor members here on earth. Ver 2. But a certain poor woman cast in two mites. Several circumstances relating both to the person and the action are here observable: as, 1. The person that offered was a widow: the married woman is under the careful provision of her husband; if she spends, he earns; but the widow has no hands but her own to work for her. 2. She was a poor widow; poverty added to the sorrow of her widowhood, she had no rich jointure to live upon; it is some alleviation of the sorrow that attends widowhood, when the hand is left fall, though the bed is left empty; this widow was needy and desolate, but yet gives; some in her circumstances would have looked upon themselves as having right to receive what was given by others, rather than to give any thing themselves. Observe, 3. Her bounty and munificence in giving, Her two mites are proclaimed by Christ to be more than all the rich men's talents; more in respect to the mind and affection of the giver; more with respect to the proportion of the gift; a mite to her being more than pounds to others. Pounds were little to them; two mites were all to her, she leaves herself nothing; so that the poor woman gave not only more than any of them all, but more than they all. Christ's eye looked at once into the bottom of her purse, and into the bottom of her heart, and judged of the offering, rather by the mind of the giver, than by the value of the gift. From this instance we learn, 1. That the poorer, yea, the poorest sort of people, are not exempted from good works; but even they must and ought to exercise charity according to their ability. This poor widow, that had not a pound, nay, not a penny, presents God with a farthing. 2. That in all works of pious charity which we perform, God looks at the heart, the will, and the affection of the giver, more than at the largeness and liberality of the gift. It is not said, The Lord loveth a liberal giver; but a cheerful giver; He accepteth the gift according to what a man hath, and not according to what he hath not. O our God, the poorest of us thy servants have our two mites also, a soul and a body; persuade and enable us to offer them both unto thee, though they are thine own already, yet thou wilt graciously accept them; and O how happy shall we be in thy acceptance.

5 ¶ And as some spake of the temple, how it was adorned with goodly stones, and gifts, he said,

6 As for these things which ye behold, the days will come, in the which there shall not be left one stone upon another; which shall not be thrown down.

Our blessed Saviour being now ready to depart from the temple, never more after this entering into it, and his disciples showing him with wonder and admiration, the magnificent structures and buildings thereof, apprehending that in regard of its invincible strength it could not be destroyed; not considering, that sin will determine and blow up the most magnificent and famous structures; for sin brings cities and kingdoms, as well as particular persons, to their end. Not one stone, says Christ, shall be left upon another; which threatening was exactly fulfilled after Christ's death, when Titus the Roman emperor destroyed the city, burnt the temple, and Turnus Rufus, the general of his army, ploughed up the very foundation on which the temple stood; thus was the threatening of God fulfilled, Jer. xxvi. 18. Zion shall be ploughed as a field, and Jerusalem shall become an heap. Learn hence, 1. That sin has laid the foundation of ruin in the most flourishing cities, and kingdoms; Jerusalem, the glory of the world, is here by sin threatened to be made a desolation. 2. That the threatenings of God are to be feared, and shall be fulfilled, whatever appearing improbabilities there may be to the contrary. It is neither the temple's strength nor beauty, that can oppose or withstand God's power.

7 And they asked him, saying, Master, but when shall these things be? and what sign will there be when these things shall come to pass?

A double question is here propounded to our Saviour; namely, When the destruction of Jerusalem should be? and, What would be the signs of it? From whence learn, What an itching curiosity there is in the best of men, to know futurities, and to understand things that shall come to pass hereafter; and when that hereafter will come to pass. O how happy were it, if we were as forward to obey the declarations of God's revealed will, as we are to pry into the hidden counsels of his secret will; Tell us, say the disciples, when shall these things be?

8 And he said, Take heed that ye be not deceived: for many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ; and the time draweth near: go ye not therefore after them.

9 But when ye shall hear of wars, and commotions, be not terrified: for these things must first come to pass, but the end is not by and by.

10 Then said he unto them, Nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom:

11 And great earthquakes shall be in divers places, and famines, and pestilences, and fearful sights, and great signs shall there be from heaven.

Observe here, Christ does not gratify his disciples' curiosity, but acquaints them with their present duty; namely, to watch against deceivers and seducers, who should have the impudence to affirm themselves to be Christ, saying, I am Christ; some Christ personal, or the Messiah; others Christ doctrinal, affirming their erroneous opinions to be Christ's mind and doctrine: Take heed that ye be not deceived, for many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ. Observe farther, the signs which our Saviour gives of Jerusalem's approaching destruction; namely, the many broils and commotions, the civil disorders and dissensions, that should be found amongst the Jews immediately before; Ye shall hear of wars and commotions, and see fearful sights, and great signs from heaven. Josephus declares, That there appeared in the air chariots and horsemen skirmishing, and that a blazing star in fashion of a sword hung over the city for a year together. Hence learn, That war, pestilence, and famine, are judgments and calamities inflicted by God upon a sinful people for their contempt of Christ and gospel grace. Ye shall hear of war, famine, and pestilence.

12 But before all these they shall lay their hands on you, and persecute you, delivering you up to the synagogues, and into prisons, being brought before kings and rulers for my name's sake.

13 And it shall turn to you for a testimony.

14 Settle it therefore in your hearts, not to meditate before, what ye shall answer.

15 For I will give you a mouth and wisdom, which all your adversaries shall not be able to gainsay, nor resist.

16 And ye shall be betrayed both by parents and brethren, and kinsfolks, and friends; and some of you shall they cause to be put to death.

17 And ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake.

18 But there shall not an hair of your head perish.

19 In your patience possess ye your souls.

Our Saviour here goes on in giving farther signs of Jerusalem's destruction. He declares, 1. The sharp persecution that should fall upon the apostles themselves; They shall lay their hands on you, and persecute you. Learn thence, That the keenest and sharpest edge of persecution is usually turned upon the ambassadors of Christ, and falls heaviest on the ministers of God. He acquaints them, 2. That for preaching his holy doctrine, they should be brought before kings and rulers; but advises them not to be anxiously thoughtful, or exceedingly solicitous what they should say, for it should be suggested to them by the holy Ghost, what they should say in that hour. Learn thence, That though the truth of Christ may be opposed, yet the defenders of it shall never be ashamed; for rather than they shall want a tongue to plead for it, God himself will prompt them by his Holy Spirit, and suggest such arguments to them, as all their enemies shall not be able to gainsay: I will give you a mouth and wisdom. Observe 3. How he describes the bitter enmity of the world against the preachers of the gospel, to be such as would overcome and extinguish even the natural affection of nearest relations; ye shall be betrayed both by parents and brethren: grace teaches us to lay down our lives for the brethren; but corruption in general, and enmity to the gospel in particular, will put brother upon taking away the life of brother, and cause parents to hate and persecute their own bowels. Observe lastly, our Saviour's admonition, In your patience possess ye your souls. There are three degrees of christian patience; the first consists in a silent submission to God's will; the second in a thankful acceptance of God's fatherly rod; the third in serious cheerfulness under sorrowful dispensations, rejoicing in tribulation, and counting it all joy when we fall into divers temptations; by this patience we possess our souls; as faith gives us the possession of Christ, so patience gives us the possession of ourselves; an impatient man is not in his own hand, for what title soever we have to our own souls, we have no possession of them without patience: In your patience possess ye your souls.

20 And when ye shall see Jerusalem compassed with armies, then know that the desolation thereof is nigh.

21 Then let them which are in Judea, flee to the mountains: and let them which are in the midst of it, depart out; and let not them that are in the countries, enter thereinto.

22 For these be the days of vengeance, that all things which are written may be fulfilled.

23 But woe unto them that are with child, and to them that give suck in those days: for there shall be great distress in the land, and wrath upon this people.

24 And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations; and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled.

25 ¶ And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity, the sea and the waves roaring;

26 Men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth: for the powers of heaven shall be shaken.

27 And then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory.

28 And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads: for your redemption draweth nigh.

The sense is this: "As soon as ye shall see the Roman army appear before the city of Jerusalem (called by St. Matthew and St. Mark, The Abomination of Desolation, that is, the army, which is such an abomination to you, and the occasion of such desolation wherever it goes) then let every one that values his own safety, fly as far and as fast as he can, as Lot fled from the flames of Sodom; and be glad, if by flight he can save his life, though he lose all besides." Learn thence, That when Almighty God is pouring forth his fury upon a sinful people, it is both a lawful and a necessary duty, by flight, to endeavour to shelter ourselves from the approaching calamity and desolation. When ye see Jerusalem encompassed with armies, flee to the mountains. Observe farther, The dreadful relation that our Saviour here gives of those desolating calamities which were coming upon Jerusalem, partly from the Roman army without, and partly from the seditions and factions of the zealots within, who committed such outrages and slaughters, that there were no less than eleven hundred thousand Jews slain, and ninety-seven thousand taken prisoners. They that bought our Saviour for thirty pence, where now themselves sold thirty for a penny. Now did the temple itself become a sacrifice, a whole burnt-offering, and was consumed to ashes. Observe lastly, What encouragement Christ gives to all his faithful disciples and followers; he bids them look up, and lift up their heads, when these calamities came upon others; look up with confidence and joy, for your redemption, salvation, and deliverance, then approacheth. God had a remnant which he designed should survive that destruction, to be an holy seed; these are called upon to look up with cheerfulness and joy, when the hearts of others were failing them for fear. And thus shall it be at the general day of judgment (of which Jerusalem's visitation was a type.) Lord, how will the glory and terror of that day dazzle the eyes, and terrify the hearts, of all the enemies of Christ; but delight the eyes, and rejoice the hearts of all that love and fear him, that serve and obey him; then may the friends of Christ look up, and lift up their heads, for their full redemption draweth nigh.

29 And he spake to them a parable; Behold the fig-tree, and all the trees:

30 When they now shoot forth, ye see and know of your own selves that summer is now nigh at hand.

31 So likewise ye, when ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand.

32 Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass away till all be fulfilled.

33 Heaven and earth shall pass away; but my words shall not pass away.

In these words, our Saviour declares the certainty of his coming to visit Jerusalem, for all her barbarous and bloody cruelty towards himself, his prophets, and apostles; he is pleased to set forth this by the similitude of the fig-tree, whose beginning to bud, declares the summer at hand; thus our Saviour tells them, That when they should see the fore-mentioned signs, they might conclude the destruction of their city and temple to be nigh at hand; and accordingly some of that generation then living did see these predictions fulfilled. Learn, That God is no less punctual in the execution of his threatenings upon incorrigible sinners, than he is faithful in the performance of his promises towards his own people; the truth and veracity of God is as much concerned to execute his threatenings, as it is to fulfil his promises.

34 ¶ And take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares.

35 For as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth.

36 Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man.

Here our Lord cautions his disciples against such a disposition and indisposition of mind, as may render them unfit and unready for his coming and appearance; and to take heed of two dangerous sins, namely, voluptuousness and earthly-mindedness, which above any other sins will indispose us for the duty of watchfulness. There is a threefold reason why our Saviour forewarns us of these sins, with reference to the day of judgment: 1. Because they are peccata præcurrentia, certain prognostics of the day of judgment approaching; As it was in the days of Noah, so shall the coming of the Son of man be. 2. Because they are peccata accelerantia, they do not only foretel, but hasten the coming of Christ. To see the world drowned in voluptuousness and earthly-mindedness, in security and sensuality, is not only a sign to foretel, but a sin that hastens judgment, and pulls down vengeance upon a wicked world. 3. Christ bids us beware of these sins with reference to the day of judgment, because these sins are derisoria judicii, they beget in men a profane spirit of scoffing and deriding at the notices of Christ's appearing to judgment, 2 Pet. iii. 3, 4. In the last days there shall come scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, Where is the promise of his coming? Our Saviour having thus warned them of these sins, he next exhorts them to watchfulness, Watch ye therefore, for as a snare that day will come upon you: that is, very suddenly, and very unexpectedly; as a snare has a threefold property, to catch suddenly, to hold sure, to destroy certainly. Our Lord's coming to Jerusalem was very unexpected, and his coming to us by death and judgment will steal upon us, if we be not watchful. Watch we then, for our Lord will come; at what hour he will come cannot certainly be known; there is no time in which we can promise or assure ourselves, that our Lord will not come: the time of our whole life is little enough to prepare for his coming. Our preparation for, will be no acceleration or hastening of, our Lord's coming. And oh! how dreadful will his coming be, if we be found off our watch, and altogether unready for his appearance? We must appear in judgment, but shall not be able to stand in the judgment: we shall see Christ as a judge, but not behold him as a Redeemer.

37 And in the day-time he was teaching in the temple, and at night he went out, and abode in the mount that is called the mount of Olives.

38 And all the people came early in the morning to him in the temple, for to hear him.

Our Lord has exhorted his disciples in the foregoing verses to diligence and prayer; here he set an example of both before them. Busying himself in God's service all the day, and at night spending much time in prayer; in the day time he was in the temple preaching, in the evening he was on the mount of Olives praying. Lord! what an example of indefatigable zeal and diligence hast thou set before thy ministers and members! O that, when our master comes, we may be found working, our people watching, and both they and we waiting for the joyful coming of our Lord and Saviour! Amen.

CHAPTER XXII.

NOW the feast of unleavened bread drew nigh, which is called the passover.

2 And the chief priests and scribes sought how they might kill him: for they feared the people.

This chapter gives a sad and sorrowful relation of the chief priests' conspiracy against the life of our blessed Saviour, in which we have three particulars observable. 1. The persons making this conspiracy, the chief priests, scribes, and elders, that is, the whole Jewish sanhedrim, or general council; they all lay their malicious heads together, to contrive the destruction of the holy and innocent Jesus. Thence learn, That general councils have erred, and may err fundamentally, both in matters of doctrine and practice: so did this general council at Jerusalem, consisting of chief priests, doctors, and elders, with the highpriest, their president; they did not believe Jesus to be the Messiah, after all the miracles wrought before their eyes, but ignominiously put him to death. Observe, 2. The manner of this conspiracy against the life of our blessed Saviour; it was clandestine, secret, and subtle. They consulted how they might take him by craft, and put him to death. Learn hence, That satan makes use of the subtlety of crafty men, and abuseth their parts as well as their power, for his own purposes and designs: the devil never sends a fool on his errand. Observe, 3. The circumstance of time when this conspiracy was managed, at the feast of the passover. It was a custom among the Jews to execute malefactors at their solemn feasts, at which time all the Jews came up to Jerusalem to sacrifice, and then put the malefactor to death, that all Israel might see and fear, and not do so wickedly. Accordingly, the feast of the passover was waited for by the Jews, as a fit opportunity to put our Saviour to death. The only objection was, that it might occasion a tumult and uproar amongst the people, there being such a mighty concourse at that time in Jerusalem; but Judas making them a proffer, they readily comply with the motion, and resolve to take the first opportunity to put our Saviour to death.

3 ¶ Then entered satan into Judas, surnamed Iscariot, being of the number of the twelve.

4 And he went his way, and communed with the chief priests and captains, how he might betray him unto them.

5 And they were glad, and covenanted to give him money.

6 And he promised, and sought opportunity to betray him unto them in the absence of the multitude.

Observe here, 1. The person betraying our blessed Saviour, Judas; Judas, a professor, Judas, a preacher, Judas, an apostle, and one of the twelve, whom Christ had chosen out of the world to be his dearest friend, one of his family and household: shall we wonder to find friends unfriendly or unfaithful to us, when our Saviour had a traitor in his own family! Observe, 2. The heinous nature of Judas's sin; he betrayed Jesus; Jesus, his Maker and Master. It is no strange or uncommon thing for the vilest of sins, and most horrid impieties, to be acted by such persons as make the most eminent profession of holiness and religion. Observe, 3. What was the occasion that led Judas to the commission of this sin; it was his inordinate love of money. I do not find that Judas had any particular malice, spite, or ill-will, against our Saviour, but a base and unworthy spirit of covetousness possessed by him, and this made him sell his Master. Covetousness is the root of sin; an eager and insatiable thirst after the world is the parent of the most monstrous and unnatural sins; for which reason our Saviour doubles his caution, Luke xii. 15. "Take heed and beware of covetousness;" it shows us both the great danger of the sin, and the great care that we ought to take to preserve ourselves from it.

7 ¶ Then came the day of unleavened bread, when the passover must be killed.

8 And he sent Peter and John, saying, Go and prepare us the passover, that we may eat.

9 And they said unto him, Where wilt thou that we prepare?

10 And he said unto them, Behold, when ye are entered into the city, there shall a man meet you bearing a pitcher of water; follow him into the house where he entereth in.

11 And ye shall say unto the good man of the house, The Master saith unto thee, Where is the guest-chamber, where I shall eat the passover with my disciples?

12 And he shall show you a large upper room furnished; there make ready.

13 And they went and found as he had said unto them; and they made ready the passover.

The time for the celebration of the passover being now at hand, Christ sends two of his disciples, Peter and John, to Jerusalem, to prepare what was needful in order thereunto: and here we have observable, 1. An eminent proof and evidence of Christ's divinity, in foretelling to his disciples all the particular occurrences and circumstances which they should meet with in the city, as, a man bearing a pitcher of water, &c. Observe, 2. How readily the heart of the householder was disposed to receive our Saviour and his disciples, and to accommodate them with all things needful upon this occasion. Our blessed Saviour had not a lamb of his own, and peradventure no money, wherewith to purchase one; yet he finds a more agreeable accommodation in this poor man's house, than if he had dwelt in Ahab's ivory palace, and had the provisions of Solomon's table. When Christ has a passover to celebrate, he will dispose the hearts of his children and servants to a free reception of himself. The room that Christ will enter into must be a large room, an upper room, a room furnished and prepared; a large room is the emblem of an enlarged heart, enlarged with love, with joy, and thankfulness; an upper room is a heart exalted, not puffed up with pride, but lifted up by heavenly meditations; and a room furnished is a soul adorned with all the graces of the Holy Spirit: into such a heart doth Christ enter, and there delight to dwell; Here is my rest for ever, says Christ, here will I dwell, for I have a delight herein.

14 And when the hour was come, he sat down, and the twelve apostles with him.

15 And he said unto them, With desire I have desired to eat this passover with you before I suffer.

16 For I say unto you, I will not any more eat thereof, until it be fulfilled in the kingdom of God.

17 And he took the cup, and gave thanks, and said, Take this, and divide it among yourselves:

18 For I say unto you, I will not drink of the fruit of the vine, until the kingdom of God shall come.

19 ¶ And he took bread, and gave thanks, and brake it, and gave unto them, saying, This is my body which is given for you: this do in remembrance of me.

20 Likewise also the cup after supper, saying, This cup is the New Testament in my blood, which is shed for you.

21 ¶ But behold, the hand of him that betrayeth me is with me on the table.

22 And truly the Son of man goeth, as it was determined: but woe unto that man by whom he is betrayed.

23 And they began to inquire among themselves, which of them it was that should do this thing.

Observe here, 1. What ardency of desire, and vehemency of affection, our holy Lord expresses to celebrate the passover with his disciples, and to administer the sacramental supper to them before he left them; With desire

I have desired to eat with you before I suffer. Thence learn, That it is very necessary, when sufferings do appear, especially when death doth approach, to have immediate recourse to the table of the Lord, which affords both an antidote against fear, and is a restorative to our faith. Christ, the night before he suffered, communicated with his disciples. Observe, 2. The unexampled boldness of the impudent traitor Judas; though he had sold his Master, he presumes to sit down at the table with him, and with the other disciples: had the presence of Judas polluted this ordinance to any but himself, doubtless our Saviour would not have suffered him to approach unto it. It teaches us, That although nothing be more ordinary than for unholy persons to press into the holy ordinances of God, which they have no right (whilst such) to approach unto, yet their presence pollutes the ordinances only to themselves. Holy persons are not polluted by their sins, therefore ought not to be discouraged from coming, by their presence. Observe, 3. Christ did not name Judas, and say, O thou perfidious traitor; but, Behold, the hand of him that betrayeth me is with me on the table. Doubtless Christ did not name him, because he would not drive him to despair, but wished to draw him to repentance. But, Lord, thou knowest us; when thou namest us not: O how sad is it for any of thy family, who pretend friendship with thee, to conspire against thee! and after they have eat of thy bread, to lift up the heel against thee! Observe, 4. That though Judas was not named, yet he saw himself pointed at by our Saviour; Behold, the hand that betrayeth me is on the table: and Judas' heart told him whose hand that was; yea, though Judas heard that dreadful sentence denounced against him, Woe unto that man by whom the Son of man is betrayed, yet he is no more blanked than innocency itself: this shameless man had the impudence to say to our blessed Saviour, Master, is it I? Though St. Luke says it not, the other Evangelists tell us, That Christ answered him, Thou sayest it. Did not Judas (think we) blush extremely, and hang down his guilty head, at so gallant an intimation? Nothing less; we read not of any thing like it. Lord! how does obstinacy in sinning steel the brow, and render it incapable of all relenting impressions? Immediately after the celebration of the passover, followed the institution of the Lord's supper; where we have observable, The author, the time, the elements, and the ministerial actions. Observe, 1. The author of this new sacrament, Jesus took bread. Learn thence, that to institute a sacrament is the sole prerogative of Jesus Christ; the church has no power to make new sacraments; it is only her duty to celebrate those which our Saviour has made. 2. The time of the institution, the night before the passion: The night in which he was betrayed, he took bread. 3. The sacramental elements, bread and wine; bread representing the body, and wine the blood of our Redeemer: bread being an absolutely necessary food, a common and obvious food, a strengthening and refreshing food; and wine being the most excellent drink, the most pleasant and delightful, the most cordial and restorative: for these reasons amongst others, did Christ consecrate and set these creatures apart, for those holy purposes for which he designed them. 4. The ministerial actions, breaking of the bread, and blessing of the cup; Jesus took bread; that is, separated it, and set it apart from common use, for holy purposes; He blessed it, that is, he prayed for a blessing upon, and broke it, thereby shadowing forth his body broken upon the cross:

and he gave it to his disciples, saying, This broken bread signifies my body, which is suddenly to be broken upon the cross, for the redemption and salvation of a lost world; Do you likewise this in remembrance of my death. As to the cup, Christ having set it apart, by prayer and thanksgiving, he commands his disciples to drink all of it; For, says he, this cup is the New Testament in my blood; that is, the wine in this cup doth represent the shedding of my blood, by which the new covenant between God and man is ratified and confirmed. Drink ye all of this, says our Saviour: whence we gather, That every communicant has as undoubted a right to the cup, as he has to the bread, in the Lord's supper; therefore, for the church of Rome to deny the cup to the common people is sacrilege, and directly contrary to Christ's institution.

24 ¶ And there was also a strife among them, which of them should be accounted the greatest.

25 And he said unto them, The kings of the Gentiles exercise lordship over them; and they that exercise authority upon them, are called benefactors.

26 But ye shall not be so: but he that is the greatest among you, let him be as the younger; and he that is chief, as he that doth serve.

27 For whether is greater, he that sitteth at meat, or he that serveth? is not he that sitteth at meat? but I am among you as he that serveth,

If these words be not placed out of order by St. Luke here, it may seem very strange, that the apostles, immediately after the receiving the sacrament, should entertain their minds with thoughts of precedence and superiority; and much stranger yet, that they should discourse openly of such a subject as this, especially considering what our Saviour had just before told them, that he was betrayed into the hands of sinners. But whether at this time or not, it is most certain, at some time or other, a strife was found amongst them, which should be the greatest. Now, that our Saviour might effectually quench those unhappy sparks of ambition which were kindled in his apostles' minds, he tells them, that supremacy and dominion belong to secular princes, not to evangelical pastors, who ought to carry themselves with humility and condescension one towards another. Not that Christ, directs to a parity and equality amongst his ministers, or forbids the pre-eminency of some over others; but the affecting of superiority is that which our Saviour disalloweth. Learn, 1. That so far ought the ministers of Christ to be from affecting a dominion and superiority of power over their fellow-brethren, that in imitation of Christ, their Lord and Master, they ought to account themselves fellow-servants; I am among you as one that serveth. 2. That such ministers as do love and affect pre-eminency and superiority, are most unfit for it: and they deserve it best that seek it least. 3. That the dignity and honor which the ministers of Christ should chiefly and only affect, is in another world; and the way to be the greatest and highest there, is to be low and humble here: mean in our own eyes, and little in our own esteem: Whosoever is chief, says Christ, let him be your servant.

28 Ye are they which have continued with me in my temptations,

29 And I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father has appointed unto me:

30 That ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom, and sit on thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel.

Observe here, What an honorable acknowledgement Christ makes of the constancy of his disciples' love and affection towards him; Ye are they that have continued with me in my temptations: that is in my afflictions, and sufferings. It is an easy matter to abide with Christ in days of peace, in times of consolation: but when we are under afflictions, temptations, and troubles, then we abide and keep close to Christ, is the proof of love and friendship; and as Christ makes an honorable mention of their constancy towards him, so he presently assures them of an honorable reward; I appoint unto you a kingdom. Learn thence, That such as are sharers with Christ in his sufferings, shall certainly communicate with him in his glory; If we suffer with him, we shall also reign with him; and whereas our Saviour promises his apostles, To sit upon thrones with him, judging the twelve tribes of Israel; we may gather, that such ministers as do most service for Christ, and forsake most to follow him, and continue in temptation and tribulation with him, shall in his kingdom partake of most honor and dignity with him and from him; You shall eat and drink in my kingdom, and sit on thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel; possibly, the apostles, and all the zealous, faithful, and laborious ministers of Jesus Christ, shall be nearer his throne in heaven than either saints or angels; nearer than the angels, because, by Christ's assuming the human nature, they are more nearly allied to him; he is their friend, but our brother: and nearer than other saints, as having done more eminent service for Christ, and brought more honor and glory to him, by a laborious diligence in their place and station. Dan. xii. 3. They that turn many to righteousness shall shine, &c.

31 ¶ And the Lord said, Simon, Simon, behold satan hath desired to have you, that he may sift you as wheat;

32 But I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not: and when thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren.

Here I shall give, 1. The general sense of the words. 2. The particular matters contained in them. 3. The special observations from them. The sense of the words is this: As for you, my disciples in general, for thee, Peter, in particular, I must tell thee, that satan hath accused you all before God, and desires that he may have the sifting of you all by his winnowing winds of temptation and persecution, that he may shake your faith, and weaken your confidence: but I have prayed for you all, and particularly for thyself, who art in greatest danger of falling, because so confident of thine own strength and standing, that thy faith, though severely shaken, may not utterly fail; and when, by repentance, thou art recovered from thy fall, be careful to confirm and strengthen others, that they fall not in like manner. The particular matters contained in these words, are three: a christian's danger, a christian's safety, and a christian's duty. 1. A christian's danger; Satan hath a desire to sift you. Where observe, 1. The person particularly warned of the danger, Simon, Simon; the doubling of the word, doubtless, carries a special intimation with it; it denotes the greatness and nearness of Peter's danger, his own security and insensibleness of that danger, and the great affection of Christ, his monitor, to give him warning of his danger. Observe, 2. The warning itself, and that is of a devilish conspiracy against himself, and all his apostles, satan hath desired to have you; to have you for his own, if it might be; to have you, as believers, rather than other men; to have you as eminent believers, rather than other christians: and to have you as apostles and ministers, rather than other eminent believers. And as satan has desired to have you, so to sift you too, to winnow you as wheat; not to fetch out the chaff, but to make thee chaff. Here note, That satan has his winnowing winds of temptation, and his tempestuous winds of persecution, for the sifting of God's children. Note farther, That it is the wheat, the good corn, that satan winnows; not chaff, nor dross; sinners, that are all chaff, and nothing but dross, satan will not be at the pains to sift and winnow them; but what is this sifting? Answer, In sifting, two things are performed: 1. The agitation, shaking, and tossing of the corn from side to side. 2. The separation of the corn from the chaff and dust; satan intends the former, God effects the latter; cribratione non perditur, sed purgatur frumentum; the corn is improved, not impaired, by winnowing. The saints of God shall be no losers in the end by satan's temptations, how many and strong soever they may be in the way. Observe, 2. The christian's safety; But I have prayed for thee that thy faith fail not. Where note, 1. The care that Christ had of Peter, and in him of all believers; I have prayed for thee; for thee as a believing christian, and for thee as a tempted christian: and it is not said, I will pray for thee, but I have prayed for thee. Christ prayed for Peter before Peter understood that he had need of Christ's prayer; Christ prayed for Peter, as soon as ever satan desired to sift Peter: our Intercessor is full as nimble and speedy in his suit for us, as satan is in his accusations against us: he has desired, but I have prayed; he is a potent assailant, but thou hast a powerful assistant. Observe, 2. The subject-matter prayed for. That thy faith fail not; not that thy faith be not assaulted, not that thy faith be not shaken, but that thy faith may not fail by an absolute and total deficiency. The third particular is, the christian's duty; When thou art converted strengthen thy brethren—When converted, that is, when recovered from thy fall, when restored upon thy repentance to the divine favor. This conversion is not from a state of sin; Peter was so converted before; but it was from an act of sin, into which he should lapse and relapse; Strengthen thy brethren; that is, establish others in the faith, from which thou art shamefully fallen thyself: now the lessons of instruction from the whole are these:—1. That temptations are like siftings; God sifts, to purge away our dust and dross; satan sifts, not to get out the chaff, but to bolt out the flour; his temptations are levelled against our faith. 2. That satan has a continual desire to be sifting and winnowing God's flour; satan's own children are all bran, all chaff; these he sifts not: God's children have flour mixed with bran, good wheat mixed with chaff; these he desires to sift, winnow, and fan: not to separate the bran and dross, but to destroy the flour—Learn, 3. That the intercession of Christ gives security, satisfaction, and encouragement, to all believers; that though their faith may by temptations, be shaken and assaulted, yet, that it shall never be finally vanquished and overcome: I have prayed that thy faith fail not. 4. That lapsed christians, when recovered and restored, ought to endeavour to restore and recover, to strengthen and establish others: When thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren.

33 And he said unto him, Lord, I am ready to go with thee both into prison, and to death.

34 And he said, I tell thee, Peter, the cock shall not crow this day, before that thou shalt thrice deny that thou knowest me.

St. Peter's resolution to accompany Christ, both to prison and to death, was holy and good: but his too confident opinion of his own strength and ability so to do, without a divine aid and assistance, was his failing and infirmity.—Self-confidence is a sin too incident to the holiest and best of men. Little did St. Peter think what a feather he should be in the wind of temptation, if once God left him to himself and to satan's assaults. Learn farther, How hard a matter it is for a christian to excel in gifts, and not to be over-confident and conceited. To see a man eminent in gifts, and yet exemplary in humility, is a rare sight: if we stand in the evil day, it is an humble fear of falling that must enable us to stand.

35 And he said unto them, When I sent you without purse, and scrip, and shoes, lacked ye any thing? And they said, Nothing.

36 Then said he unto them, But now he that hath a purse, let him take it, and likewise his scrip: and he that hath no sword, let him sell his garment and buy one.

37 For I say unto you, That this that is written must yet be accomplished in me, And he was reckoned among the transgressors: for the things concerning me have an end.

38 And they said, Lord, behold, here are two swords. And he said unto them, It is enough.

As if our Lord had said, "Hitherto I have been with you, and you have had my special protection and careful provision, though you went without purse, scrip, or sword: but the time is now at hand when I must leave you; when your friends will be few, and your enemies many; therefore make such provision for yourselves, as prudence shall direct.—Indeed, my sufferings will be first; I must be numbered with the transgressors, and all things that are written of me must be accomplished, and will suddenly be fulfilled; and after me you will next come upon the stage, therefore prepare and provide for it." Learn, That Christ having forewarned his members, but especially his ministers, of the dangers, distresses, and difficulties, that they are to conflict and encounter with; it is their duty, by faith and patience, with courage and christian resolution, to be well armed and prepared against them.

39 ¶ And he came out, and went, as he was wont, to the mount of Olives; and his disciples also followed him.

40 And when he was at the place, he said unto them, Pray, that ye enter not into temptation.

41 And he was withdrawn from them about a stone's cast, and kneeled down, and prayed.

42 Saying, Father, if thou be willing, remove this cup from me: nevertheless, not my will, but thine, be done.

43 And there appeared an angel unto him from heaven, strengthening him.

44 And being in an agony, he prayed more earnestly: and his sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground.

45 And when he rose up from prayer, and was come to his disciples, he found them sleeping for sorrow.

46 And he said unto them, Why sleep ye? rise and pray, lest ye enter into temptation.

Our blessed Saviour being now come to the mount of Olives, and having entered with his disciples into the garden near it, whither he used to retire and pray; in this place he falls into a bitter and bloody agony, in which he prayed with wonderful fervor and importunity; his sufferings were now coming on a great pace, and he meets them upon his knees, and would be found in a praying posture. Learn thence, That prayer is the best preparative for, as well as the most powerful support under the heaviest sufferings that can befall us. As to this prayer of our Saviour, in his agony, many particulars are very observable. As, 1. The time when he prayed thus extraordinarily, it was the evening before he suffered, just before Judas, with his black guard, came to apprehend him; and when he did come, he found him in a praying posture; our Lord teaching us by his example, that when imminent dangers are before us, especially when death is apprehended by us, it is our duty to be very much in prayer to God, and very fervent in our wrestlings with him. Observe, 2. The subject-matter of our Lord's prayer. That, if possible, the cup might pass from him; that is, That he might escape the dreadful wrath, at the which he was so sore amazed. But what! did Christ now begin to repent of his undertaking for sinners? Did he shrink and give back, when he came to the pinch? No, nothing like this; but as he had two natures, being God and man, so he had two distinct wills; as man, he feared and shunned death; as God-man, he willingly submitted to it. The divine nature, and the human spirit of Christ, did now assault each other with disagreeing interests: Again, This prayer was not absolute, but conditional; Father, if it may be, if thou wilt, if it please thee, let the cup pass: if not, I will drink it. The cup of sufferings, we see, is a very bitter and distasteful cup, a cup which human nature abhors; yet doth God oftentimes put this bitter cup of affliction into the hands of those whom he does sincerely love; and when he doth so, it is their duty to drink it with silence and submission, as here their Lord did before them. Observe, 3. The manner of our Lord's prayer in this his agony; and here we may remark, 1. It was a solitary prayer; he went by himself alone, out of the hearing of his disciples. The company of our best and dearest friends is not always seasonable; there are times and seasons when a christian would not be willing that the most intimate friend he has in the world should be with him, to hear what passes in secret betwixt him and his God. Again, 2. It was a humble prayer; that appears by the postures in which he casts himself, sometimes kneeling, sometimes lying prostrate upon his face; he lies in the very dust, and lower he could not lie, and his heart was as low as his body. 3. It was a vehement, fervent, and importunate prayer; such was the fervor of his spirit, that he prayed himself into an agony. O let us blush to think how unlike our praying frame of spirit is to Christ's! Lord, what coldness, deadness, drowsiness, formality, and laziness, is found in our prayers! How often do our lips move, when our hearts stand still! Observe, 4. The posture which the disciples were found in; when our Lord was praying, in his agony, they were fast asleep. Good God! Could they possibly sleep at such a time as this! when Christ's soul was exceeding sorrowful, could their eyes be thus heavy? Learn thence, That the very best of Christ's disciples may be, and oftentimes are, overtaken with great infirmities, when the most important duties are performing; Then cometh he to his disciples, and findeth them sleeping.

(No. 22.)

Observe, 5. The mild, meek, and gentle rebuke, which he gives his disciples for their sleeping: he said unto them, Why sleep ye? Could ye not watch with me one hour? "What, not watch when your Master was in such danger! Could you not watch with me when I am going to lay down my life for you? What, not one hour, and that the parting hour too." Learn hence, That the holiest and best resolved christians, who have willing spirits for Christ and his service, yet in regard of the weakness of the flesh, and the frailty of human nature, it is their duty to watch and pray, and thereby guard themselves against temptations. Rise and pray, lest ye enter into, &c.

47 ¶ And while he yet spake, behold, a multitude, and he that was called Judas, one of the twelve, went before them, and drew near unto Jesus to kiss him.

48 But Jesus said unto him, Judas, betrayest thou the Son of man with a kiss?

49 When they which were about him saw what would follow, they said unto him, Lord shall we smite with the sword?

50 ¶ And one of them smote the servant of the highpriest, and cut off his right ear.

51 And Jesus answered and said, Suffer ye thus far. And he touched his ear and healed him.

52 Then Jesus said unto the chief priests, and captains of the temple, and the elders, which were come to him, Be ye come out as against a thief, with swords and staves?

53 When I was daily with you in the temple, ye stretched forth no hands against me: but this is your hour, and the power of darkness.

It was the lot and portion of our blessed Saviour here, we find, to be betrayed into the hands of his mortal enemies, by the treachery of a false and dissembling friend: and in this sad relation before us we have observable, The traitor, the treason, the manner how, and the time when, this treasonable design was executed. Observe, 1. The traitor, Judas; all the Evangelists carefully describe him by his name, Judas, Judas Iscariot, lest he should be mistaken for Jude, the brother of James; and by his office one of the twelve. Lord! how ought the greatest professors to look well to themselves, and to the grounds and principles of their profession! for a profession begun in hypocrisy will certainly end in apostasy. Observe, 2. The occasion of the treason, covetousness, or the inordinate love of worldly wealth; and accordingly, the devil lays a temptation before him exactly suited to his temper and inclination, and it instantly overcame him. Learn hence, That persons are never in such imminent danger of falling into sin, as when they meet with temptations exactly suited to their master lusts. O, pray we, that God would keep us from temptations suited to our predominant lust and corruption. Observe, 3. The treason of Judas; He led on an armed multitude to the place where Christ was, gave them a signal to discover him by, and bids them lay hands upon him, and hold him fast; which treason of Judas was attended with these black and hellish aggravations; he had been a witness of our Saviour's miracles and hearer of our Lord's doctrines: what he did was not by solicitation; the chief priests did not send to him, but he went to them. Lord! how dangerous it is to allow ourselves in any secret sin. None can say, how far that one sin may in time lead us. Should any one have told Judas, that his covetousness would at last make him deny his Lord, and sell his Saviour; he would have said, with Hazael, Is thy servant a dog, that I should do this thing? Observe, 4. The endeavour made by the disciples for their Master's rescue. One of them (St. Matthew says it was St. Peter) drew a sword, and cut off the ear of Malchus: but why not the ear of Judas rather? Because, though Judas was most faulty, yet Malchus might be most forward to arrest and carry off our Saviour. O how does a pious breast boil with indignation at the sight of any open affront offered to its Saviour! Yet, though St. Peter's heart was sincere, his hand was too rash; good intentions are no warrant for irregular actions; and accordingly, Christ, who accepted the affection, reproved the action. To resist authority, even in Christ's own defence, is rash zeal, and discountenanced by the gospel. Peter did well to ask his Master, If he should smite with the sword? but he ought to have stayed his hand till Christ had given him his answer: However, Peter's sin occasioned a miracle from our Saviour; Christ heals that ear miraculously, which Peter cut off unwarrantably; yet the sight of this miracle converted none. O how insufficient are all outward means of conversion, without the Spirit's inward operation!

54 ¶ Then they took him, and led him, and brought him into the highpriest's house. And Peter followed afar off.

55 And when they had kindled a fire in the midst of the hall, and were sat down together, Peter sat down among them.

56 But a certain maid beheld him as he sat by the fire, and earnestly looked upon him, and said, this man was also with him.

57 And he denied him, saying, Woman, I know him not.

58 And after a little while another saw him, and said, Thou art also of them. And Peter said, Man, I am not.

59 And about the space of one hour after, another confidently affirmed, saying, Of a truth, this fellow also was with him; for he is a Galilean.

60 And Peter said, Man, I know not what thou sayest. And immediately, while he yet spake, the cock crew.

61 And the Lord turned, and looked upon Peter; and Peter remembered the word of the Lord; how he had said unto him, Before the cock crew, thou shalt deny me thrice.

62 And Peter went out, and wept bitterly.

This paragraph of the chapter gives us an account of the fall and rising of Peter: of his sin in denying his Master, and of his recovery by repentance; both must be considered distinctly. First, Touching his sin and fall; there are four particulars observable relating thereunto; namely, the sin itself, the occasion of that sin, the reiteration and repetition of it, and the aggravating circumstances attending it. Observe, 1. The sin itself, the denial of Christ Jesus, his Lord and Master, I know not the man; and this backed with an oath, he sware that he knew him not. Lord! how may the slavish fear of suffering drive the holiest and best of men to commit the foulest and worst of sins! Observe, 2. The occasions leading to this sin, and they were these: First, His following Christ afar off; to follow Christ was the effect of Peter's faith, but to follow him afar off at this time, was the fruit of fear, and the effect of frailty. Woe unto us when temptation comes, if we be far from Christ's gracious presence and assistance. 2. His being in bad company, amongst Christ's enemies: would we escape temptation to sin, we must decline such company as would allure and draw us into sin. Peter had better have been a cold by himself alone, than warming himself at a fire, which was encompassed in with the blasphemies of the multitude, where his conscience, though not seared, was yet made hard. Another grand occasion of Peter's falling was a presumptuous confidence of his own strength and standing: Though all men forsake thee, yet will not I. O Lord! to presume upon ourselves is the ready way to provoke thee to leave us to ourselves; if ever we stand in the day of trial, it is the fear of falling must enable us to stand. We soon fall, if we believe it impossible to fall. Observe, 3. The reiteration and repetition of this sin, he denied Christ again and again; he denies him first with a lie, then with an oath, and next with a curse. Lord! how dangerous is it not to resist the first beginnings of sin! If we yield to one temptation, Satan will assault us with more and stronger. Peter proceeded from a denial to a lie; from a lie to an oath; from an oath to an imprecation and curse. It is our wisdom vigorously to resist sin at the beginning: for then have we most power, and sin has least. Observe, 4. The heinous and aggravating circumstances of St. Peter's sin, and they are these: 1. The character of his person, a disciple, an apostle, a chief apostle, a special favorite, who, with James and John, had the special honor to be with Christ at his transfiguration: yet he denies Christ. 2. The person whom he denies, his Master, his Saviour and Redeemer. He that in great humility had washed Peter's feet, had ate the passover with Peter, had given but just before the holy sacrament to Peter, yet is this kind and condescending Saviour denied by Peter. 3. Consider the persons before whom he denied Christ; the chief priest's servants. O how surprising, and yet very pleasing, was it to them, to see one disciple betray and sell his Master, and another disown and deny him! 4. Consider the time when he denied him: it was but a few hours after he had received the holy sacrament from Christ's own hands; how unreasonable then is their objecting against coming to the Lord's table—that some who go to it, dishonor Christ as soon as they come from it; such examples ought not to discourage us from coming to the ordinance, but should excite and increase our watchfulness after we have been there, that our after-deportment may be suitable to the solemnity of a sacramental table. Observe, 5. That a small temptation he lay under thus shamefully to deny his Lord and Master: a damsel only, at first, spake to him. Had a band of armed soldiers appeared to him, and apprehended him; had he been bound and led away to the judgment-hall, and there threatened with the sentence of an ignominious death, some excuse might have been made better for him: but to disown his relation to Christ, upon a word spoken by a sorry maid that kept the door, the smallness of the temptation was a high aggravation of the crime. Ah, Peter, how little didst thou answer thy name at this time! Thou art not now a rock, but a reed, a pillar blown down by a woman's breath. O frail humanity, whose strength is weakness and infirmity! Note here, That in most of the saints' falls recorded in scripture, the first inticers to sin, or the accidental occasions of it, were women; witness (besides the first fall, that of Adam's, where the woman was first in the transgression) the fall of Lot, Samson, David, Solomon, and Peter; these are sad instances of the truth of what I speak. A weak creature may be a strong tempter; nothing is too impotent or useless for the devil's service; it was a great aggravation of Peter's sin, that the voice of a poor maid that kept the door, should be of more force to overcome him, than his faith in Jesus to sustain him. But what shall we say! small things are sufficient to cast us down, if God doth not hold us up; we sink under any burthen, if God sustains us not; and yield to the least temptation, if he leaves us to ourselves; a damsel shall then make a disciple shriek; and a door-keeper shall be able to drive an apostle before her. This is the account, in short, of St. Peter's fall, considered in itself, and with the circumstances relating to it. Now follows his recovery and rising again by repentance; and here we have observable, The suddenness, the means, and the manner of his repentance. Observe, 1. The suddenness of St. Peter's repentance; as his sin was sad, so was his repentance speedy; sin committed by surprise, and through the prevalence of a temptation that suddenly assaults us, is much sooner repented of, than where the sin is presumptuous and deliberate. David's murder and adultery were deliberate acts of sin, in which he lay almost twelve months, without any solemn repentance for them. St. Peter's denial was hasty and sudden, under a violent pang and passion of fear, and he takes the warning of the cock's crowing, to go forth speedily and weep for his transgression.

Observe, 2. The means of his repentance, which was twofold; the less principal means, was the crowing of the cock; the more principal means, were Christ's looking upon Peter, and Peter's remembering the words of Christ.

1. The less principal means of St. Peter's rising and recovering by repentance, "the crowing of the cock;" as the voice of the maid occasioned him to sin, so the voice of the cock occasioned him to reflect. That God who always can work without means, can ever, when he pleases, work by weak and contemptible means, and open the mouth of a bird or a beast for the conversion of a man. But why doth our Lord make use of the crowing of a cock, as a means of bringing St. Peter to repentance? There is ever some mystery in Christ's institutions and instruments; the cock was a preacher, to call St. Peter to his duty, there being something of emblem between a cock and a preacher; the preacher ought to have the wings of a cock, to rouse himself from drowsiness and security, and to awaken others to a sense of their duty; he must have the watchfulness of the cock, to be ever ready to discover and forewarn of danger: he must have the voice of a cock, to cry aloud, to tell Israel of their sin, to terrify the roaring lion of hell, and make him tremble, as they say the natural lion does; in a word, he must observe the hours of the cock, to crow at all seasons; to preach the word in season and out of season. Again, 2. The more principal means of St. Peter's recovery were, Christ's looking upon Peter, and Peter's remembering the words of Christ. 1. Christ's looking upon Peter: our Saviour looked upon Peter before either Peter looked upon our Saviour, or upon himself. O wonderful act of love and grace towards this fallen disciple! Christ was now upon his trial for his life (a time when our thoughts would have been wholly taken up about ourselves) but even then did Christ find leisure to think upon Peter, to remember his disconsolate disciple, to turn himself about, and give him a pitiful, but piercing look, even a look that melted and dissolved him into tears. We never begin to lament our sins till we are first lamented by our Saviour; Jesus looked upon Peter, that was the first more principal means of his repentance. But, 2. The other means was Peter's remembering the words of the Lord, Before the cock crow thou shalt deny me. Now this remembrance was an applicative and feeling remembrance; he remembered the prediction of Christ, and applied it sensibly to himself; teaching us, That the efficacy of Christ's word, in order to sound repentance, depends not upon the historical remembrance of it, but upon the close application of it to every man's conscience. Observe, 3. The manner of St. Peter's repentance; it was secret, it was sincere, it was lasting, and abiding. 1. It was secret; he went out and wept, Vere dolet, qui sine teste dolet; he sought a place of retirement, where he might mourn in secret; solitariness is most agreeable to an afflicted spirit; yet must I add, that as St. Peter's sorrow, so probably his shame, might cause him to go forth and weep. Christ looked upon him, and how ashamed must he be to look upon Christ, seeing he had so lately denied he had ever seen him? 2. St. Peter's repentance was sincere: he wept bitterly; his grief was extraordinary, and tears abundant; there is always a weeping that must follow sin; sin must cost the soul sorrow, either here or in hell; we must now either mourn awhile, or lament for ever. Doubtless St. Peter's tears were joined with hearty confessions of sin to God, and smart reflections upon himself, after this manner; "Lord! what have I done? I, a disciple, I, as apostle, I that did so lately acknowledge my Master to be Christ the Lord, I that spoke with so much assurance—Though all men deny thee, yet will not I; I that promised to lay down my life for his sake; yet have I denied him, yet have I, with oaths and imprecations, disowned him, and this at the voice of a damsel, not at the sight of a drawn sword presented at my breast. Lord! what weakness, what wickedness, what unfaithfulness, have I been guilty of! O that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep all my days for the fault of this one night!"—Thus may we suppose our lapsed apostle to have bemoaned himself; and happy was it for him, that he did so; for blessed are the tears of a converted revolter, and happy is the misery of a mourning offender. Observe, 3. St. Peter's repentance was not only secret and sincere, but lasting and abiding; he retained a very quick sense and lively remembrance of this sin upon his mind all his life after. Ecclesiastical history reports, that ever after, when St. Peter heard the crowing of the cock, he fell upon his knees and wept: others say, that he has wont to rise at midnight, and spent his time in prayer and humiliation, between cock-crowing and day-light: and the papists, who delight to turn every thing into folly and superstition, first began that practice of setting up what we call weather-cocks, upon towers and steeples, to put people in mind of St. Peter's fall and repentance by that signal. Lastly, St. Peter's repentance was an extraordinary zeal and forwardness for the service of Christ, to the end of his days. He had a burning love towards the holy Jesus ever after, which is now improved into a seraphic flame; Lord, thou knowest all things; thou knowest that I love thee, says he himself, John xxi. 17. And as an evidence of it, he fed Christ's sheep; for, in the Acts of the Apostles, we read of his extraordinary diligence to spread the gospel, and his travels in order thereunto are computed by some to be nine hundred and fifty miles. To end all, Have any of us fallen with Peter, though not with a formal abjuration, yet by a practical denying of him? let us go forth and weep with him; let us be more vigilant and watchful over ourselves for the time to come; let us express more fervent love and zeal for Christ, more diligence in his service, more concernedness for his honor and glory: this would be a happy improvement of his example: God grant it may have that blessed effect!

63 ¶ And the men that held Jesus, mocked him, and smote him.

64 And when they had blindfolded him, they struck him on the face, and asked him, saying, Prophecy, who is it that smote thee?

65 And many other things blasphemously spake they against him.

Observe here, The vile affronts, the horrid abuses, the injuries and indignities, which were put upon the holy and innocent Jesus in the day of his suffering; the rude officers and servants spit in his face, blindfolded his eyes, smote him with their hands, and, in contempt and scorn, bid him prophecy who it was that smote him. Verily, there is no degree of contempt, no mark of shame, no kind of suffering, which we ought to decline for Christ's sake, who hid not his face from shame and spitting, upon our account.

66 ¶ And as soon as it was day, the elders of the people, and the chief priests, and the scribes, came together, and led him into their council.

67 Saying, Art thou the Christ? tell us. And he said unto them, If I tell you, you will not believe:

68 And if I also ask you, you will not answer me, nor let me go.

69 Hereafter shall the Son of man sit on the right hand of the power of God.

70 Then said they all, Art thou then the Son of God? And he said unto them, Ye say that I am.

71 And they said, What need we any further witness? for we ourselves have heard of his own mouth.

Observe here, 1. Christ was judged and tried before a court that had no authority to judge or try him, ver, 66 They led him into their council. This was their great sanhedrim, or ecclesiastical court, which, according to its first constitution, was to consist of seventy grave, honorable, and learned men, who were to judge impartially for God, according to Numb. xi. 16. But this alas! consisted of a malicious pack of scribes and pharisees, men full of malice and revenge, and over these Caiaphas now presided; a head fit for such a body: but though there was, at our Saviour's trial, a face of a court amongst them, yet their power was much abridged by the Romans; so that they could not hear nor determine, neither judge nor condemn, in capital matters. Observe next, The indictment of blasphemy is brought in against him; What need we any further witness? we have heard his blasphemy. Abominable wickedness! It is not in the power of the greatest and most unspotted innocence to protect from slander and false accusation. Observe farther, The great meekness of our Saviour under all these ill suggestions, and false accusations: as a lamb before the shearer, so is he dumb, and opened not his mouth. Learn thence, That to bear the revilings, contradictions, and false accusations of men, with a silent and submissive spirit, is an excellent and Christ-like temper. Though a trial for his innocent life was now managed most maliciously and illegally against him, yet, when he was reviled, he reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not. O may the same meek and humble mind be in us, which was also in Christ Jesus, who, instead of reviling his accusers, prayed for his murderers, and offered up his blood to God on the behalf of them that shed it!

Lord Jesus, help us to set up thy instructive example continually before us, and to be daily correcting and reforming our lives by that blessed pattern. Amen.

CHAPTER XXIII.

AND the whole multitude of them arose, and led him unto Pilate.

2 And they began to accuse him, saying, we found this fellow perverting the nation, and forbidding to give tribute to Cæsar, saying, that he himself is Christ, a king.

3 And Pilate asked him, saying, Art thou the King of the Jews? and he answered him, and said, thou sayest it.

4 Then said Pilate to the chief priests, and to the people, I find no fault in this man.

5 And they were the more fierce, saying, he stirreth up the people, teaching throughout all Jewry, beginning from Galilee to this place.

6 When Pilate heard of Galilee, he asked whether the man were a Galilean.

7 And as soon as he knew that he belonged unto Herod's jurisdiction, he sent him to Herod, who himself was also at Jerusalem at that time.

8 ¶ And when Herod saw Jesus, he was exceeding glad: for he was desirous to see him of a long season, because he had heard many things of him: and he hoped to have seen some miracle done by him.

9 Then he questioned with him in many words; but he answered him nothing.

10 And the chief priests and scribes stood and vehemently accused him.

11 And Herod with his men of war set him at nought, and mocked him, and arrayed him in a gorgeous robe, and sent him again to Pilate.

12 ¶ And the same day Pilate and Herod were made friends together; for before they were at enmity between themselves.

(No. 22.)

In this chapter we have a relation of the blackest and saddest tragedy that ever was acted upon the stage of the world, namely, the barbarous and bloody murder of the holy and innocent Jesus, by the Jews, his own countrymen; the best of kings put to death by his own subjects. And the first step towards it is his arraignment before Pilate and Herod; they post him from one to another; Pilate sends him to Herod; and Herod having made sufficient sport with him remands him to Pilate; neither of them would release him. Here observe, that our Saviour, being before Pilate, answers him readily and cautiously; Art thou the king of the Jews? says Pilate. Thou sayest it, says our Saviour. Art thou the Christ, the Son of the Blessed? He replied, I am. Hence says the apostle, 1 Tim. vi. 13. "That Jesus Christ before Pontius Pilate witnessed a good confession." Teaching us that though we may, and sometimes ought, to hold our peace, when our reputation is concerned, yet we must never be silent, when the honor of God and his truth may be effectually promoted by a free and full confession; yet it is farther observable, that our Saviour being before Herod, would neither answer him to any question, nor work any miracle before him. This was an instance and evidence of our Lord's great humility, in refusing to work miracles before Herod, who desired it only to gratify his curiosity. Thus do vile men abuse the power of God, desiring to see it exerted for admiration and pastime; not to be convinced or converted by it, but only to please their foolish fancy. And as admirable was the patience and humility of Christ, and his present silence, who neither at Herod's request, nor at the Jews' importunity and false accusations, could be moved to answer any thing. Observe farther, That though Herod had murdered Christ's forerunner John the Baptist, and our Saviour's own life was in danger by Herod heretofore, yet now he has him in his hands, he lets him go; only he first abuses him, and mocks him, and arrays him in a gorgeous robe, like a mock-king. Thus were all the marks of scorn imaginable put upon our dear Redeemer; yet all this jeering and sportful shame did our Lord undergo, to show what was due unto us for our sins; and also to give us an example to bear all the shame and reproach imaginable for his sake; who, "for the joy that was set before him, despised the shame." Heb. xii. 2. Observe lastly, The wicked accusation brought in against our blessed Redeemer; "We found (say they) this fellow-perverting the nation, forbidding to give tribute to Cæsar." O hellish untruth! how directly contrary to the whole course and tenor of Christ's life was this accusation! By his doctrine he preached up subjection to governors and government; saying, Render to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's. And by his practice he confirmed his own doctrine, working a miracle to pay tribute to Cæsar. Satan could help them to draw up an indictment as black as hell against the innocent Jesus, but all the powers of hell and darkness could not prove a tittle of it.

13 ¶ And Pilate, when he had called together the chief priests, and the rulers, and the people.

14 Said unto them, Ye have brought this man unto me, as one that perverteth the people : and, behold, I, having examined him before you, have found no fault in this man, touching those things whereof you accuse him :

15 No, nor yet Herod : for I sent you to him ; and lo, nothing worthy of death is done unto him :

16 I will therefore chastise him, and release him.

17 (For of necessity he must release one unto them at the feast.)

18 And they cried out all at once, saying, Away with this man, and release unto us Barabbas :

19 (Who for a certain sedition made in the city, and for murder, was cast into prison :)

20 Pilate, therefore, willing to release Jesus, spake again to them.

21 But they cried, saying, Crucify him, crucify him.

22 And he said unto them, the third time, Why what evil hath he done ? I have found no cause of death in him ; I will therefore chastise him, and let him go.

23 And they were instant with loud voices, requiring that he might be crucified : and the voices of them and of the chief priests prevailed.

24 And Pilate gave sentence that it should be as they required.

25 And he released unto them him that for sedition and murder was cast into prison, whom they had desired : but he delivered Jesus to their will.

Observe here, 1. How unwilling, how very unwilling Pilate was to be an instrument of our Saviour's death ; one while he expostulates with the chief priests, saying, What evil hath he done ? Nay, St. Luke declares, Pilate came forth three several times, professing that he found no fault in him. Where note, How much more justice and equity Christ met with from Pilate, an heathen, than from the chief priests and people of the Jews, professing the true religion ! O how desperate is the hatred that grows upon the roof of religion ! Learn hence, That hypocrites within the church may be guilty of such tremendous acts of wickedness, as the consciences of infidels and pagans without the church may boggle at, and protest against. Pilate, a pagan, absolves Christ, whilst the hypocritical Jews, that heard his doctrine, and saw his miracles, do condemn him. Observe, 2. How Pilate at last suffers himself to be overcome with the importunity of the Jews, and delivers the holy and innocent Jesus, contrary to his judgment and conscience, to the will of his murderers. It is a vain apology for sin when persons pretend that they are not committed with their own consent, but at the instigation and importunity of others ; for such is the frame and constitution of man's soul, that none can make a person wicked without his own consent ; it was no extenuation of Pilate's sin, no alleviation of his punishment, that, to please the people, he delivered our Saviour, contrary to the directions of his own conscience, to be crucified. Observe, 3. The person whose life the wicked Jews preferred before the life of the holy Jesus, Barabbas : " We will that thou release Barabbas, and deliver Jesus." Mark these hypocritical highpriests, who pretended such zeal for God and religion ; they prefer the life of a person guilty of the highest immoralities and debaucheries, even murder and sedition, before the best man that ever lived in the world. But whence sprang the malice and hatred of the highpriests and of the Jews against our Saviour ? Why plainly from hence, Christ interpreted the law of God more strictly than their lusts can bear ; and he lived a more holy, useful, and excellent life, than they could endure. Now, nothing enrages the men of the world more against the professors, but especially the preachers of the gospel, than holiness of doctrine, and strictness of life and conversation. Such as preach and live well, let them expect such enmity and opposition, such malice and persecution, such sufferings and trials, as will shock an ordinary patience and constancy of mind. Our Master met with it, let his zealous ministers prepare for it.

26 And as they led him away, they laid hold upon one Simon, a Cyrenian, coming out of the country, and on him they laid the cross, that he might bear it after Jesus.

The sentence of death being passed by Pilate, who can with dry eyes behold the sad pomp of our Saviour's execution ? Forth comes the blessed Jesus out of Pilate's gates, bearing that cross which soon after was to bear him. With his cross on his shoulder, he marches towards Golgotha ; and when they see he can go no faster, they compel Simon of Cyrenia, not out of compassion, but indignation to bear his cross : this Cyrenian being a Gentile who bore Christ's cross, some think thereby was signified, that the Gentiles should have a part in Christ, as well as the Jews, and be sharers with them in the benefits of the cross.

27 ¶ And there followed him a great company of people, and of women, which also bewailed and lamented him.

28 But Jesus turning unto them, said, Daughters of Jerusalem, weep not for me, but weep for yourselves and for your children.

29 For behold, the days are coming, in the which they shall say, Blessed are the barren, and the wombs that never bare, and the paps that never gave suck.

30 Then shall they begin to say to the mountains, Fall on us: and to the hills, Cover us.

31 For if they do these things in a green tree, what shall be done in the dry?

There were four sorts of persons which attended our Saviour at his crucifixion; the executioners that tormented him, the Jews that mocked him, the spectators and lookers on that marked him, and sympathizing friends which lamented him; these last Christ thus bespoke, Weep not for me, but for yourselves; that is, Weep rather upon your own account than mine: reserve your sorrows for the calamities coming upon yourselves and your children. It is very probable, that the tears and lamentations of many of these mourners were but the fruits of tender nature, not the effects of faith, and flowing from a principle of grace. Learn thence, that melting affections and sorrows, even from the sense of Christ's sufferings, are not infallible marks of grace. The history of Christ's sufferings is very tragical and pathetic, and may melt ingenuous nature, where there is no renewed principle of grace. These motions of the affections may rather be a fit and mood, than the very frame and temper of the soul.— There are times and seasons when the roughest and most obdurate hearts may be pensive and tender: but that is not its temper and frame, but only a fit, a pang, a transient passion. There is no inferring or concluding then a work of grace upon the heart, simply and barely from the movings or meltings of the affections. Nature will have its good moods, but grace is steady. "Daughters of Jerusalem, weep not for me," says Christ, 32 And there were also two other malefactors led with him to be put to death.

33 And when they were come to the place, which is called Calvary, there they crucified him, and the malefactors: one on the right hand, and the other on the left.

Here we see the infamous company that our holy Lord suffered with, two thieves; it had been a sufficient disparagement to our blessed Saviour, to be sorted with the best of men; but to be numbered with the scum of mankind, is such an indignity as confounds our thoughts: this was designed by the Jews to dishonor and disgrace our Saviour the more; and to persuade the world, that he was the greatest of offenders; but God overruled this, for fulfilling an ancient prophecy concerning the Messiah. Isa. liii. 12. "And he was numbered with the transgressors."

34 ¶ Then said Jesus, Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do. And they parted his raiment, and cast lots.

Christ had often preached the doctrine of forgiving enemies, and praying for them; he practises it here himself in a most exemplary manner. Where note, 1. The mercy desired and prayed for; and that is, Forgiveness. 2. The person desiring that mercy, Christ, the dying Jesus. 3. The persons for whom it is desired, his bloody murderers: Father, forgive them. 4. The argument used, or motive urged, to procure this mercy; Forgive them, for they know not what they do. Learn hence, 1. That ignorance is the usual cause of enmity against Christ. 2. That there is forgiveness with God for such as oppose, yea persecute Christ out of ignorance. 3. That to forgive enemies, and to beg forgiveness for them, is an evidence of a Christ-like frame of Spirit; Father, forgive them; not that the gospel requires of us an insensibility of wrongs and injuries: that allows us a sense of offered evils, though it forbids us to revenge them; yet the more tender our resentments are, the more excellent our forgiveness is; so that a forgiving spirit doth not exclude the sense of injuries; but the sense of injuries graces the forgiveness of them; neither doth the gospel require us, under the notion of forgiving injuries, to deliver up our rights and properties to the lusts of every one that will invade them, but meekly to receive evil, and readily to return good.

35 And the people stood beholding: and the rulers also with them derided him, saying, He saved others; let him save himself, if he be Christ the chosen of God.

36 And the soldiers also mocked him, coming to him and offering him vinegar.

37 And saying, If thou be the King of the Jews, save thyself.

38 And a superscription also was written over him, in letters of Greek, and Latin, and Hebrew, THIS IS THE KING OF THE JEWS.

Observe here, 1. A mighty aggravation of our Lord's sufferings upon the cross; namely, the mocking derision which he met with in his dying moments. As he endured the pain, so he despised the shame; cruel mockings was our Lord tried with, both from the common people and from the chief priests; yet the common people's reviling him, and wagging their heads at him, was not so much to be taken notice of, as the chief priests, who were men of age and gravity, and the ministers of religion; for them barbarously to mock him in his misery, and, which was worse, atheistically to jeer and scoff at his faith and assurance in God, saying, "He trusted in God that he would deliver him, let him deliver him, if he will have him." This was such an indignity as confounds our thoughts. But from hence we learn, 1. That persecutors are generally atheistical scoffers; the chief priests and elders, who persecuted Christ, do blaspheme God; they mock at his power, and deride his providence, which was as wicked as to deny his being. 2. We learn from this example, that such as minister to God in holy things, by way of office, if they be not the best, they are generally the worst of men; no such bitter enemies to the power of godliness, as such preachers who were never experimentally acquainted with the efficacy and power of it upon their own hearts and lives. Observe, 2. The inscription wrote by Pilate over our suffering Saviour, This is Jesus the King of the Jews. It was the custom of the Romans, when they crucified a malefactor, to publish the cause of his death in capital letters, placed over the head of the person. Now it is observable, how wonderfully the wisdom of God overruled the heart and pen of Pilate, to draw this title, which was truly honorable, and fix it to his cross. Pilate is Christ's herald, and proclaims him King of the Jews. Learn hence, That the kingship and regal dignity of Christ was proclaimed by an enemy, and that in a time of his greatest sufferings and reproaches. Pilate, without his knowledge, did our Saviour an eminent piece of service; verily, he did that for Christ which none of his own disciples durst do; not that he did it designedly, and with an intent to put honor upon Christ, but from the special overruling providence of God; no thanks to Pilate for all this, because the highest services performed for Christ undesignedly, shall never be accepted nor rewarded by him.

39 ¶ And one of the malefactors, which were hanged, railed on him, saying, If thou be Christ, save thyself, and us.

40 But the other answering, rebuked him, saying, Dost thou not fear God, seeing thou art in the same condemnation?

41 And we indeed justly: for we receive the due reward of our deeds; but this man hath done nothing amiss.

42 And he said unto Jesus, Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom.

Here we have a farther aggravation of our Lord's sufferings upon the cross, from the company he suffered with, the two thieves, who reviled him with the rest. St. Matthew and St. Mark say, They both reviled him; St. Luke says, one of them reviled; possibly both of them might do it at first, and one of them repent; which, if so, increases the wonder of the penitent thief's conversion. From the impenitent thief's reviling of Christ, when he was at the very point of death, and even in the suburbs of hell, we learn, that neither shame nor pain will change the mind of a resolute sinner; but even then, when he is in the suburbs of hell, will he blaspheme. From the penitent thief's confession of Christ, and praying to him, "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom," we learn, both the efficacy and freeness of divine grace. 1. The efficacious power of it: O how powerful must that grace be, which wrought such a change in an instant, which supplied that heart in a moment, which had been hardening in sin for so many years! 2. The freeness of it; which takes hold his heart, when he was at the height of sin, and was not only void of grace, but seemed past grace. O the powerful efficacy, and adorable freeness, of the heart-changing grace of God in this vile person! it disposed him to own his sin, to confess the justness of his punishment, to justify Christ's innocency, to reprove his fellow companion, to pray to a crucified Christ, and to intercede with him, not for present deliverance from death, but for a place in Christ's kingdom. Where we learn, 1. That true conversion is never too late for obtaining mercy and salvation. 2. That true conversion, how late soever, will have its fruits; the fore-mentioned fruits of faith and repentance were found with this penitent thief; yet must not this extraordinary case be drawn into example; this extraordinary and miraculous grace of God is not to be expected ordinarily: we have no warrant to expect an overpowering degree of God's grace, to turn our hearts in an instant at the hour of death, when we have lived in forgetfulness of God, and in a supine neglect of our soul's concerns, all the days of our life; for it is evident as to this case of the penitent thief's conversion at the last hour. 1. It is an example without a promise. 2. It is but a single example. 3. It is an example recorded but by one Evangelist; the Spirit of God foreseeing what an ill use some would make of this instance, leaves one example upon record, that none might despair; and but one, that none might presume. 4. This thief probably had never any knowledge of Christ before. 5. This thief improved his time at last as never did any before or after: for he believed Christ to be the Saviour of the world, when one disciple had betrayed, another denied him, and all had forsaken him; he owned him to be the Son of God, the Lord of Life, when he was suffering the pains of death, and seemingly deserted by his Father; he proclaims him Lord of Paradise, and Disposer of the kingdom of heaven, when the Jews had condemned him, and the Gentiles crucified him, as the vilest of impostors. He feared God, owned the justice of his punishment, was solicitous, not for the preservation of his body, but for the salvation of his soul; yea, not of his own only, but of his brother's that suffered with him; so that he glorified Christ more at the moment of his death, than some do in the whole course of their lives. 6. This was a miracle, with the glory whereof Christ would honor the ignominy of his cross; so that we have no more ground to expect such another conversion, than we have to expect a second crucifixion. This converted person was the first-fruits of the blood of the cross.— From whence we may learn, That God can, and sometimes doth, though very seldom, prepare men for glory, immediately before their dissolution by death. His grace is his own, he may dispense it how, and when, where, and to whom he pleases; yet this is no more warrant to neglect the ordinary, because God doth sometimes manifest his grace in an extraordinary way. True, in this conversion we have a pattern of what free grace can do; but it is a pattern without a promise; where we have not a promise to encourage our hope, our hope is nothing but presumption.

43 And Jesus said unto him, Verily I say unto thee, To day shalt thou be with me in Paradise.

These words are our Saviour's gracious answer to the penitent thief's humble prayer, Lord, remember me in thy kingdom, says the thief; To-day shalt thou be with me in my kingdom, says our Saviour: where note, 1. The immortality of the souls of men is without all doubt; our desires after and hopes for immortality do prove our souls immortal, and capable of that state. The souls of men die with their bodies, but remain in a state of sensibility. 2. That there is a future and eternal state, into which souls pass at death. Death is our passage out of the swift river of time, into the boundless and bottomless ocean of eternity. 3. That the souls of all the righteous at death are immediately received into a state of happiness and glory; This day shalt thou be with me; not after thy resurrection, but immediately after thy dissolution. That man's soul is asleep, or worse, that dreams of the soul's sleeping till the resurrection; for why should the believers' happiness be deferred, when they are immediately capable of enjoying it? Why should their salvation slumber, when the wicked's damnation slumbereth not? How do such delays consist with Christ's ardent desires, and his people's vehement longing to be together?

44 And it was about the sixth hour, and there was a darkness over all the earth until the ninth hour.

45 And the sun was darkened, and the veil of the temple was rent in the midst.

46 ¶ And when Jesus had cried with a loud voice, he said, Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit; and having said thus, he gave up the Ghost.

47 Now when the centurion saw what was done, he glorified God, saying, Certainly this was a righteous man.

48 And all the people that came together to that sight, beholding the things which were done, smote their breasts, and returned.

49 And all his acquaintance, and the women that followed him from Galilee, stood afar off beholding these things.

Observe here, 1. What prodigies in nature happened and fell out at the crucifixion of our Saviour; the sun was darkened at the setting of the Sun of Righteousness; and the veil of the temple was rent; signifying that God was now about to forsake his temple; that the ceremonial law was now abolishing, and the partition wall betwixt Jew and Gentile being now pulled down, all may have access to God through the blood of a mediator. Observe, 2. The last prayer of our Saviour before his death, Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit; they are words full of faith and comfort, fit to be the last breathings of every gracious soul in this world.—Learn, hence, That dying believers are both warranted and encouraged by Christ's example, belie-vingly to commend their precious souls into the hands of God, as a gracious Father, Father, into thy hands. Observe, 3. What influence our Saviour's death had upon the Centurion. He glorified God, saying, Verily this was a righteous man. Here note, That Christ had a testimony of his innocence and righteousness given unto him from all sorts of persons whatsoever; Pilate and Herod pronounced him innocent; Pilate's wife proclaimed him a righteous person; Judas, the traitor, declared it was innocent blood; the thief on the cross affirmed he had done nothing amiss; and the centurion owned him to be a righteous man: yea, the Son of God, Mark xv. 39. Only the pharisees and chief priests, which were teachers of others; not ignorance, but obstinacy and malice, blinded and hardened them to their ruin and destruction: instead of owning and receiving him for their Saviour, they ignominiously put him to death as the vilest impostor.

(No. 22.)

50 ¶ And behold, there was a man named Joseph, a counsellor, and he was a good man, and a just;

51 (The same had not consented to the counsel and deed of them) he was of Arimathea, a city of the Jews (who also himself waited for the kingdom of God.)

52 This man went unto Pilate, and begged the body of Jesus.

53 And he took it down, and wrapped it in linen, and laid it in a sepulchre that was hewn in stone, wherein never man before was laid.

54 And that day was the preparation, and the sabbath drew on.

55 And the women also, which came with him from Galilee, followed after, and beheld the sepulchre, and how his body was laid.

56 And they returned, and prepared spices and ointments: and rested the sabbath-day, according to the commandment.

The circumstances of our Lord's funeral and honorable interment are here recorded by our Evangelist; such a funeral as never was since graves were first digged.—Where observe, 1. Our Lord's body must be begged before it could be buried; the dead bodies of malefactors being in the power and at the disposal of the judge that condemns them. Observe, 2. The person that begged his body, and bestowed a decent and honorable burial upon it; Joseph of Arimathea, a worthy, though a close disciple. Grace doth not always make a public and open show where it is; but as there is much secret treasure in the bowels of the earth, though unseen, so is there much grace in the hearts of some saints, which the world takes little notice of. Observe, 2. The mourners that followed our Saviour's hearse to the grave; the women which came out of Galilee; a poor train of mourners: the apostles, who should have been most officious to bear his holy body to the ground, were some time since all scattered, afraid to own their Master, either dying or dead. Funeral pomp had been no way suitable, either to the end or manner of our Lord's death, and accordingly here is nothing like it. Observe, 4. The grave or sepulchre in which our holy Lord lay; it was in a sepulchre hewn out of a rock; that so his enemies might have no occasion to say, that his disciples stole him away by secret holes, and unseen passages under ground; it was in a new sepulchre, wherein never man was laid before, lest his adversaries should say, it was another that was risen who was buried there before him. And he was buried in a garden: as, by the sin of the first Adam, we were driven out of the garden of pleasure, the earthly paradise, so by the sufferings of the second Adam, who lay buried in a garden, we may hope for entrance into the heavenly paradise. Observe, 5. The manner of our Lord's funeral: it was hasty, open, and decent. Hasty, because of the preparation for the sabbath: open, that all persons might be spectators, and none might say, he was buried before he was dead; decent, being wrapt up in fine linen, and perfumed with spices. Observe, 6. The reason why our Lord was thus buried, seeing he was to rise again in as short a time as other men lie by the walls; doubtless it was to declare the certainty of his death, to fulfil the types and prophecies which went before him; "As Jonah's being three days and three nights in the whale's belly." He was also buried to complete his humiliation: this was the lowest step to which he could descend in his abased state. In a word, Christ descended into the grave, that he might conquer death in its own territories and dominions. Observe, 7. Of what use our Lord's burial is to his followers: it shows us the amazing depths of his humiliation; from what, and to what, his love brought him, even from the bosom of his Father to the bosom of the grave. It may comfort us against the fears of death, and the terrors of the grave: the grave could not long keep Christ, it shall not always keep christians; it was a loathsome prison before, it is a perfumed bed now; he whose head is in heaven, need not fear to put his feet into the grave. Awake and sing, thou that dwellest in the dust, for the enmity of the grave is slain by Christ.

CHAPTER XXIV.

The last chapter of St. Luke's gospel contains the history of our Saviour's resurrection, and gives us an account of what he did upon earth, between the time of his glorious resurrection and triumphant ascension.

NOW upon the first day of the week, very early in the morning, they came unto the sepulchre, bringing the spices which they had prepared, and certain others with him.

2 And they found the stone rolled away from the sepulchre.

3 And they entered in, and found not the body of the Lord Jesus.

4 And it came to pass, as they were much perplexed thereabout, behold two men stood by them in shining garments.

5 And as they were afraid, and bowed down their faces to the earth, they said unto them, Why seek ye the living among the dead?

6 He is not here, but is risen, Remember how he spake unto you when he was yet in Galilee,

7 Saying, The Son of man must be delivered into the hands of sinful men, and be crucified, and the third day rise again.

8 And they remembered his words;

9 And returned from the sepulchre, and told all these things unto the eleven, and to all the rest.

10 It was Mary Magdalene, and Joanna, and Mary the mother of James, and other women that were with them, which told these things unto the apostles.

11 And their words seemed to them as idle tales, and they believed them not.

12 Then arose Peter, and ran unto the sepulchre; and stooping down, he beheld the linen clothes laid by themselves, and departed, wondering in himself at that which was come to pass.

The Lord of life, who was put to death upon the Friday, was buried on the evening of the same day; and his holy body rested in the silent grave all the next day, being the Jewish sabbath, and some part of the morning following. Thus rose he again the third day, according to the scriptures, neither sooner nor later; not sooner, lest the truth of his death should have been questioned, that he did not die at all: nor later, lest the faith of his disciples should have failed. Accordingly, when the sabbath was passed, Mary Magdalene getting the other women together, she and they set out very early in the morning, to visit the holy sepulchre, and about sun-rising they got to it, intending with their spices and odors farther to embalm their Lord's body. Observe here, 1. That although the hearts of these holy women did burn with an ardent zeal and affection to their crucified Lord, yet the commanded duties of the sabbath are not omitted by them; they keep close, and silently spend that holy day in a mixture of grief and hope. A good pattern of sabbath-sanctification, and worthy of our imitation. Observe,

2. These holy women go, but not empty-handed; she that had bestowed a costly alabaster upon Christ, whilst alive, prepares no less precious odors for him now dead: thereby paying their last homage to our Saviour's corpse. But what need of odors to perfume a precious body, which could not see corruption? True, his holy body did not want them, but the love and affection of his friends could not withhold them. Observe, 3. How great a tribute of respect and honor is due and payable to the memory of these holy women, for their great magnanimity and courage: they followed Christ when his cowardly disciples left him: they accompanied him to his cross, they attended his hearse to the grave, when his disciples did not, durst not appear; and now, very early in the morning, they visit his sepulchre, fearing neither the darkness of the night, nor the presence of the watchmen, though a band of rude soldiers. Learn hence, that courage and resolution is the special gift of God: if he gives it to the feebler sex, even to timorous and fearful women, it shall not be in the power of armed men to make them afraid. But to a close consideration of the several circumstances relating to the resurrection of our holy Lord: Note, 1. With what pomp and triumph our holy Lord arises: two men, that is, two angels in the shape of men, ver. 4, "are sent from heaven to roll away the stone." But could not Christ have risen then without the angels' help? Yes, doubtless; he that raised himself, could easily have rolled away the stone himself; but God thinks fit to send an officer from heaven to open the prison door of the grave; and by setting our surely at liberty, proclaims our debt to the Divine Justice fully satisfied. Besides it was fit, that the angels, who had been witnesses of our Saviour's passion, should also be witnesses of his resurrection. Note, 2. Our Lord's resurrection declared, He is risen, he is not here. Almighty God never intended that the darling of his soul should be left in an obscure sepulchre. He is not here, said the angels, where you laid, where you left him; death has lost its prey, and the grave has lost its prisoner. Note, 3. It is not said, He is not here, for he is raised; but, he is risen, ver. 6. The original word imports the active power of Christ, or the self-quickening principle by which Christ raised himself from the dead, Acts i. 3. "He showed himself alive after his passion." Hence learn, That it was the divine nature, or god-head of Christ, which raised the human nature from death to life; others were raised from the grave by Christ's power, but he raised himself by his own power. Note, 4. The persons to whom our Lord's resurrection was first declared and made known: to women, to the two Marys. But why to women? And why to these women? To women first, because God sometimes makes choice of weak means for producing great effects, knowing that the weakness of the instrument redounds to the greater honor of the agent. In the whole dispensation of the gospel, God intermixes divine power with human weakness; thus the conception of Christ was by the power of the Holy Ghost, but his mother, a poor woman, a carpenter's spouse: so the crucifixion of Christ was in much meanness and outward baseness, being crucified between two thieves; but the powers of heaven and earth trembling, the rocks rending, the graves opening, showed a mixture of divine power. Thus here, God selects women to declare that he will honor what instruments he pleases for the accomplishment of his own purposes. But why to these women, the two Marys, is the first discovery made of our Lord's resurrection? Possibly it was a reward for their magnanimity and masculine courage. These women clave to Christ, when the apostles forsook him; they assisted at his cross, they attended at his funeral, they waited at his sepulchre; these women had more courage than the apostles, therefore God makes them apostles to the apostles. This was a tacit rebuke, a secret check, given to the apostles, that they should be thus outdone by women; these holy women went before the apostles in the last services that were done for Christ, and therefore the apostles here come after them in their rewards and comforts. Note, 5. The quick message which these holy women carry to the disconsolate disciples, of the joyful news of our Saviour's resurrection; they returned from the sepulchre, and told all these things to the eleven, ver. 9. And the other Evangelists say, That they were sent and bidden to go to the apostles, with the notices of the resurrection: Go tell the disciples, says the angel, Mat. xxviii. 7. Go tell my brethren, says Christ, ver. 10. a most endearing expression: Christ might have said, "Go tell my apostate apostles, my cowardly disciples, that left me in my danger, and durst not own me in the highpriest's hall, that durst not come within the shadow of my cross, nor within the sight of my sepulchre." But not one word of all this, by way of upbraiding them for their late shameful cowardice, but all words of divine indulgence, and of endearing kindness, Go tell my brethren. Where mark, That Christ calls them brethren after his resurrection and exaltation, thereby showing, that the change of his condition had wrought no change in his affection towards his poor disciples: but those that were his brethren before, in the time of his humiliation and abasement, are so still, after his exaltation and advancement: Go tell my brethren. One thing more must be noted with reference to our Lord's resurrection, and that is, why he did not first choose to appear to the Virgin Mary, his disconsolate mother, whose soul was pierced with a quick and lively sight and sense of her son's sufferings, but to Mary Magdalene, who had been a grievous sinner? Doubtless this was for the comfort of all true penitents, and administers great consolation to them; as the angels in heaven rejoice, much more doth Christ, in the recovery of one repenting sinner, than in multitudes of holy and just persons (such was the blessed virgin) who need no repentance: for the same reason did our Saviour particularly name Peter, Go tell my disciples, and Peter: he being, for his denial of Christ, swelled up with sorrow, and standing in most need of consolation; therefore speak particularly to Peter: as if Christ had said, "Be sure that his sad heart be comforted with this joyful news, that I am risen; and let him know that I am friends with him, notwithstanding his late cowardice."

13 ¶ And behold two of them went that same day to a village called Emmaus, which was from Jerusalem about three-score furlongs.

14 And they talked together of all these things which had happened.

15 And it came to pass, that while they communed together, and reasoned, Jesus himself drew near, and went with them.

16 But their eyes were holden, that they should not know him.

17 And he said unto them, What manner of communications are these that ye have one to another, as ye walk, and are sad?

18 And the one of them, whose name was Cleophas, answering, said unto him, Art thou only a stranger in Jerusalem, and hast not known the things which are come to pass there in these days?

19 And he said unto them, What things? And they said unto him, concerning Jesus of Nazareth which was a prophet mighty in deed and word before God, and all the people:

20 And how the chief priests and our rulers delivered him to be condemned to death, and have crucified him.

21 But we trusted that it had been he which should have redeemed Israel: and beside all this, to-day is the third day since these things were done.

22 Yea, and certain women also of our company made us astonished, which were early at the sepulchre:

23 And when they found not his body, they came, saying, that they had also seen a vision of angels, which said that he was alive.

24 And certain of them which were with us, went to the sepulchre, and found it even so as the women had said: but him they saw not.

Here we have observable, 1. The journey which two of the disciples took to Emmaus, a village not far from Jerusalem: the occasion of their journey is not told us, but the scripture acquaints us with their discourse in their journey, and as they were walking by the way: it was holy and useful, pious and profitable discourse; that they entertained one another with as they walked; they discoursed of Christ's death and resurrection: a good pattern for our imitation, when providentially cast into such company as will bear it; "That our tips drop as the honeycomb, and our tongue be as choice silver." Observe, 2. How our holy Lord presently made one in the company; when they were discoursing seriously about the matters of religion, he overtook them and joined himself to them: the way to have Christ's presence and company with us, is to be discoursing of Christ and the things of Christ. Observe, 3. Though Christ came to them, it was incognito; he was not known to them, for their eyes were holden by the power of God, their sight was restrained, that they could not discern who he was, but took him for another person, though his body had the same dimensions that he had before. Whence we learn, the influence which God has upon all our powers and faculties, upon all our members and senses, and how much we depend upon God for the use and exercise of our faculties and members. "Their eyes were holden that they could not know him." Observe, 4. That the notion of the Messiah being a temporal Saviour was so deeply rooted in the minds of the disciples, that it remained here with them even after he was risen from the dead. They here own and acknowledge him "to be a prophet mighty in deed and in word;" but they question whether he were the Messiah, the Redeemer of Israel; they could not reconcile the ignominy of his death with the grandeur of his office; nor conceive how the infamy of a cross was consistent with the glory of a king; "We trusted that it had been he which should have redeemed Israel." As if they had said, "We were full of hopes, that this had been the Messiah long expected by us; but, this being the third day since he died, we fear we shall find ourselves mistaken."

25 Then he said unto them, O fools, and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken!

26 Ought not Christ to have suffered these things, and to enter into his glory?

27 And beginning at Moses, and all the prophets, he expounded unto them in all the scriptures, the things concerning himself.

28 And they drew nigh unto the village whither they went; and he made as though he would have gone further.

29 But they constrained him, saying, Abide with us; for it is toward evening, and the day is far spent. And he went in to tarry with them.

30 And it came to pass, as he sat at meat with them, he took bread, and blessed it, and brake, and gave to them.

31 And their eyes were opened, and they knew him: and he vanished out of their sight.

32 And they said one to another, Did not our hearts burn within us, while he talked with us by the way, and while he opened to us the scripture?

Observe, 1. Our Saviour reproves, and then instructs them: he reproves them for being ignorant of the sense of scripture; they thought the death of the Messiah a sufficient ground to question the truth of his office, when it was an argument to confirm and establish it: "O fools, ought not Christ to suffer?" As if he had said, "Do you not find that the person described by the prophets in the Old Testament to be the Messiah, was to wade to his glory through a sea of blood? Why then do you think yourselves deceived in the person that suffered three days ago, when his death doth agree so well with the predictions of the prophets, who foretold, that the Messiah should be cut off, but not for himself, and be smitten for the iniquities of his people?" Here we may observe, the great wisdom and grace of God, who makes sometimes the diffidence of his people an occasion of farther clearing of the choicest fruits unto them: never did these disciples hear so excellent an exposition of Moses and the prophets, concerning the Messiah, as now, when their sinful distrust had so far prevailed over them. Observe, 2. The doctrines which Christ instructs his disciples in, namely, in the necessity of his death and passion, and of his glory and exaltation! "Ought not Christ to suffer, and to enter into his glory?" Learn, 1. That with respect to God's decree, and with relation to man's guilt, the death of Christ was necessary and indispensable. 2. That his resurrection and exaltation were as necessary as his passion. 3. That there was a meritorious connexion between Christ's sufferings and his glory; his exaltation was merited by his passion. "He was to drink of the brook in the way, and then he should lift up his head." Observe, 4. Christ did not only put light into these his apostles' heads, but heat also into their hearts, which burned all the while he communed with them: "Did not our hearts burn within us, while he opened to us the scriptures?" Oh what an efficacious power is there in the word of Christ, when set home upon the hearts of men by the Spirit of Christ!

33 And they arose up the same hour, and returned to Jerusalem, and found the eleven gathered together, and them that were with them, 34 Saying, The Lord is risen indeed, and hath appeared to Simon.

35 And they told what things were done in the way, and how he was known of them in breaking of bread.

36 ¶ And, as they thus spake, Jesus himself stood in the midst of them, and saith unto them, Peace be unto you.

37 But they were terrified and affrighted, and supposed that they had seen a spirit.

38 And he said unto them, Why are ye troubled? and why do thoughts arise in your hearts?

39 Behold my hands and my feet that it is I myself: Handle me, and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have.

(No. 22.)

40 And when he had thus spoken, he showed them his hands and his feet.

41 And while they yet believed not for joy, and wondered, he said unto them, Have ye here any meat?

42 And they gave him a piece of a broiled fish, and of an honey-comb.

43 And he took it, and did eat before them.

44 And he said unto them, These are the words which I spake unto you, while I was yet with you, that all things must be fulfilled which were written in the law of Moses, and in the Prophets, and in the Psalms, concerning me.

Observe, 1. That these two disciples, at Emmaus, being fully satisfied in the truth of Christ's resurrection, by his appearing to them in breaking of bread, they arose presently, and went from Emmaus to Jerusalem; it must needs be late at night, being after supper, and seven miles distant; yet, considering the sorrow that the disciples were under, these two leave all their private affairs, and hasten to comfort them with the glad tidings of our Lord's resurrection. Teaching us, that all secular affairs, all private and particular business, must give place to the glory of God, and the comfort and salvation of souls. Observe, 2. The great endeavours which our Saviour used to confirm his disciples' faith in the doctrine of the resurrection; "he comes and stands in the midst of them," and says, Peace be unto you; next, "he shows them his pierced hands, side, and feet," with the scars and marks, which he yet retained, that they might see it was their crucified Master; after all this, "he eats before them a piece of a broiled fish and honey-comb;" not that he needed it, his body being now become immortal; but to assure them that it was his own person, and that he had still the same body: yet so slack and backward were they to believe that Christ was risen, that all the predictions of the scripture, all the assurances they had from our Saviour's mouth, and the several appearances of Christ unto them, were little enough to establish and confirm their faith in the resurrection of our Saviour. Observe, 3. The highest and fullest evidence which our Saviour offers to evince and prove the certainty of his resurrection, namely, by appealing to their senses; Handle me, and see: Christ admits the testimony of our senses, to assure it to be his real body. And if the church of Rome will not allow us to believe our senses, we shall lose the best external evidence we can have to prove the truth of the christian religion; namely, the miracles of Christ; for how can I know that those miracles were true, but by the judgment of my senses? Now as our senses tell us that Christ's miracles were true, so they assure us, that the doctrine of transubstantiation is false

45 Then opened he their understanding, that they might understand the scriptures,

46 And said unto them, Thus it is written, and thus it behoved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day :

47 And that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem.

48 And ye are witness of these things.

It is one thing to open the scriptures themselves, or to explain them, and another to open their understandings to perceive them : Christ did the latter. Whence note, That the opening of the mind and heart effectually to receive the truths of God, is the peculiar prerogative and office of Jesus Christ ; " Then opened he their understandings ; " namely, by the illuminations of his Holy Spirit. One of the greatest miseries under which lapsed nature labors, is spiritual blindness ; Christ has the only eye-salve which can heal and cure it. Rev. iii. 18. And there is no worse cloud to obscure the light of the Spirit, than a proud conceit of our own knowledge. Observe, 2. The special charge given by our Saviour to his apostles, " to preach repentance, and remission of sins ; " to preach it in Christ's name, to preach it to all nations, beginning first at Jerusalem." Where note, The astonishing mercy of Jesus Christ ; although Jerusalem was the place where he lost his life, the city that barbarously butchered, and inhumanly murdered him, yet there he will hear the doctrine of repentance preached ; nay, first preached ; there the gospel combination must first begin, " That repentance and remission of sins be preached, beginning at Jerusalem." Lord ! how unwilling art thou that any should perish, when thou not only prayedst for thy murderers, and offeredst up thy blood to God in the behalf of them that shed it, but requiredst thy ambassadors to make Jerusalem the first tender of remission, upon condition of repentance ! " That repentance and remission of sins shall be preached among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem."

49 ¶ And, behold, I send the promise of my Father upon you : but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high.

50 ¶ And he led them out as far as to Bethany : and he lifted up his hands, and blessed them.

51 And it came to pass, while he blessed them, he was parted from them, and carried up into heaven.

52 And they worshipped him, and returned to Jerusalem with great joy ;

53 And were continually in the temple, praising and blessing God. Amen.

Our Saviour being now about to leave his disciples, comforts them with the promise of his Holy Spirit, which should supply the want of his bodily presence ; and bids them tarry at Jerusalem till they should, at the feast of pentecost, be made partakers of this invaluable blessing. Observe, 2. Our Lord having blessed his disciples, he takes his leave of them, and goes up into heaven. As he raised himself out of his grave, so did he ascend into heaven by his own power, there to appear in the presence of God for us ; and as our forerunner, to give us an assurance, that in due time we shall ascend after him. " Whither our forerunner is for us entered," Heb. vi. 20. Observe lastly, The act of homage and adoration which the apostles perform to the Lord Jesus ; how they worshipped him, that is, as God, the eternal Son of God, being so declared by the resurrection from the dead, and by his ascension into heaven before their eyes, from whence he will certainly come, at the end of the world, to judge both the quick and the dead. For which solemn hour, God Almighty prepare all mankind, by a solemn frame of heart, and a religious course of life : and then, " Come, Lord Jesus, to judgment, come quickly." Amen.

THE END OF SAINT LUKE'S GOSPEL.

THE
ACCORDING TO SAINT JOHN.

The fourth and last of the holy gospels falls now under consideration: namely, that which was written by the evangelist St. John; concerning which we have observable, the writer, the occasion, the design and scope of this sublime book. Observe, 1. the writer of it; St. John, the beloved disciple, that lay in the bosom of Christ; he that lay in Christ's bosom, reveals the secrets of Christ's heart. John, saith St. Austin, drew out of the bosom of Christ, the very heart of Christ, and made it known to a lost world. Observe, 2. The occasion of St John writing this gospel: and that was the heresy of Ebion and Cerinthus, which denied the divinity of Jesus Christ. When God suffers heretics to vent their blasphemous opinions, he takes occasion from thence to make a clearer discovery of divine truth. We had perhaps wanted St. John's gospel, if Ebion and Cerinthus had not broached their heresy against Christ's divinity. Observe, 3. The design and scope of this gospel; which is, to describe the person of Christ in his two natures, divine and human, as the object of our faith. This he doth in a sublime and lofty manner: upon which account he was compared by the ancients to the eagle that soars aloft, and maketh her nest on high; and was also called John the Divine. Observe, lastly, The difference between this and the other gospels. The other Evangelists insist chiefly on the humanity of Christ, and prove him to be truly man, the son of the Virgin Mary: this Evangelist proves him to be God as well as man; God from eternity, and man in the fulness of time. The other three writers relate what Christ did; St. John reports what Christ said. They recount his miracles; he records his sermons and prayers. In short, the profound mysteries of our holy religion are here unfolded by the beloved disciple; and particularly the divinity and incarnation of our blessed Saviour.

CHAPTER I.

IN the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God.

2 The same was in the beginning with God.

Observe here, 1. The person spoken of, Jesus Christ, under the name of the Word. "In the beginning was the Word." Because God speaks to us by him, and makes known his will to us by Christ, as we make known our minds to one another by our words. Again, as our words are the conception and image of our minds, so Christ is the express image of his Father's person, and was begotten of the Father, even as our words are begotten of our minds; for these reasons he is so often styled the Word. Observe, 2. What the Evangelist here asserts concerning the Word, Christ Jesus, even three particulars; namely, his eternal existence, his personal co-existence, and his divine essence. 1. His eternal existence: "In the beginning was the Word;" in the beginning, when all things received their being, then the Word was, and did actually subsist, even from all eternity. Not in the beginning of the gospel state, but in the beginning of the creation, as appears from the following words, "all things were made by him, and without him was not any thing made that was made." Which plainly shows that the Evangelist is here speaking of the creation, rise, or beginning of all things created. Learn hence, that Jesus Christ, not only antecedent to his incarnation, but even before all time, and the beginning of all things, had an actual being and existence. 2. His personal co-existence with the Father; the word was with God: that is, eternally and inseparably with him, in the same essence and nature, being in the Father as well as with him, so that the Father never was without him, Prov. viii. 23. "I was by him, as one that was brought up with him." I was by his side, says the Chaldee interpreter—Learn hence, that the Son is a person distinct from the Father; but of the same nature and essence with the Father: he is God of God, very God of very God; being of one substance with the Father, by whom all things were made:—The word was with God. 3. His divine essence; The word was God. Here St. John declares the divinity, as he did before the eternity of our blessed Saviour. He was with God, and existed in him: therefore he must be God, and a person distinct from the Father. The word was God, say the Socinians, that is, a God by office, not by nature, as being God's ambassador; but the word God is used eleven times in this chapter in its proper sense; and it is not reasonable to conceive, that it should be here used in an improper sense; in which this word in the singular number is never used throughout the whole New Testament.—Dr. Whitby. Learn hence, that the eternity, the personality, and the divinity of Christ, are of necessity to be believed, if we will worship him aright. Christ tells us, John v. 23. "That we must worship the Son, even as we worship the Father." Now, unless we acknowledge the eternity and divinity of Christ, the second person, as well as of God the Father, the first person, we must honor neither the Father nor the Son. There is this difference between natural things and supernatural. Natural things are first understood, and then believed; but supernatural mysteries must be first believed, and then will be better understood. If we will first set reason to work, and believe no more than we can comprehend, this will hinder faith; but, if, after we have assented to gospel-mysteries, we set reason on work, this will help faith.

3 All things were made by him; and without him was not any thing made that was made.

Observe here, the argument which St. John used to prove Christ to be God; it is taken from the work of creation. He that made all things, is truly and really God; but Christ made all things, and nothing was made without him; therefore is Christ truly and really God. Here observe, 1. An affirmation of as large and vast an extent as the whole world. All things were made by him; not this or that particular being, but all created beings received their existence and being from Christ. Observe, 2. That to prevent the least imagination of any thing's having another author than Christ, here is the most positive and particular negation that can be.—That without him was not any thing made that was made; not without him as an instrument, but without him as an agent, Christ being a co-worker with the Father and the Spirit in the work of creation. He was the author of the creation, not an instrument in creating. Learn hence, That Christ, as God, being the Creator and Maker of all things himself, is excluded from being a creature, or any thing that was made.

4 In him was life; and the life was the light of men.

5 And the light shineth in darkness, and the darkness comprehended it not.

Here we have a farther proof of Christ's divinity, and an evidence that he had a being as God, before his incarnation; forasmuch as all life is centered in him, communicated by him, and derived from him. In him was life. Formaliter & casualiter. Life was formally in Christ, as the subject of it; and also casually in him, as the fountain of it. Learn 1. That Christ is the author and dispenser of all life unto his creatures. He is the original life in the order of nature, because by him man was created, Gen. i. 26. He is spiritual life in the order of grace. John xiv. 6. "I am the way, the truth, and the life." He is eternal life in the order of glory. 1 John v. 20. "This is the true God and eternal life." Learn, 2. That all creatures receiving light and life of Christ, not as an instrument, but as the fountain from whence it floweth, and in which it is preserved, is an evident proof of his divinity, and an argument that he is truly and really God. In him was life, and the life was the light of men."

6 ¶ There was a man sent from God, whose name was John:

7 The same came for a witness, to bear witness of the light, that all men through him might believe.

8 He was not that light, but was sent to bear witness of that light.

9 That was the true light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world.

Here the Evangelist proceeds in declaring Christ to be really God, because he was that original, that essential light, which had no beginning, suffers no decay, but is so diffusive, as, in some kind, and in some measure or other, to enlighten every man that cometh into the world. Some of the Jews had a conceit, that John the Baptist was the promised Messiah, as appears by Luke iii. 15. "The people were in expectation, and all men wondered in their hearts of John, whether he were the Christ or not."

Here therefore, to deceive the Jews, the Evangelists add, that John was not that light. John was a great light, a burning and a shining light, but not such a light as the Messiah was to be. John was a light instrumentally, Christ efficiently; John was a light enlightened, Christ was a light enlightening; John's light was by derivation and participation, Christ's was essential and original: John's light was as the light of a candle in a private house, in and among the Jews only; but Christ's light was as the light of the sun, spreading over the face of the whole earth. "This is the true light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world:" that is, he enlightens all mankind with the light of reason, and is the author of all spiritual illumination in them that receive it. Christ is called a light in regard of his office, which was to manifest and declare that salvation to his church, which lay hid before in the purpose of God: and he is called the true light; not so much in opposition to all false lights, but as opposed to the types and shadows of the Mosical dispensation. Learn, 1. That every man and woman that comes into the world is enlightened by Christ in some kind and measure or other. All are 'enlightened with the light of reason and natural conscience: some with the light of grace and supernatural illumination. Learn, 2. That Christ being the essential, original, and eternal light, enlightening and enlivening the whole creation, is an evident and undeniable demonstration that he is truly and really God.

10 He was in the world, and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not.

11 He came unto his own, and his own received him not.

He was in the world, that is, he that was God from eternity made himself visible to the world in the fulness of time. The Evangelist repeats it again, that the world was made by him, to show his omnipotency and divinity; and then adds, the world knew him not, as an evidence of the world's blindness and ingratitude. Learn hence, That notwithstanding the eternal Son of God appeared in the world, and the world was made and created by him: yet the generality of the world did not know him; that is, did not own and acknowledge him, did not receive and obey him. They neither knew him as Creator, nor accepted of him as Mediator: yea, he came to his own; that is, his own kindred and country, the church and people of the Jews: but the generality of them gave him cold entertainment. It was the sin of the Jewish nation, that though they were Christ's own peculiar people, his own by choice, his own by purchase, his own by covenant, by kindred, yet the generality of them did reject him, and would not own him for the true and promised Messias. Learn hence, That the Lord Jesus Christ met with manifest and shameful rejection, even at the hands of those that were nearest to him by flesh and nature. John xi. 5. "Neither did his brethren believe on him."

12 But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name.

(No. 23.)

That is, although multitudes rejected him, yet some received and owned him for the true Messias; and those that did so, he advanced to the high dignity of adoption and sonship, giving them power, that is, right or privilege, to become the sons of God. Here note, 1. The nature of justifying faith declared; As many as received him. Now this receiving of Christ implies these three things. 1. The assent of the understanding to that divine testimony which the scriptures give of Christ. 2. The consent of the will to submit to this Jesus as Lord and King. 3. The affiance and trust of the heart in Christ alone for salvation; for faith is not a bare credence, but a divine affiance, and such an affiance in Christ, and reliance upon him, as is the parent and principle of obedience to him. Note, 2. That it is the high and honorable privilege of all such as receive Christ by faith, to become the sons of God by adoption. This is a precious privilege, a free privilege, an honorable privilege, an abiding privilege, and calls for all possible returns of gratitude and thankfulness, of love and service, duty and obedience, of submission and self-renunciation.

13 Which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God.

Because the bragging Jews did much boast of their natural birth and descent from Abraham, as being his blood and offspring, therefore it is here asserted, That men become not the children of God by natural propagation, but by spiritual regeneration: They are not born of blood. Grace runs not in blood, piety is not hereditary. Religious parents propagate corruption, not regeneration. Were the conveyances of grace natural, good parents would not be so ill suited with children as sometimes they are. No person then whatsoever has the gracious privilege of adoption by the first birth. "They are not born of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man;" that is, no man, by the utmost improvement of nature, can raise himself up to this privilege of adoption, and be the author and efficient cause of his own regeneration. Learn hence, That man in all his capacities is too weak to produce the work of regeneration in himself. They, says Dr. Hammond, who, by the influence of the highest rational principles, live most exactly according to the rule of rational nature, that is, of unregenerate morality, are the persons here described. Learn, 2. That God alone is the prime efficient cause of regeneration. He works upon the understanding by illumination, and upon the will by sanctification. "Which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God."

14 And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father) full of grace and truth.

The Evangelist having asserted the divinity of Christ in the foregoing verses, comes now to speak of his humanity and manifestation in our nature. The word was made of flesh, Where note, 1. Our Saviour's incarnation for us. 2. His life and conversation here among us. He dwelt, or tabernacled, for a season with us. In the incarnation, or assumption of our nature, observe, 1. The person assuming, The Word, that is, the second person subsisting in the glorious Godhead. Observe, 2. The nature assumed, flesh; that is, the human nature, consisting of soul and body. But why is it not said, The Word was made man: but, The Word was made flesh? Answer, To denote and set forth the wonderful abasement and condescension of Christ; there being more of vileness and weakness, and opposition to spirit, in the word flesh, than in the word man: Christ's taking flesh implies, that he did not only take upon him the human nature, but all the weaknesses and infirmities of that nature; also, (sinful infirmities, and personal infirmities excepted) he had nothing to do with our sinful flesh: though Christ loved souls with an infinite and insuperable love, yet he would not sin to save a soul. And he took no personal infirmities upon him, but such as are common to the whole nature, as hunger, thirst, weariness. Observe, 3. The assumption itself, He was made flesh: that is, he assumed the human nature into an union with his godhead, and so became a true and real man by that assumption. Learn hence, That Jesus Christ did really assume the true and perfect nature of man, into a personal union, which is divine nature, and still remains true God, and true man, in one person for ever. O blessed union; O thrice happy conjunction; as man, Christ has an experimental sense of our infirmities and wants. As God, he can support and supply them all. Note farther, 2. As our Saviour's incarnation for us, so his life and conversation among us. He dwelt, or tabernacled amongst us. The tabernacle was a type of Christ's human nature. 1. As the outside of the tabernacle was mean, made of ordinary materials, but its inside glorious; so was the Son of God. 2. God's special presence was in the tabernacle; there he dwelt, for he had a delight therein. In like manner dwelt all the fulness of the godhead bodily in Christ; and the glory of his divinity shined forth to the eye and view of his disciples; for "they beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father;" that is, whilst Christ appeared as a man amongst us, he gave great and glorious testimonies of his being the son of God. Learn hence, That in the day of our Saviour's incarnation, the divinity of his person did shine forth through the veil of his flesh, and was seen by all them that had a spiritual eye to behold it, and a mind disposed to consider it. "We beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father."

15 ¶ John bare witness of him, and cried, saying, This was he of whom I spake, He that cometh after me, is preferred before me; for he was before me, 16 And of his fulness have all we received, and grace for grace.

17 For the law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ.

18 No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him.

Here we have John Baptist's first testimony concerning Christ, the promised Messiah: and it consists of four parts. 1. John prefers Christ before himself as being surpassingly above himself. "He that cometh after me, is preferred before me;" that is, in the dignity of his person, and in the eminency of his office, as being the eternal God; "Now amongst them that were born of women, there was not a greater than John the Baptist;" if Christ then was greater than John, it was in regard of his being God. He is therefore "preferred before him, because he was before him," from all eternity. Learn hence, That the dignity and eternity of Christ's person as God, sets him up above all his ministers; yea, above all creatures, how excellent soever.—He that cometh after me, in time, is preferred before me in dignity; for he was before me, even from all eternity. 2. John prefers Christ before all believers, in point of fulness and sufficiency of divine grace: Of his fulness do they receive. They have their failings, Christ has his fulness: theirs is the fulness of a vessel, his is the fulness of a fountain; their fulness is derivative, his fulness is original, yet also ministerial, on purpose in him to give out to us, that we may receive grace for grace: that is, grace answerable for kind and quality, though not for measure and degree. As a child in generation receives from its parents member for member, or as the paper in the printing-press receives letter for letter, and the wax under the seal receives print for print, so in the work of regeneration, whatever grace is in Christ, there is the like for kind stamped upon the christian's soul: all the members of Christ being made plentiful partakers of his spiritual endowments. Learn hence, That all fulness of grace, by way of supply for believers, is treasured up in Christ, and communicated by him, as their wants and necessities do require: his fulness is inexhaustible, it can never be drawn low, how much less drawn dry: "Of his fulness do we receive grace for grace;" that is, grace freely, grace plentifully: God grant that none of us may receive the grace of Christ in vain. 3. John prefers Christ before Moses, whom the Jews doted so much upon. The law was given by Moses, not as the author, but as the dispenser of it.—Moses was God's minister, by whom the law, which reveals wrath, was given to the Jews, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ. Grace, in opposition to the condemnatory curse and sentence of the law; and truth, in opposition to the types, shadows, and ceremonies of the legal administration. Learn hence, That all grace for the remission of sin, and for the performance of duty, is given from Christ the fountain of grace; Grace came by Jesus Christ.

The grace of pardon and reconciliation; the grace of holiness and sanctification; the grace of love and adoption, even all that grace that fits us for service here, and glory hereafter, Christ is both the dispenser and the author of it. Grace came by Jesus Christ. Again, 4. John the Baptist here (ver. 18.) doth not only prefer Christ before himself, before Moses, before all believers, but even before all persons whatsoever, in point of knowing and revealing the mind of God. No man hath seen God at any time; that is, no mere man hath ever seen God in his essence, whilst he was in this mortal state. Here God's invisibility is asserted: next Christ's intimacy with the Father is declared. The only begotten Son, that is in the bosom of the Father. This expression implies three things, 1. Unity of natures; the bosom is the child's place, who is part of ourselves, and of the same nature with ourselves. 2. Dearness of affection. None lie in the bosom, that are not dear to us. A bosom friend is the dearest of friends. 3. It implies communication of secrets, Christ's lying in his Father's bosom intimates his being conscious to all his Father's secrets, to know all his counsels, and to understand his whole will and pleasure. Now as Christ's lying in the Father's bosom implies unity of nature, it teaches us to give the same worship to Christ, which we give to God the Father, because he is of the same nature with the Father; as it implies dearness of affection betwixt the Father and the Son, it teaches us to place our chief love upon Christ the Son, because God the Father doth so: he, who is the Son of God's love, should be the object of our love: as God hath a bosom for Christ, so should we have also: the noblest object challenges the highest affection. Again, as Christ's lying in the Father's bosom, implies the knowledge of his mind and will, it teaches us to apply ourselves to Christ, to his Word and Spirit, for illumination. Whither should we go for instruction, but to this great prophet: for direction, but to this wonderful counsellor? We can never be made wise unto salvation, if Christ, the wisdom of the Father, doth not make us so.

19 ¶ And this is the record of John, when the Jews sent Priests and Levites from Jerusalem, to ask him, Who art thou?

20 And he confessed, and denied not; but confessed, I am not the Christ.

21 And they asked him, What then? Art thou Elias? And he saith, I am not. Art thou that prophet? and he answered, No.

22 Then said they unto him, Who art thou? that we may give an answer to them that sent us; what sayest thou of thyself?

23 He said, I am the voice of one crying in the wilderness, Make straight the way of the Lord, as said the prophet Esaias.

24 And they which were sent were of the pharisees.

25 And they asked him, and said unto him, Why baptizest thou then, if thou be not that Christ, nor Elias, neither that prophet?

26 John answered them, saying, I baptize with water: but there standeth one among you, whom ye know not;

27 He it is, who, coming after me, is preferred before me, whose shoe's latchet I am not worthy to unloose.

28 These things were done in Bethabara beyond Jordan, where John was baptizing.

In these verses we have a second testimony which John the Baptist gave of our Saviour Jesus Christ. "The Jews sent priests and Levites from Jerusalem, saying, Who art thou? That is, the Sanhedrim, or great council at Jerusalem, to whom it belonged to judge who were true prophets, sent messengers to the Baptist to know, whether he was the Messiah or not? John refuses to take this honor to himself, but tells them plainly, he was his harbinger and forerunner, and that the Messiah himself was just at hand. From hence note, How very cautious, and exceeding careful this messenger of Christ was, and all the ministers of Christ ought to be, that they do not assume or arrogate to themselves any part of that honor which is due to Christ; but set the crown of praise upon Christ's own head, acknowledging him to be All in All. 1 Cor. iii. 5. "Who then is Paul? and who is Apollos? but ministers by whom ye believed." Observe farther, in this testimony of John the Baptist, these two things: 1. A negative declaration, who he was not; I am not, says he, the Messiah, whom you look for, nor Elias, nor that prophet you expect; not Elias, that is, in your sense, not Elias the Tishbite; not Elias for identity of person, but Elias for similitude of gifts, office, and calling. John came, though not in the person, yet in the power and spirit of Elias. He denies farther, that he was that prophet; that prophet which Moses spake of, Deut. xviii. 15. nor any of the old prophets risen from the dead; nay, strictly speaking, he was not any prophet at all; but more than a prophet: The Old Testament prophet prophesied of Christ to come; but John pointed at, showed, and declared a Christ already come; and in this sense he was no mere prophet, but more than a prophet. 2. We have here the Baptist's positive affirmation, who he was; namely, Christ's herald in the wilderness, his usher, his forerunner, to prepare the people for the receiving of the Messiah, and to make them ready for the entertaining of the gospel, by preaching the doctrine of repentance to them. From hence learn, That the preaching of the doctrine of repentance is indispensably necessary, in order to the preparing of the hearts of sinners for the receiving of Jesus Christ. Observe lastly, the great and exemplary humility of the holy Baptist, the mean and lowly opinion he had of himself. Although John was the greatest among them that were born of a woman, and so much esteemed by the Jews, and had the honor to go before Christ in the exercise and office of his ministry; yet he judges himself unworthy to carry Christ's shoes after him. "He that cometh after me, is preferred before me, whose shoes I am not worthy to unloose." Learn hence, That the more eminent gifts ministers of the gospel have, and the more ready men are to honor and esteem them, the more will they abuse themselves, if they be truly gracious, and account themselves highly honored in doing the meanest offices of love and service for Jesus Christ. Thus doth the holy Baptist here. "His shoe latchet I am not worthy to unloose."

29 ¶ The next day John seeth Jesus coming unto him, and saith Behold, the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world.

30 This is he of whom I said, After me cometh a man, which is preferred before me : for he was before me.

This is John the Baptist's third testimony concerning Christ; in which he points out Christ as the true sacrifice for the expiation of sin: Behold the Lamb of God: the Lamb of God's appointing to be an expiatory sacrifice; the Lamb of God's election; the Lamb of God's affection; the Lamb of God's acceptance; the Lamb of God's exaltation; who, by the sacrifice of his death, has taken away the sin of the world. The sin, not the sins, in the plural number, to denote original sin, as some think; or, as others, to show that Christ hath universally taken upon himself the whole burden of our sin and guilt. And there seems to be a secret antithesis in the word world. In the Levitical sacrifices, only the sins of the Jews were laid upon the sacrificed beasts; but this Lamb takes away the sin of the Jew and Gentile. "The Lord hath caused to meet on him the iniquity of us all." And the verb, taketh away, being in the present tense, denotes a continued act, and it intimates to us thus much, viz. That it is the daily office of Christ to take away our sin, by presenting to the Father the memorials of his death. Christ takes away from all believers the guilt and punishment of their sins, the filth and pollution of them; the power and dominion that is in them; and as St. John called upon the Jews, to behold this Lamb of God with an eye of observation; so it is our duty to behold him now with an eye of admiration, with an eye of gratulation; but especially with an eye of faith and dependence, improving the fruit of his death to our own consolation and salvation, Isa. xlv. 22.—Look unto me, and be saved, &c.

31 And I knew him not: but that he should be made manifest to Israel, therefore I am baptizing with water.

32 And John bare record, saying, I saw the Spirit descending from heaven, like a dove, and it abode upon him.

33 And I knew him not: but he that sent me to baptize with water, the same said unto me, Upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending, and remaining on him, the same is he which baptizeth with the Holy Ghost.

34 And I saw, and bare record that this is the Son of God.

Observe here, 1. That though John the Baptist was a near kinsman of Christ according to the flesh, yet the providence of God so ordered it, that for thirty years together they did not know one another, nor converse with each other; therefore he could not know him to be the Messiah. —This, no doubt, was overruled by the wisdom of God, to prevent all suspicion, as if John and Christ had compacted together to give one another credit: that the world might suspect nothing of the truth of John's testimony concerning Christ, nor have the least jealousy, that what he said of Christ was from any bias of mind to his person; therefore he repeats it a second time, ver. 31, and 33, I knew him not. Hence we may learn, that a corporeal sight of Christ, and an outward personal acquaintance with him, is not simply needful, and absolutely necessary for enabling a minister to set him forth and represent him savingly to the world. Observe, 2. The means declared by which John came to know Christ to be the true Messiah; it was by a sign from heaven, namely, the Holy Ghost descending like a dove upon our Saviour.—"He that sent me to baptize with water, the same said unto me, Upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending and remaining, the same is he." Learn hence, 1. That Christ, taking upon him our nature, did so cover his glory with the veil of our flesh and common infirmities, that he could not be known by bodily sight from another man. Till John had a divine revelation, and an evident sign from heaven, that Christ was the Son of God, he knew him not. Learn, 2. That Christ, in his solemn entry upon his office, as Mediator, was sealed upon the work by the descending of the Holy Ghost upon him; he was sealed by the Holy Ghost's descending, and the Father's testifying, that this was his beloved Son, in whom he was well pleased. Now it was, that God gave not of the Spirit to Christ by measure, for the effectual administration of his mediatorial office, now it pleased the Father, that in Christ shall all fulness dwell. He was filled extensively with all kinds of grace, and filled intensively with all degrees of grace, in the day of his inauguration, when the Holy Spirit descended upon him.

35 ¶ Again the next day after, John stood, and two of his disciples:

36 And looking upon Jesus, as he walked, he saith, Behold the Lamb of God.

It is evident that John's disciples were never very willing to acknowledge Jesus for the Messiah, because they thought he did shadow and cloud their Master. See therefore the sincerity of the holy Baptist: he takes every opportunity to draw off the eyes of his own disciples from himself, and to fix them upon Christ; he saith to two of his disciples, Behold the Lamb of God; as if he had said, "Turn your eyes from me to Christ; take less notice of me, his minister: but behold your and my Lord and Master, Behold the Lamb of God." Learn hence, That the great design of Christ's faithful ministers is to set people upon admiring of Christ, and not magnifying themselves. O! it is their great ambition and desire, that such as love and respect them, and honor their ministry, may be led by them to Christ; to behold and admire him, to accept of him, and to submit unto him; John said to his disciples, Behold the Lamb of God, 37 And the two disciples heard him speak, and they followed Jesus.

38 Then Jesus turned, and saw them following, and saith unto them, What seek ye? They said unto him, Rabbi (which is to say, being interpreted, Master) where dwellest thou?

39 He saith unto them, Come and see. They came and saw where he dwelt, and abode with him that day; for it was about the tenth hour:

40 One of the two which heard John speak, and followed him, was Andrew, Simon Peter's brother.

41 He first findeth his own brother Simon, and saith unto him, We have found the Messiah; which is, being interpreted, The Christ.

42 And he brought him to Jesus. And when Jesus beheld him, he said, Thou art Simon, the Son of Jona: thou shalt be called Cephas: which is, by interpretation, A stone.

43 ¶ The day following, Jesus would go forth into Galilee, and findeth Philip, and saith unto him, Follow me.

44 Now Philip was of Bethsaida, the city of Andrew and Peter.

This latter part of the chapter acquaints us with the calling of five disciples: not to the apostleship, for that was afterwards; nor yet simply by conversion, for some of them were John's disciples already, and believed in the Messiah to come; but they are here called to own and acknowledge Jesus Christ to be the true and promised Messiah. The disciples here called, were Andrew, Peter, and Philip, mean obscure persons, poor fishermen, not any of the learned rabbies and doctors among the Jews. Hereby Christ showed at once the freeness of his grace, in passing by the knowing men of the age; the greatness of his power, who by such weak instruments could effect such mighty things; and the glory of his wisdom, in choosing such instruments as should not carry away the glory of the work from him; but cause the entire honour and glory of all their great successes to redound to Christ. As Christ can do, so he chooses to do great things by weak means, knowing that the weakness of the instrument redounds to the greater honour of the agent; for these persons, called now to be disciples, were afterwards sent forth by Christ as his apostles, to convert the world to christianity. Observe farther, The order according to which the disciples were called; first Andrew, then Peter: which may make the church of Rome ashamed of the weakness of their argument for Peter's supremacy, that he was first called; whereas Andrew was before him, and Peter was brought to Jesus by him. Andrew findeth his own brother Simon, and brought him to Jesus. Such as have gotten any knowledge of Christ themselves, and are let into acquaintance with him, will be very diligent to invite, and industrious to bring in, others to him. Peter being brought to Christ, our Saviour names him Cephas, which signifies a stone, a rock; to intimate to him his duty to be firm and steady in the christian profession, full of courage and constancy. Thou shalt be called Cephas, which is, by interpretation, a stone.

(No. 23.)

45 Philip findeth Nathanael, and saith unto him, We have found him of whom Moses in the law, and the prophets, did write; Jesus of Nazareth, the son of Joseph.

46 And Nathanael said unto him, Can there any good thing come out of Nazareth? Philip saith unto him, Come and see.

47 Jesus saw Nathanael coming to him, and saith of him, Behold an Israelite indeed, in whom is no guile!

The last person mentioned in this chapter, who was called to own and embrace Christ for a Messiah, is Nathanael; who this Nathanael was, doth not certainly appear; but, it is evident, he was a sincere, good man, though prejudiced for the present against Christ, because of the place of his supposed birth and residence, Nazareth. Can any good thing come out of Nazareth? That is, can any worthy or excellent person, much less the promised and long expected Messias, come out of such an obscure place as Nazareth is? Whereas Almighty God when he pleases, can raise worthy persons out of contemptible places. Observe farther, How mercifully and meekly Christ passes over the mistakes and failings, the prepossessions and prejudices of Nathanael: but takes notice of, and publicly proclaims, his sincerity: Behold an Israelite indeed, in whom there is no guile. It being only true of Christ, in a strict and absolute sense, that there was no guile found in his lips; but in a qualified sense, it is true of Nathanael, and every upright man; they are true Israelites, like their father Jacob, plain men: men of great sincerity and uprightness of heart, both in the sight of God and man. And whereas our Saviour speaks of him with a sort of admiration, Behold an Israelite, in whom there is no guile. We learn, That a person of great sincerity and uprightness of heart towards God and man, a true Nathanael and Israelite indeed, is a rare and worthy sight; Behold an Israelite indeed.—Learn, 2. That such indeed as are Nathanaels, need not commend themselves, Christ will be sure to do it for them. Nathanael conceals his own worth; Christ publishes and proclaims it, and calls upon others to take notice of it, Behold, &c.

48 Nathanael saith unto him, Whence knowest thou me? Jesus answered, and said unto him, Before that Philip called thee; when thou wast under the fig-tree, I saw thee.

49 Nathanael answered, and said unto him, Rabbi, thou art the Son of God, thou art the King of Israel.

50 Jesus answered, and said unto him, Because I said unto thee, I saw thee under the fig-tree, believest thou? thou shalt see greater things than these.

Observe here, How Nathanael wondereth that Christ should know him, having as (he thought) never seen him. Christ gives him to understand, that by his all-seeing eye he had seen him, when he was not seen by him, When thou wast under the fig-tree I saw thee. Christ's all-seeing eye is an infallible proof of his deity and godhead. Christ seeth us wherever we are, and whatever we do, though we see not him: he seeth the sincerity of our hearts, and will own it, and bear witness to it, if we are upright in his sight. Observe farther, How Christ's omnipresence and omniscience convince Nathanael that he was more than man, even the Messiah, God and man in two distinct natures and one person: Rabbi, thou art the Son of God. Philip calls Christ the Son of Joseph; Nathanael calls him the Son of God. Such as believe Christ's omniscience, will never call in question his divinity. Observe lastly, How Christ encourages the faith of his new disciple Nathanael, by promising him that he shall enjoy farther helps and means for the confirmation of his faith, than ever yet he had. All that Christ said to him was only this, that he saw him under the fig-tree, before Philip called him. How ready art thou, O Lord! to encourage the beginnings of faith in the hearts of thy people, and to furnish them with farther means of knowledge, when they wisely improve what they have received? Never wilt thou be wanting, either in means or mercy, to us, if we be not wanting to thee and ourselves.

51 And he saith unto him, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Hereafter you shall see heaven open, and the angels of God ascending and descending upon the Son of man.

The heavens were open to Christ, and the angels attended upon him, first at his baptism, Mat. iii. ult. then at his ascension, Acts i. 9. Whether Christ alludes to the one or the other, or to both, I shall not positively say, but gather this note, That the ministry and attendance of the holy angels upon the Lord Jesus Christ, in the time of his humiliation, was very remarkable; an angel foretels his conception to the virgin, Luke i. 31; an angel publishes his birth to the shepherds, Luke ii. 14; in his temptations in the wilderness, the angels came and ministered unto him, Mat. iv. 11; in his agony in the garden, an angel is sent to comfort him, Luke xxii. 42; at his resurrection an angel rolls away the stone, and proclaims him risen, to the women that sought for him, Mat. xxviii. 6; at his ascension, the angels attended upon him, and bare him company to heaven; and at the day of judgment, he shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels. Now, thus officious are the holy angels on blessed Saviour, and thus subservient to him upon all occasions. 1. In point of affection and singular love to Christ. 2. In point of duty and special obligation to Christ. There is no such cheerful and delightful service of love. Such is the angels' service to Christ for the services he has done them, he being an head of confirmation to them: for, that they are established in that holy and glorious state in which they were at first created, is owing to the special grace of the Redeemer; Glorify him then all ye his angels, and praise him all his host.

CHAPTER II.

AND the third day there was a marriage in Cana of Galilee, and the mother of Jesus was there:

2 And both Jesus was called, and his disciples, to the marriage.

The former part of this chapter acquaints us with the first miracle which our Saviour wrought, in turning water into wine: the occasion of it was, his being invited to a marriage-feast. Here note, 1. That whenever our Saviour was invited to a public entertainment, he never refused the invitation, but constantly went: not so much for the pleasure of eating, as for the opportunity of conversing and doing good, which was meat and drink unto him. Note, 2. What honor Christ put upon the ordinance of marriage: he honors it with his presence and first miracle. Some think it was St. John that was now the bridegroom; others, that it was some near relation of the virgin mother's; but, whoever it might be, doubtless Christ's design was rather to put honor upon the ordinance than upon the person. How bold is the church of Rome in spitting upon the face of this ordinance, by denying its lawfulness to the ministers of religion? When the apostle, Heb. xiii. 4. affirms, that Marriage is honorable among all. Neither the prophets of the Old Testament, nor the apostles of the New (St. Peter himself not excepted) did abhor the marriage-bed, or judge themselves too pure for an institution of their Maker. Note, 3. That it is an ancient and laudable institution, that the rites of marriage should not want a solemn celebration. Feasting with friends upon such an occasion is both lawful and commendable provided the rules of sobriety and charity, modesty, and decency, be observed, and no sinful liberty assumed. But it must be said, that feasting in general, and marriage-feasts in particular, are some of those lawful things which are difficultly managed without sin. Note, 4. That our Saviour's working a miracle, when he was at the marriage-feast, should teach us, by his example, that in our cheerful and free times, when we indulge a little more than ordinary mirth amongst our friends, we should still be mindful of God's honor and glory, and lay hold upon an occasion of doing all the good we can. Note lastly, As Christ was personally invited to, and bodily present at this marriage-feast, when here upon earth: so he will not refuse now in heaven to be spiritually present at his people's marriages:

they want his presence with them upon that great occasion, they desire and seek it: he is acquainted with it: and invited to it, whoever is neglected; and where Christ is made acquainted with the match, he will certainly make one at the marriage. Happy is that wedding where Christ and his friends (as here) are the invited, expected, and enjoyed guests.

3 And when they wanted wine, the mother of Jesus saith unto him, They have no wine.

4 Jesus saith unto her, Woman, what have I to do with thee? mine hour is not yet come.

5 His mother saith unto the servants, Whatsoever he saith unto you, do it.

This want of wine was probably so disposed by the providence of God, to give our Saviour an opportunity to manifest his divine power in working a miracle to supply it. Observe here, 1. How the virgin inquires into the family's wants, and then makes them known to Christ. Learn hence, That it is an argument of piety, and an evidence of christian love, to inquire into the wants, and to recommend the necessities of others to Christ's care and consideration; whose bounty and munificence can readily and abundantly supply them. Thus far the virgin's action was good; she laid open the case to Christ: "They have no wine:" but Christ, who discerned the thoughts of Mary's heart, finds her guilty of presumption; she thought by her motherly authority she might have expected, if not commanded, a miracle from him; whereas Christ was subject to her as man during his private life; but now being entered upon the office as a Mediator, as God-man, he gives her to understand she had no power over him, nor any motherly authority in the business of his public office; therefore he says to her, Woman, what have I to do with thee? He that charges his angels with folly, will not be taught when and how to act, by poor, crawling dust and ashes! Observe therefore, 2. Christ calls the virgin woman, not mother, but this was not out of any contempt, but to prevent her being thought more than a woman, above, or beyond a woman, having brought forth the Son of God. Woman, says Christ, not goddess, as the papists would make her, and proclaim her free from sin, even from venial sin; but Christ's reproving her, shows that she was not faultless. Observe, 3. Christ would not bear with the virgin's commanding on earth, will he then endure her intercession in heaven? must she not meddle with matters appertaining to his office here below, and will it be endured by Christ, or endeavoured by her to interpose in the work of mediation above? No, no; were it possible for her so far to forget herself in heaven; she would receive that answer from Christ she had on earth, "Woman, what have I to do with thee? or thou with me, in my mediatorial office? but instead of this she returns answer from heaven to her idolatrous petitioners here on earth, "What have I to do with you? get you to my Son, go you to Christ, he that was the Mediator of redemption; he, and only he continues the Mediator of intercession." O how foolish as well as impious is it to think, that she who had not so much power as to direct the working of one miracle on earth, should have now lodged in her hands all the power of heaven!

6 And there were set there six water-pots of stone, after the manner of the purifying of the Jews, containing two or three firkins a piece.

7 Jesus saith unto them, Fill the water-pots with water. And they filled them up to the brim.

8 And he saith unto them, Draw out now, and bear unto the governor of the feast. And they bare it.

9 When the ruler of the feast had tasted the water that was made wine, and knew not whence it was (but the servants which drew the water knew) the governor of the feast called the bridegroom,

10 And saith unto him, Every man at the beginning doth set forth good wine; and when men have well drunk, then that which is worse: but thou hast kept the good wine until now.

11 This beginning of miracles did Jesus in Cana of Galilee, and manifested forth his glory: and his disciples believed on him.

In this miracle of our Saviour's turning water into wine observe, 1. The reality of the miracle, and the sincerity of Christ in the working of it. To evidence there was no deceit in the miracle, not wine-casks, but water-pots, are called for; wine-vessels, in which some lees were remaining; might have given both a vinous color and taste to the water; but stone pots could contribute nothing of this nature; and being open pots, there was no stealing wine into them without observation. Again, our Saviour's employing the servants, and not his disciples, takes off any suspicion of collusion; and his sending it to the ruler or governor of the feast, was an evidence that the miracle would bear examination. Our Saviour's miracles were real and beneficial; they were obvious to sense, not lying wonders, not fictitious miracles, which the jugglers in the church of Rome cheat the people with: the greatest miracle which they boast of, transubstantiation, is so far from being obvious to sense, that it contradicts the sense and reason of mankind, and is the greatest affront to human nature that ever the world was acquainted with. Observe, 2. Though Christ wrought a real miracle, yet he would not work more of miracles than needed; he would not create wine out of nothing, but turned water into wine. Thus he multiplied the bread, changed the water, restored withered limbs, raised dead bodies, still working upon that which was, and not creating that which was not; Christ never wrought a miracle but when needful, and then wrought no more of miracle than he needed. Observe, 3. The liberality and bounty of Christ in the miracle here wrought; six water-pots are filled with wine; enough, say some writers, for an hundred and fifty men: had he turned but one of those large vessels into wine, it had been a sufficient proof of his power; but to fill so many, was an instance both of his power and mercy. The Lord of the family furnishes his household not barely for necessity, but for delight, giving richly all things to enjoy. And as the bounty of Christ appeared in the quantity, so in the excellency, of the wine; thou hast kept the best wine till now, says the governor of the feast. It was fit that Christ's miraculous wine should be more perfect than the natural. But, Oh! blessed Saviour, how delicate and delicious shall that wine be, which we shall drink, ere long, with thee in thy Father's kingdom! Let thy Holy Spirit fill the vessel of my heart with water (with godly sorrow and contrition) and thou wilt turn it into wine. For blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted. Observe, 4. The double effects of this miracle; Christ, hereby manifested forth his glory, and his disciples believed on him. 1. He manifested forth his glory, that is, the glory of his Godhead, doing this by his own power. Here shineth forth his omnipotence, his bounty and liberality, every thing that might bespeak him both the great and the good God. The second effect of this miracle was, that the disciples believed on him. The great end of miracles is the confirmation of faith; God never sets the seal of his omnipotency to a lie; all the miracles then that Christ and his apostles did, were so many seals that the doctrine of the gospel is true. If you believe not me, says Christ, believe the works which I do, for they bear witness of me. John v, 36.

12 ¶ After this he went down to Capernaum, he and his mother, and his brethren, and his disciples, and they continued there not many days.

13 And the Jews' passover was at hand; and Jesus went up to Jerusalem,

14 And found in the temple those that sold oxen, and sheep, and doves, and the changers of money, sitting :

15 And, when he had made a scourge of small cords, he drove them all out of the temple, and the sheep, and the oxen; and poured out the changers' money, and overthrew the tables ;

16 And said unto them that sold doves, Take these things hence : make not my Father's house a house of merchandize.

Observe here, 1. How obedient in all things Christ was to the ceremonial law. He was not naturally subject to the law, but to fulfil all righteousness, he kept the passover yearly, according to the command of God, Exod. xxiii. 17. That "all the males should appear before him in the temple" at Jerusalem. Hence it is probably concluded, that Christ came up to the passover continually during his private life; and being now come up to Jerusalem to the first passover after his baptism, and solemn entrance upon his office, his first walk was to the temple, and his first work was to purge and reform it from abuses, not to ruin and destroy it, because it had been abused. Now the abuse and profanation of the temple at that time was this: in the outward court of the Gentiles, there was a public mart or market, where were sold oxen, sheep, and doves, for sacrifice; which otherwise the people, with great labor and trouble, must have brought up along with them for sacrifice. Therefore, as a pretended ease to the people, the priests ordered these things to be sold hard by the altar: the intention was commendable, but the action not justifiable. No pretence of good ends can justify that which is forbidden of God: a good end can never justify an irregular action. Observe, 2. Our Saviour's fervent zeal in purging and reforming his Father's house. The sight of sin in any persons, but especially in and among professors, ought to kindle in our hearts (as it did here in Christ's breast) a burning zeal and indignation against it. Yet was not Christ's zeal so warm as to devote the temple to destruction, because of its abuse and profanation. Places dedicated to the worship and service of God, if idolatrously abused, must not be pulled down, but purged: not ruined, but reformed. There is a special reverence due to the house of God, both for the owner's sake, and the service sake. Nothing but holiness becomes that place, where God is worshipped in the beauty of holiness. Christ, by purging the court of the Gentiles from merchandize, not unlawful in itself, but necessary for the sacrifices which were offered in the temple, though not necessary to be brought there, did plainly insinuate, that a distinction is to be made betwixt places sacred and profane; and that what may be done as well elsewhere, ought not to be done in the house of God, the place appointed immediately for his worship. Observe, 3. The greatness of this miracle in the weakness of the means which Christ made use of to effect and work it: he drove the buyers and sellers before him out of the temple; but how, and with what? St. Hierom, in Matt. xxi. says, That certain fiery rays or beams, darting from Christ's eyes, drove out these merchants from this place. I dare not avouch this, but I am satisfied that Christ drove them out, unarmed with any weapons that might carry dread and terror with them, at most but with a whip or small cord; which probably might be scattered by the drovers that came thither to sell their cattle. Behold then the weakness of the means on the one side, and consider the greatness of the opposition on the other: there was a confluence of people to oppose Christ, this being the most solemn mart of the passover, and here were merchant-men, whose hearts were set upon gain (the world's God,) to oppose him. But neither the weakness of the means, nor the greatness of the opposition, did dismay him, or cause our Saviour to desist from the attempt of reforming what was amiss in the house of God. Learn we hence, That it matters not how weak the means of the church reformation is, nor how strong the opposite power is; if we engage Christ in the undertaking, the work shall certainly be accomplished. O! how great was the work, and how weak and unlikely were the means here! a parcel of sturdy fellows, whose hearts were set upon their wealth; Christ no sooner speaks to them, and shakes his whip at them, but like a company of fearful hares they run before him. Christ, in purging his church, will make every thing yield and give way to his power. Let it comfort the church under all unlikelihood of reformation. Who art thou, O great mountain? Before our spiritual Zerubbabel, thou shalt become a plain. I shall close my observations upon this miracle of Christ's whipping the buyers and sellers out of the temple, which both Origen and St Jerome make the greatest miracle that ever Christ wrought, all circumstances considered; I shall close it with this reflection, viz. Were there such power and terror in Christ's countenance and speech here in the temple in the days of his flesh? O, how terrible then will his face and his appearance be to the wicked and impenitent world at the great day! Lord! how fearful will his iron scourge then be! how terrifying that voice, "Depart from me; depart accursed, depart into fire, depart into everlasting fire, into a fire prepared for the punishment of apostate spirits, the devil and his angels!"—God grant we may wisely consider it, and timely flee from the wrath to come.

17 And his disciples remembered that it was written. The zeal of thine house hath eaten me up.

The disciples upon this occasion call to remembrance the words of David, Psal. lxxix. 9. The zeal of thine House hath eaten me up; which was verified in Christ as well as in David. Where observe, 1. The grace described. Zeal, which is the ardor of the affections, carrying forth a man to the utmost for God's glory, and his church's good. Zeal is not so much one affection, as the intense degree of all the affections. Observe, 2. The object about which our Saviour's zeal was conversant, God's house, that is, all things relating to the worship of God, temple, tabernacle, ark, &c. which were the pledges of God's presence. Observe, 3. The effect of this, it hath eaten me up, like fire that eats up and devours that whereon it lights. What was said of St. Peter, that he was a man made up of all fire; and of St. Paul in respect of his sufferings, that he was a spark of fire burning in the midst of the sea, may much more truly be said of Christ, when he was engaged in the work of church reformation.—Learn, That as Christ was, so Christians ought to be very zealous for the glory of God, the honor of his house, and the purity of his worship. The zeal of thine house, that is, for the honor of thine house, hath eaten me up, &c.

18 ¶ Then answered the Jews, and said unto him, What sign showest thou unto us, seeing that thou doest these things?

19 Jesus answered, and said unto them, (No. 23.)

Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up.

20 Then said the Jews, Forty and six years was this temple in building, and wilt thou rear it up in three days?

21 But he spake of the temple of his body.

22 When, therefore, he was risen from the dead, his disciples remembered that he had said this unto them: and they believed the scripture, and the word which Jesus had said.

Observe here, 1. How exceedingly offended the Jews were at the reformation which our Saviour had made in the house of God: they were awed indeed with the majesty of this great work, and durst not openly oppose, but secretly malign it. Thence note, That redress of abuses in God's worship, especially if it crosses our ease, and controls our profit, (as this did) is usually distasteful. Observe, 2. How these Jews discover their old inveterate disease of infidelity:—they require a sign, and call for a miracle, to justify Christ's commission. Why! had not they a miracle before their eyes? Was not the work of purging the temple a wonderful miracle? Yet they demanded another miracle to make this good. Learn thence, That obstinate infidelity will not be satisfied with the most sufficient means for satisfaction, but still object and oppose against the clearest, the fullest, and most convincing evidence. What sign showest thou us? say the Jews, when they had so many signs and wonders daily before their eyes. Observe, 3. The Jews demanding a sign, our Saviour grants them one; he remits them to his death and resurrection, to prove that he was the true Messiah.—Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up; That is, "I know you will destroy this temple of my body, by putting me to death, but I will raise myself again from the grave the third day." Christ did not command them to destroy his body, but only foretold that they would do it. Non est verbum præcepti, sed prædictionis: "The words are not imperative, but only predictive and permissive."—Christ did not bid them destroy his body, but foretels what they would do.—"Ye will destroy this temple, but after three days I will raise it up." Where note, That Christ asserts his own power in raising his own body from the dead. True, the Father is often said to raise him, and it is necessary that it be so said, that it might appear that Divine Justice was fully satisfied for our sins, in that he was by him delivered from that death which he underwent for us.—But yet it is often asserted, that Christ raised himself, and that he was quickened by the Spirit, which was as well the Spirit of the Son, as of the Father, dwelling essentially in him. Now, from Christ's foretelling his passion and resurrection, learn thence. That all our Saviour's sufferings were foreknown unto him, were foretold by him; he would not prevent them, but willingly permitted them, and cheerfully underwent them; Destroy this temple. Note here, 1. The state and dignity of Christ's holy body: it is a temple, He spake of the temple of his body. The saints' bodies are temples by special sanctification; Christ's body was a temple by substantial inhabitation. The divinity of Christ dwelt in his humanity personally and immediately. God dwells in saints by regal authority, he dwelt in Christ's humanity by personal residence. Note, 2. The violence and indignity offered to this holy temple at our Saviour's death: it was pulled down and destroyed. Death dissolved the union betwixt our Saviour's soul and body; but there was a closer union, which no violence of death could dissolve: namely, the union of his godhead with his manhood; this was incapable either of dissolution or destruction. Note, 3. The repairing, restoring, and raising up of this temple out of the ruins of it, by our Saviour's resurrection. In three days I will raise it up. Observe, A full proof of our Saviour's divinity. To raise a dead man exceeds the power of nature; but for a dead man to raise himself, requires the power of God. We read of dead men raised by others; but none but Christ ever raised himself. The Jews could not say, he raised others from the grave, himself he could not raise. Inference, 1. Was Christ's body a temple? So shall ours be too; temples for the Holy Ghost to dwell in; temples by special appropriation, temples by a solemn consecration, temples by actual employment. If any man defile this temple, him will God destroy. 2. Was the temple of Christ's body pulled down by death, and destroyed? So must also the temples of our bodies ere long. The temple of his body was pulled down for our sin: the temples of our bodies ruined by our sin. Sin brought mortality into our natures, and the wages of our sin is death. 3. Was the temple of Christ's body repaired in the morning of the resurrection? So shall the temples of our bodies also, if we be the members of Christ by a vital union. "Thy dead men," O, blessed Redeemer! "shall live; together with thy dead body shall they rise. Awake then and sing, ye that dwell in the dust, for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead." Isa. xxyi. 19.

23 ¶ Now, when he was in Jerusalem at the passover, in the feast-day, many believed in his name, when they saw the miracles which he did.

24 But Jesus did not commit himself unto them, because he knew all men;

Observe here, What influence the sight of our Saviour's miracles had upon many of the common people. "They believed in his name, when they saw the miracles which he did;" that is, they were convinced by the works which our Saviour wrought, that he came from God, and what he said and did was really true, and no imposture. "But Jesus did not commit himself unto them, because he knew all men." Our Saviour did not, and would not, trust them who yet believed on his name. Thence note, That a naked assent to the history of the gospel is not sufficient to intitle us to saving faith. We may assent to the truth of all that we find there, and yet be far from the kingdom of God. Saving faith implies more than the assent of the understanding to the truths of the gospel. We cannot believe or disbelieve what we please, but must needs assent to what is evident to our understanding; so that it is possible for a man to assent to the truth of christianity, and yet remain in a state of damnation. If he doth not embrace it as good, as well as assent to it as true; if our faith be not the parent and principle of obedience; if our belief doth not influence our practice, though we pass for believers among men, we are no better than unbelievers in the account of Christ. If we believe Jesus to be the true Messiah, and do not receive him in all his offices; if we commit ourselves to his saving mercy, but do not submit ourselves to his ruling power; if we desire him for our Saviour, but disown him for our Sovereign; if we expect salvation by him, and do not yield subjection to him: we put a cheat upon ourselves: for he only believes as he should, that lives as he does believe.

25 And needed not that any should testify of man: for he knew what was in man.

St. John's design in writing this gospel being to assert the divinity of Christ, he scatters evidences of it in almost every chapter. Here he declares his omniscience, "He knew what was in man;" that is, being God blessed for ever, he had an exact knowledge of the hearts of men, not by any revelation of men's hearts from God, but by immediate intuition from himself. He knows all men, and all that is in men. See here an ample testimony of the divinity of Christ, his knowledge of the secrets of the hearts of all men, which is declared to be the undoubted property of God alone. 1 Kings viii. 39. "Thou only knowest the hearts of all the children of men."

CHAPTER III.

THERE was a man of the Pharisees, named Nicodemus, a ruler of the Jews:

2 The same came to Jesus by night, and said unto him, Rabbi, we know that thou art a teacher come from God; for no man can do these miracles that thou doest, except God be with him.

The former part of this chapter acquaints us with that famous conference which our blessed Saviour had with Nicodemus. This man was by sect a pharisee; which signifies a person separated and set apart for the study of the law of God, and to teach it unto others: and by calling or profession, "a ruler of the Jews," that is, probably, one of the Jewish Sanhedrim, a chief person in their ecclesiastical court and council. Consider we Nicodemus, first, as a pharisee, which sort of men were filled with inveterate prejudice and enmity against Christ: yet from hence we may gather, that such is the efficacy of divine grace, that it sometimes convinces and converts also those that are the greatest enemies to Christ, and fiercest opposers of him. No such bitter enemies to Christ as the pharisees; yet behold Nicodemus, a pharisee, coming to him, convinced and converted by him. Consider him secondly, as a ruler of the Jews, as a person of place and power, making a figure in the world. Though they were generally the poor which followed Christ, yet some of the great and rich men of the world, as Nicodemus, a master of Israel, and Joseph of Arimathea, an honorable counsellor, are called to Christ, and received by him; lest, if he had admitted illiterate and simple men only, the world might have thought that they were deceived through their simplicity. Observe farther, The time when Nicodemus came to Christ: it was by night; partly out of shame, lest the world should think that such a knowing man as he was wanted instruction; and partly out of fear; he had something to lose, and therefore durst not own Christ publicly. However, our dear Lord upbraids him not with his timorousness, but graciously condescends to instruct him in the fundamental principle of christianity, the great doctrine of regeneration. Such is the tenderness of our compassionate Saviour, that he will not extinguish the least spark of holy fire, nor quench smoking flax.

3 Jesus answered, and said unto him, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God.

Christ here acquaints Nicodemus, and in him all persons, that there must be a change from nature to grace, before there can be a change from grace to glory; for though he was a Jew, a doctor, and one that had good thoughts of Christ, looking upon him as an extraordinary person, one that had received power from God to work miracles; yet Christ assures him, that nothing short of the regenerating change would bring him to heaven. It is not enough that we be new-dressed, but we must be new-made; that is, thoroughly and universally changed; the understanding by illumination, the will by renovation, the affections by sanctification, the life by reformation, or we can never come at heaven: we must be like God, or we can never live with him; if we be not like him in the temper of our minds on earth, we can never be happy in the enjoyment of him in heaven, which is a place of the greatest holiness, and would be a place of the greatest uneasiness to an unregenerate and an unholly person; the contagion is universal, deep, and inward, therefore such must the change be.

4 Nicodemus saith unto him, How can a man be born when he is old? Can he enter the second time into his mother's womb, and be born?

Two things are observable in this question of Nicodemus, How can a man be born when he is old? 1. His ignorance and weakness in propounding such a question. So true is that of the apostle, 1 Cor. ii. 14. The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God. What a gross conception had this learned man of the notion of regeneration? How ignorant is nature of the workings of grace! Men of name and note, of great parts and profound learning, are very often much at a loss in spiritual matters. Yet, 2. In this question of his, there is discovered a great deal of plainness and simplicity; he did not come, as usually the pharisees did, with an ensnaring question in his mouth, but a mind fairly disposed for information and conviction; with a pious desire to be instructed. Whatever ignorance we labor under, it is safest and best to discover it to our spiritual guide, that we may attain the mercy of a saving knowledge: but how many had rather carry their ignorance to hell with them, than discover it to their minister.

5 Jesus answered, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water, and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God.

Nicodemus not rightly understanding Christ's meaning in the former verse, our Saviour is pleased to explain himself in this, and tells him, that the birth he spake of was not natural, but spiritual, wrought in the soul by the Spirit of God, whose working is like water, cleansing and purifying the soul from all sinful defilement. Learn hence, That the regenerating change is wrought in the soul by the Spirit of God, which purifies it from its natural defilement, and renews it after the divine likeness and image. We never understand divine truths aright, till Christ opens our understandings; till then, they will be denied, nay, perhaps derided, even by those that are profoundly learned.

6 That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit.

As if Christ had said, "As men generate men, and nature begets nature, so the Holy Spirit produceth holy inclinations, qualifications, and dispositions." Learn hence, That as original corruption is conveyed by natural generation, so saving regeneration is the effect and product of the Holy Spirit's operation.

7 Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again.

8 The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit.

Nicodemus making an exception against our Saviour's notion of regeneration, from the absurdity and impossibility of it, (as he thought) our Saviour therefore proceeds to clear the matter by a similitude taken from the wind, which at once declares the author, and describes the manner of spiritual regeneration; the author of it is the Holy Spirit of God, compared to the wind: First, for the quality of its motion, "It blows when and where it listeth." Secondly, From the sensibleness of its effects: "Thou hearest the sound thereof." Thirdly, from the intricacy or mysteriousness of its proceedings: "Thou knowest not whence it cometh, nor whither it goeth." As the natural wind is not under the power of man, either to send it out, or to restrain it; it bloweth where it listeth for all us, though not where it listeth in regard of God. In like manner, the Holy Spirit is as wind in the freeness of its motion, and in the variableness of its motion also. Learn hence, That the way and work of the Holy Spirit of God, in the soul's regeneration, is oftentimes very secret and usually exceeding various. Various as to the time; some are wrought up in youth, others in old age. Various in his methods of working; some are wrought upon the corrosives of the law, others by the lenitives of the gospel. Various in the manner of his working, and in the means by which he works: upon some by a powerful ordinance, upon others by an awakening providence. But though there be such variety in the method of the Spirit's working, yet is the work in all still the same. There is no variety in the work wrought. The effect produced by the Holy Spirit in the work of regeneration is alike and the same in all: namely, likeness to God; a conformity in our natures to the holy nature of God; and a conformity in our lives to the will of God. Again, It is in a very secret work, and therefore compared to the wind. We hear and feel the wind blow, we observe its mighty force, and admire its strange effects; but we cannot describe its nature, nor declare its original. Thus the Holy Spirit, in a secret and hidden manner, quickens and influences our souls. The effects of its operations we sensibly discern: but how and after what manner he doth it, we know no more than how the bones do grow in the womb of her that is with child. Therefore it is called an hidden life. Colos. iii. 3. It is not only totally hidden from carnal men, but in part hidden and unknown to spiritual men, though they themselves are the subjects of it.

9 Nicodemus answered and said unto him, How can these things be?

10 Jesus answered and said unto him, Art thou a master of Israel, and knowest not these things?

11 Verily, verily, I say unto thee, We speak that we do know, and testify that we have seen; and ye receive not our witness.

12 If I have told you earthly things, and ye believe not, how shall ye believe if I tell you of heavenly things?

Observe here, 1. How Nicodemus, consulting only with carnal reason, persists in his apprehension concerning the absurdity and impossibility of our Saviour's notion of regeneration, or being born of the Spirit. Nicodemus said, "How can these things be?" Learn hence, That the great cause of men's ignorance in matters of salvation, and the mysteries of religion, is consulting their own and natural reason, without submitting their understandings to the authority of divine revelation. Till they can give a reason for every thing they believe, they cry out with Nicodemus, How can these things be? Whereas, though we cannot give a reason for all gospel mysteries which we believe, we can give a good reason why we believe them, namely, because God hath revealed them. No man can be a christian who refuses to submit his understanding to the authority of divine revelation. Observe, 2. How our Saviour reproves Nicodemus for, and upbraids him with his ignorance, ver. 10. and his infidelity, ver. 12. First, his ignorance is reprov'd, Art thou a Master of Israel, and knowest not these things? As if Christ had said, "Ignorance in any, as to the fundamentals of religion, is shameful, though but a common learner, much more in a teacher and master in Israel; now thou art one of them, and yet knowest not these things." Learn hence, 1. That a man may be very knowing himself, and take upon him to teach and instruct others, and yet be very ignorant of the nature, and much unacquainted with the work of regeneration upon his own soul: a man may be very sharp sighted, as the eagle, in the mysteries of art and nature, and yet blind as a mole in the things of God. 2. That ignorance in the fundamentals of religion especially, is very culpable and shameful in any that enjoy the means of knowledge, but especially in those that undertake to teach and instruct others. Art thou a teacher, thou a master in Israel, and knowest not these things? Next our Saviour upbraids him for his infidelity, ver. 12. If I have told you earthly things, and ye believe not. This infidelity received its aggravation from the facility and perspicuity of our Saviour's doctrine. I have told you earthly things; that is, I have set forth spiritual things by earthly similitudes, not in a style suitable to the sublimity of their own nature. Let the ministers of Christ learn their Master's example, in all their discourses to accommodate themselves, and descend as low as may be to the capacities of their people: I have told you earthly things. 3. That even spiritual things, when they are shadowed forth by earthly similitudes, and brought down in the plainest manner to the capacities of their people, yet are they very backward to believe them; I have told you of earthly things, and ye believe them not.

13 And no man hath ascended up to heaven, but he that cometh down from heaven, even the Son of man, which is in heaven.

Here our Saviour declares to Nicodemus, That none ever ascended up into heaven, to fetch down from thence the knowledge of divine mysteries, and to reveal the way of life and salvation to mankind by a mediator, but only Christ himself; who, though he took upon him the human nature, and was then man upon earth, yet he was at the same time in his divine nature actually in heaven as God. This text evidently proves two distinct natures in Christ; namely, a divine nature as he was God, and a human nature as man. In his human nature, he was then upon earth, when he spake these words: in his divine nature, he was at that instant in heaven. Here observe, That the Son of God hath taken the human nature into so close and intimate an union with his godhead, that what is proper to either nature is ascribed unto the person of our Saviour. The same person who was on earth as the Son of man, was then in heaven as God, and yet but one person still. Lord! What love hast thou shown to our human nature, that under that name thou ascribest to thyself what is proper to thy Godhead! "The Son of man which is in heaven." The Socinians produce this text, to prove that Christ after his baptism was taken up into heaven, there to be made acquainted with the will of God, to fit him for the execution of his prophetic office here on earth, and that for this reason he was said to be "in the beginning with God," as Moses before him was taken up into the mount, and taught by God. But, 1. We have not the least word of any such thing in scripture, though we have a particular account of our Saviour's birth, circumcision, baptism, doctrine, miracles, death, resurrection, ascension; yea, of small things compared with this: as his flight into Egypt, his sitting on a pinnacle of the temple; yet not a word of his assumption into heaven. 2. There was no need of it, because Almighty God could reveal himself to Christ as well as to other prophets, out of heaven as well as in it; besides, Christ was fitted for his prophetic office by the unction of the Spirit he received here on earth; and therefore this ascent was altogether needless.

14 ¶ And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up;

15 That whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life.

Christ having instructed Nicodemus in the doctrine of regeneration in the former verses, here he instructs him in the death of the Messiah, and in the necessity of faith in his death; "The Son of man must be lifted up;" that is, upon the cross, and die; "that whosoever believeth in him, should not perish." Observe here, 1. An Old Testament type which our Saviour refers to, and that is, the brazen serpent in the wilderness, the history of which is recorded, Numb. xxi. 7, 8. Observe, 2. The anti-type, or the substance of what that type did shadow forth, the brazen serpent's lifting up upon the pole, prefiguring Christ's exaltation or lifting up upon his cross. "So must the Son of man be lifted up." Learn hence, that the Lord Jesus Christ is of the same use and office to a sin-stung soul, which the brazen serpent was of old to a serpent-stung Israelite. Here observe, 1. Wherein the brazen serpent and Christ do agree. And, 2. Wherein they differ. They agree thus: in the occasion of their institution: they were both appointed for cure and healing. Were they serpent-stung? We are sin-stung; devil-bitten. Was the sting of the first serpent inflaming? Was it spreading? Was it killing? So is sin, which is the venom and poison of the old serpent. They agree in this: that they both must be "lifted up" before cure could be obtained; the brazen serpent upon the pole, Christ upon the cross. They both must be "looked upon" before cure could be obtained: the looking up of the Israelites was as necessary unto healing.
